

CANTERBURY TALES

By GEOFFREY CHAUCER

With an INTRODUCTION, NOTES and a GLOSSARY by JOHN MATTHEWS MANLY of the UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO.

NEW YORK
HENRY HOLT AND COMPANY

COPYRIGHT, 1928,
BY HENRY HOLT AND COMPANY

July, 1950

219557

$$\begin{array}{r} 8119 \\ \hline 17 \end{array}$$

PRINTED IN THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

To

EDITH RICKERT

PREFACE

THIS volume was planned many years ago as a small selection of the Canterbury Tales for use in senior high school and elementary college work. At first only the Prologue and the tales of the Prioress, the Nuns' Priest, the Pardoner, and the Franklin were included in the plan. Various obstacles, however, interfered with the immediate production of the volume, and meanwhile many of the leading teachers of Chaucer were emphasizing the study of the Tales as literature in their introductory courses and were favoring wide and rapid reading as the proper basis for this. As this practice had my complete sympathy, I was glad to extend the scope of my volume. But I fear — indeed, I am sure — that this and other changes of plan which need not now be specified have seriously interfered with uniformity of aims and standards in the editing of the present volume.

Some of the notes were originally written to meet the supposed needs of young pupils. Some of the later ones, presenting new material or supporting new interpretations were from the first of a more advanced character. I have tried to revise my MS into reasonable uniformity of aims and standards before sending it to press, but I am not satisfied with my success.

In the treatment of Chaucer's language I feel, also, that I have fallen between two stools. From the one side came requests for a fuller treatment of both forms and syntax than had been given by other editors of school texts; from the other side I had warnings not to overemphasize the grammar. When the work was in MS I felt that I had perhaps given too much detail; when I saw it in type, I was more impressed by its scrappiness and incompleteness.

Even while the volume has been going through the hands of the printer — in fact, in some instances, after it was in page proofs — new material and new interpretations have come to light for both Introduction and Notes of such importance as to demand insertion. Although this has added greatly to the value of the volume for the interpretation of Chaucer's life and poetry, it has inevitably resulted in faults of form and proportion.

But I conceive that no intelligent teacher of literature wants a textbook of the old fashioned sort; that is, one designed to be "crammed up" by his pupils. Our object in teaching Chaucer is to introduce our pupils to one of the greatest of English poets, and aid them in understanding his poetry. Miss Spurgeon's recent volumes (Five Centuries of Chaucer Criticism) show that in every age he has been read and admired, not by literary faddists, but by merchants, doctors, lawyers, engineers, — by sensible men in general, and by every really great writer, with perhaps the sole exception of Byron. Two obstacles only have stood in the way of his being read by everybody; first, his language; second, ignorance of the customs, beliefs, and ideals of the age in which he lived.

But these obstacles are not very serious. The language difficulty rapidly vanishes. Anyone who has a good sense of rhythm can in a few hours of practice learn to read Chaucer very acceptably.

The unfamiliarity of the customs and ideas of Chaucer's world can of course best be diminished by extensive reading in his poetry and in the books from which he derived his education and so much of his delight, and by the works of art that are left to us from his period. Notes, if properly written and used, can help materially. They are, however, a sort of concentrated extract or essence of wide reading and are difficult of digestion if not taken discreetly. A note is useful and justifiable, I take it, only if it either furnishes a fact or an explanation not easily obtained or supplies some element that enables a passage to produce more nearly the effect intended by the author.

The Introduction and the Notes of this volume are intended primarily as aids to be consulted by the student who finds himself in need of information necessary for the complete understanding of Chaucer but not readily accessible. It is to be hoped that no one will regard them in any other light.

Although I believe the text of the Tales here printed to be nearer Chaucer's original than any that has been printed heretofore, it is in no sense an attempt at a critical text. I am now engaged in the task of attempting to discover the relations of all the MSS and to form upon them a critical text, but it will require several years of labor to accomplish this. Meanwhile I have printed the text of the Ellesmere MS, departing from it only when a study of the other MSS seemed clearly to prove that it was in error. In every such case, I have adopted the reading of the other MSS of Class I, if it seemed at all a possible one. In this I differ from recent editors, who have often resorted to Harley 7334 — a MS that I agree with Tatlock in regarding as entirely unworthy of the high claims that have been made for it.

Contrary to the practice of most editors of Chaucer texts for college use, I have not given outlines or summaries of the sources and analogues of Chaucer's tales. Those who wish to see them will find references to them in the Notes. For my part, I should say that the mere knowledge that Chaucer got the materials for a certain tale from this source or that is useless lumber. The profit in studying the sources of a great writer is to learn what he has done with his material. Such study of course requires full and accurate texts of the sources; and there is obviously not space for them in a school text.

In the Introduction I have included no remarks on the nature of Chaucer's art or the charm of his poetry. His excellencies are on the one hand so simple that they need no interpreter or showman, and, on the other, so subtle that the prosaic middleman had better leave them unspoiled.

It remains to thank — if I could — all who have helped me. But this I cannot do, for my study of Chaucer has extended over forty years. In the earlier years I learned from my teachers; in the later I have learned most from my students — mainly from their refusing to believe some of the things I have tried to teach them. Since I began the actual work on the manuscript I have incurred obligations more easily specified. Years ago Miss Jessie M. Lyons prepared a glossary and marked the qualities of the vowels in every line of the tales I then intended to include in the volume. Although, in deference to a census of the opinions of Chaucer scholars in America, the plan of marking the vowels has been abandoned, and although the glossary has since been revised and extended, I am still grateful to Miss Lyons for her careful and scholarly work. To Vincent B. Redstone, Esq., of Woodbridge, England, and Miss Lilian J. Redstone, of London, I am indebted for nearly all the new information about Chaucer's life, ancestry, and business and social relations, and for many passages in the Notes. Above all, I am indebted to Professor Edith Rickert, of the University of Chicago, for innumerable contributions to the Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, for reading both galley and page proofs of the whole volume, and for making the Index.

To the officials of the Public Record Office, the Guild Hall, the British Museum, the Bodleian, and the Cambridge University Library, I am grateful for many courtesies and for permission to reproduce documents from their great collections.

My discussion of the Order of the Tales in the MSS (pp. 77-86) is summarized from the unpublished doctoral dissertation of my pupil and friend Professor Robert Campbell. Mr. Campbell has introduced order and light into a field heretofore regarded as chaotic and dark. I am greatly indebted to him for permission to use the results of his brilliant study.

The text has been repunctuated from beginning to end. Where my punctuation differs from that of my predecessors it is because I either understand a passage differently or desire a different emphasis or shade of meaning.

I shall be grateful for corrections of the ancient errors which have escaped me or the new ones which I have committed.

J. M. M.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
I. CHAUCER'S LIFE	3
II. CHAUCER'S APPEARANCE	37
III. CHAUCER'S FRIENDS AND ASSOCIATES	39
IV. CHAUCER'S ENGLAND	44
V. THE CANTERBURY TALES	67
VI. THE LANGUAGE OF CHAUCER	88
VII. VERSIFICATION	122
VIII. ASTRONOMY AND ASTROLOGY	132
REFERENCE LIST.	144

TEXT OF THE CANTERBURY TALES

FRAGMENT I. (GROUP A)

THE PROLOGUE	149
THE KNYGHTE'S TALE	171
THE MILLER'S TALE	232
THE REVE'S TALE	237
THE PROLOGUE TO THE COKE'S TALE	242
THE COKE'S TALE.	243

FRAGMENT II. (GROUP B¹)

THE PROLOGUE OF THE MAN OF LAWE	247
THE MANNES TALE OF LAWE.	248

FRAGMENT III. (GROUP D)

THE PROLOGUE OF THE WYF OF BATHE.	279
THE WYVES TALE OF BATHE.	298
THE PROLOGUE OF THE FRERES TALE	309
THE FRERES TALE.	310
THE SOMONOURS TALE	319

FRAGMENT IV. (GROUP E)	PAGE
THE PROLOGE OF THE CLERK	324
THE CLERKES TALE	325
THE PROLOGE OF THE MARCHANTES TALE .	359
FRAGMENT V. (GROUP F)
THE SQUIERES TALE	361
THE PROLOGE OF THE FRANKELEYNS TALE	379
THE FRANKELEYNS TALE	380
FRAGMENT VI. (GROUP C)
THE PROLOGE OF THE PARDONER	405
THE PARDONERS TALE	409
FRAGMENT VII. (GROUP B ²)
THE PROLOGE OF THE PRIORESSE	422
THE PRIORESSES TALE	424
CHAUCERS TALE OF THOPAS	430
CHAUCERS TALE OF MELIBEE	437
THE MONKES TALE	441
THE PROLOGE OF THE NONNES PREEST . .	443
THE NONNES PREESTES TALE.	444
FRAGMENT VIII. (GROUP G)
THE PROLOGE OF THE CHANONS YEMAN . .	461
THE CHANONS YEMANNES TALE	465
FRAGMENT IX. (GROUP H)
THE PROLOGE OF THE MAUNCIPLE	486
FRAGMENT X. (GROUP I)
THE PROLOGE OF THE PERSONS TALE . . .	489
THE PERSONS TALE	491
KEY TO ABBREVIATIONS IN THE NOTES	493
NOTES	495
GLOSSARY	659
INDEX	709

ILLUSTRATIONS

- | | | Facing
page |
|----|---|------------------------|
| 1. | PAGE FROM THE BODLEIAN MS, RAWLINSON POET-RY 223 Frontispiece | |
| | In the upper part of the page is a corrupt text of VII 2125-2156 — the conversation between the Host and Chaucer — written by mistake in the Thopas stanza-form. The figure in the initial was probably intended to represent Chaucer, the teller of the tale of Melibeus , but as a portrait it has no authority. | |
| 2. | A MAY PARTY | 192 |
| | From the Très Riches Heures of Jehan duc de Berri, now at Chantilly. The MS was illuminated mainly by the Limbourg brothers, before 1416. | |
| 3. | THE WIFE OF BATH | 278 |
| | From MS Cambridge Gg. 4.27. One of four pictures of the pilgrims left by the vandals who cut out the rest. | |
| 4. | THREE SCENES FROM THE GRISELDA STORY | 332 |
| | From a cassone, or dower chest, painted by Fr. Pesellino. Now in the Accademia Carrara, Bergamo, Italy. At the left are shown the Marquis and his train leaving the palace. Near the fountain in the center the Marquis sees Griselda, with her water jar. At the extreme right the ladies have stripped Griselda of her old clothing and are about to clothe her in the wedding garments provided by Walter. | |
| 5. | A FARMYARD AND COTTAGE INTERIOR | 444 |
| | From the Très Riches Heures of Jehan duc de Berri. | |
| 6. | THE OLD ROAD TO CANTERBURY | 494 |
| | Based mainly on maps of the Ordnance Survey. | |
| 7. | GEOMANTIC FIGURES | 552 |
| | From MS Bodley 581, a treatise written for King Richard II in March 1391. | |

CHAUCER'S
CANTERBURY TALES

I

CHAUCER'S LIFE

HIS ANCESTRY

Geoffrey Chaucer was descended from a family which during the latter part of the thirteenth century lived at Ipswich. In those days family names among the middle classes were not yet fixed, but might vary as a man changed his occupation or his place of residence or as his neighbors named him from some personal peculiarity. At first Chaucer's ancestors were commonly known under the names of Malyn, or de Dynyngton (Dennington). Some branches of the family continued to be called Malyn, but by the beginning of the fourteenth century the branch from which the poet was descended was settling upon the name Chaucer. This name is derived from a trade, the making of chausses, or hose, but we have no record that any of the poet's kinsmen actually followed this trade.

The earliest known members of the family in Ipswich were taverners, who apparently also engaged in the wine and wool trades. Ipswich, about ten miles from the sea, at the head of the estuary of the river Orwell, was in the fourteenth century a great trading port, doing business especially with the Low Countries. Its principal exports were wool, sheepskins, and undressed cloths; its imports were wines, general merchandise (mercery), and finished cloths. Ipswich merchants were therefore likely to export wool and to import wine on the same ships, and accordingly to become both woolmongers and vintners. Moreover, as the income of the government was largely derived from export duties on wool and import duties on wines and merchandise, there were good business positions in the various ports for responsible men as officers of the king's customs. Hence we find members of the Chaucer family for more than a century associated with the wine and wool business and with the customs. Besides the regular duty on wines, the king was entitled to a certain part of each shipload of wine imported. The duty of collecting this — called butlerage — belonged to the king's butler, who commonly exercised the office through attorneys or deputies. More than one of Chaucer's kinsmen were appointed deputies of the king's butler.

Toward the end of the thirteenth century the family began to establish itself in London. Robert le Chaucer, the poet's grandfather, was in turn deputy to the king's butler for the port of London and collector of a special duty on wines levied on the vintners of Aquitaine. He seems to have been a prosperous man; his widow, Mary le Chaucer (née de Westhale), in 1315 owned property in and near London to the value of more than 70 l. (about $10,000 today).

Chaucer's relatives, the Staces, belonged to the same social and occupational class. At the time when Robert le Chaucer was an official in London, Thomas Stace was deputy to the king's butler in Ipswich, and later held this office for two years or more for all the seaports between Ipswich and the mouth of the Thames. His son Thomas, between 1331 and 1339 at least, held the offices of controller of the wool custom and of the wine custom for the ports between Yarmouth and Ipswich. Both the elder Thomas and his son Geoffrey — for whom some suppose the poet was named — were repeatedly members of parliament, and when Geoffrey Stace had to borrow 250 l. to pay a fine, he was able to raise this sum on the security of his lands.

In short, all that we know of the early Chaucers and the families into which they married indicates that they were prosperous members of the upper middle class — merchants and government officials.

Chaucer's grandmother, Mary le Chaucer, had two husbands besides Robert le Chaucer. The first was John Heyroun, a Londoner, apparently in the wine trade, who by a previous marriage with a Somersetshire woman had acquired land in Somerset and established relations there which may have had interesting consequences for the poet. The third husband was Richard Chaucer, probably Robert's first cousin. Richard, who died in 1349 (apparently of the first great plague), was a London vintner of considerable wealth, who in 1341-42 was deputy to the king's butler in London. His wealth is indicated by the fact that in 1346, when a financier named Walter de Chiriton was forming a syndicate to lend money to the king, Richard Chaucer furnished 500 l. (about $75,000 today).

The earliest record of John Chaucer, the poet's father, is decidedly picturesque. In 1324, when he was less than twelve years old, he was kidnaped by two of the Staces and his own aunt, Agnes de Westhale, a widow to whose daughter Joan they intended to marry him, undoubtedly for the sake of his property. The result of the long lawsuit occasioned by this abduction was that Geoffrey Stace, who meanwhile had married Agnes de Westhale, was obliged to pay the fine of 250 l. referred to above.

John Chaucer became a wealthy vintner and, like his father and stepfather and cousins, was connected with the customs. Between 1347 and 1349 he was deputy to the king's butler in Southampton and four other ports on the south coast, and also collector of the wool customs in the same ports.¹

At some unknown date John Chaucer was married to a widow named Agnes de Northwell, with at least one child. What was her maiden name we do not know, but she was the niece and heiress of Hamo de Copton,² "moneyer" (official in the mint), and inherited from him two valuable tenements just outside the city walls at Aldgate.

The first husband of Agnes seems to have been a kinsman of William de Northwell, sometime keeper of the wardrobe for the king and later for the Prince of Wales, and for a short time baron of the exchequer. The special interest of this connection in the interpretation of Chaucer's life is that Northwell's official relations with the royal family may have led to Geoffrey Chaucer's service as page in the household of Prince Lionel¹ — or rather perhaps in that of his wife, Elizabeth, countess of Ulster — and as esquire in the king's household. Furthermore, since as baron of the exchequer Northwell must have had some legal training, he may have had some influence upon the education of the future poet.

¹ As these customs were assigned to Queen Philippa, it may be that John Chaucer was regarded as in her service. On July 16, 1349, a man named John Chausey was paid a noble (6 s. 8 d., about $50) for taking to her at the palace of Devizes a black palfrey from the Bishop of Salisbury; but it is not certain that this was John Chaucer.

² The name Copton is so rare today that some scholars have thought it an error for Compton. It seems, however, to come from a manor called Copton near Faversham, and there are enough records to show that the spelling is correct.

BIRTH AND EARLY EDUCATION

When or where the poet was born we do not know. On October 15, 1386, when he was called as witness in a lawsuit about a coat of arms (the famous Scrope-Grosvenor case) he was recorded as then "forty years of age and more (et plus) and "to have borne arms for twenty-seven years." On the basis of this, 1340 has commonly been given as approximately the date of his birth, although taken literally it would point to about 1345. The use of the legal formula et plus has been studied in the hope that it would help to determine the date more accurately, but thus far the results have been negative. It is true that in the Scrope-Grosvenor Roll, which records more than two hundred depositions, the ages of the greater number of witnesses were recorded in round numbers or in numbers ending with five. Apparently also many witnesses either did not know or did not give their exact ages. Used with forty, the formula et plus might mean between forty and fifty, but it is used even with such numbers as thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-six, fifty-four, and twenty-nine and a half. Originally it was doubtless intended to cover the time between the last birthday and the date of record, but by this time it was often used as a mere meaningless tag. The point to be remembered is that there is no more evidence for 1340 than for any date between that and 1345, and that some circumstances in Chaucer's career point to the date of his birth as nearer 1345 than 1340.

¹ Another — recently discovered — connection of the Chaucers with the court is that Cristina, wife of William de Blakeshale, of Ipswich, was in the queen's service as nurse, probably of Prince Lionel (nutrix domine Regine Anglie, Ipswich Records 1338-39, 1^a g. to. 1).

The poet may have been born in London in his father's Thames Street house by the Walbrook, on which in 1381 he gave a quitclaim to Henry Herbury; but as John Chaucer owned much other property, this is not certain.

Among the tenements owned by Chaucer's parents one item, apparently inherited by Agnes Chaucer from her uncle, included twenty-four shops and two gardens, and another consisted of ten and a half acres. Both were on the main street just outside the city wall and must therefore have been of considerable value. And there is evidence that John Chaucer himself owned, besides the Thames Street house, land both in London and in Ipswich. Another house which may have been the poet's birthplace was one in the Vintry which his father rented from the abbess and convent of Cheshunt for 3 l. a year, a fairly high rent. This house seems to have remained in the family for some time, for on October 25, 1367, the lease was made over to Bartholomew atte Chapel, who in the preceding year had married the poet's widowed mother.

Where Chaucer went to school is uncertain. There were in his time in London three elementary schools, all within a short walk from the Thames Street house or from any house in the Vintry. The nearest was the school of the Arches, in the parish church of St. Mary-le-Bow (Bow Church); very little farther was the school, later so famous, connected with St. Paul's Cathedral; and only a few minutes beyond this was the school of the Chapel Royal, at St. Martin's-le-Grand. At each of these schools there was apparently both a grammar school, under the grammar school master, generally required to be an M.A., and a more elementary music school under the song school master—much like the school described in the 'Prioress's Tale.' It is perhaps worth noting that it was during Chaucer's childhood that John Cornwall, master of the Merton College School at Oxford, introduced his great reform of substituting English for French as the language of instruction; but the reform may not have affected the schooling of Chaucer. John de Trevisa, in his additions to Higden's Polychronicon, says: "This custom (of translating Latin into French) was much used before the first plague, and has since been somewhat changed; for John Cornwaile, master of grammar, changed the teaching in grammar school and the translation of French into English; and Richard Pencriche learned this sort of teaching from him, and other men from Pencriche, so that now, the year of Our Lord 1385 and of the second King Richard after the Conquest nine, in all the grammar schools of England, children give up French and construe and learn in English, and have thereby advantage on one side and disadvantage on another side; their advantage is that they learn their grammar in less time than children were accustomed to do; the disadvantage is that now children in grammar school know no more French than does their left heel; and that is harm for them if they shall pass the sea and travel in strange lands and in many other places. Also gentlemen have now in general ceased to teach their children French."

PAGE AND PRISONER OF WAR, 1357-60

The first certain record of the poet's life shows him in 1357 in the service of the Countess Elizabeth of Ulster, wife of Prince Lionel, second son of the king. This record is a fragment of an account book, in which we read that in April 1357 the Countess bought for Geoffrey Chaucer a cloak for 4 s., a pair of red and black [breeches?] and a pair of shoes for 3 s. (about $50 altogether). These new clothes were apparently to be worn at the annual feast of the Knights of the Garter, commonly held at Windsor on St. George's Day (April 23). The following May, Chaucer had a present of 2 s. from the Countess, then in London; and the next Christmas he was with her at the royal hunting lodge of Hatfield (Yorkshire), where he received 2 s. 6 d. "for necessaries." From these items we learn that Chaucer was brought up in a courtly environment. That he was only a page is indicated by the relatively small sum paid for his clothes and the small sums given to him, compared with those for other members of the household. These sums also suit better the hypothesis that he was then a boy of twelve or thirteen than that which makes him a youth of seventeen.

These accounts indicate also that at Hatfield during Christmas 1357 Chaucer had an opportunity to see John of Gaunt, with whom he later had so much to do, for John of Gaunt was visiting there at that time. The Lady Blanche of Lancaster, who two years later married John of Gaunt, may also have been invited there for Christmas, for on December 20 the Countess paid a servant of the Duke of Lancaster 2*s.* for bringing a letter from the Lady Blanche.

If, as seems probable, Chaucer was with the Countess during the period covered by the fragmentary account, he must have seen the splendid Garter feast of 1358 for which the king gave Queen Philippa the huge sum of 500*l.*, to buy clothes. He may have been with the Countess when, in 1356, she visited her aunt, Elizabeth of Hainaut, at the convent of Stratford-at-Bow, where later the Prioress of his Prologue learned her French; he may have been with her when she visited the Dowager Queen Isabella and the Queen of Scotland, who was still with her at Hertford in 1358; he was perhaps present at the betrothal of the Countess's little daughter Philippa to Edmund Mortimer, third earl of March, whose son was later to appoint Chaucer his deputy as forester of North Petherton; and on May 19, 1359, he may have attended the wedding of John of Gaunt to Blanche of Lancaster, about whose death he wrote his first long poem.

In 1359-60 we find Chaucer with the English army invading France. The campaign, which began October 28, 1359, when King Edward with his four sons set sail for France, was planned as a sort of gigantic picnic. If Chaucer watched the disembarkation at Calais, he would have seen from six to eight thousand carts, each drawn by four horses, loaded with tents, mills for grinding wheat, ovens, forges, small leather boats to go fishing in, and all sorts of food and luxuries. There were no less than forty falconers with their hawks, thirty couples of hunting dogs, and as many for coursing, provided for the royal family, and most of the noblemen brought hawks and hounds. The baggage train is said to have been six miles long on the narrow road, where five hundred men had to go in advance to cut away the thorns and bushes.

But from the first it rained dismally. Along the sodden roads the small army with its great burden of baggage travelled often less than ten miles a day. The king and his nobles feasted on the good things they had brought with them; but the common soldiers almost starved, for the French had fled to the castles with their provisions.

As the army advanced through northern France, there were no battles but there were continual skirmishes between small parties of French and English, some of them very picturesque. In the neighborhood of Rheims, the king and the princes settled for a time and rode about foraging and pillaging as they could. In one such foray, on the town of Réthel, near Rheims, Chaucer was taken prisoner. He was ransomed about March 1, 1360, the king contributing 16 l. (about $2,400) toward his ransom. Whether this was the full amount paid there is nothing to show.

Dr. Furnivall commented on the fact that the king paid 13 s. 4 d. more to replace a horse that had been killed than for the ransom of the poet. But the horse was an unusually expensive one; and why should the king pay more for Chaucer than the enemy demanded? Moreover, Chaucer's ransom was by no means among the least. For Sir Richard de Stury, an esquire of the royal household, the king paid 50 l. or three times as much as for Chaucer; for valets of the queen and of the countess of Ulster 10 l. each; for a chaplain 8 l.; for carters and common soldiers 1 l. 10 s. to 2 l. each. From these sums, it seems likely that Chaucer was recognized as of good enough position to warrant a fair ransom, but too young to warrant a high one.¹

After his ransom, when the English army was camped near Chartres, Chaucer probably saw the beautiful towers of that cathedral as he had earlier seen those of the cathedral of Rheims. No doubt he also saw the walls and spires of Paris and witnessed the deeds of arms about the gates; and he was probably in the great thunderstorm which frightened Edward into signing with the French the treaty of Brétigny.

¹ One of the principal reasons advanced for 1340 as Chaucer's date of birth was that he could hardly have gone to the war before he was nineteen. A study of the ages of the deponents in the Scrope-Grosvenor Roll, and of their ages when they took arms, showed that more than a third of those whose ages could be determined took arms when they were under sixteen; and also, that in time of war, the ages of taking arms became noticeably lower. From the municipal records of London, it appears that in time of war all men between the ages of sixteen and sixty were liable to military service; and poll taxes were imposed upon all persons above fifteen. In the home town of Chaucer's father — Ipswich — boys came of age at twelve. All these points considered, the argument that Chaucer could not have gone into the army under nineteen fails and is replaced by the probability that he might have gone at the age of sixteen, or even earlier.

In October 1360, when the king and Prince Lionel returned to Calais in connection with the terms of the peace, Chaucer was apparently in the prince's service, for he carried letters from the prince to England at that time.

LAW STUDENT, VALET, AND ESQUIRE, 1360-70

Between October 1360 and June 1367, there is a gap in the records of Chaucer's life. There is no evidence that he went to Ireland with Prince Lionel in 1361 — his name is not in the very full list of persons who went.

The wording of the first document we have concerning Chaucer's position as yeoman in the king's household (June 20, 1367) does not necessarily imply that he had been long in the king's service, but rather that he was then first appointed. It is possible that in 1361 he changed from the household of Lionel to that of his brother, John of Gaunt, and there continued until 1367; but the only evidence of such a change is in The Boke of the Duchesse, which shows that the poet was familiar with the appearance and character of the Duchess and suggests that he had a strong devotion to her. Such evidence, of course, cannot be relied upon to prove that he was a member of the household.

But even if we assume that from 1361 to 1367 Chaucer was a member of some royal household, there is reason to believe that he continued his education. His works show that he was for his age a very learned man. He read with ease French and Italian as well as Latin; he knew something of history, theology, medicine, and law; he understood alchemy well enough to use the technical terms with astonishing correctness; and he knew astrology and astronomy well. Moreover, if we may take literally his own statement in The Legende of Good Women (A 273), he owned sixty books, a library greater than those of some of the colleges in the universities. Is it likely that he would have acquired this learning and taste for books with only an elementary education and amid the social distractions of the court? In the sixteenth century it was said that he had studied at both Oxford and Cambridge, but this statement is as yet unsupported. But Thomas Speght, who edited Chaucer in 1598, asserted that Chaucer had studied law at the Inner Temple, "for that, manye yeres since, master Buckley did see a recorde in the same howse, where Geffrye Chaucer was fined two shillinges for beateinge a Franciscane Fryer in fletestreate."

This assertion has long been discredited on the ground that it rested on the sole testimony of a person about whom nothing was known. But as it has been shown recently that the Master Buckley referred to was undoubtedly the keeper of the records of the Inner Temple in Speght's time, it now appears that the assertion was made by the one man in England who was likely to have seen such a record if it existed. Although the Inner Temple records of earlier date than the sixteenth century have now perished, there is no reason to doubt that such a record as this survived until Speght's time; and a study of the Black Books of Lincoln's Inn, which go back to 1422, shows that fines for similar offenses were common there, that the facts as given are entirely credible, and that the practices and customs of Lincoln's Inn and of the Temple were very similar and did not vary perceptibly in the course of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. There is, accordingly, no reason to doubt that Master Buckley had seen the record and that he spoke the truth about it. If he had been inventing an item for the use of an admiring Chaucer editor, he would surely not have invented one that—as the critic Francis Thynne immediately pointed out—was in apparent contradiction to what were then believed to be the facts concerning Chaucer's birth and the history of the Temple.

In support of the external evidence is Chaucer's introduction among the Canterbury Pilgrims of the official called the Manciple, who would hardly have been thought of by one unfamiliar with life at the inns of court.

Moreover, the known facts of Chaucer's official career seem to imply some familiarity with business methods and with at least the more untechnical aspects of the law. There is, of course, no reason whatever to suppose that Chaucer ever practiced law; but on the authority of Chief Justice Fortescue, who was a student at Lincoln's Inn a few years after Chaucer's death, it may be said that the inns of court existed not merely for the training of lawyers, but for the training of gentlemen's sons for business and for diplomatic and other official careers; and on Chaucer's own authority ('Prologue,' 567 ff.) we know that the lawyers of the Temple were fitted to be business managers of great estates. It must be remembered that in the fourteenth century, when wealth consisted so largely of real property, a general understanding of law was far more essential to any ambitious man than it is today. Altogether, then, it seems probable that Chaucer got at least a part of his education in the law school known as the Temple.

It should be noted, moreover, that Chaucer's connection with the court would not have interfered with his studying at the Temple. Only half the king's attendants were on duty at a time; and even for those on duty, special arrangements were made so that they could study in the inns of court.

There is a picturesque description in the Household Book of Edward IV (based upon that of Edward III), which shows how the king's squires in attendance spent their time at court:

These Esquires of household of old be accustomed, winter and summer, in afternoons and evenings, to draw to Lords' chambers within court, there to keep honest company according to their skill, in talking of chronicles of kings, and of other policies, or in piping, or harping, singing, or martial acts [such as tilting, sword play], to help occupy (i.e., amuse) the court, and [to] accompany strangers (i.e., to entertain them) till the time require of departing.

Although Chaucer was appointed as yeoman, or groom, we find his name in the list of esquires in 1368. From this and another list we learn that the squires received each year a summer and a winter "robe"¹ to the value of 20 s. each. This was about three times as much as was paid for the clothes that he had from the countess of Ulster and suggests the difference in his age and position.

¹ A "robe" was not a gown but a livery of several pieces: a tunic, two longer coats, and a hood, often furred.

Among the "damoiselles" in attendance on the queen is Philippa Chaucer, evidently at that time the poet's wife, who had received her appointment a year earlier than he did. She is commonly believed to have been the daughter of Sir Paon de Roet, of Hainaut, who came to England with Queen Philippa when she married Edward III. If so, she was the sister of Katherine de Roet, who, after being the mistress of John of Gaunt for twenty years or more, was married to him and became duchess of Lancaster in 1396.

In 1369 Chaucer was in the army of John of Gaunt on a raid in Picardy. The little troop of 600 men-at-arms and 1500 archers, including Chaucer and about 150 other members of the king's household, landed at Calais in July. Although the French were seven to one the stronger, they did not attack. The two armies faced each other from August 25 until September 12; then in the night the French built a long line of camp fires to cover their retreat and slipped away. The English army pillaged its way back to Calais and returned home.

That summer there was another pestilence. On August 15, Queen Philippa died of it, and on September 12 — the very day the duke's enemies left the field to him — his dearly beloved Duchess Blanche. Froissart, who had lived at the English court, in one of his poems mourns "the good lady . . . who was queen of England" and "her daughter of Lancaster . . . who died young and pretty, about twenty-two years old, gay, mirthful, fresh, cheery, sweet, simple, of gentle manner, the good lady called Blanche." In prose he praises the two women even more earnestly.

Both Geoffrey and Philippa Chaucer were among the mourners at the funeral of Queen Philippa and undoubtedly at that of the Duchess Blanche; and Chaucer's first long original poem, The Boke of the Duchesse, must have been written soon after this date.

FOREIGN MISSIONS, 1370-78

Evidence has been produced above to show that Chaucer had received as a student in the Inner Temple a training in law and in the methods of business, well adapted to prepare him for such occupations as he later engaged in. In 1370 he entered upon a diplomatic career, and during the following eight years was a member of seven or eight commissions to the continent. Of the first we know only that it took him abroad during the summer of 1370.¹

The second was concerned with important business which kept him in Italy during the winter and spring of 1373. As a part of this business he was sent to Genoa with two other men, Jacopo de Provano and Giovanni de Mari, to discuss with the duke and his council and the citizens of Genoa the establishment of a trading port in England for Genoese merchants and the "franchises, liberties, immunities, and privileges" to be associated with such a port. Giovanni de Mari was a Genoese citizen. Jacopo de Provano was also an Italian — apparently a native of the little town of Carignano, about fifteen miles south of Turin — who had for two or three years acted as business agent for the English king. As, however, Chaucer was the only Englishman on the commission, it seems natural to suppose that he was especially charged with looking to the preservation of English rights and conformity to English laws and customs. In the course of these negotiations Chaucer was obliged to secure a loan of 33 l. from Jacopo de Provano, 7 l. 10 s. of which he spent in sending messengers to the king. Apparently these negotiations were unsuccessful, for the Genoese did not get their port. On the same trip Chaucer went also to Florence. The length of his stay there and the purpose of his visit are unknown, but it has been conjectured that he was charged with the private negotiation of a loan for the king.

¹ Since this was written Mr. V. B. Redstone has found in the Chancery Warrants at the Public Record Office a bill of privy seal (811/918) concerning an earlier journey abroad: "Soient faitz briefs desouz notre graunt seal pour nostre ame vallet Geoffrey Chaucer de passer en port de Douorr' ovesqz deux hakeneyz vint solds por ses despenses et dis liures en eschange. Donne souz nostre prive seal a Wyndesore le xvii jour de Juyl Lan quarante second [1368]." For what purpose and to what destination the poet went abroad does not yet appear, nor whether he went as a royal messenger or at his own expense. The 20 s. would pay for his passage of the channel at Dover; the 10 l. in foreign money for traveling expenses may give a clue to the length of his journey; the two hackneys (for one traveler) suggest that he was traveling in haste. It will be remembered that Prince Lionel was married at Milan on May 29. So, although Chaucer did not accompany him, as has sometimes been asserted, he may nevertheless have arrived there in time to meet Petrarch. But this record must await further investigation.

It is commonly held that this visit to Florence marked the beginning of Chaucer's knowledge of the Italian language and acquaintance with Italian literature. This may be true, but it should be borne in mind that there were many Italians in London at this time, that a number of them lived in Chaucer's immediate neighborhood, and that the connections of Chaucer's family with the mint, where many Italians were employed in responsible positions, would have furnished an easy means of his obtaining some knowledge of both the language and the literature of Italy before he made his journey. It is indeed possible that one reason for choosing him as a member of this commission may have been that he had some knowledge of Italian. It seems also worth suggesting that the home of Jacopo de Provano was not more than twenty miles from Saluzzo, the scene of the 'Clerk's Tale.'

In 1376-77 Chaucer was again employed three or four times in important negotiations. The first time he was sent with Sir John de Burley (brother of Prince Richard's tutor) on "secret business," we do not know where. The second time he was sent to Flanders with Sir Thomas Percy (brother of the first earl of Northumberland, uncle of "Hotspur," himself an admiral and a naval hero and later seneschal of Richard's household). In the same spring he was twice sent on missions to France — to Paris and to Montreuil, apparently — first, to treat of peace and, secondly, to arrange a marriage between Prince Richard and a daughter of the king of France. It is not certain on which of the other commissions sent to France at about the same time he was employed; Froissart names as his associates on the first Sir Guichard d'Angle (Richard's military tutor) and Sir Richard Stury (later the negotiator of Richard's marriage); and on the second, the Earl of Salisbury, Sir Guichard d'Angle, the Bishop of Hereford, and the Bishop of St. David's, the chancellor of England. In documents of the time other distinguished men are named as having served on these commissions. Negotiations were cut short by the death of King Edward III on June 21. Later in the summer, the Earl of Salisbury and Sir Guichard d'Angle were again sent abroad about the young king's marriage; and there is reason to believe that Chaucer was with them then also. The hostile feeling between the two countries was evidently too great for terms to be arranged, and the negotiations were fruitless.

Chaucer's last mission took him to Italy during the summer of 1378. He was sent with Sir Edward de Berkeley to Barnabo de Visconti, duke of Milan, and to Sir John Hawkwood, an Englishman in the duke's service and his military leader, to try to secure the assistance of the Milanese in the English wars with France. But evidently the mission failed.

CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS, 1374-86

We have nothing to show whether or not Chaucer was a skilful diplomat. The fact that he was appointed several times indicates that he was. But as early as 1374, he seems to have settled upon a business career for a livelihood. He was then appointed controller of the customs on wool, hides, and sheepskins, in the port of London, at an annual salary of 10 l. (about $1500). In this, he was returning to the kind of occupation previously followed by his ancestors. His duty was primarily to keep a counter-roll, or check-roll, of the customs accounts, to verify the roll of the two collectors. He was supposed to remain in person at the Wool Quay and to write the roll with his own hand. According to a recently discovered record, however, he was allowed to appoint a deputy as early as 1377. His associates, the collectors, were all very wealthy men, magnates of the city, aldermen, nearly all of them earlier or later honored by election as lord mayor. Sir William Walworth, with whom he was associated in 1375, and Sir Nicholas Brembre and Sir John Philipot, with whom he worked ten and seven years respectively, were merchant princes and important historic figures.

Until December 1386 — for twelve years — Chaucer was employed in checking up the wool customs, the great source of revenue for the English kings. In 1376 he apparently did a good piece of detective work, for he was given as a reward 71 l. 4 s. 6 d., stated to have been the price of wool which a man had tried to smuggle abroad to Holland. Both the collectors and their controller received regularly, in addition to their salaries, an annual reward for their diligence in collecting the customs.

In consequence, perhaps, of Chaucer's services in the wool custom, he was, in 1382, appointed controller also of the petty custom on wines and other merchandise (a much less important office) with leave to have a permanent deputy. What income this office brought him is unknown. Undoubtedly there were more perquisites attached to both offices than are recorded, and his income from the two offices was apparently very considerable.

During his absences on diplomatic missions Chaucer had, of course, to employ a deputy in his office in the wool customs. In 1383 also he asked leave to appoint a deputy for four months as he was "like to be so much occupied upon particular business that for a certain time he may not without grievous disturbance attend to that office." This was allowed, and in November 1384 he again got permission to appoint a deputy, this time for a month. In February 1385 he petitioned for leave to have a permanent deputy in his office. This petition was granted; evidently with the approval of the king's favorite, the Earl of Oxford, "through whom (as Froissart said) every thing was done," for he wrote on the parchment in French: "The King has granted it" (Le roy lad grante) and his signature: Oxen.

While Chaucer was on leave in 1383 a new custom house was built on the Wool Quay. After that time we must imagine the poet as making up his rolls in an upstairs apartment (probably), divided into two rooms and a garret, in a building thirty-eight feet long and twenty-one and a half feet wide.

In December 1386 Chaucer's employment at the custom house ceased. The common view of scholars is that he was dismissed by the commission appointed by parliament to inquire into the conduct of the king's business. It is true that this commission, appointed under the influence of the Duke of Gloucester, was strongly opposed to the king and his appointees, but several facts seem to indicate that Chaucer's official career was not terminated by its action. In the first place, one of his successors was a man who had previously served as his deputy. In the second place, the collectors, who were strong partisans of the king, remained in office for some time after the replacement of Chaucer. In the third place, Chaucer had some months before given up possession of his house over Aldgate, and on October 5, only four days after the assembly of parliament, and before the committee of investigation could have been appointed, the house had been leased to "Richard Forster," who was perhaps the Richard Forester whom Chaucer had appointed as one of his legal representatives during his mission of 1378. Moreover, in 1385 Chaucer had been appointed justice of the peace for Kent, and in the summer of 1386 had been elected a member of that parliament which is supposed to have taken the action which relieved him of his posts in the customs. On the whole, it would seem more probable that Chaucer had already decided to give up his official positions and retire to Kent. It is possible that the health of his wife, who apparently died in 1387, may have been a motive in this decision. All this, however, is merely speculation.

RELATIONS WITH THE COURT AND PERSONAL LIFE, 1374-86

Throughout his business and diplomatic career Chaucer continued to be officially a squire of the king's household and his salary as such was paid with fair regularity except in the confusion following the death of the old king. His wife continued with Queen Philippa until the queen's death, and shortly after John of Gaunt brought his second wife, Constance of Castile, to England, she was appointed one of the duchess's attendants. In 1374 John of Gaunt made Geoffrey Chaucer a grant of 10 l. a year for the service he had rendered to him and for the service his wife, Philippa, had rendered both to Queen Philippa and to Constance of Castile. Although as regards Philippa this is clear, we do not know when Chaucer himself was in the duke's service except during the Picardy campaign, and as very few of the records of payment of this annuity have been published, we do not know how regularly it was paid.

On St. George's Day (April 23), 1374, when King Edward was holding the Garter feast at Windsor, he made Chaucer a curious grant of a pitcher of wine to be taken daily at the hands of the king's butler in the port of London. As practically no business was done on that day (the few other grants seeming to have been of a personal character), one may wonder whether Chaucer may not have presented to the king a poem which had led to this personal form of grant. Grants of a tun of wine were common; grants of a pitcher of wine a day were excessively rare. That the grant was valuable is shown by the fact that, later on, Chaucer was able to commute it for 20 marks a year, the amount of his annuity as squire (about $2,000).

In May 1374 the Chaucers, Geoffrey and Philippa, left court and set up housekeeping in the "mansion" over Aldgate, which the poet obtained rent-free from the municipality, on condition that he keep it in repair and that the city retain right of entry for purposes of defense in time of war. The house seems to have had one large room, with a window looking inward over the city and one looking outward across the moor, a smaller room, and two quite small rooms, in addition to cellars. Earlier in the century, and perhaps at this time, there was a garden south of the house.

In this house, then, only a few minutes' walk from the custom house, Chaucer lived for about twelve years. But the housekeeping must have been much interrupted by his own journeys abroad, which occupied a considerable part of 1377 and 1378, by his wife's continued absence in 1379, and by his own absences in 1383, 1384, and perhaps in 1385.

During these years he obtained two valuable grants of a sort commonly distributed among the king's personal attendants. These were the wardships and marriages which, by the English system of feudal tenure, were continually falling into the king's hands. In 1375 Chaucer obtained two such wardships: one of the son of John de Solys, which could not have been very profitable, and the other of Edmund de Staplegate, the heir of a rich merchant of Canterbury, which brought him 104 l. (about $15,000).

A Coram Rege roll, just discovered (KB 27 No. 475), shows that at Michaelmas term 3 Richard II [1379] Chaucer put in his stead a professional attorney, Stephen del Falle in a plea of contempt and trespass brought against him by one Thomas Stondon on behalf of the king and himself. The nature of the offence charged is not yet known.

That Chaucer in 1378 was regarded as a man of substantial means seems indicated by his acceptance with John de Beverley, another squire, as mainpernor for Sir William de Beauchamp in his guardianship of the lands of the Earl of Pembroke in Wales and elsewhere. Sir William de Beauchamp, brother of the Earl of Warwick, was responsible to the king for a sum of 400 l. a year (about $60,000). Mainpernors, as a rule, were responsible for the sums guaranteed, and as John de Beverley, one of the king's favorite squires, and an exceedingly wealthy man, died in 1381 and was not, so far as we know, replaced, it would seem that Chaucer was regarded as sufficient guarantee. Confirmation of his financial responsibility is furnished by another record that has just been discovered in the Coram Rege Rolls. At the Hilary term 4 Richard II [1381] he, Ralph Strode, and two others became sureties for John Hende in 100 l. each.

In 1380 Chaucer was involved in a case of "raptus" (abduction; cf. the experience of his father), with two London citizens, John Grove, armorer, and Richard Goodchild, cutler. Although the circumstances are obscure, the records show that Chaucer was cleared of responsibility, first by the woman abducted (Cecilia Chaumpaigne), and then by the men, one of whom paid her ten pounds and was evidently the person principally concerned. The particular interest of the case lies in the fact that the men who witnessed for Chaucer the deed exonerating him were three knights of the king's household — Sir William de Beauchamp (for whom he had stood mainpernor in 1378), Sir William Neville, and Sir John Clanvowe — together with his associate in the customs, John Philipot, and a rich neighbor at Aldgate, Richard Morel. These names are evidence of Chaucer's standing at that time.

That Chaucer was in London during the Peasant Revolt of 1381 is indicated by the fact that during this very time he quit-claimed his father's house in Thames Street to Henry Herbury (one of the collectors of the poll tax that had brought about the revolt); but whether he was involved in it is unknown. Two of his custom house associates, Brembre and Walworth (then mayor of London and the slayer of Wat Tyler) were knighted by the young king on the historic occasion of the dispersing of the rioters at Mile End Green.

Throughout this period of Chaucer's life — 1374-1386 — his wife seems to have enjoyed special favor in the household of Constance of Castile, where Katherine Swynford was governess of two of the young princesses. As early as 1373 the duke had given Philippa Chaucer for a new year's gift six silver-gilt buttons and a buttoner (for the countless buttons which it was then the fashion to wear); and in 1380, 1381, and 1382 he gave her three silver-gilt cups with covers, each of greater value than the preceding.

Another indication of Chaucer's position at this time is the grant to him of black cloth for the funeral of Princess Joan, widow of the Black Prince, in 1385.

The last important event of the years Chaucer spent at the custom house and at Aldgate concerns his wife. On February 19, 1386, she was admitted to the fraternity of Lincoln Cathedral. This honor, which entitled the recipient to the special prayers of the cathedral body, was at the same time granted to Henry, earl of Derby (later Henry IV), to John Beaufort (son of John of Gaunt and Katherine Swynford), to Sir Thomas Swynford (her son by her first husband), and to five knights and squires who seem to have been members of the duke's household. Philippa Chaucer was the only woman admitted. John of Gaunt was present, but there is no mention of Chaucer.

CHAUCER AND DESCHAMPS, 1386

It was apparently in the early part of 1386 that there occurred an event to which we owe our first specific reference to Geoffrey Chaucer as a poet. This event was the return of Sir Lewis Clifford from France, bearing with him as a tribute to Chaucer a ballade addressed to him by Eustache Deschamps, the leading French poet of the day, together with other poems, perhaps his most recent compositions. Among the latter apparently was the Lai de Franchise, which Chaucer gracefully imitated in some lines of the Prologue to The Legende of Good Women. More significantly still, in the ballade the French poet humbly submits his work to the judgment of his English confrere, whose merits he exalts in many flattering comparisons, and whom he especially celebrates as translator of the famous Roman de la Rose. The interest and importance of this ballade will appear more fully the more carefully it is studied. There is some reason to believe that the two poets may have met in the spring of 1377 when Chaucer visited Paris as a member of an embassy for the negotiation of peace. The seventh line of the second stanza implies that Chaucer had sent a message to Deschamps:

O Socrates plains de philosophie,
 Seneque en meurs, et Auglux en pratique,
 Ovides grans en ta poëterie,
 Briés en parler, saiges en rethorique,
 Aigles treshaulz, qui par ta theorique
 Enlumines le regne d'Eneas, L'isle aux geans (ceuls de Bruth), et qu'i as Semé les fleurs et planté le rosier
 Aux ignorans de la langue Pandras —
 Grant translateur, noble Geffroy Chaucier.

Tu es d'amours mondains dieux en Albie;
 Et de la Rose, en la terre Angelique —
 Qui, d'Angela saxonne est puis flourie
 Angleterre, d'elle ce nom s'applique
 Le derrenier en l'ethimologique —
 En bon Anglès le Livre translatas;
 Et un vergier, où du plant demandas
 De ceuls qui font pour eulx auctorisier,
 A ja long temps que tu edifias,
 Grant translateur, noble Geffroy Chaucier.

A toy pour ce de la fontaine Helye
 Requier avoir un buvraige autentique,
 Dont la doys est du tout en ta baillie,
 Pour rafrener d'elle ma soif ethique,
 Qui en Gaule seray paralitique
 Jusques a ce que tu m'abuveras.
 Eustaces sui, qui de mon plant aras;
 Mais pran en gré les euvres d'escolier
 Que par Clifford de moy avoir pourras,
 Grant translateur, noble Geffroy Chaucier.

L'ENVOY

Poëte hault, loënge d'escuïrie,
 En ton jardin ne seroie qu'ortie,
 Considéré ce que j'ay dit premier —
 Ton noble plant, ta douce melodie;
 Mais, pour sçavoir, de rescripre te prie,
 Grant translateur, noble Geffroy Chaucier.¹

TRANSLATION

O Socrates full of wisdom,
 Seneca in morals, and Aulus Gellius in practical affairs,
 Ovid great in thy poetics,
 Concise in speech, experienced in rhetoric,
 Lofty eagle, who by thy science
 Dost illumine the kingdom of Æneas,
 The isle of giants (those of Brutus), and who there hast
 Sown the flowers and planted the rose-tree
 Amongst those ignorant of the Grecian tongue —
 O great translator, noble Geoffrey Chaucer;

Thou art a mundane god of love in Albion;
 And of the Rose in the Angelic land —
 Which from Lady Angela the Saxon has since become England, for from her this name is taken
 As final in the etymology —
 Into good English The Book thou hast translated;
 And a garden, for which thou hast asked plants
 From those who poetize to win them fame,
 Now for a long time thou hast been constructing,
 Great translator, noble Geoffrey Chaucer.

Of thee therefore from the Helian spring
 I ask to have an authentic draught,
 For the stream is entirely in thy keeping,
 To assuage therewith my feverish thirst,
 Who in Gaul shall be as one paralyzed
 Until thou shalt make me drink.

¹ The text is based mainly upon the facsimile given by Miss Spurgeon, Chaucer Criticism and Allusion, App. B, 16, but in both text and translation I have made much use of the important article of Jenkins, MLN, XXXIII, 266-77.

An Eustache am I, and thou shalt have a plant from me;
 But treat with favor the writings of a novice
 Which by Clifford thou shalt receive from me,
 Great translator, noble Geoffrey Chaucer.

L'ENVOY

Excellent poet, glory of squiredom,
 In thy garden I should be but a nettle,
 In comparison with what I have just spoken of —
 Thy noble plant, thy sweet melody;
 But, for my information, I beg thee for an official verdict,
 Great translator, noble Geoffrey Chaucer.

This poem is not only of interest in showing the high esteem in which Chaucer was held by the leading contemporary poet in France, but incidentally is of value for Chaucer's biography in two other respects. Aulus Gellius, who is mentioned under the name "Auglus" in l. 2, enjoyed a high reputation in the Middle Ages, "a double reputation, in fact," says Professor Jenkins, "for he was eminent both in letters and in the world of affairs as a judge. Even juris consults have drawn upon Gellius in matters of law. . . . Chaucer, in Deschamps' mind, is eminent not only in letters but also 'in practice,' as one may speak in these days of the practice of a lawyer or of a physician." The reference therefore seems to support the other evidence that Chaucer had received a legal education and was known for his skill in practical affairs. The other important reference is to Chaucer's translation of the Roman de la Rose. The terms in which Deschamps speaks of this translation and the fact that it is specifically the occasion of his ballade seem to indicate either that it was a recent performance or that it had only recently come to the attention of Deschamps. That the translation had only recently been made when Deschamps wrote is also suggested by the fact that in the Prologue to The Legende of Good Women it is coupled with the Troilus and Criseyde — undoubtedly a recent composition — as constituting the poet's offense against the god of love. It would hardly seem appropriate to bring up in this connection one of the sins of the poet's youth. Although one's first impulse is to think of a translation as belonging to the period of a poet's apprenticeship, it is not necessary to assign all a poet's translations to his youth. Certainly Chaucer at or near this very time was engaged with translations and paraphrases — the 'Palamon and Arcite,' the 'Tale of Griselda,' the Boethius, the Troilus and Criseyde, perhaps also the 'Melibeus'; even later with translations from Origen and Pope Innocent.

Between 1370, then, and 1387 Chaucer had had eight years much broken into by long journeys abroad and eight years of routine at the custom house. His income from various sources after 1374 must have averaged a sum equivalent to between $10,000 and $15,000 a year, besides a house rent-free and many special perquisites. Fully occupied as he was with business, he yet found time to write a number of long poems and translations.

COUNTRY GENTLEMAN, 1386-89

On October 5, 1386, Chaucer had evidently given up his Aldgate home — how long before we do not know — as it was then granted to someone else. On December 4 and 14 other men were appointed to fill his places in the customs. The next facts we know about him show that he was in the country.

It may be that Chaucer went to the country to live as soon as he had secured permission for a permanent deputy at the Wool Quay. At all events, as has already been said, he was appointed justice of the peace for Kent, October 12, 1385, and named in a commission to the justices of Kent, with Sir Simon de Burley, warden of the Cinque Ports and keeper of Dover Castle, and with many eminent jurists and representatives of county families, June 28, 1386. That he owed this office to his ownership of land in Kent seems almost certain. The commissions of the peace were made up of local landowners and a few "expert in the law." Whether he acquired land by purchase or by inheritance is unknown. There is some reason, however, to believe that he lived in the neighborhood of Greenwich, only a few miles from London. In August 1386 he was elected as one of the two members of parliament for the county of Kent.

During the 1386 session of parliament there began at Westminster, in the refectory of the Abbey, the court of chivalry in which Chaucer gave testimony that a certain coat of arms belonged to the Scrope family, of Yorkshire, and not, so far as he knew, to the Grosvenors, of Cheshire. In his deposition he tells of having seen Sir Henry and Sir Richard Scrope bearing these arms at R  thel until he was captured there, and he gives a vivid little picture of himself talking later in London to another man about these arms (with his words restored to direct discourse):

Once, on Friday Street, in London, as I was going along the street, I saw a new sign hanging out, made with these arms, and I asked what inn it was that had hung out these arms of Scrope. And somebody answered me and said: "No, sir, they are not hung out as the arms of Scrope, or painted there for those arms; but they are painted and put there for a knight of Cheshire who is called Sir Robert Grosvenor." And that was the first time I ever heard tell of Sir Robert Grosvenor or of his ancestors or of any other bearing the name of Grosvenor.

It is from the record of his testimony in this court that we derive our most definite information in regard to the date of the poet's birth. The statement that he was then forty years old and upward has already been discussed (above p. 6).

Chaucer's parliamentary experience was limited to the two months of October and November, during which the session of 1386 lasted. It may be that he was prevented from re  lection by the coming into power of the king's uncle, the Duke of Gloucester, in the autumn of 1386. The Duke of Lancaster had just gone to Spain, the Duke of York took no interest in politics, and Richard was so completely in the hands of his favorites that Gloucester created a party to get rid of them. Prominent among these favorites were the earl of Oxford, the archbishop of York (brother of Sir William Neville who stood by Chaucer in 1380), Chief Justice Tresilian (named with Chaucer on the Kentish commission of the peace in 1386), Sir Simon Burley (also on this commission, and brother to Sir John Burley with whom Chaucer had been associated on a mission in 1376), and Sir Nicholas Brembre (Chaucer's associate for many years in the customs). As to Chaucer's relations with Gloucester we know nothing; but it is a fact that on May 1, 1388, after the Gloucester party had succeeded in executing Tresilian, Burley, and Brembre, and both Oxford and the Archbishop had fled into exile, Chaucer resigned his annuity of forty marks to one John Scalby. It may be, as has been supposed, that this was merely a business transaction to convert his income into ready money for some special purpose or need.

The only other known records of Chaucer during the Gloucester régime are three recently discovered writs concerning a claim against him of 66 s. 8 d. (five marks) by John Churchman, who succeeded John Organ as collector of customs in the port of London. Concerning the nature of the claim or its validity we have as yet no information. It is possible that these writs had something to do with closing up Chaucer's accounts as controller — if he kept any; but more probably the poet had been a partner in some commercial transaction. It is significant, at any rate, that the second and third writs are addressed to the sheriff of Kent. Clearly it was believed that Chaucer was living in that county.

During this period from 1386 to 1389 Chaucer wrote his Prologue to The Legende of Good Women and began to put the stories together. The spring of 1387 is commonly mentioned as the date when he definitely began to work out his plan for the Canterbury Tales as a group, though some of the tales themselves were written earlier and some later. There is no evidence that he actually made the pilgrimage, at this or any other time. It is generally assumed that Philippa Chaucer, his wife, died in 1387, as the last payment of her annuity was made on June 18 of that year. Since it was a very common practice to make vows at the shrine of St. Thomas on behalf of persons who were ill, it is of course possible that the Canterbury pilgrimage reflects a real pilgrimage made by the poet in 1387 on behalf of his wife, but this is a mere speculation and there is no evidence for it. It is equally possible that the poet himself may have been in ill health for some time at this period; and again it is equally possible that there was no definite pilgrimage which suggested the Canterbury Tales.

CLERK OF THE KING'S WORKS, 1389-91

Immediately after Richard recovered his power in 1389, Chaucer was appointed to the important office of clerk of the king's works in various royal residences. By an appointment dating from July 12, 1389, Chaucer had charge of the Tower, Westminster Palace, and eight other royal residences, besides St. George's Chapel, Windsor — for special repairs in which he was given another commission exactly a year later — five hunting lodges, and the mews for falcons at Charing Cross, as well as of all gardens, ponds, mills, and fences belonging to any of these. He had power to impress workmen, to bring back runaway workmen, to arrest and imprison those who resisted him, to purvey all materials needed for his work and to make inquisition where such materials could be procured. He had four or more deputy purveyors and a controller — to check his rolls as he had checked the rolls of the collectors of the customs — he had a small army of men in his pay as workmen; and he was paymaster to at least one man of high reputation as an architect — Henry Yevele, who before Chaucer's death restored Westminster Hall and left it essentially as it is today, and who also erected the beautiful tombs of King Richard and Queen Anne still in Westminster Abbey.

The importance of Chaucer's post is shown by the fact that it was held earlier by William of Wykeham, later the famous bishop of Winchester, who is believed to have been a skilled architect and to have had a hand in the designing of the beautiful buildings he put up when he founded New College, Oxford (completed about 1386). It is not less than extraordinary that such a post should have been given to a poet.

During Chaucer's term of office occurred two events of unusual interest. In May 1390 and again about Michaelmas it was his business to construct scaffolds (seats) for tournaments at Smithfield. Of the second of these tournaments and the feasting and dancing that accompanied it Froissart has given a brilliant picture. Immediately after it, the Order of the Garter was conferred at Windsor — in St. George's Chapel, recently repaired by Chaucer — upon William of Bavaria, earl of Ostervant (earlier a suitor of Queen Anne and of Philippa, daughter of John of Gaunt).

On March 12, 1390, Chaucer had been appointed upon a commission for the prosaic but important purpose of looking after the walls, ditches, sewers, and bridges, along the Thames between Greenwich and Woolwich. The chief point of interest here lies in his associates: Sir Richard Stury — captured with him in France in 1359, and sent on a mission with him in 1377 — two eminent lawyers, John Wadham and William Skrene; a wealthy London vintner, Henry Vanner; and John Culpepper, a Kentish country gentleman.

In September 1390 Chaucer suffered a series of misfortunes, concerning which there has been much discussion. According to the records he was assaulted and robbed three times within four days, once "near the Fowle Oak," in Kent, once at Westminster, in Middlesex, and once at Hatcham, in Surrey. The first robbery is known only from a writ to the exchequer, dated January 6, 1391, releasing Geoffrey Chaucer from repayment of 20 l. of the king's money, of which, together with his horse and other property, he had been feloniously robbed on the "third day of September last past by certain notable robbers, as has been fully confessed by the mouth of one of them." For the other two robberies there are several documents, connected with the arrest and trial of the robbers on the testimony of one Richard Brerelay, who confessed and turned king's evidence. These documents state that on Tuesday, September 6, Chaucer was robbed twice — at Westminster of 10 l. and at Hatcham of 9 l. 44 (or 43) d. Some scholars have held that there were only two robberies with a total loss of 20 l. in money. This is possible only if the king's writ of January 6, 1391, is in error as to the date. The "Fowle Oak" seems to have been a place for public hangings, on the highroad between Greenwich and London, and had been the scene of several robberies. Although in Kent, it was not far from Hatcham in Surrey. As Chaucer is said to have been beaten and wounded as well as robbed in the Hatcham attack, these experiences may have been a motive for giving up the clerkship of the king's works.

It has been suggested that Chaucer had another motive for giving up the clerkship of the works in the unsatisfactory financial conditions connected with the post. It is pointed out that when he rendered his account, on June 17, 1391, there was a balance due him of about 21 l., which was not fully paid for more than a year. But during his twenty-three months in the clerkship Chaucer had paid out 1231 l. 6 s. 3½ d. and had received 1210 l. 7 s. 1 d. The balance due, though large in itself, was small in comparison with the sums handled and the tardiness in repayment was not greater than was customary in dealings with the government. That Chaucer was in comfortable financial condition at this time is indicated by the fact that on April 6, 1391 he advanced for the works 100 marks (66 l. 13 s. 4 d.), which was not repaid until May 22, 1392.

THE LAST DECADE, 1391-1400

But it is quite possible that Chaucer's motive for giving up the clerkship of the works was merely that the duties of the office required a very large amount of travel and absence from home, which may have been distasteful to a man of sedentary habits and which quite certainly would have given him no leisure or opportunity for writing. In any event it seems probable that Chaucer was not forced out of the clerkship as has usually been said, for he did not give up this position until June 17, 1391. He was appointed deputy forester of the royal forest of North Petherton, Somerset, at some date in 1391 previous to June 22, probably before June 17 when he turned over the clerkship of the works to his successor.¹

On January 18, 1391, Chaucer was distrained to appear and settle his account as clerk of the king's works from July 12, 1389. It is recorded that on the appointed day he appeared in propria persona sua and settled his accounts.

Chaucer's appointment as deputy forester was made first by Roger Mortimer, earl of March (grandson of the Countess of Ulster in whose household he began his career); later, in 1398 by the Countess of March (probably a renewal of office upon her husband's death or during his absence in Ireland). It is, to say the least, possible, that Chaucer owed this particular office, not to his early connection with the Countess of Ulster, but to the ownership of certain lands in the forest by some of his cousins (descendants of Mary Chaucer by her first husband, John Heyroun), which carried with them a claim to the appointment of forester. However that may have been, for the last decade of his life, Chaucer, so far as we know, held no office that tied him to London; and as the foresters usually resided in the Park House in the forest, it may be that he spent much of his time there. His duty was to keep a general oversight of the other forest officers.

¹ At first, in 14th Richard II — June 22, 1390 — June 21, 1391 — he is named with one Richard Brittle; later, in 21st Richard II, alone. Whether he and Brittle shared the office, or whether he completed a year in which Brittle had died, cannot now be determined.

King Richard's interest in Chaucer seems not to have ceased when he gave up the clerkship of the works, for in the Issue Roll of the exchequer there is recorded a gift of 10 l. on January 9, 1393, as a reward for "good service rendered to the king during the year now present." What this service was we have no means of knowing.

In the recently discovered account book of Gilbert Maghfelld (or Maufeld), a London merchant who lent money to many members of the court circle, Chaucer is recorded as having borrowed 26 s. 8 d. (2 marks) on Sunday, July 28, 1392. As this loan was to be repaid on the following Saturday and is cancelled as paid, it hardly justifies any inference concerning the general condition of Chaucer's finances. There was little money in circulation in the fourteenth century, and even persons of considerable wealth were often obliged to borrow small sums when they needed cash.

On February 28, 1394, the king granted him a new annuity of 20 l. for services past and future. From the frequency with which Chaucer obtained advances on this annuity it has been inferred that during the last years of his life he was poor. It is true that he obtained advances or loans as many as a dozen times, but against this must be set the fact that the payments from the exchequer were almost as often in arrears. It therefore seems equally probable that because of the large expenditures which the exchequer had to meet from time to time for Richard's expedition to Ireland and other demands, Chaucer took advantage of his knowledge of the situation and his relations with officials of the exchequer to obtain payments whenever money was available even if his pension was not yet due. If we can assume that the poet was the Geoffrey Chaucer who was subforester of North Petherton and that his home was now principally in Somerset, the irregularities of the payments on his pension may be due in some measure at least to the infrequency of his visits to London.

He was apparently in London at Christmas 1395 and early in 1396, for he received a magnificent scarlet robe, trimmed with fur, costing 8 l. 8 s. 4 d., from Henry of Derby, and on February 1 he seems to have delivered 10 l. from the clerk of the wardrobe to the young earl of Derby, later Henry IV. He was still or again in London on March 1, when he repaid to the exchequer a loan of two marks made during the preceding year. On April 1, as he with several others was appointed by one Gregory Ballard attorney to take seisin for him of certain lands at and near Greenwich, it is clear that he was then either at London, or more probably at Greenwich. But there is no further sign of him in London until December 25, 1396, when he again drew on account at the exchequer. That he should have wished to be in London for the festivities attending the arrival of the little queen, Isabel of France, at which his own sister-in-law, the newly married duchess of Lancaster, was the second greatest lady of the land, is, of course, highly probable.

In 1397, he collected money in London, on July 2 and August 9, and was paid in full, up to date, on October 26; but there is no evidence that he was in London aside from those three dates.

In 1398, he seems to have been in a very peculiar position. On April 24, Isabella, widow of Walter Bukholt, sued him for a debt of more than fourteen pounds and on May 4, he was given letters of protection for two years on the ground that he has been appointed by the king "to attend to many difficult and pressing matters, both at court and away from court, within the realm of England," and he is afraid of being hindered in this business by complaints or suits of "certain jealous persons" (emulos). Although the meaning of this is still uncertain, it seems probable that the suit which immediately preceded the letters of protection grew out of Chaucer's business as clerk of the works. The likelihood of this is increased by the recent discovery by Miss Rickert that Bukholt, alias Worthe, was keeper of the king's manor of Clarendon, at the time when Chaucer had general oversight of the works there; and that later, Bukholt himself was called clerk of the works at that place. Out of this situation may have grown some dispute as to financial responsibility.

During these proceedings Chaucer, after being paid half his annuity, went to the Exchequer three times within a month to get an advance of a noble (6 s. 8 d.); and on the day of the last advance, received also the substantial sum of 5 l. 6 s. 8 d. Moreover, at the very time when it was ordered that he should be outlawed unless he appeared to answer the Bukholt plea, he petitioned for and received from the king the annual grant of a butt of wine, and was advanced ten pounds on his annuity. However this strange combination of facts is to be explained, it shows at least that Chaucer was still employed in important affairs and enjoyed the confidence and favor of the king, and that his credit was good at the Exchequer. Whether his temporary embarrassment was due to his admission of the debt and settlement out of court or to some other cause, it is impossible to say. Whether at this time he was living in London or not is doubtful. The report of the sheriff of Middlesex that he was not to be found is capable of more than one interpretation.

The last thing we hear of him under Richard II is that, in the spring and summer of 1399, his annuity was paid in full. And the first thing we hear under the reign of Henry IV is that the new king on the very day of his coronation (October 13) gave him "for service rendered and to be rendered" an annuity of forty marks a year besides the twenty pounds granted by King Richard. When a few days later he pleaded that he had lost his patent for the twenty pounds and also for the butt of wine granted by King Richard, Henry IV renewed both patents. Evidently with anticipation of prosperity to come, the following Christmas Eve Chaucer leased a house within the garden of Westminster Abbey. He took over, it would seem, the unexpired part of a long lease, as the arrangement was for fifty-three years at an annual rent of 53 s. 4 d.

He was to make all repairs and was not permitted to sublet. This entering upon a long lease of a house in a quiet place strongly suggests that he was then hoping to settle down to the completion of his Canterbury Tales, begun so many years before.

With the aid of some recently discovered records it is possible to give a fuller account than has hitherto been given of the house in the Abbey precincts in which Chaucer spent the last months of his life. It seems clear from the description in leases to other tenants that the house was adjacent to the chapel and probably lay on the south side, but separated from the Abbey mill stream by the great gate and very near to two gardens, one of which is distinguished by the term 'great.' The tenant immediately preceding Chaucer was John Edryk, usher of the exchequer, who had it in 1397-99. The next tenant after Chaucer was not his son Thomas as has usually been supposed. He is not known to have leased it until 1411. Chaucer's immediate successor in the lease seems to have been Master Paul (apparently the king's physician, Master Paul De Monte, a Florentine), who at Michaelmas, 1400, had a lease of the tenement and garden next the chapel for 60 s. The records show that rent was paid for the house in 1402-03, 1403-04, 1405-06, 1406-07, and 1407-08. In 1403-04 William Horscroft, a London skinner who had some sort of connection with the royal household, is recorded as paying 4 l. for the second year of a seven-year lease. The next known payments are those by Thomas Chaucer in 1411-12 and 1413-14.

In 1400 he received on February 21 the 10 l. due at Michaelmas 1399, the last payment of his pension under Richard II, and on June 5 he received a payment of 5 l. on the 8 l. 13 s. 5 d. due from October 21, 1399, when his pension was confirmed by Henry IV to March 31, 1400.

The accepted date of his death, October 25, 1400, is taken from his tomb in Westminster Abbey, which was not, however, erected until 1556. It probably represents an ancient tradition, which there is no serious reason for questioning.

CHAUCER'S DESCENDANTS

There is some evidence to show that Chaucer had several children, but it is not very satisfactory. The Elizabeth Chaucy for whom John of Gaunt paid a large sum in 1381 that she might be admitted as a nun in the aristocratic abbey of Barking, where Margaret Swynford already was established, may have been one daughter; the Agnes Chaucer who with Joan Swynford was one of the "damsels" in waiting at the coronation of Henry IV, may have been another. The "Litell Lowis, my sone," ten years old in 1391, for whom Chaucer compiled his treatise on the Astrolabe, appears to have been really his own son, and not, as has been plausibly argued, the son of Sir Lewis Clifford. At least, a newly discovered retinue roll shows Thomas Chaucer and Lewis Chaucer together at Carmarthen in 1403. The name Lewis may mean that Sir Lewis Clifford was godfather to Chaucer's son.

As to the relationship to the poet of Sir Thomas Chaucer, an extremely wealthy man who died in 1434, there has been much argument. That he was a near kinsman is certain from the fact that Henry Beaufort, son of Katherine Swynford and the Duke of Lancaster, twice refers to him as his "cousin Chaucer." Like other Chaucers, he was connected with the customs, being king's butler. He had annuities from both Richard and Henry, and, like Geoffrey Chaucer, received favors immediately after the coming of Henry IV to the throne. It appears that he was in the service of John of Gaunt at least as early as 1394-95, and continued in the service of his son. The evidence that he was Geoffrey's son rests particularly upon the definite statement of Dr. Thomas Gascoigne, who must often have seen Thomas Chaucer and have been familiar with contemporary opinion as to his parentage; upon Thomas Chaucer's use of a seal bearing the coat of arms elsewhere associated with Geoffrey and the name Ghofrai Chaucier; and upon his appointment as Geoffrey's successor as forester of North Petherton. His payment of the rent of the Westminster house between 1411 and his death, often used as an argument for the relationship, has no value as evidence of that fact.

If, as the evidence seems to indicate, Thomas Chaucer was the poet's son, we are able to trace the later history of the family with considerable definiteness. Thomas himself had a distinguished career as chief butler to the king, ambassador, speaker of the house of commons, member of the king's council, and was one of the wealthiest and most influential Englishmen of his day. His daughter Alice was married to the famous earl of Salisbury who was killed in the French wars fighting against Joan of Arc, and later to William de la Pole, who became duke of Suffolk and who brought about the marriage between Henry VI and Margaret of Anjou. Their son, John de la Pole, duke of Suffolk, married the sister of Edward IV. From Chaucer's sister-in-law, Katherine Swynford, and John of Gaunt were descended all of the English kings after Henry VI; Edward IV, Edward V, and Richard III being descended from Joan Beaufort, their daughter, and Henry VII from John Beaufort, their eldest son.

A letter by Alice Chaucer about her books indicates that she inherited to some degree the tastes of her grandfather the poet, though no copy of any of his works is definitely recorded. The famous Fairfax manuscript containing most of the minor poems was, however, made for her husband's friend and associate Sir Thomas Stanley, and may have been copied from a manuscript owned by her.

II

CHAUCER'S APPEARANCE

That Chaucer was about five feet six inches in height was estimated when his bones were accidentally uncovered in digging the grave for Robert Browning in Westminster Abbey. That his legs were unduly short in proportion to his body, as has sometimes been inferred from the picture in the Ellesmere manuscript, was not supported by this examination. That he was fond of good cheer and in his later years somewhat portly not only appears from his portraits but is definitely stated in more than one passage by the poet himself. The portraits, most of which are clearly derived from the same original, show a fair-haired, ruddy-faced man with strong features and pointed beard. One of the most interesting of these portraits is that now preserved in the Library of Harvard University and formerly known as the Seddon portrait. The date 1400 under the coat of arms can hardly have been placed there in that year, as the form of the figure 4 belongs to the fifteenth century. But Holman Hunt felt confident that the portrait was painted from life. The face is not that of an old man, but distinctly suggests suffering and bad health.

Mr. Walter Rye in a private letter declares that this portrait cannot have been painted until many years after Chaucer's death: He bases his statement upon the declaration of an unnamed expert who asserts that portraits with coats of arms are not known to have been painted before the sixteenth century. I am not competent to estimate the value of this opinion.

The portrait is painted in oil colors on a thick oak board, on the back of which are pasted two pieces of paper. The upper one is so faded that not even a trace of writing appears upon it. The lower one, however, is marked "Copy of the above inscription" and states that on the sixth of September, 1803, the portrait was given by Miss Frances Lambert to Alexander Dyke, Esq., as a perpetual memorial of her relative and friend, Thomas Stokes, Esq., of Llanshawe's Court, Gloucestershire, where it had been preserved for more than three hundred years, as was attested by documents in the family archives. There is no place in Gloucestershire known as Llanshawe's Court. The copyist had evidently misread the name Stanshaw's Court, a manor long in the possession of the Stokes family, a few miles northwest of Bristol. In earlier times Stokeses were connected with Chaucer and his descendants in so many ways that there is no difficulty in supposing that the portrait came into the possession of the family at a very early period. I have not yet succeeded in learning whether the family records of which Miss Lambert speaks are still preserved. To Americans this portrait has an added interest as having been presented to the Harvard Library by Professor Charles Eliot Norton as a memorial of the two great scholars and lovers of Chaucer, Francis James Child and James Russell Lowell. Professor Norton had received it as a gift from James Loeb, Esq.

The portrait generally regarded as the most authoritative is that inserted by the order of Thomas Hoccleve in his De Regimine Principum. Three MSS of this poem contain copies of the portrait, the best of them being that in MS Harley 4866. The well-known picture in the famous Ellesmere MS is perhaps equally authoritative. Recently Brusendorff has argued in favor of the high claims of the picture, representing a poet reading his poems to an assembly, which forms the frontispiece of MS No. 61 of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. In it, he thinks, are given authentic portraits of the poet, King Richard, Queen Anne, and John of Gaunt. Although Brusendorff's arguments are not very substantial, his view may be correct. No one seems to have called attention to the curious miniature in the initial "A" of the Tale of Melibeus in MS Rawlinson Poetry 223. Seated beside a reading desk bearing an open book is a man who is evidently telling a story. But the man is tall and thin and resembles no other picture of Chaucer.

III

CHAUCER'S FRIENDS AND ASSOCIATES

The richness of Chaucer's life experience may be partly accounted for by his continued social contact with people of the most varied types and positions in England and by his frequent travels on the Continent and intercourse there with men of different ranks and different nations.

Brought up in royal households, he must have known well Prince Lionel and Prince John of Gaunt and their wives, Elizabeth of Ulster and the Duchess Blanche, of whose death he wrote. With King Edward's court he must have been especially familiar. What he did not know from his own experience as yeoman and esquire of the king's household, he may well have learned from his wife, a countrywoman and attendant of Queen Philippa. Undoubtedly he also saw much of the Black Prince and his beautiful wife, the "Fair Maid of Kent," to whose circle several of his friends were later attached. King Richard he must have known from early childhood to the end of his wretched career. When John of Gaunt brought home his Spanish wife in 1372, Philippa Chaucer was very soon appointed her personal attendant; and there is strong evidence to show that Katherine Roet, first the governess of the duke's children, then his mistress, and finally, in 1396, his third wife and duchess of Lancaster, was Chaucer's sister-in-law. In the F version of The Legende of Good Women there is clear evidence that he knew and admired Queen Anne. Toward the end of Richard's reign there are indications that Chaucer, like many others, gave him up as hopeless and attached himself to the fortunes of Henry of Derby, who, on the very day of his coronation, richly rewarded the poet's service.

Among Chaucer's occasional poems, one — Lak of Stedfastnesse — is openly dedicated to King Richard and one — The Compleynt to his Empty Purse — to Henry IV; one — The Compleynt of Venus — is addressed to an unknown princess, perhaps the duchess of York; one — Fortune — is addressed to several unknown princes, probably the dukes of York and Gloucester, and Henry, earl of Derby; and one — Rosamounde — is apparently addressed to some little princess (the little Queen Isabel?).

Among members of the different royal households, Chaucer had, naturally, a wide acquaintance. Particularly significant are his relationships with the following: Sir Lewis Clifford and his son-in-law, Sir Philip la Vache; Sir William Beauchamp; Sir William Neville; Henry Scogan, esquire; and Sir John Clanvowe. The Bukton to whom he addresses one poem was probably Sir Peter Bukton, a distinguished lawyer and public official, though a claim has been made that he was Sir Robert Bukton, a squire in the service of Queen Anne, and there was also a John Bukton, whose claims have not yet been examined.

Sir Lewis Clifford, a younger son of the great baronial family of that name, was a distinguished soldier and a devoted adherent of the Princess of Wales. His relations with Chaucer have already been discussed. Clifford's son-in-law, Vache, of a Gascon family, was also a soldier and in close attendance upon the Princess of Wales, who made him one of her executors; he was later chamberlain to the little Queen Isabel. To him Chaucer dedicated his ballad, "Truth."

Sir William de Beauchamp, brother of the Earl of Warwick, cousin of the earls of Pembroke and of the Mortimers, was a sailor rather than soldier. He was captain of the town of Calais for many years and was among those especially intimate with King Richard. His relations with Chaucer have been discussed on p. 21. It seems probable that Chaucer owed not a little of his material in various ways to his association with him.

Sir William Neville, kinsman of both Clifford and Beauchamp, was also among Richard's intimates, and like Clifford, a member of the king's council. His brother John, Lord Neville of Raby, was a distinguished soldier, and another brother, the infamous Archbishop of York, was among Richard's advisers banished in 1388. Sir William Neville, however, continued in the king's service until his death. With Beauchamp, he stood by Chaucer in the Chaumpaigne case.

Sir John Clanvowe, also a distinguished soldier and diplomat, and a member of the council, was the third member of the king's household who supported Chaucer in the Chaumpaigne case. With Sir William Neville he undertook a pilgrimage to Jerusalem in 1390; and they both died near Constantinople. His kinsman, Sir Thomas Clanvowe, also of the court circle, later wrote The Cuckoo and the Nightingale in palpable imitation of Chaucer.

The Scogan, to whom Chaucer addressed one of his ballades, was evidently in court favor at the time when it was written. Apparently he was the Henry Scogan who later became the tutor of the four sons of Henry IV. In a poem addressed to these young princes, about 1407, Scogan refers to Chaucer as his master, and quotes entire Chaucer's Gentillesse.

Of these men, Clifford, Neville, and Clanvowe, seem to have been for a time devoted followers of Wyclif, as was also Sir Richard Stury, with whom Chaucer was associated. That Chaucer himself knew Wyclif personally is made almost certain by the fact that Wyclif, by his own statement, was for a time king's chaplain and must have preached at court while Chaucer was a member of the household.

Chaucer's diplomatic experience also brought him into close relations with many of the most distinguished nobles and ecclesiastics of the day. Among those with whom he was sent on foreign embassies were: Sir Guichard d'Angle, military tutor to King Richard; Sir John Burley, also Richard's tutor, and brother to Sir Simon Burley, who brought Queen Anne to England, and with whom Chaucer served on a commission of the peace during the critical time when the French were on the point of invading England; the Earl of Salisbury, who fought at Crécy and Poitiers and was one of the original founders of the order of the Garter; Walter Skirlawe, bishop of Durham, one of the greatest ecclesiastics and builders of the time; and many other men famous in their day as leaders in the affairs of church and state.

In his business career at the custom house, Chaucer came into daily contact, year after year, with the most important and wealthy citizens of London — men who were able to lend the king of their own fortunes thousands of pounds at a time, on the security of the crown jewels. Among them, Sir William Walworth, Sir Nicholas Brembre, and Sir John Philipot were all collectors of the customs while Chaucer was controller — the two latter for many years. Walworth was mayor of London during the Wat Tyler rebellion in 1381 and with Brembre and Philipot was knighted for his gallant conduct at that time. Brembre, through Richard's personal liking for him, roused the enmity of Gloucester and was among the favorites executed in 1388.

As justice of the peace and member of parliament Chaucer must have made the acquaintance of the principal lawyers and politicians of the time; with some of them his association must have been intimate.

In the literary world Chaucer was undoubtedly the leader of his time. The only other English poet of note was his friend, and also to some extent his rival, John Gower, a gentleman also belonging to the court circle, and author of three huge volumes — the Miroir de l'Homme, in French; the Vox Clamantis, in Latin; the Confessio Amantis, in English — and of many lyrics in French. In 1378, when Chaucer was sent to Italy, Gower acted as his attorney; and later, Chaucer dedicated his Troilus and Creseyde to Gower and "philosophical Strode," jointly. It is supposed that this Strode was Ralph Strode, an Oxford scholar who wrote against the philosophical and theological views of Wyclif but was apparently on friendly terms with him — undoubtedly the Ralph Strode who moved to London and became “common serjeant of the city” on November 25, 1373. The recently discovered association of Chaucer and Strode as sureties for John Hende settles the question. Chaucer also mentions with praise, in a way that suggests personal acquaintance, Otho de Granson, a knight of Savoy who fought on the side of the English as early as 1372 and in 1393 was pensioned by Richard. Three of his poems Chaucer translated and combined into the Compleynt of Venus.

In his foreign missions Chaucer must have become acquainted with some members of the French royal family, and with the rulers of Genoa, Florence, and Milan; and he was sent once on business to Sir John Hawkwood, the famous English free lance in the service of the duke of Milan. Chaucer also singles out for praise the Italian jurist and writer, Giovanni di Lignano (‘Clerk’s Tale,’ 34ff.), in a way that seems to imply personal acquaintance.

That Chaucer had a personal acquaintance with some of the famous French poets of the time who so strongly influenced his early work is highly probable. There is some evidence that the poet Machaut, in whose manner Chaucer’s first poems were written, was in Calais when Chaucer was there in October, 1360; but we cannot prove that the two men actually met. When, earlier in the same year, Chaucer was taken prisoner near Rheims, both Machaut and Deschamps, who later became a great admirer of Chaucer, were living in that city; but we do not know that Chaucer was taken to Rheims. That he knew Froissart, however, is practically certain, for Froissart was a member of Queen Philippa’s household from 1361 to 1366, composing for her “beaux ditties et traités amoureux,” and Chaucer was also at this time probably attached to some member of the royal family.

When Chaucer was in Italy in 1372-73, he may have met both Petrarch and Boccaccio; but there is no evidence that he did. Both were old men, and Boccaccio was ill and living in retirement. Although Chaucer draws upon the work of Boccaccio more than upon any one other writer, he never mentions him by name; and the only hint that he knew Petrarch comes from the fact that he mentions him by name and speaks with regret of his death.

Of Chaucer's numerous literary disciples, the most distinguished were: Thomas Hoccleve, a clerk in the exchequer office; John Lydgate, a monk of Bury St. Edmund's; an anonymous monk of Canterbury who wrote an account of the Pilgrims' stay at Canterbury and the amusing Tale of Beryn, purporting to be the first tale on the homeward journey; Thomas Usk, a city official executed with Brembre in 1388, and author of the Testament of Love; Sir Thomas Clanvowe and Henry Scogan, referred to above, and a group of Scotch poets who imitated Chaucer during the fifteenth century. There are also numerous other poems, about the writers of which little or nothing is known, which would probably not have been written, had Chaucer not shown the way.

IV

CHAUCER'S ENGLAND

THE GENERAL BACKGROUND

To reconstruct imaginatively the aspect and culture of Chaucer's England is perhaps impossible—at least to an American. City life as we know it today is entirely different from the city life of that time; and country life as it exists or ever has existed in America is perhaps even less like country life in fourteenth century England. But the attempt at reconstruction is worth undertaking, for our understanding of Chaucer, of the conditions under which he wrote and of the spirit of his writing, will be greatly aided by the effort to bear in mind some of the outstanding features of the physical and social background of his life.

First of all, let us remind ourselves of the physical aspects of his world. England itself—exclusive of Scotland and Wales—has an area of about 51,000 square miles—that is, it is slightly larger than the state of New York, somewhat smaller than Alabama or Arkansas or North Carolina. Including Wales, it is slightly larger than Michigan and smaller than Florida or Georgia. From London to the farthest points in England that we know Chaucer to have visited — Hatfield in the north and Petherton in the west — is 150 miles in a direct line. The country itself is about 250 miles in length, with an average width of less than two hundred. Instead of the vast cities, the multitudinous factories and mines and roaring centers of industrial frenzy packing 30,000,000 people into the tight little island of today, the country was then predominantly rural and had a population of not more than 2,500,000. The largest city was London, not the enormous, sprawling web of splendor and misery overhung with smoke and dirty fog that we now know, but, notwithstanding its mediaeval lack of effective plumbing and drainage, a city which fairly deserved William Morris's epithets of "small" and "white" and "clean" — a city not of public parks but of many and large private gardens, crossed by running streams, and swept by breezes from the thinly populated open fields which extended up to its very walls. No underground railway or motor bus was needed for transportation. It was about 2,000 yards long by 1,000 yards wide, and all its inhabitants — about 35,000 or 40,000 — were in a certain sense neighbors. It is somewhat surprising to compare it in size with cities and towns of the United States and to learn that it was not so large as Butte, Montana, Lexington, Kentucky, Pasadena, California, or Shreveport, Louisiana; and only a little, if any, larger than Brookline, Massachusetts, Dubuque, Iowa, or Madison, Wisconsin. The next largest cities of fourteenth century England — York, Norwich, Chester, Coventry, Lincoln, Newcastle — ranged from 11,000 inhabitants down to 3,000 or 4,000. In the south and east and central parts, scattered at intervals of ten miles or so, were smaller market towns, usually clustered about some ancient castle or abbey; and in every fertile valley and plain were villages of 60 to 150 persons, formed by the manor houses and the tenants free and unfree belonging to the manorial estates. In every direction, from even the slightest eminence, one could see dotting the landscape at intervals of only a few miles abbeys, monasteries, nunneries, cathedral towers, or spires of large parish churches — unmistakable evidence of the wealth of the church, the enormous number of the clergy, and the dominant part which religion, or at least ecclesiasticism, occupied in the lives of the people. In the north and northwest, cities were smaller, market towns rarer, and manor houses more widely scattered. As a consequence religious establishments, too, were fewer in number. Throughout the land, even in its most thickly settled parts, vast stretches were still covered by virgin forests, and wide uplands were dotted with flocks of sheep.

RURAL ENGLAND

If we realize the stability of English life as compared with our own restlessness and continued reconstruction, we can the more easily imagine that the English countryside today, except where industrialism has ruined it, is much as Chaucer saw it. The oaks, the elms, the beeches, the hawthorn hedges, the hazel copses, the yews in the churchyards, the wild heath, rolling away purple for miles in the late summer, yellow with broom and with gorse that, as folk say, "is out of bloom only when kissing's out of fashion," — all these are almost unchanged. There are alive still oaks and yews that were five or six hundred years old in his time. There are still great tracts of woodland in the old royal forests of which he and his friends were from time to time among the official keepers. Then, as now, Kent was the garden of England, and although there were no hopfields and no queer conical-tipped oosthouses in which hops are dried, the county in which he lived for a time and in which he imagined his pilgrims journeying to Canterbury was full of orchards of apples, cherries, and pears; was rich with gardens of strawberries, and the herbs so lavishly used in mediaeval cooking and medicine — fennel, saffron, marjoram, mint, parsley, coriander, and many others; and the gardens were gay with flowers that make England beautiful still: daffodils and primroses, fox-gloves and fleurs-de-lys, violets, lavender, lilies, cowslips, roses, and periwinkle. And we know from Chaucer himself that in spring the trees were thronged with singing birds and the grass was blossomed over with pink and white daisies, and that in autumn the hedges were full of ripe blackberries.

TRAVEL

Up and down these hedged-in roads there was a deal of travel, especially along the road between Canterbury and London, but extensive enough over all England. Nor, indeed, were the roads so bad as we are accustomed to think. Many of them had been laid with stone by the Romans — their square-blocked paving is still traceable here and there — and all were more or less kept in repair by the great landowners whose agents were busy traversing the land to collect the rents of their vast estates, and by officers of religious foundations that equalled or surpassed them in their scattered holdings. The injunctions of the Church against the sin of sloth fell in with the popular love of holiday-making in fine weather, and sent many thousands of persons annually jogging from shrine to shrine in all parts of the country, and “specially from every shires ende” to Canterbury, where by the miracles of St. Thomas à Becket it was believed the sick were healed.

Besides business managers of estates and pilgrims, there were thousands of other travelers frequenting the roads. The great households of the nobility were almost constantly traveling from one estate to another, for it was the custom, not to transport the food to the family, but the family to the food, so that as soon as the supplies were exhausted at one manor, the household moved to another. Local fairs in the summer months drew people from the surrounding country to buy and to sell, and the great fairs were thronged with tradesmen from the cities and from abroad who offered for sale all the necessities and luxuries of mediaeval life. There were also Oxford and Cambridge students on their way to and from college and in vacation time wandering about begging the wherewithal to “scoleye.” There were merchants and diplomats coming and going on their business abroad. If Dover is now less than an hour from Calais, even then, with a fair wind, it was only two or three hours. There are records, not only of many men who continually had business on the Continent, of scholars who studied in Paris and in Italy, but of young men who went abroad exactly as modern tourists travel, for interest in the life of strange lands.

Even today, riding along the pleasant country lanes in an English spring, between banks of primroses and violets, with larks singing invisible in the pale-blue sky, with church towers or spires above clumps of elms where rooks cluster and caw, where the red-tiled cottages covered with roses and honeysuckle are built as they were built hundreds of years ago, we can recapture at least in part the mood in which Chaucer gathered his folk at the Tabard and sent them riding to Canterbury.

The whole organization of country life was, as we have said, different from anything familiar to us in America. We are accustomed to think of the country, at least of that part lying beyond the suburbs of the city, as consisting of isolated and widely scattered farmhouses relieved here and there by the presence of a crossroads store or a typical country village of shops and workshops. Until the automobile came to shorten distances, the dominant note of country life in America was isolation, each family being shut in to a monotony of loneliness relieved only by the annual gregariousness of harvest and by occasional trips to the country church and the country store.

Rural England led no such isolated life. The basis of its structure was the manor, a large tract of land usually partly arable, partly meadow, and partly forest, dominated by the manor house, round which clustered as a nuclear village the houses of the tenants of the manor and the artisans who served their needs. The land of the manor was not divided into separate tracts and distributed to the tenants in individual possession, but was managed as a unit. The strip assigned last year to one tenant would be assigned this year to another, and next year would be allowed to lie fallow. Each tenant held his strip only till after harvest, and all the strips were worked coöperatively. Seldom did a tenant own enough oxen to do his own plowing. Accordingly, the villagers worked together, plowing and reaping every strip in its proper turn, though the produce of the strips went to the individual owners. The implements and stock were furnished by the owner. The fundamental characteristics of the manorial group were on the one hand the intimate association of its members in common occupation and a common village life and on the other hand its self-sufficiency — its economic and social independence. The introduction of new tenants from the outside was possible, but it was rare. The same families tilled the village fields from father to son. Every manor had its own law court, presided over by the lord of the manor or his representative, and its own church, the priest of which usually belonged to the same social class as his parishioners.

The number of craftsmen or artisans attached to a manor varied of course with the size of the manor. The smaller manors would have few persons devoted to special trades, but even the larger would have fewer than one might be inclined to suppose. There would be no need for a carpenter except upon very large manors, for almost any of the peasants was capable of doing odd jobs of carpentry, and all would join together in a large job such as the erection of the wooden framework for the houses and barns. The houses of the villagers themselves were too rude to require the services of skilled workmen. Most of them were built of posts wattled and plastered with clay or mud. The better class of yeomen had timber houses built on a frame, the spaces being either lathed and plastered within and without or filled with clay kneaded up with chopped straw, and some of the barns were built on the same plan. In parts of the country where stone was found, the larger barns and better houses were often built of stone, but brick-making seems to have been a lost art. Perhaps the blacksmith was the craftsman whose services were most frequently called for. Farm implements of many kinds involved the use of iron, and the services of the smith were necessary for making or repairing these implements. A smith therefore was likely to be found among the villagers of the larger manors and occasionally among those of the smaller. As we find in the manorial accounts scarcely any records of purchases of cloth for the tenants, we are justified in assuming that weaving was commonly practiced as a household occupation, and that each family probably wove the cloth necessary for its own use. This was undoubtedly the cloth of coarse, undyed wool commonly called russet. In like manner each family in the smaller villages appears to have produced its own bread and beer, though in the larger villages we have records of both bakers and brewers.

The food of the villagers was abundant, but coarse and almost unbelievably limited in kind. The most striking feature — but this holds true in large measure only for the food of the poor, for the rich had gardens both in town and country — was the almost entire absence of vegetables. Peas, beans, carrots, onions, and a few other vegetables were not unknown, but the fare of even the wealthier peasants consisted largely of porridge, bread, beer, and meat, usually pork, varied only with milk, cheese, eggs, and the flesh of fowls, while the poorer lived as did the poor widow in the 'Nuns' Priest's Tale:'

"Hir bord was served moost with whit and blak —
Milk and broun breed — in which she foond no lak;
Seynd bacon, and somtyme an ey or tweye."

The villages had no shops for the sale of such wares as we now expect to find in even our smallest villages. This was partly because many of the articles which to us seem indispensable were entirely unknown to the Middle Ages, but chiefly because of a difference in the commercial system. The countryside and the smaller towns of the Middle Ages made their purchases largely in two ways: either at markets and fairs, or from travelling pedlars, called chapmen. Markets were held in most of the towns on certain days of the week; in London and some other cities every day. At the place assigned for the market were set up by tradesmen stalls containing all the varied forms of merchandise known to the Middle Ages: imported cloths, jewelry and trinkets of all sorts, pepper, salt, knives, scissors and needles, and even books, though these would be found only in the larger markets or at the fairs.

The fairs were one of the most picturesque and interesting features of mediaeval life. They could be held only by royal grant and were strictly limited in place and time. Usually a fair was an annual event lasting from one or two days to one or more weeks, the profits of which went to some specified object, such as the maintenance of a religious house, the building or repairing of a church, and the like. The same organization or person might, however, hold several fairs under different charters at different seasons of the year. To the fairs came not only local tradesmen, but dealers in all sorts of wares from the large cities and even from foreign countries, and at the larger fairs might be found every kind of article of use or luxury known to the people of the time. It is easy to see that without some such organization the distribution of certain of the rarer luxuries would have been difficult or even impossible. The fairs were the great markets for silks, Oriental goods of all sorts, known in the language of the time as "spicerie," armor, fine horses, jewelry, manuscripts, dogs, singing birds, monkeys, and other outlandish novelties. Each tradesman paid a fee for the privilege of selling at the fair, and special courts — called courts of pie-powder, or "the dusty foot" — were organized for the speedy settlement of any disputes which might arise.

To the fairs came also all sorts of mediaeval entertainers: minstrels, tumblers, rope-dancers, sword-swallowers, and jugglers of all sorts — the whole motley crowd of masterless strollers who lived under the permanent anathema of the Church.

Less picturesque than the fairs and offering a much more limited choice of goods, but hardly less important in mediaeval life, were the pedlars or travelling chapmen. This class of traders is still to be found in many rural districts both of England and America, but in far smaller numbers than during the Middle Ages. Then they penetrated every part of the country, dazzling the rustics with their fine wares, their nimble wits, and their mastery of what is now somewhat bombastically called the psychology of salesmanship. The Autolycus of Shakespeare's Winter's Tale belonged to this class of tradesmen and differed little if at all in his stock of wares or methods of dealing from his fourteenth century ancestors.

The most varied and truthful pictures of the life and mental outlook of these country people are undoubtedly those given us by Chaucer himself in his later, more realistic, tales. The poor widows in the tales of the Nuns' Priest and Friar, the peasants and church officials in the tales of the Reeve, the Miller, the Friar, and the Summoner give us such finished sketches of the daily life in the countryside and small towns of fourteenth century England as no modern writer has either the knowledge or the skill to create.

219557

8119
11

THE LARGER TOWNS

In the larger towns and cities, fourteenth century life was very different from that of the rural districts. Not only in London, but in such towns as York, Chester, Coventry, Norwich, Bristol, Dartmouth and Ipswich, industry and commerce were highly organized, and although even in them the predominantly agricultural basis of mediaeval life was felt, the rivalries of commerce and industrial production were beginning to dominate social life and to control municipal politics.

The fundamental feature of city and town life was the organization of both commerce and trade into trade or craft guilds. These organizations had, as is well-known, certain features in common with modern labor unions, but differed from them very materially both in the nature and the objects of organization. They resemble one another in being "industrial organizations concerned ultimately with the same fundamental purpose: the maintenance of the standard of life. The chief object of the trade union is to organize the workers in order to raise the standard of living, and by the coöperation of forces prevent the degradation of their social and economic status. The craft guilds were no less concerned with securing for every one of their members opportunities for a fair and just remuneration of their labors. Both organizations rest in principle upon the conviction that combined action can alone insure adequate maintenance for the workers; to this degree the trade union carries on the tradition of the older gild system. Here, however, the resemblance ends."

The craft guilds were select bodies of skilled artisans, and never included the whole body of workers. The unskilled workmen were unorganized, received lower wages, and participated in no way in the control of trade or trade conditions. Among the skilled workers, however, who formed the membership of the guilds, were to be found craftsmen of all grades — journeymen workers, middlemen, and masters or capitalists. The guilds were purely local organizations, and membership was limited nominally to tradesmen of the same town, though there are instances of guilds which included members from the neighboring country. A striking difference between the modern trade union and the mediaeval craft gild is that the trade union is concerned only with the interests of its own members, whereas the craft gild aimed to serve the public as well, not only securing fair wages prices, and laboring conditions for its members, but insisting upon sound workmanship, good quality, and a price fair to the consumer as well as to the producer. Finally, the craft guilds were semi-public and semi-religious organizations. Not only were they chartered by the king, but they formed integral parts of the municipal organization, furnishing representatives to it, but under its control, and they were always organized under the patronage of some saint and made definite provisions for religious ceremonies and charitable duties.

The services rendered by these organizations to mediaeval industry and trade were of the highest importance. It is a mistake to believe, as some enthusiastic writers of the Middle Ages apparently do, that the mediaeval craftsman was an artist interested primarily in maintaining high quality in all his materials and honesty and beauty in all his workmanship. The records of mediaeval guilds and the ordinances of the towns are largely devoted to efforts to prevent cheating and frauds of all sorts in materials and workmanship. As Professor Salzmänn remarks: "The mediaeval craftsman was not called a man of craft for nothing! He had no more conscience than a plumber, and his knowledge of ways that are dark and tricks that are vain was extensive and peculiar. The subtle craft of the London bakers, who, while making up their customers' dough, stole a large portion of it under their customers' eyes by means of a little trap-door in the kneading board and a boy sitting under the counter, was exceptional only in its ingenuity. Cloth was stretched and strained to the utmost and cunningly folded to hide defects; a length of bad cloth would be joined onto a length of superior quality, or a whole cheap cloth substituted for the good cloth which the customers had purchased; inferior leather was faked up to look like the best and sold at night to the unwary; pots and kettles were made of bad metal, which melted when put on the fire; and everything that could be weighed or measured was sold by false measure.

"In 1390 it was pointed out that the frauds of the west country clothiers had not only endangered the reputations and even the lives of merchants who bought them for export, but had brought dishonour on the English name abroad. Two years later it was the reputation of Guildford cloths that had been damaged by sharp practices. . . . To give them their due, the gilds recognized the importance to their own interests of maintaining a high standard of workmanship, and co-operated loyally with the municipal authorities to that end."

The aspects of city life in mediaeval England were therefore very different from those of country life. London, the city with which we are principally concerned, though small, was rich and busy. Its most prominent citizens were merchants and importers, and foreign traders flocked to it from all parts of the known world. Merchants from China brought goods by caravan across central Asia to the great trade centers of the near East, Novgorod and Constantinople, whence they were taken up either by the German merchants of the free Hanse towns or the equally enterprising Venetians and Genoese and brought to London and other western ports. Through these channels came silks, furs, sandalwood, and all the vast range of Oriental luxuries. The merchants who brought them to London had permanent establishments there, occupied definite parts of the city, and were under the special protection of the king. The wine-merchants of Spain, southern France, and the Rhineland were also among the wealthiest and most important traders to London, and likewise enjoyed royal patronage. Besides the wines, they brought gold and silver cups, precious stones, fine textiles, and coats of mail. In general, the ships which brought these cargoes were loaded for the return voyage with England's most valuable product, the fine wool and wool fells which were sought for by all the rest of the world.

We have no space for a detailed account of mediaeval commerce. Its extent and value can most easily be understood from the wealth and power attained by some of the leading merchants. Perhaps the most striking example in England is furnished by the family of the De la Poles. The founder of the family, Sir William De la Pole, was the second son of Sir William De la Pole, a merchant of Hull. The elder brother, Sir Richard, became prominent as collector of the customs, as the king's chief butler and as partner with his younger brother in various loans to the king. In 1327 the brothers advanced for the campaign against the Scots and the wages of the Netherland mercenaries 6,000 £, a sum having a present-day purchasing value of perhaps $900,000. In 1338 Edward III gave Sir William an acknowledgment for 18,500 £, a present value of approximately $2,700,000. Sir William's son, Michael, continued his activities as merchant and government official, becoming successively admiral of the fleet and chancellor of the realm, and was finally rewarded for his service with the name and title of earl of Suffolk. Although he was impeached and condemned to death by the parliament of 1386, modern historians have concluded that the only real complaint against him was his attachment to an unpopular policy. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Michael, who in 1397 was restored to his father's dignity as earl of Suffolk and baron De la Pole. The later history of the family does not concern us here. It is interesting, however, to recall that William, the fourth earl and first duke of Suffolk, married Geoffrey Chaucer's granddaughter.

MERCHANT PRINCES OF LONDON

Even more instructive for our purpose are the careers of three London merchants who for many years led the rich and powerful victualing trades in their effort to control the city, and who gave their support to the young king in his contest with his uncle, John of Gaunt. These were John Philipot and Nicholas Brembre, members of the Grocers' Company, and William Walworth of the Fishmongers'. They will be recalled as having supported Richard when he faced Wat Tyler and the peasants at Smithfield in the revolt of 1381 and Walworth created the dramatic opportunity for Richard by drawing his sword and slaying Tyler. Brembre's association with Chaucer, whether one of friendship or not, was at least intimate, for he was one of the collectors of wool customs during ten of the years when Chaucer was controller. All three were men of great wealth, as is clearly indicated by the sums assessed against them in the various loans which the city made to the king. Philipot, if not the wealthiest, at least made use of his wealth in picturesque and public-spirited enterprises which are a matter of record. Immediately after the accession of Richard to the throne, he and other London merchants lent the king 10,000 £., a sum equivalent in purchasing power to about $1,500,000 on the present basis of prices. In the same year, when the whole land had been thrown into a state of alarm by the capture of the Isle of Wight and the burning of Hastings by the French and the seizure of a number of English merchant vessels by a squadron of Scotch, French, and Spanish ships under the leadership of one John Mercer, Philipot at his own expense fitted out a squadron with a thousand armed men, pursued Mercer, wrested from him the English vessels he had captured, and in turn seized fifteen vessels of Mercer's fleet. Again in 1379, the year after his mayoralty, he earned the effusive gratitude of the city by offering to erect at his own cost one of the two stone towers sixty feet high below London Bridge, between which a chain was to be suspended across the river to secure the city against attacks by the French. Again in the summer of 1380, he provided ships for the Earl of Buckingham's expedition to Brittany, and when the delay in setting out had compelled many of the soldiers to pawn their armor, he redeemed from pawn the armor of a thousand men.

These instances will perhaps serve to suggest the wealth of London merchants in Chaucer's time, without citing the picturesque legends about Richard Whittington, or those about Henry Picard, who is reported to have entertained four kings at a banquet and to have compelled all of them to win rich cups and jewels by playing with loaded dice. Yet it is to be remarked that the legends concerning the wealth of Whittington and Picard were scarcely, if at all, an exaggeration of truth.

It has been noted in passing that Brembre, Philipot, and Walworth were all members of the trades which dealt in victuals, the so-called "victualing trades," which were specially noted for their wealth, and that Chaucer may be making a sly hit at these trades when in the Prologue he says of the Friar that he would have nothing to do with the poor,

"But al with riche and sellers of vitaille."

CHAUCER'S LONDON

But Chaucer's London has almost vanished. We must reconstruct it from a few fragments, old pictures, and old descriptions. It extended from the Tower at the east end to Ludgate and Newgate on the west, and from the four gates in the north wall — Aldgate (where Chaucer lived for twelve years), Bishopsgate, Cripplegate, and Aldersgate — to the Thames on the south. Within this oblong space, little more than a mile long and about half a mile wide, were living before the Great Plague in 1349 (when Chaucer was a child) some 40,000 people.

From the Surrey side near Chaucer's Tabard Inn across the broad river, it must have looked a low, close huddle of gabled roofs, with a great number of stone towers, among them the tall, square, four-pinnacled keep of William the Conqueror to the right, the great spire of St. Paul's more than 500 feet high near the center, and score upon score of smaller spires and towers of other churches, rising above the red-tiled roofs, against a background of green hills.

Passing under the tall tower of St. Saviour's, Southwark (where Chaucer's friend Gower was buried in 1408), one crossed London Bridge by a narrow paved roadway bordered by thick-set houses and shops, except at the middle, where in an open space one could look down at the swift current running under the high round arches and strongly-buttressed stone piers. From Bridge Street, on the city side (where great chains were drawn to keep out the peasant rebels of 1381), a veritable tangle of streets rarely more than twenty feet wide — usually much less — branched out in every direction. Turning to the east, one came to Billingsgate fish market. A drawing made in the fifteenth century shows this to have been a great open structure with beautifully arcaded arches.

Immediately to the east of this was the dock where the Genoese galleys brought merchandise and news from Italy; and to the east beyond this, the narrow, two-story custom house where Chaucer worked for fourteen years; then a few houses, and the lane and moat before the Tower.

Turning north from the river, one crossed the wide open space of Tower Green and then, passed among gardens to Chaucer's home at Aldgate, a walk of ten minutes or less. Inside the gate and west of it were the great buildings of the Augustinian friars and the priory of Holy Trinity; outside the wall and southeast was the convent of the Minoresses. Standing on the city walls, one could look downward upon the long street running into the country to the eastward, on which Chaucer's mother had many lands and rents by inheritance. Below the old brick wall, begun by the Romans, was the wide moat, and beyond it the fenny land and heath, and the forest from which brushwood, charcoal, and faggots were brought in to keep the city fires burning.

Moving upon the wall, so that the house of the Augustinian friars should not block the view, one must have been able to see at a glance how the Church dominated the city — with friaries and priories everywhere: southward, toward the Tower, the Crutched Friars; westward, toward St. Paul's, the Grey Friars; and beyond the Cathedral, the Black Friars; and beyond them, outside Ludgate, the White Friars; and beyond them, the domains of the ancient religious-military order of the Knights Templars, then the property of a similar order, the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem; and beyond this, the great abbey of Westminster; and to the north, flanking Smithfield, London's playground outside the walls, where sports and tournaments were held, the priory of St. Bartholomew-the-Great. And besides these splendid edifices, at every turn of the street stood a parish church endowed and maintained by the rich merchants and the craftsmen of the gilds.

Through the labyrinth of cobbled streets, with here and there a gleam of water where they were crossed by the Fleet, the Walbrook, or the Old Bourne, ran two great thoroughfares: the lower, Thames Street — from the Tower, south of St. Paul's Churchyard, to Blackfriars, where it came out by tortuous ways at Ludgate — on which the merchantry had fine dwellings (Chaucer's father among them had a tenement on the bank of Walbrook in the shadow of St. Martin's Vintry); and the upper, from Aldgate (Chaucer's home from 1374 to 1386) into the great central market of the town, Cheapside, and out of the city by a narrow way north of St. Paul's, at Newgate. Here the roadway was wide enough for the "ridings" or processions; here stood the great conduit that called forth so many city ordinances for its protection; here stood one of the exquisite Eleanor crosses built by King Edward I when he brought his queen home to bury her in Westminster. Here were the great "selds" or arcades of merchandise, the transfer of which forms the content of so many city deeds; and south and north of this were the twenty-four wards, each with its dominant trades and crafts and its streets and lanes often named for the things made or sold there. Among the wards to the south were Cordwainers Street ward, where some of Chaucer's kinsfolk lived, and the Vintry (vintners) in which his father and other near kinsmen owned property. And among the streets in the neighborhood associated with his name were Bread Street, Milk Street, Fish Street, Saddlers' Row, Sopers' Lane, and others indicative of pursuits followed there, some of the names surviving still.

CHAUCER'S HOME SURROUNDINGS

It seems likely that Chaucer was born in the Thames Street house — the only house we know his father to have owned, except through his wife's inheritance, and her tenements were apparently leased out. If so, we can reconstruct with some definiteness the kind of home in which he lived as a boy. Most of the houses of the time were two stories high, with a ground floor, and sometimes a cellar, used for business purposes and a projecting upper story (called a soler), in which the family sometimes lived. These solers often projected so far out into the narrow street that neighbors over the way had an intimate view of family affairs. Chaucer himself touches upon this when he makes Pandarus question Cressida about the affairs of her neighbors across the street.

And after noon ful sleightly Pandarus
 Gan drawe him to the window next the strete,

And seide, 'Nece, who hath arayed thus
The yonder hous that stant afor-yein us?'
'Which hous? quod she, and com for to biholde,
And knew it wel, and whos it was him tolde;

(Troilus and Criseyde, II, 1185 ff.)

When the lower story was used as a shop, its whole front was open to the street in the day, but closed at night by great wooden shutters — a practice that still obtains in old-fashioned places in England. From the street, then, one could look in and see the greater part of the wares for sale. An inventory of a haberdasher's shop made in 1378 may be representative of the contents of such a shop, and is interesting in view of Chaucer's inclusion of a haberdasher among his tradesmen-pilgrims. It included: laces, points (ornamental tags), caps, nightcaps, hats, hoods, a cap block, purses, beads, an osculatory (a glass vessel for protecting a relic to be kissed), pen-cases, inkhorns, tablets, paper, chains, a girdle, cushion frames, cradle-bows, pepper mills, linen thread, eyeglasses, a fly-cage, combs, gaming-tables, babies' boots of white woolen cloth, a wooden whistle, whipcord, and a painted cloth representing "Him Crucified." An inventory of a small stationers' shop in a tiny village would — except for the output of modern journalism — not be so very different in type today.

From this list it is easy to see the kind of things for which there was enough demand for a supply to be kept ready and those — such as a girdle, a fly-cage, and a painted cloth — which were usually made to order.

But very similar to the shop was the workshop in which guild members and their apprentices sat in the public view, each at his particular specialized form of his craft. Nor is it easy for us to realize the degree to which specialization was carried. Among metalworkers alone there were the following: goldsmiths, silversmiths, coppersmiths, enamelers, jewelers, buckle-smiths, smiths (blacksmiths), nail-makers, spurriers, armorers, armor-polishers, helmet-makers, braziers (brass-founders), plumbers, pewterers, bell-founders, wire-drawers, makers of sword blades, makers of knife handles, seal-makers, and almost certainly other specialized craftsmen. A man who ordered a saddle had to go to one shop for the wooden frame, to another to have it stuffed, to another for the leather work, and to another for the metal trappings. So every cobbled street in London, with its gutter running down the middle, was lined on both sides with a honeycomb of small shops and workshops in which every man was a specialist.

But Chaucer's father was a vintner of Vintry ward. In 1381 his house stood between the houses of William le Gauger and John le Mazelyner, whose names show that their ancestors, if not themselves, had been engaged in the associated work of gauging wine and of making maplewood cups (mazers) to drink from. It is altogether likely that John Chaucer, who was of the same social status as these men, had a house very similar to theirs and we know from two wills in the Gauger family (dated 1324 and 1335) what their house was like.

It contained two cellars — and a cellar was certainly needed for John Chaucer's business — over one of which was built a hall, a "parlour," a bedchamber with a chimney, and a kitchen with a pantry and other offices. The dwelling part was unusually elaborate for the times in that it contained besides the hall or general living-room, a private sitting-room, and a fireplace in the bedchamber.

From inventories of other houses of the time we can tell approximately how the Chaucers' house would have been furnished. The hall was of course the largest room in the house. In earlier times it had been the centre of family life, and still remained so in conservative homes. There would be a fireplace near which would be standing the master's chair — the only chair in the room unless the mistress also had one. The meals would be served on the long trestle table, put away between meals, and the family would sit on long forms or benches. Away from the table, they could choose between stools and the benches along the walls, which may have been those used at table. The walls and benches would be covered with tapestry and there would be cushions of the same. The tapestry would show a conventional design. As a coat of arms was often used for this design, the Chaucers may have used a pattern of three birds' heads (as on John Chaucer's seal) or perhaps only the diagonal stripe of argent and gules that Geoffrey later used in his coat of arms. There may have been one or two small tables in the hall; there was certainly a sideboard for the family plate. While many of the dishes may have been of pewter or wood, there would certainly have been some silver spoons and drinking-cups and earthenware jugs, and one or more of the popular mazers or silver-mounted cups of maplewood.

In the chamber with the chimney, there would have been as many beds as the family required — ponderous structures with mattresses (of straw or rushes), bolsters, pillows, sheets and pillowcases of fine linen, blankets and coverlets, and curtains hanging from the walls, and probably featherbeds. There might be a chair or stools; and there were certainly chests for sitting upon as well as for containing the master's armor, the wearing apparel of the family, the household linen, and whatever else there was of value. Almost certainly one chest or strong-box was used for coin, jewels, and deeds and other muniments. In such a chest there might be a book or two of a religious character, perhaps a Book of Hours. Only very exceptionally would there have been any book of secular interest, except perhaps a law book.

The overhanging soler would give a sort of square bay window, in which there would be lattice windows with small panes of glass, and a window seat with cushions.

Although these houses overhung the street in front, it is certain that many of them had gardens in the rear, just as so many London houses have today. We know that John Chaucer's land extended to the water of Walbrook on the north, and also that there were gardens in the neighborhood, inasmuch as a coroner's roll informs us that a man fell from a pear tree in a garden there and was killed.

It was in a city and a country such as we have tried, not to describe, but to hint at, that Chaucer lived and wrote. Unless we can obtain some sense of the compactness of his world; of the intimacy between all classes of society, in spite of the clearest recognition of differences of rank and status; and of the closeness of that world, despite its sophistication and its fondness for wealth and display, to garden and forest and other country sights and scenes, we shall not understand the spirit in which he wrote, or that in which he was read.

MONEY

As there are several respects in which the expense accounts, wages, prices, and other subjects connected with money are likely to be puzzling to the student of the fourteenth century, it seems desirable to make some brief statements on this subject.

Accounts were kept in terms of pounds, shillings, and pence as they still are in England, but there were no coins corresponding to pounds or shillings, and there were several coins in circulation the names and values of which are unfamiliar to us of the present day.

Down to the year 1343 the only metal commonly coined into money in England was silver. At some places on the continent copper was coined into what was called "black money," and these copper coins sometimes circulated in England. In 1331 their circulation was entirely prohibited, but in 1339 it was recognized that they were needed in business transactions, and their circulation was temporarily permitted. Gold had been coined sporadically even in Anglo-Saxon times and in 1257 Henry III coined a gold penny, weighing as much as two silver pence, and proclaimed its value as twenty pence. But these were out of circulation long before Chaucer's day, and the coinage of gold did not really begin until the reign of Edward III. In 1343-44 that monarch ordered the coinage of three gold coins of the values respectively of 6 s., 3 s., and 1 s. 6 d.; but these coins were demonetized in the following year because they had been overvalued in comparison with the current silver money. In 1345 began the coinage of a new series of gold coins — nobles, half-nobles (called demi-nobles or maille-nobles), and quarter nobles (called ferling nobles). The value of the noble was equal to two gold florins, or 6 s. 8 d. The gold noble weighed originally 128 $\frac{1}{2}$ grains, but was soon reduced to 120.

The silver coins which circulated in Chaucer's day were the penny, halfpenny, and farthing, and the groat (fourpence) and half groat (twopence). The weight of these coins varied at different times. Originally, of course, the penny weighed 24 grains — "twenty-four grains make one pennyweight," etc. — but its weight was gradually reduced until in 1351 it weighed 18 grains, and the other coins were reduced proportionately. These reduced weights remained constant throughout Chaucer's life.

In comparing the gold and silver coins of Chaucer's day with those of the present time, it is necessary to disregard their nominal values. The present gold sovereign with a nominal value of 20 s. weighs 123.274 grains, but as this is only twenty-two carats fine, it obviously contains no more gold than the fourteenth century noble (nominal value 6 s. 8 d.), nearly twenty-four carats fine, which weighed 120 grains. The fourteenth century silver penny, or sterling, contained about one-fifth as much silver as the modern English shilling or the American quarter dollar.

The names, values, and weights of the coins in common use were as follows:

Coins	Metal	Value	Weight
farthing	silver	$\frac{1}{4}$ d.	4 $\frac{1}{2}$ gr.
halfpenny	"	$\frac{1}{2}$ d.	9 gr.
penny, or sterling	"	1 d.	18 gr.
half groat	"	2 d.	36 gr.
groat	"	4 d.	72 gr.
noble	gold	6 s. 8 d.	120 gr.
demi-noble or maille	"	3 s. 4 d.	60 gr.
ferling	"	1 s. 8 d.	30 gr.

There was no such coin as a mark, but the term was in very common use. Its value — 13 s. 4 d. — may seem an odd one for a monetary unit, though it is not much odder than 21 s. Originally mark was, like pound, a measure of weight, and meant two-thirds of a pound. This relation between the mark and the pound continued in England — though not in some other countries — when the terms became monetary.

The foreign coins which were most familiar to Englishmen were florins — a name applied to various coins issued originally in Florence and imitated elsewhere — and crowns, or florins d'escu, better known in England as shields. Naturally the small Dutch coin called a "mite" was also well known.

Another difficulty connected with the money of the fourteenth century, and indeed of all times previous to our own, is that there has been a continuous depreciation in the purchasing power of money, due in part to the increase in the supply of the precious metals and in part to the development of various substitutes for metallic coinage. Many attempts have been made to establish a multiple for converting money of ancient times into their modern equivalents in purchasing power. It is obviously a very difficult task — in the strict sense of the word an impossible one — for the relative values of money and commodities varied from year to year in ancient times as they do now, and varied still more from century to century. English scholars of the nineteenth century arrived at the conclusion that for working purposes the money of the fourteenth century could be roughly translated into nineteenth century English money by multiplying by fifteen. If this is true, there can be little doubt that, considering the rise in wages and prices and the consequent depreciation in the value of money in the twentieth century, it would be necessary to multiply fourteenth century money by thirty to ascertain its present purchasing value. Americans would have to apply a further multiple to change English pounds into American dollars. This may be roughly taken as five. Undoubtedly the results attained by this process will in some cases seem absurd, but if we compare the wages of English laborers, skilled and unskilled, in the fourteenth century with the wages paid to skilled and unskilled laborers at the present day, it will be seen that the multiples suggested are not greatly exaggerated. Of course it must be borne in mind that the relative costs of commodities are constantly varying, and especially that some things which are now regarded as among the ordinary necessities of life were in the fourteenth century luxuries attainable only by the very rich. But a record of the wages received by skilled and unskilled laborers and of the prices of some of the commoner objects of purchase will at least enable us to form some idea of the purchasing power of money in Chaucer's day and the amount of labor required to procure the necessities of life.

An interesting list of wages is given in the account rendered by Chaucer himself in 1391 as clerk of the king's works: to himself as clerk of the works 2 s. a day, including Sundays and holidays; to William Hannay, controller of the works, 12 d. a day; to Richard Swift, the king's master carpenter and supervisor of the carpenters, and to Master Henry Yevele, chief mason and supervisor of the masons, 12 d. each per day; to Hugh Swayn, purchasing agent for the palace of Westminster and other manors of the king, 2 s. a week; to John Pritwell and Peter Cookes, purchasing agents for Westminster, the Tower, and Eltham, 4 d. and 3 d. per day respectively; to the gardeners of the palaces of Eltham and Shene 3 d. a day each; to every mason, carpenter, plumber, tiler, shingler, sawyer, and plasterer 6 d. per day; to every glazier 7 d.; to every dubber 5 d.; to every ditcher and other unskilled workman 4 d. per day for each working day. I will add from contemporary documents wages for some forms of service not recorded in Chaucer's accounts: knight, 1 s. to 2 s.; squire, 1 s.; man at arms or archer, 6 d.; master of a ship, 6 d.; bargemaster, 4 d.; common sailors or boatmen, 3 d. a day; nurse for one of the earl of Derby's children, 5 marks a year. An ordinary pastry-maker got 6 d. a day; but J. Algate, who must have been an artist, was paid 10 s. for four days for making "soteltes in paste" for a great feast in 1396.

From the same sources we may take the prices of some articles of common use. The rent of farm lands varied ordinarily between 6 d. and 11 d. a year per acre. The price of work horses varied between 13 s. and 15 s., and horses for the earl of Derby's trumpeters cost only 20 s. each; but the price of blooded horses of course ran much higher, sometimes reaching as much as 15 l. or 20 l. Oxen brought about 15 s. each; sheep, 1 s. 6 d. The normal price for wheat was about 6 s. per quarter (14 bushels), that of oats, 4 s. to 5 s. per quarter. Capons brought 4 d., but hens could be had for 2 d.; eggs were normally about $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per dozen. Salt was expensive at 6 s. 4 d. per quarter; candles could be had at 2 d. per lb.; soap at $1\frac{1}{2}$ d. Cloth varied in price according to its quality: fine linen cloth of Brabant was sold at 20 d. per ell; the finest woolen cloth brought about 3 s. 6 d.; canvas for covering a barge could be had for $2\frac{1}{2}$ d. per ell; cotton twine cost a penny a pound. Shoes and boots varied in price: the commonest sort brought 4 d. to 6 d. a pair; short boots with double soles brought 2 s. a pair; and galoshes 1 d. Black straw hats are recorded at 3 s. each; their quality is not stated, but they were purchased for members of a ducal household. A surcingle cost 8 d. and a double wire chain for greyhounds the same. Shooting gloves were priced at 2 d. each, and bowstrings at 6 d. a dozen. Hollow tiles for building could be purchased at a penny apiece; wire cost about $\frac{2}{3}$ d. a pound and copper $2\frac{3}{4}$ d. Gunpowder was naturally very expensive; a 40 lb. box of it cost 40 s. Paper, though cheaper than vellum, was still expensive; one pound of waxed paper, bound, is priced at 1 s. 4 d.; but seven books of grammar, bound in a single volume, were purchased for 4 s.

V

THE CANTERBURY TALES

THE GENERAL PLAN

That Chaucer had a general plan for the Canterbury Tales is clear, for he states it definitely in the Prologue. To what extent, however, he had decided upon its details we have no means of knowing. Certainly he says nothing about many features of the usual journey to Canterbury that would have offered opportunity for picturesque description or humorous incident. The road from London to Canterbury passed by many places at which pilgrims were accustomed to halt at least momentarily, and it is doubtful whether any group of pilgrims ever traversed the road without being stopped and urged to contribute to one or more of the religious houses situated on or near it. Moreover, the almost contemporary writer of the Tale of Beryn, which was intended as a continuation of the Canterbury Tales, felt it desirable to give some account of the doings of the pilgrims after they reached Canterbury. But we cannot be sure that Chaucer intended to write about any of these subjects. If this had been his plan, he would probably have given us a more detailed account of the first evening spent by the pilgrims at the Tabard Inn. As it is, he gives us only what is necessary to explain and motivate the arrangement for the telling of the stories. He therefore might have dealt as briefly with other incidents of the journey even if he had fully completed his plan.

There is some evidence that the scope of his plan did not always remain the same. The Prologue distinctly states that each of the pilgrims is to tell four stories — two on the way to Canterbury and two on the way home. But the language used by the Host in calling upon some of the pilgrims seems to indicate that only one story was expected from each. Scholars who have observed this discrepancy have generally felt that his plan for four tales from each pilgrim was too extensive for him to carry out, and that he consequently reduced it to a single round each way. This is a natural but not a necessary supposition. On the other hand, there is good reason to believe that the Prologue contained some of Chaucer's latest work. If this is true, it is possible that instead of reducing his original plan he really expanded it. It must be remembered that Chaucer's friend, John Gower, was also writing a large collection of tales at the same time, and that he not only planned to produce, but actually did produce, nearly as many tales as were required by Chaucer's most ambitious scheme. It may very well be that when Chaucer saw what Gower had done, he enlarged his original plan of one story from each pilgrim to the arrangement stated in the Prologue. Certainly he did not hesitate to add the 'Canon's Yeoman's Tale' to the number definitely provided for. And the incident of the encounter with the Canon and his man suggests that possibly Chaucer might have introduced other incidents of the road if he had lived to complete his design.

Whatever may have been Chaucer's final plan, it is clear that he did not complete it. The tales as they have come down to us are not a consecutive series but a number of disconnected groups of tales. The number of tales in these groups varies from one to six. The tales within the groups are linked together by narrative and conversation, but the groups are not connected in any way with one another, and the order in which they should be arranged is somewhat uncertain.

Another point upon which there is much uncertainty is the number of days which Chaucer intended the journey to Canterbury to occupy. Some of the older editors believed that only one day was intended. Of recent years opinion has seemed to favor three days and part of a fourth, but it is by no means certain that this was Chaucer's intention. The allusions in the connecting links make it pretty clear that the journey occupied more than one day, but they do not necessarily call for more than two days. Those who argue in favor of three and a half days emphasize the fact that the tales were told while the pilgrims were riding, and declare that this would have been impossible unless they were riding very slowly, and they cite a number of instances in which three and one half or four days were used in making the journey. On the other hand, it is argued that such slow journeys were exceptional; that the usual rate of travel, even of large parties of people, was more than thirty miles a day; that the plan for having each pilgrim tell two tales on the outward journey and two on the return harmonizes with the supposition that the trip would occupy two days each way; and finally that even if the pilgrims traveled as slowly as three or four miles an hour, they could have completed the journey in two days each way, and their speed would have been no obstacle to the telling or hearing of the tales. Of course, in reality the conception of a group of thirty persons on horseback telling tales as they ride along, though picturesque and poetically justifiable, is entirely unrealistic. Some scholars think that the group was originally smaller, and that when Chaucer enlarged it he forgot that he was creating an impossible situation. But even the smaller group would be too large, and perhaps the mistake is ours, in holding the poet to a strictness of realism that he never intended. After all the Canterbury pilgrimage is not fact, but fiction.

According to a definite statement in line 24 of the Prologue the pilgrims were twenty-nine in number before they were joined by the Host of the Tabard. Difficulty has arisen from the fact that the Prologue actually lists thirty-one including Chaucer himself. Many writers have therefore argued that Chaucer's language in line 24 was not intended to be strictly accurate. Others seem to think that the discrepancy is due to carelessness. My own opinion is that Chaucer intended to be and was strictly accurate in his statement, and that the discrepancy is explained and removed by the proper interpretation of a passage which has given much trouble; cf. notes on I, 164 and VIII, 1 ff.

THE PILGRIMS — TYPES OR INDIVIDUALS?

Most students of Chaucer believe that Chaucer intended to bring together in the group of Canterbury pilgrims representatives of all classes of society and of all the principal occupations of his day. They point out that the upper classes are represented by the Knight and the Squire; the Church by the Monk, the Friar, the Prioress, the Second Nun, the Nuns' Priest, the Parish Priest, the Summoner, and the Pardoner; the learned professions by the Man of Law, the Doctor, and the Clerk; commerce and trade by the Merchant, the five city craftsmen, the Shipman, and the Wife of Bath; the laboring classes by the Cook, the Plowman, the Reeve, the Miller, and the Manciple. Undoubtedly the social range and the variety of occupations are very great, but if Chaucer actually planned a systematic representation of all classes and occupations there are some curious omissions. There is no representative of the nobility, or of the highest officials of the Church, such as bishops, abbots, archdeacons, and the like. Moreover, one craft has two representatives, the London Carpenter and the Reeve, who also was a carpenter; one occupation, that of the Manciple, is too insignificant to deserve a place in a representative scheme; and the choice of London tradesmen is obviously not representative, but due to some special motive. At the time when Chaucer was writing, there was a bitter contest for political control of the city between the victualing trades and the non-victualing trades. Chaucer's group contains no representative of the wealthy and powerful victualing trades, while the non-victualing trades chosen are by no means the most wealthy, powerful, and prominent.

Chaucer's family and business associations were with the victualing trades. His father was a vintner, and the collectors of the customs with whom he was associated as controller were prominent members of the most powerful victualing trades. It seems probable, therefore, that his choice of the pilgrims was determined in part at least, not by schematic, but by personal, considerations. Considerable evidence will be presented later to confirm this supposition. It will appear from this, I think, that while Chaucer no doubt aimed at including a large variety of characters and occupations, he had in mind as models for his pilgrims a large number of persons with whom the circumstances of his social and official life had brought him into personal contact. This of course does not mean that he had not some idea of presenting a broad picture of English life as he knew it, but only that in doing so he was guided, not by a schematic plan, but by his own wide experience of men and social conditions. This supposition seems much more in harmony with what we can infer regarding his genius and the natural and flexible manner in which it expressed itself.

At the same time, it is not necessary to contend that Chaucer had living models for all of his characters, or that he was not profoundly influenced by literary reminiscences and the usual systematic character of mediaeval satire in planning his work.

In character drawing there are in general two methods of procedure, which differ from one another as distinctly as the inductive method differs from the deductive in logic. In the one case, the writer begins by making as complete an assemblage as he can of the abstract qualities belonging to the type of character he wishes to depict, and then attempts, by vivid presentation of these qualities and by giving to them such concrete manifestations as seem logical and appropriate, to create figures that have some semblance of reality and life. In its purest and simplest form this is the method of the character writers of the seventeenth century, and usually that of didactic moralists and satirists in every age. In the other case, the writer, whatever may be his ultimate purpose, selects — consciously or unconsciously — among the persons with whom experience has made him acquainted someone in whom the type which he wishes to present seems to find most characteristic and picturesque embodiment. Sometimes he may fail to find any single person exactly realizing his conception, and he may be obliged to make a composite photograph of two or even more models. But in any event, his portraiture begins with a living model, chosen for the success with which it embodies his conception. This process or method is in general that which has been made use of by those novelists, dramatists, and epic poets whose aim has been primarily creative rather than didactic. Both methods are good. Each at its best has resulted in the production of masterpieces. But the masterpieces of the first method owe their success usually, like caricature, to brilliant exaggeration of striking characteristics.

Examination of Chaucer's portraits of the Canterbury pilgrims discloses a few which clearly belong to the first abstract method, and some which the reader may hesitate to classify, but most of them have generally been recognized as brilliant examples of concrete portraiture. There is obviously nothing individual in the characterization of the five city craftsmen. Indeed Chaucer does not even attempt to describe them separately, but contents himself with enumerating such general characteristics as would be true of the representatives of any of the wealthier guilds. Almost as little individualized is the portrait of the Manciple. Not only does Chaucer give us no visual image of this person, but the mental and moral traits ascribed to him are only those common to all persons of his station and occupation. The Yeoman and the Plowman, despite a certain amount of definite detail of dress and habit, are also artificial constructions. Of the Second Nun we have of course nothing even approaching a portrait, but this lack, combined with the lack of comment on her or her tale, indicates that to Chaucer himself she had no definite form or characteristics and was merely a necessary traveling companion for the Prioress. The Nuns' Priest, on the other hand, though not described in the Prologue, seems, both from the character of the tale ascribed to him and from the glimpses of him, slight as they are, afforded by the conversation between him and the Host, to have been very definitely conceived and visualized.

With regard to three of the pilgrims it is very difficult to make up one's mind. The portraits of the Clerk, the Physician, and the Parson are sufficiently striking, and two at least of them have been much admired, yet there are few if any traits in these portraits which may not be the result of generalization rather than of observation of living models. The Physician's love of gold and lack of interest in the Bible may equally well be traits characterizing an individual or a class. The portraits of the Clerk and the Parson fulfil all the conventional requirements of the ideal scholar and the ideal parish priest, and the details of both portraits can be abundantly paralleled in literature that was accessible to Chaucer. But none the less, generations of readers have felt the vital charm of these portraits, and it may well be that Chaucer had the good fortune to know men in whom these ideals were actually realized.

But whatever doubts may exist concerning the pilgrims we have just discussed, it may safely be said that in each of the remaining portraits there are features which belong not to a type but to an individual, and which strongly suggest that in drawing them Chaucer was influenced by recollections of persons whom he had seen and known. At so great a distance of time it is obviously difficult to bring much proof of such a statement, but the impression produced by the portraits is strongly corroborated in each case by what we are able to learn from contemporary records.

In the first place it may be noted that Chaucer's whole procedure is calculated, if not to give a record of actual occurrences, at least to give an impression of reality and of scrupulous care in reporting and describing. Not only are we told the exact season of the year at which the pilgrimage occurred, and the precise number of persons who engaged in it, but their place of meeting is specified with unusual care. It is not merely an inn of Southwark, but specifically the Tabard Inn close by the Bell; and as the journey develops, we are even given the name of the innkeeper. When we find fourteenth century documents giving the ownership and the boundaries of the Tabard Inn property (see note on I, 20), and discover also that there actually was a Southwark innkeeper named Harry (or Henry) Bailly (see note on I, 4358), we are the readier to believe that Chaucer may have had living models for those pilgrims whose careers seem specific and individual or who are described in terms that suggest connections with definite places or events. The evidence on this point is given in detail in my recent book, Some New Light on Chaucer, and is summarized for each pilgrim in the notes on the portraits of the Prologue; see the notes on the Knight, the Prioress, the Merchant, the Man of Law, the Franklin, the Wife of Bath, the Reeve, the Miller, and the Pardoner. That there is also realism, of an unascertained, and perhaps unascertainable, degree in the conceptions of the Cook, the Friar, and the Summoner may appear from the notes on I, 4336, and on III, 1265-1300.

In discussing these definite and vital figures I have often spoken as if we could be certain that Chaucer had in each case a definite individual in mind whose portrait he painted with scrupulous accuracy in every detail. I am, however, very far from feeling sure that this was true. It may very well be that in these vivid and lifelike portraits are mingled not only traits from more than a single individual, but even an indeterminate amount of purely imaginative construction. If this were the case, Chaucer would be quite in the tradition and practice of his earliest master, Guillaume de Machaut. Speaking of Machaut's habit of introducing himself as one of the principal characters of his poems, his latest editor, Ernest Hoepffner, says: "The aim which Machaut thus pursued was to give to his poetic fictions a greater air of reality. It is the same desire which incited him to enamel his poems with traits borrowed from real life, with petty detail suited to lend to his inventions the character of something true, something experienced." In any event, the end aimed at by Machaut was certainly achieved, and achieved on a higher plane and in a higher degree, by his follower and greatest pupil, Geoffrey Chaucer.

EARLIER FRAME STORIES

A frame story containing a number of other stories and motivating the telling of them is a common literary device and is of great antiquity. The example best known to modern readers is the collection of Arabian stories known as The Thousand and One Nights. This collection, however, was not known to Chaucer. The most famous collections known to men of the Middle Ages were The Seven Sages and The Decamerone of Boccaccio. Neither of these bears very much resemblance to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, and it is not certain that he was indebted to either of them for any of his stories. In the Seven Sages a young prince has been condemned to death on accusations made by his wicked stepmother. The prince cannot speak and defend himself until a certain time has passed. The seven wise men who have been his teachers therefore tell stories each day with the object of inducing the king to postpone the execution of the prince until the time shall arrive when he can speak and defend himself. In reply to them the wicked queen each day tells a story to induce the king to execute the prince immediately. In the Decamerone, as is well known, Boccaccio represents a party of young ladies and young gentlemen as fleeing to a country house to escape the dangers of the Black Death which is raging in the city. The young people entertain themselves for ten days by telling stories and, in mediaeval fashion, discussing the moral and social lessons illustrated by them.

Attention has recently been called to another collection of Italian stories written in the fourteenth century, which in plan more nearly resembles Chaucer's than any previously known. This is the collection of Novelle by Giovanni Sercambi of Lucca (1347-1424), to which attention was first called by Mr. H. B. Hinkley and which has been fully discussed by Professor Karl Young. The framework of this collection may be outlined as follows: During the ravages of the plague in Lucca in 1374 a number of men and women decide to leave town and visit various shrines in Italy. A sum of money is raised for expenses, a leader is appointed, and arrangements are made for the amusement of the pilgrims on the journey. The entertainments include songs, dances, and the telling of stories. The stories, however, are not told by all the pilgrims, but by Sercambi himself, who has been appointed official story-teller. Professor Young discusses in detail the resemblances of Sercambi's plan and collection to Chaucer's and their differences, and points out that there is no impossibility in the supposition that Chaucer may have met Sercambi on his visit to Italy or may have heard of his collection on the occasion of his second visit. In his published paper Professor Young writes: "We may fairly conclude that, however much of Chaucer's plan may have been derived from the poet's actual observation and actual experience — on the road between London and Canterbury, or on the road elsewhere — the most likely of all literary sources is to be found in the Novelle of Giovanni Sercambi." There is, however, no real evidence that Chaucer ever met Sercambi or heard of his Novelle, and there seems to be no instance in which he is indebted to Sercambi for any of the Canterbury Tales.

Another frame story sometimes mentioned in connection with the Canterbury Tales is the Confessio Amantis of Chaucer's friend John Gower. As it is nearly twice as long (c. 34,000 lines) as the uncompleted Canterbury Tales, and as it was apparently completed by 1390, the conception of it may possibly have antedated that of Chaucer's great work. My own belief — for which I find some support, though no real evidence, in the writings of the two men — is that both the title and the subject of Gower's poem were suggested by, though not imitated from, the poem which Chaucer refers to as the Seintes Legende of Cupide (commonly called the Legende of Good Women). This poem, I believe, gave to Gower the idea of applying the terms and forms of the confessional to the traditional body of tales from Ovidian and other sources, just as Chaucer had represented women faithful in love as saints and martyrs. Certainly the Confessio Amantis bears distinct traces of the influence of Chaucer's Legende.

Whether Gower's plan became known to Chaucer, and in turn set him to devising the plan of the Canterbury Tales, can probably never be determined. We have no certain knowledge when Chaucer first conceived his plan or even when he first began to execute it. And we do not know that Chaucer ever read the Confessio Amantis through, though we can be fairly certain that he had heard of it and knew something about its contents.

Since it is highly probable that Chaucer had begun to form the Canterbury Tales and had even written some new tales for the collection before 1390, it is entirely possible that Gower had heard of it or even seen it and that in the well-known lines in which he represents Venus as instructing him to order Chaucer to put an end to his career as an amatory poet by writing his "Testament of Love," he wished to express his disapproval of such frivolities as the Canterbury Tales were sure to contain. If so, we can readily understand the dig which Chaucer gave him in the 'Man of Law's Prologue.'

In any event, only the barest impulse to make a large collec tion of stories could have come to Chaucer from Gower's example, for the Confessio Amantis is structurally not in the least like the Canterbury Tales. There is no assembly of persons of different classes and characters as tellers of the tales, and the tales are told, not for amusement or general instruction, but as exempla to illustrate various vices and virtues. Consequently many of the tales are told with the brevity of a bare outline and even those that are told at greater length are cast in the exemplum mold.

Beyond question Chaucer's design for the Canterbury Tales is so different from any frame story of earlier date that, even if he had known them all, his originality would have been equally evident.

THE ORDER OF THE TALES

The order of the Canterbury Tales established by the Chaucer Society and since adopted by most editors is not that of any of the manuscripts. It was based upon the assumption that although Chaucer had not finished writing all the tales called for by his plan, he had at least definitely settled upon the details of the plan and had brought all the parts that he had written into harmony with it. A minute study of cross-references, allusions to the time of day and to places on the road, would therefore enable the student to recover from the jumbled order in the manuscripts the order finally intended by Chaucer.

But these assumptions are very far from being true. There is a good deal of evidence that Chaucer had not made final decisions upon several of the extant fragments of his plan. It is generally admitted that several passages in the text belong to earlier stages of his work and are out of harmony with his latest intentions. Certain lines near the beginning of the 'Shipman's Tale' are witnesses to an earlier intention of assigning that tale to some woman, just as the Second Nun's allusion to herself as an unworthy son of Eve indicates that her tale had not been properly revised to suit its teller. The clear implication of the words of the Man of Law is that his tale was to be in prose. These facts are now generally admitted, but it is not so commonly admitted that some of the allusions to time and to places on the road may also represent, not Chaucer's latest intention, but an earlier plan. Yet all students have been troubled by the discrepancy in time indications between the prologue of the Manciple and that of the Parson; for if the 'Parson's Tale' immediately followed the Manciple's, it cannot have been morning when the Manciple began his tale and four in the afternoon when he finished it. With these evidences that the statements in the links do not always represent Chaucer's latest intentions, one is justified in doubting whether the reference to Rochester in the words of the Host to the Monk warrants the removal of the fragment in which they occur to a position which it does not occupy in any of the manuscripts and the adoption in the end-link of the 'Man of Law's Tale' of the reading of a manuscript which can hardly be believed to represent a direct line of transmission from Chaucer. It is not even safe to infer that the Prologue, masterly though it is, would have received no revision had Chaucer lived to complete his plan. On one point indeed — the number of tales to be told — there is pretty general agreement that it does not represent his latest intentions. Some reasons have been given above, p. 68, which suggest that it would be rash to assume that the Prologue represents the earlier plan. But even if the Prologue is in the main one of the latest pieces that was written we have no right to assume that it had received final revision.

If we allow force to these considerations we shall be better able to deal with such problems as that of the "preestes three" (see pp. 507f.); the identity of the pilgrim whose tale was to follow that of the Man of Law (see pp. 570f.); and the puzzling links which seem undoubtedly genuine but are out of harmony with other parts of the text (see pp. 596 and 646).

There is much disagreement among the manuscripts in the order of the tales, but the conditions are, I think, not so chaotic as is usually assumed. The majority of the manuscripts point to two genuine types of arrangement, deviations from which are probably to be explained in part by the shifting from one exemplar to another in copying the manuscript, partly by accidental disarrangements of quires either in the extant manuscript or in some ancestor, and in a few instances perhaps by sources which it is now impossible to ascertain.

In order to study the problem of arrangement we may adopt provisionally the designations of the groups established by the Chaucer Society. The tales themselves will be represented by abbreviations. The bits of interspersed conversation between the pilgrims will be called "links." Those that relate only to the preceding tale will be called "end-links"; those that relate to the following tale will be called "head-links." It will be seen that we really have ten fragments, continuous and connected within themselves, but not connected one to another. These fragments were called groups by the Chaucer Society and designated by the letters of the alphabet:

Group A: Prol, Kn T, link, Mil T, link, Re T, link, Ck T
(unfinished)

Group B¹: M L head-link, M L T, M L end-link

Group B²: Ship T, link, Pri T, link, Sir Tho, link, Mel, link, Mo T, link, N P T

Group C: Doc T, link, Pard T

Group D: W B T, link, Fri T, link, Sum T

Group E: Cl head-link, Cl T, link, Merch T

Group F: Sq head-link, Sq T, link, Fran T

Group G: Sec N T, link, C Y T

Group H: Manc head-link, Manc T

Group I: Pars head-link, Pars T

The two types of arrangement spoken of above are as follows:

Class I: A B¹ D E F C B² G H I.

Nine manuscripts¹ have this order, with no essential variation. They are El, Gg (imperfect at end), Dd, Ds, En¹, Ad¹, En³, Ma¹, Cn. Bo² has the same order except that H has been placed before G and I has been lost. Ha⁵ and Ad³ seem to have been derived from a manuscript belonging to this class which had by some accident placed G¹ (Sec N T) between D and E; and further changes have occurred in each of the two manuscripts. Ha⁵ has lost all the tales after C and has inserted a spurious link between F and C. Ad³, though complete, has suffered a misplacement of Ck T and the link preceding it between H and G. Bo¹ was copied from a manuscript of this class as far as E¹ (Cl T); from there on it was copied from a manuscript of Class IIa, and therefore it lacks E² (Merch T), F¹ (Sq T). Ph² is a twin of Bo¹. Ha⁴, on the other hand, belongs to Class IIc through B¹; then through D, E, and F it belongs to Class I; then it becomes Class IIc again. Ad² is very imperfect, the order of elements being A, B¹, D, C, E, B², but it obviously belongs to Class I, having suffered a disarrangement of the last three elements. There are thus sixteen manuscripts which establish with varying degrees of certainty the existence of this as a typical order.

¹ For the Key to MSS abbreviations, see pp. 87f., below.

Three of the manuscripts of Class I — Dd, Ds, and En¹ — have at the end of N P T a passage of sixteen lines intended to connect it with some other tale. These lines, commonly called the Nuns' Priest's End-Link, are Chaucerian in manner and are regarded by many scholars as genuine. Four other manuscripts — Ad¹, En³, Ma¹, and Cn — have not only these sixteen lines but six additional ones which are undoubtedly spurious. (For the text of these lines see the Notes, p. 646.) Gg has lost leaves at this point. It may be noted that none of the manuscripts of this class contains the lines known as the Man of Law's End-Link (see Notes, p. 571).

The manuscripts of Class II fall into three subclasses:

Class IIa: A B¹ — F¹ E² D E¹ F² G C B² H I.

Seven practically complete MSS¹ have this arrangement — Ha³, Hl, Lc, Ln, Ne, Py, Cx¹. Six other MSS — Tc², Nl, Rw³, Tc¹, Mc and Rw¹ — clearly belong to this class but are disarranged or defective toward the end. The dash between B¹ and F¹ represents the link joining M L T to Sq T. It is found in 27 MSS — all but Nl of Class IIa, all of IIb, and all but Ht of IIc. It does not occur in any MS of Class I or in any of the eight unclassifiable MSS. Four MSS of Class IIa (Ln, Py, Rw³, Mc) and one hybrid of Class IIc (Ry¹) read sompnour in l. 1179, where the other MSS read squier (varieties of spelling are disregarded). Six manuscripts belonging more or less perfectly to this class also connect F^1 with E^2 by a modified form of the Squire-Franklin Link, changing the word Franklin to Merchant. These are Ln, Py, Lc, Nl, Rw^3 , Tc^1 . Only three MSS of this class have spurious links. Mc and Rw^1 have a 4-line link between A and B^1 ; Py a 14-line link between G and C.

¹ For the purposes of this inquiry the two Caxton editions (Cx¹ and Cx²) are treated as manuscripts.

Class IIb: A X B^1-F^1 D $E^1 E^2 F^2$ G C B^2 H I.

In this series X represents the Tale of Gamelyn. The arrangement is practically the same as that of IIa except that the position of E^2 has been shifted. Three manuscripts belong to this group: Cp, Sl^2 , and La. La has three spurious links.

Class IIc: A a X $B^1-F^1-E^2$ D E^1 g F^2 G f C e B^2 H I.

Here as before X represents the Tale of Gamelyn; a represents a spurious two-line link; the hyphens represent modifications of genuine links; g represents a spurious seven-line head-link, f and e spurious links of fourteen and twelve lines respectively. Seven manuscripts conform closely to this scheme: Ba, En^2 , Ha^2 , Ld^2 , Mg, Ry^2 , Sl^1 . Eight others — Ry^1 , Fi, Ii, Rw^2 , Ht, Pw, Mm, Gl — clearly belong to the group but show more or less derangement of the original plan.

Very Irregular Manuscripts. — Eight manuscripts — Ch, Ld^1 , To, Hg, Hk, Pa, Cx^2 , Se — are so very irregular in arrangement as to defy classification, but it is obvious that in each case we have to do with a derangement based upon a shifting of the exemplar or some accidental shifting of quires in the manuscript itself or one of its ancestors.

The Original Order. — It appears that the fundamental differences between Classes I and II are due to different treatments of four elements and the presence or absence of spurious links. The four erratic elements are F^1 (Sq T), E^2 (Mer T), G (Sec N-C Y), and the Tale of Gamelyn. Assume the existence of a manuscript made up as follows: A B^1 D $E^1 F^2$ G C B^2 H I. Assume further the discovery among Chaucer's papers of copies of the erratic elements just mentioned. It would then be easy to understand how one copyist made up what he regarded as a complete manuscript of the Canterbury Tales by rejecting Gamelyn and introducing E² and F¹ at the positions indicated by their accompanying links; while another copyist, conforming to the indications of Man of Law's End-Link, placed Sq T there, accompanying it for some unknown reason by Mer T. The first of these hypothetical copyists would have produced the basic form of Class I, the second the basic form of Class II. Later, perhaps, Gamelyn was inserted, thus giving Class II c. But it is possible, though not probable, that Gamelyn was in the second basic form and was later dropped, thus giving rise to Class II a. Variations were produced by the introduction of a greater or less number of spurious links, a practice which can be clearly and unmistakably observed in study of the manuscripts. In later copying, contaminations of all sorts and degrees undoubtedly occurred, but they do not disguise the existence of the two basic arrangements here set forth.

COOK-GAMELYN LINKS

Twelve manuscripts all showing the same general arrangement of the fragments possess a two-line link connecting the Cook's Tale and Gamelyn:

But here of I wol passe as now
And of yonge Gamelyn I wol telle yow

These manuscripts are Bw, En², Fi, Gl, Ii, Ld², Lc, Mm, Mg, Pw, Ry², Sl¹. Ht also connects Ck T and Gamelyn by this link but places them after the tale of the Man of Law.

A single manuscript, La, has a four-line link between Ck T and Gamelyn which is not found in any other manuscript.

Nine other manuscripts contain the Gamelyn but have no connecting link. These are Ch, Cp, Ha², Ha⁴, La¹, Rw², Ry¹, Sl², and To, but it is to be noted that in Ha² leaves are missing at this point and that it probably originally contained the two-line link. In Rw² the position of Gamelyn is shifted so that it comes between the tales of the Merchant and the Wife of Bath.

MAN OF LAW'S END-LINK

This passage, though not in El or any other manuscript of Class I, is undoubtedly genuine. It is therefore given, with comments, in the Notes, see pp. 570-74. Details concerning the manuscripts that contain the passage will be found on pp. 570-72.

"THE STAG OF AN HERT"

Between Parts One and Two of the 'Squire's Tale' eight manuscripts — Cp, Gl, Ha², Lc, Mg, Mm, Pw, Ry² — have the mysterious inscription "The Stag of an Hert." No one has yet suggested a satisfactory explanation of this, but it obviously indicates some sort of relation among these manuscripts at this point.

One readily conjectures that the words conceal the name of the scribe. The manuscripts are not in the same hand, but the inscription may have had significance only for the manuscript in which it first appeared.

THE SQUIRE-MERCHANT LINK

In twenty-one of the manuscripts which place Merch T immediately after Sq T, the two tales are joined by the lines commonly known as the Squire-Franklin Link, beginning:

In feith Squier thow hast the wel yquit.

Naturally the word "Franklin" is replaced by "Marchaunt." The complete list of manuscripts having this arrangement is Bw, En², Fi, Gl, Ha², Hg, Ht, Ii, Ld², Lc, Ln, Mm, Mg, Nl, Pw, Py, Rw², Rw³, Ry², Sl¹, Tc¹. In Rw³ Fran T actually follows, but it is ascribed in the heading to the Merchant. It will be observed that only two of the manuscripts which have this arrangement (Hg and Nl) are absent from the list of those which use the Man of Law's End-Link for introducing Sq T; but ten manuscripts of that list do not make use of the modified Squire-Franklin Link to introduce Merch T. These are Cp, Ha³, Ha⁴, He, La, Ne, Rw¹, Ry¹, Sl², Tc².

SPURIOUS SQUIRE-WIFE LINK

The manuscripts Cp, La, and Sl² place W B T immediately after Sq T, but La is unique in linking the tales. The link consists of twelve lines, undoubtedly spurious; as they appear in only one MS they are not worth quoting.

SPURIOUS MERCHANT-WIFE LINK

Three closely related manuscripts, Bw, Ld², Ry², connect the tales of the Merchant and the Wife of Bath by a spurious link of sixteen lines:

Oure Ost gan tho to loke vp anoon
 Gode men quod he herkenyth euerychon
 As euer I mote drynke wyn or ale
 This marchant hath Itole a mery tale
 How Ianuarie hade a lether Iape
 His wif put in his hoode an ape
 But here of I wil leue of as nowe
 Dame wif of bath quod he I pray yow
 Telle vs a tale now next aftir this
 Sir ost quod she so god my soule blis
 As I fully therto wil consente
 And fully it is myn holly entente
 To don yow alle disport that I can
 But holdith me excused I am a woman
 I con not rehersen as thise clerkes can
 And right a non she hath hir tale bygone

SPURIOUS CLERK-FRANKLIN LINK

Two stanzas of seven lines each occur in eight manuscripts of Class IIc as a link between the tales of the Clerk and the Franklin:

I haue a wyf quod oure Ost though she pore be Yit hath she an heep of vices lo
 For of hir tonge a moche shrewe is she
 For to my wille the contrary wol she do
 Therof no force lat alle suche thinges go
 But wite ye what in counsail be it said
 Me reweth sore that I am to hir tayd

Sire Frankeleyn cometh nere zif it youre wil be
 And say vs a tale as ye are a gentilman
 It shal be don trewely host quod he
 I wol you telle as hertely as I can Holdeth me excused though I vnworthy am
 To telle you a tale for I wol Not rebell
 Azeinst youre wille a tale now wol I telle.

Both stanzas are spurious, although most of the lines of the first are genuine Chaucerian lines, but the rhymes of ll. 2, 4, and 5 indicate that the combination belongs to the fifteenth century. The manuscripts containing these lines are Bw, Ha², Ld², Lc, Mg, Ry², Sl¹. En² probably once contained them, but leaves have been lost at this point. The lines are also found exceptionally in the very irregular manuscript Nl.

Four manuscripts, Fi, Hg, Ht, and Ii place the Fran T after the Merch T. In Fi the tales are connected by the spurious link just quoted. In the other three manuscripts they are linked by the eight genuine lines commonly known as the Squire's Head-Link (F 1-8), with a substitution of the name "Franklin" for "Squire."

SPURIOUS PARDONER-SHIPMAN LINKS

Most of the manuscripts of Class IIc contain a spurious twelve-line link uniting the tales of the Pardoner and the Shipman. The lines are:

Now frendes saide oure hoost so dere
 How liketh you by John the pardonere
 For he hath vnbokeled wel the male
 He hath vs tolde right a thrifty tale
 As touchyng of mysgovernaunce
 I pray to god yeue him goode chaunce
 As ye han herde of thise Riotours thre
 Now gentil maryner hertely I pray the Telle vs a good tale and that right anon
 It shal be don by god and by seynt John Seyde this maryner as wel as euer I can
 And right anon his tale thus he bigan.

The manuscripts in question are Bw, En², Fi, Ha², Ii, Ld², Lc, Mo, Rw², Ry², Sl¹. Bo¹, a hybrid of Classes I and IIc, also contains these lines. Owing probably to a disarrangement of leaves, the lines occur in three manuscripts — Pw, Mm, and Gl — between Gamelyn and Ship T, which has been moved up to this point. For a similar reason they occur in Ht between Cl T and Ship T.

Manuscript La again is unique in possessing a spurious six-line link which connects the tales of the Pardoner and the Shipman.

SPURIOUS CANON'S YEOMAN-DOCTOR LINKS

A link of seven spurious couplets occurs in fourteen manuscripts of Group IIb between the tales of the Canon's Yeoman and the Doctor. The manuscripts are Bw, Bo¹, En², Fi, Ht, Ii, Ld², Lc, Mm, Mg, Rw², Ry¹, Ry², Sl². They also occur in Bo¹, Py, and Se — hybrids all — and would probably occur in Ha² if leaves had not been lost at this point. The lines read as follows:

Whan that this yoman his tale ended hadde
 Of this fals Chanon whiche that was so badde
 Oure host gan seye trewely and certain
 This preest was bigiled sothly forto sayn
 He wenyng forto be a philosophre
 Til he right no gold lefte in his cofre
 And sothly this preest hadde a luder iape
 This cursed Chanon putte in his hood an ape
 But al this passe I ouer as now
 Sir doctour of physik I pray you
 Tell vs a tale of som honest matere
 It shal be don yif that ye wole it here
 Saide this doctoure and his tale began anon
 Now goode men quod he herkeneth euerychon.

Manuscript La, exceptional in so many respects, contains instead of these lines a sixteen-line link which is undoubtedly spurious.

KEY TO MANUSCRIPTS

(Fragments and single tales are excluded.)

Additional 5140 (B.M. = British Museum) [Askew 2]	Ad ¹
Additional 25718 (B.M.)	Ad ²
Additional 35286 (B.M.) [Ashburnham 125]	Ad ³
Barlow 20 (Bodl. = Bodleian Library, Oxford)	Bw
Bodley 414 (Bodl.)	Bo ¹
Bodley 686 (Bodl.)	Bo ²
Cardigan (George Brudenell, Esq.)	Cn
Christ Church 152 (Oxf.)	Ch

Caxton (printed c. 1478[?])	Cx ¹
Caxton (printed c. 1484[?])	Cx ²
Corpus Christi Coll. 196 (Oxford)	Cp
Dd. 4.24 (Cambridge University Library)	Dd
Delamere (Lord Delamere) [Cholmondeley]	DI
Devonshire (Duke of Devonshire) [Le Strange]	Ds
Egerton 2726 (B.M.) [Haistwell]	En ¹
Egerton 2863 (B.M.) [Hodson-Norton]	En ²
Egerton 2864 (B.M.) [Askew 1, Hodson-Ingleby]	En ³
Ellesmere (Huntington Library, Calif.)	El
Fitzwilliam (Fitzwilliam Museum, Camb.) [Ashb. 127]	Fi
Gg. 4.27 (Cambridge University Library)	Gg
Glasgow V, i, 1 (Hunterian Museum)	Gl
Harley 1758 (B.M.)	Ha ²
Harley 7333 (B.M.)	Ha ³
Harley 7334 (B.M.)	Ha ⁴
Harley 7335 (B.M.)	Ha ⁵
Hatton Donat 1 (Bodl.)	Ht
Helmingham (Lord Tollemache)	HI
Hengwrt 154 (Nat. Lib. of Wales, Aberystwith)	Hg
Holkham (the Earl of Leicester)	Hk
Ii. 3.26 (Cambridge University Library)	Ii
Lansdowne 851 (B.M.) [Webb]	La
Laud 600 (Bodleian)	Ld ¹
Laud 739 (Bodleian)	Ld ²
Lichfield (Cathedral)	Lc
Lincoln (Cathedral)	Ln
Manchester Eng. 113 (John Rylands Lib.) [Hodson 39]	Ma ¹
McCormick (Sir William McCormick) [Ashburnham 126]	Mc
Mm. 2.5 (Cambridge University Library) [Ely]	Mm
Morgan (Morgan Library, New York) [Ashburnham 124]	Mg
New Coll. D 314 (Oxford)	Ne
Northumberland (Duke of Northumberland) [Mrs. Thynne]	Nl
Paris fonds angl. 39 (Bib. nat., Paris)	Pa
Petworth (Lord Leconfield)	Pw
Phillipps 6570 ¹ (Dr. A. W. Rosenbach)	Ph ¹
Phillipps 8136 " " " " [Canby]	Ph ²

¹ Ph¹ is fragmentary (24 written leaves).

Phillipps 8137 (Dr. A. W. Rosenbach)	Ph ³
Physicians (College of, London)	Py
Rawlinson Poetry 141 (Bodl.)	Rw ¹
Rawlinson Poetry 149 (Bodl.)	Rw ²
Rawlinson Poetry 223 (Bodl.)	Rw ³
Royal 17 D xv (B.M.)	Ry ¹
Royal 18 C ii (B.M.)	Ry ²
Arch. Selden B. 14 (Bodl.)	Se
Sloane 1685 (B.M.)	Sl ¹
Sloane 1686 (B.M.)	Sl ²
Trinity Coll. 49 (Oxf.)	To
Trinity Coll. R 3, 3 (Camb.)	Tc ¹
Trinity Coll. R 3, 15 (Camb.)	Tc ²

VI

THE LANGUAGE OF CHAUCER

The language of Chaucer is interesting and important, both because it is the form of English written by one of the greatest writers who ever used our language and because it lies, in time and in stage of development, about half way between the English of Alfred the Great (Anglo-Saxon) and that of our own time. It is of course a mistake to suppose that Chaucer created the English language or indeed that he made any very radical changes in it. No man could perform such miracles. He was a Londoner who associated with the classes of people who spoke the best English of his day; and he wrote very much as they spoke — allowing for differences between spoken and written language.

His English is not bookish; it is rather the language of good society, with occasional use of colloquialisms, slang, and a few expressions not permitted in the speech of gentlemen and ladies. His sentences are in general well constructed and clear. Now and then they are not. Sometimes this is due to his reproduction of the freedom and looseness of conversation; sometimes he seems to have begun a sentence in one way and finished it in another, because of carelessness.

That he wrote in English at all is rather astonishing. He belonged to the Court circle and wrote mainly for its members. Although the English language was in his day displacing French in the schools, and gaining ascendancy in the upper classes, French appears to have been still the language written, and probably spoken, by the aristocracy. They read the literature of France; and Englishmen who wrote for them usually wrote in French. Chaucer's contemporary and friend, John Gower, wrote in French the works he wished to be read by gentlemen and ladies; when he wished to appeal to scholars, he wrote in Latin; he seems not to have written in English until Chaucer had established English as a language worth writing in. Chaucer is not the first English poet, as some writers have said; there were many who wrote interestingly before he did. But he was the first writer to give the English language prestige as a medium for the best that could be thought or said.

The English of London in Chaucer's day was not uniform. A few centuries earlier the speech of London was altogether a southern form of English. But London was the metropolis, and to it came people from all parts of England. As the population north of London was greater than that south of it, northern usages and pronunciations gradually crept into the speech of London.

The grammar of past forms of speech we can easily determine and discuss; it appears in the writings. But the pronunciation has disappeared; we can ascertain it only with great labor and difficulty, and even then only approximately. Still it is astonishing how much we can find out with patience and ingenuity, and we are getting steadily nearer to the reality. If Chaucer could hear a good student read his poetry, the pronunciation would probably seem like that of a foreigner, but he would, we hope, be able to understand what he heard. At any rate, to read his poetry with the pronunciation established by scholars makes possible the maintenance of a uniform tone and atmosphere, whereas the pronunciation of it as modern English, with an occasional extra syllable, makes it sound like the babbling of a child, or like a rustic dialect. But Chaucer was not a child, and the people for whom he wrote were equal in culture, intelligence, and sophistication to the best people of our own time.

The conventional pronunciation is not hard to learn. Most pronunciations are decided by the spelling. Doubtful sounds can be determined by their derivations from OE (Old English) or by their descendants in PE (Present English).

1. THE PRONUNCIATION OF VOWELS AND DIPHTHONGS

Sound	Pronunciation	Spelling	Examples
ā	like a in father	a, aa	bathed, caas
a	like a in Colorado	a	whan, that
ē	like a in mate	e, ee	swete, sweete
ē	like e in there	e, ee	ech, heeth
e	like e in set	e	tendre
ī, y	like i in machine	i, y	shires, ryde
ī, y	like i in bit	i, y	riden, (pret.), hym
ō	like o in note	o, oo	gode, goode
ō	like o in broad	o, oo	holy, hooly
o	like o in for	o	oft, flok
ū	like oo in boot	ou, ow	flour, fowles
u	like u in full	u, o	but, yonge, bot
iū	like u in mute	u	vertu, Puce
ə	like a in about	e	name, finde
ēi	like ē + i	ai, ei, ay, ey	batailles, feith, day, wey
au	like ou in out	au, aw	saugh, sawe, cause
eu	like e + u	eu, ew	reule, newe
oi	like oy in boy	oi, oy	poison, coy
ōu	like ō + u	o, ou, ow	foghte, foughte, sowle

2. The modern English sounds given to indicate the pronunciation of Chaucer's ē, ī, ō, and ū are only approximately accurate, for these modern English sounds are not pure vowels, as we are accustomed to suppose, but diphthongs. The Chaucerian sounds were probably pure vowels, like the corresponding vowels in modern German and Italian.

3. The following Chaucerian spellings require special attention: The spelling oo indicates merely that the vowel is long, and should not be pronounced like oo in modern boot or good. The spelling o usually represents an o sound, but in some words it represents the sound of u in full. These words can nearly always be recognized by the fact that in PE they are pronounced with the vowel sound in sun, son, young.

4. The spelling ou, ow, usually represents a simple vowel, sounded like oo in boot. Words belonging to this class have in PE the diphthong found in house, sound, now.

5. Some scholars teach that ai, ay, ei, ey should be pronounced like ai in modern aisle, but the weight of evidence seems to me to be against this. The proper sound can be secured by slightly prolonging and emphasizing the second element of the diphthong heard in modern way, they.

6. The unaccented final e, the sound of which is indicated above by the unaccented a of about, is of course approximately the same as the final unaccented e in such a German word as gabe, or as a in China.

CONSONANTS

7. In general the consonants are pronounced in Chaucer as they are in PE, but the following remarks are to be noted:

c before a, o, or u is like k

c before e, i, or y is like s

ch is always like tch

g before a, o, and u is like g in go

g before e and i is like g in gem

gg is usually like dg, as in juggen; but in frogges, legges, bigger, it has the same sound as in PE. The sound in PE is a safe guide.

gh is like German ch in ich, doch

ng is like ng in finger

r is trilled

s is pronounced like s, not z, except between vowels

th is pronounced like th in thin, except between vowels, when it is like th in then.

h is silent in words of French origin, as honour, and in native words, like he, him, hire, hadde, when they are not emphatic.

RELATIONS OF ME TO OE AND PE

8. In general the sounds of ME have developed very regularly and consistently into PE, and therefore a few simple rules can be given which will help greatly in ascertaining the proper pronunciation of many words in Chaucer.

9. If in PE the vowel a is pronounced as in name, same, the vowel in the corresponding ME word is to be pronounced with ā as in father.

10. Chaucer's spelling does not distinguish between the two qualities of \bar{e} , but the fact that he rarely rhymes the two classes of words with each other shows that he pronounced them differently. PE does not furnish any test for classifying all such words, but some help is given by the fact that words spelled in Modern English with ea were pronounced by Chaucer with the open sound \bar{e} , as beath, breathe, each.

11. In like manner Chaucer made no distinction in spelling between the two classes of words in \bar{o} . PE helps to distinguish them by the fact that those which had the open sound \bar{o} in ME are now pronounced with \bar{o} , as holy, stone, go; while those which had the close \bar{o} are now pronounced with a u sound (long or short): do, good, hood, room.

12. The student who knows OE can usually determine the quality of ee (\bar{e}) and oo (\bar{a}) by the following rules:

ee or e represents \bar{e} in ME if in OE the vowel was \bar{e} or \bar{eo} ee or e represents \bar{e} in ME if in OE the vowel was $\bar{e}a$, $\bar{e}e$, or e in an open syllable oo or o represents \bar{o} in ME if in OE the vowel was \bar{o}

oo or o represents \bar{o} in ME if in OE the vowel was \bar{a} or o in an open syllable

An open syllable is one that ends in a vowel. In words of two or more syllables a single consonant between vowels belongs with the second vowel; thus in OE in nama, mete, stolen, the vowels a, e, and o are in open syllables.

WORD ACCENT

13. In words of native origin, and other words introduced into the language before the Conquest, the principal stress is on the root syllable, which is usually the first syllable of the word, unless there is a prefix.

14. Words derived from French kept for a time the original French accent, which was usually on the last syllable not counting unstressed final e; thus re soun', co ra' ge, bo nour'. But the English tendency to throw the accent toward the beginning of the word began early to operate, and resulted in giving to some words an accent on the first syllable and allowing others to be accented in either of two ways; thus, chi'' val ry' e, chi' val ri'' e, and either bo nour' or bo' nour. The same tendency gives us, in the twentieth century, chauffeur' and chauf' fer. Most words from Old French ending in ie or ye have either a primary or a secondary accent on the i or y, as compaigny'e, curteis'i'e, but a few words treat the ie or ye as a single syllable and have the accent on the preceding syllable. Such are: consisto'rie, glo'rie, sto'rie, offerto'rie, orato'rie, parito'rie, purgato'rie, stillato'rie, victo'rye, memo'rie, come'die, trage'dye, mercu'rie, porfu'rie, and all words in arye except Tartary'e.

INFLECTIONS

NOUNS

15. By Chaucer's time the elaborate system of OE inflections had almost entirely disappeared, and the inflections had become almost as few and simple as they are in PE. Masculines, feminines, and neuters were all inflected in the same way. In the singular there were only two regular forms, one for the nominative and objective (or accusative), another, es, for the genitive. In the plural the form es served for all cases.

16. Besides these regular forms an old dative ending in e was preserved in a number of crystallized phrases, as to grounde, in londe, on fyre. PE alive, as contrasted with in life, originated in such a phrase.

17. A few words belonging to the OE weak declension show in Chaucer a genitive singular like the nominative: cherche, berte, lady, sonne.

18. Some nouns of the neuter gender in OE have the same form for the plural as the singular: deer, folk (also folkes), hors, sheep, and, less regularly, yeer, thing, and winter.

19. Some nouns form their plurals by change of the root vowel: man, men; foot, feet; goos, gees; tooth, teeth.

20. A few plurals in n, or en, are either derived from OE n-stems or imitated from them: asshen (also asshes), been (also bees), foon (also foos), bosen (also boses), pesen, shoon, toon (also toos) and oxen, yen, brethren, sustren (also sustres), doughtren (also doughtres).

21. Names of relationship ending in er sometimes have a genitive singular like the nominative: fader, suster.

22. Nouns of French origin are in general inflected like those of native origin, but a few monosyllables ending in s have the same form in the plural as in the singular: cas, paas, vers. A few also show no inflectional ending in the genitive, as your heritage right, the rose color.

23. Some words of French origin, especially those ending in n or nt, sometimes make the plural by adding s instead of es. Occasionally z is written instead of s: instrumentz.

ADJECTIVES

24. Some adjectives as well as some nouns end in unaccented e; for example, swete, grene, straunge, nyce. Such adjectives have the same form under all circumstances, except that the final e is usually not pronounced in adjectives of more than two syllables.

25. Other adjectives — that is, those which have no final e in the basal form — are inflected in two ways:

1. They take e in the plural; that is, good, plural goode; yong, plural yonge.

2. The definite form takes e in both the singular and the plural; thus, the yonge sonne, the boote somer.

26. The definite form of the adjective is used as follows: (a) When it is preceded by the definite article or a possessive or demonstrative adjective: the boote somer, his halfe cours, this goode man. (b) After a noun in the genitive case: Epicurus owene sone. (c) In vocatives: O stronge god; welcome, faire fresshe May. When the adjective follows the noun it remains uninflected: Mercy, lady bright. (d) Adjectives with proper names seem sometimes to take an inflectional e even when not preceded by a demonstrative; for example, faire Venus, goode fayre Whyt.

27. A relic of the old genitive plural is preserved in aller (also alder, alther): oure aller cost; alderbest (best of all).

28. A few instances of Old French plurals in es occur: goodes temporeles, romances that been roiales, places delitables.

29. The comparison of adjectives in ME is much the same as in PE. The comparative and superlative are formed either by adding er and est or by using more and most. Superlatives usually end in este if a primary or secondary accent falls on the est.

30. The irregularly compared adjectives good, bad, and muche offer no special peculiarities. Fer has the comparative ferre, superlative ferreste. Neigh, ny has comparative neer; superlative next(e). Dere has the contracted comparative derre.

ADVERBS

31. Adverbs are formed from adjectives by the addition of e, or lich, liche, or the weakened form ly. Examples of the first are: adj. bright, adv. brighte. When an adjective ends in e the adverb may have the same form: clene, softe. Examples of adverbs in lich, liche, and ly are: royalliche, trewelich, sickerly.

32. Adverbs are usually compared as in PE. An entirely exceptional form is shown in:

Therfore he song the murierly and loude I, 714.

33. Special adverbial forms end in es or en, as ones, twyes, thryes, hennes, ihennes, whiles, aboven, abouten, sithen, and exceptionally whilom. Occasionally cardinal numerals are used adverbially: two so ryche (twice as rich); swyche sevene as in the bevene sterres be (seven times as many stars as are in the sky).

PRONOUNS

34. PERSONAL PRONOUNS

FIRST PERSON		SECOND PERSON
SING.	{ Nom. I, ich	thou, thow
	{ Dat. me, mee	the, thee
	{ Acc. me, mee	the, thee
PL.	{ Nom. we, wee	ye, yee
	{ Dat. us	you, yow
	{ Acc. us	you, yow
THIRD PERSON
	MASC.	NEUT.	FEM.
SING.	{ Nom. he, hee	hit, it	she, shee
	{ Dat. him, hym	him	hire, hir
	{ Acc. him, hym	hit, it	hire, hir

ALL GENDERS

PL.	{ Nom. they
	{ Dat. hem
	{ Acc. hem

35. In the first person ich is most commonly used when contracted with a preceding verb, as theech (= thee ich). In passages in northern dialect the form ik occurs.

36. The pronoun thou is occasionally contracted with the preceding verb: shaltou, wostow, nadstow (ne hadst thou).

37. Genitives of the personal pronouns as distinguished from possessive adjectives seem not to occur except in phrases like oure aller cock, youre aller cost, bir aller cappe. The possessive adjectives are used as in PE. The forms are: first person, myn, my (pl. myne); oure, our. Second person, thyn, thy (pl. thyne); youre, your. Third person, his for both masculine and neuter (pl. hise); hir, hire; third person pl. hire, hir. Predicative and absolute forms are: myn, myne; thyn, thyne; his; hires; oures; youres; heres. The forms ending in e are regularly monosyllabic.

DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS AND ADJECTIVES

38. The definite article the is by origin an unstressed form of the demonstrative adjective. The stressed form of the same demonstrative survives in the word that with the plural tho. An unstressed form of that survives in the expressions that oon, that other (the toon, the tother). A trace of an original dative inflection is preserved in such phrases as for the nones and atte nale.

39. The definite article may be contracted either with a following noun, as in thestaat (the estaat), tharray (the array) or with a preceding at: atte firste (at the first), atte laste (at the last).

40. The demonstrative pronoun this has the plural forms thes, these, thise. These are all monosyllabic.

RELATIVE PRONOUNS

41. The usual relative for all genders is that. It often joins with the personal pronouns he, his, him, to express what we now express by who, whose, whom:

*That fro the tyme that he first bigan
To riden out he loved chivalrie. I, 44 f.*

*Ther nas baillif ne hierde nor oother hyne
That he ne knew his sleighte and his covyne I, 603 f.*

42. Who, whos, whom also occur as relatives.

43. Which, plural whiche, is used as a relative adjective. The indefinite relatives are who so, what so, who that, what that, and what.

INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

44. Nominatives who, what, genitive whos, dative whom, accusatives whom, what, which (plural whiche). Whether (which of two) is often contracted to wher.

OTHER PRONOUNS AND ADJECTIVES

45. Other pronouns and indefinite adjectives are in general used as in PE, but the following perhaps deserve special notice: Self may be used as an adjective: thy selve neyghebour. No distinction seems to be made between such forms as myself and myselven; hemself and hemselven, hemselve. The adjective ilke is contracted with a preceding the to thilke: thilke day (= the same day).

46. Swich, such, has the plural swiche (usually monosyllabic). Som has the plural some (usually monosyllabic).

47. Al has the plural alle. The dissyllabic form alle also occurs in the singular before abstract nouns: in alle vertu. The plural alle before the is usually monosyllabic.

48. An indefinite pronoun, equivalent to the French on, occurs frequently in the forms men, me: if men smoot it.

VERBS

49. In ME, as in English of all periods, verbs are divided into two main classes, commonly called strong and weak, according to the method of forming the preterit and past participle. The weak verbs constitute by far the larger class, and their number has been constantly increased by the addition to it of all new verbs and by the transfer to it of many verbs which were originally strong.

WEAK VERBS

50. Weak verbs form the stems of the preterit and past participle, not by a change of vowel, but by the addition of a d (or t) to the preterit stem.

51. There are two classes of weak verbs in ME.

	Preterit	Past Participle
CLASS I.	ede	ed
CLASS II.	de (-te)	d (-t)

52. In general the student familiar with PE will find no difficulty in this classification, and his sense of rhythm will usually be a safe guide to the pronunciation or non-pronunciation of the e in the preterit and participial forms.

53. The following weak verbs present special peculiarities — mostly familiar in PE:

Present	Preterit	Past Participle telle	tolde	told
selle	solde	sold
recchen	raughte
strecchen	straughte
byen, beyen	boughte
thenken,	thoughte	thought
thinken	thoughte
werken	wroughte	wrought
bringen	broughte	brought recchen	roughte
seeken, seechen	soughte	sought
techen	taughte	taught

TENSE FORMATION OF STRONG VERBS

54. In OE the strong verbs had four tense stems; namely, present, preterit singular, preterit plural, and past participle. These forms usually contained different stem vowels. In ME the different vowels for the preterit singular and plural are generally reduced to that of the singular. Where a separate vowel for the preterit plural occurs, it is usually that of the past participle.

55. The series of vowels found in these tense stems is not the same for all verbs. Originally there were seven distinct series. The classification of strong verbs in English is based upon these different series of stem vowels.

56. CLASS I. In the present infinitive verbs of this class have i, or y, followed by a single consonant.

TENSE FORMATION OF STRONG VERBS 99

Present	Pret. Sing.	Pret. Pl.	Past Part.
ryde	rood	riden	riden
wryte	wroot	writen	writen
dryve	droof	driven	driven

Other verbs belonging to this class are agryse, aryse, byde, byte, glyde, ryve, shyne, shryve, smyte, stryve, thryve.

57. CLASS II. In the present infinitive verbs of this class have e, followed by a single consonant.

Present	Pret. Sing.	Pret. Pl.	Past Part. bede	bed	beden	boden
chese	chees		chosen
cleve (split)	(clefte, wk.)		cloven
crepe	crep (or. crepte)		cropen
lese	lees		loren, lorn
sethe	seeth		soden

Parts of other verbs belonging to this class that appear in Chaucer are the present forms flete, shete, and the preterit brew,

58. Three verbs originally belonging to this class present peculiar forms:

{ flye	{ fleigh, fley	{ flownen	flown
{ flee	{ flough	{ flew
shouue	shoof		shoven

NOTE. — Flye and flee were originally distinct verbs but were confused both in form and in meaning. Flee has also weak forms fledde and fled.

59. Class III originally consisted of verbs having e followed by two consonants, but under certain conditions this e was later changed to an i. Class III therefore consisted in ME of two subclasses: Class IIIa, verbs containing e followed by a liquid and another consonant; Class IIIb, verbs containing i followed by a nasal and another consonant.

60. CLASS IIIa

Present	Pret. Sing.	Pret. Pl.	Past Part.
delve	dalf	dulve (pt. sbj.)	dolven
helpe	halp	holpen	holpen

NOTE. — An anomalous preterit heelp is also found.

Present	Pret. Sing.	Pret. Pl.	Past Part.
kerve	carf	corven	corven
swelle	swal		swollen
yelde	yold	yolden	yolden
breste	brast	brosten	brosten
fighte	foughte	foughten	foughten

61. Present worthe (from werthe) has the preterit form worþ (Hengwrt MS., warþ). Of thresshe only the present infinite occurs.

62. CLASS III B

Present	Pret. Sing.	Pret. Pl.	Past Part.
swimme	swam	swommen	swommen
(bi)ginne	(bi)gan	(bi)gonnen	(bi)gonnen
winne	wan	wonnen	wonnen
drinke	drank	dronken	dronken

So also sbrinke, sinke, stinke, swinke.

clymbe	clomb	clomben	clomben
bynde	bond	bounden	bounden

So also fynde, grynde, wynde.

ringe	rong	rongen	rongen
-------	------	--------	--------

So also singe, springe, stinge, thringe, wringe.

63. One verb borrowed from Old Norse belongs here: renne, ran, ronnen, ronnen.

64. CLASS IV. The characteristic of this class is a single vowel (usually e) before a single consonant (liquid or nasal).

Present	Pret. Sing.	Pret. Pl.	Past Part. bere	{ baar (bar) beer (ber)	{ baren beren	boren (borne)
stele	stal		stolen

Shere (shear), tere (tear) have p.p. shoren, toren; were (wear) was still a weak verb. with pt. werede and p.p. wered; the strong forms wore, worn are later.

breke	brak	broken
speke	spak	spoken

NOTE. — These verbs belong here, although the consonant following the vowel is not a liquid or a nasal.

TENSE FORMATION OF STRONG VERBS 101

65. The two verbs containing a nasal after the vowel are:

come	cam, com	comen	come
nime	nam, nom	nomen	nomen

66. CLASS V. The characteristic of this class is short e followed by a single consonant (not liquid or nasal).

Present	Pret. Sing.	Pret. Pl.	Past Part.
gete	gat		geten
wreke	wrak		{ wreken wroken
yeve	yaf	yaven, yeven (subj.)	yeven
ete	eet	eten	eten

See has pt. s. saugh, seigh, say, sey, sy; pt. pl. sawen, seyen, syen; and p.p. seyen, seye.

67. In the following an original j in the present caused doubling of the consonant and change of e to i:

bidde	bad	beden	bidden
lyen, liggen	lay	layen
sitte	sat, seet	seten	seten

68. The forms quoeth, quod, 3 s. pr., preserved in conventional phrases, belong to this class.

69. CLASS VI. Verbs of this class originally had a followed by a consonant.

Present	Pret. Sing.	Pret. Pl.	Past Part.
take	tok	token	taken

So quake, forsake, shake, shape, wake. Fare retains the strong p.p. faeren but has the weak pt. ferde and p.p. ferd. Bake is usually inflected weak, but retains the strong p.p. in bake mete.

70. One verb has an intrusive n in pr. and p.p.:

stonde	stod	stoden	stonden
--------	------	--------	---------

71. The following had an intrusive j in the present:

swere	swor	sworen	{ sworn swore
-------	------	--------	------------------

72. Heve has pt. s. baf, beef, heved. The p.p. stapen, stopen is from steppe.

73. The influence of an original guttural consonant is shown in the following:

Present	Pret. Sing.	Pret. Pl.	Past Part.
drawe	drough, drow	drowen	drawen
laughe	lough		laughen
slee	slough	slowen	{ slawen slayn

CLASS VII

74. Verbs of this class are from various sources.

Present	Pret. Sing.	Pret. Pl.	Past Part.
bete	bet, beet		beten
lepe	leep
lete, late	let, leet	leten	leten, laten
slepe	sleep	slepe
wepe	weep		wepen, wopen
wexe	wex	wexen	woxen

These verbs have the following weak forms: pt. bette, p.p. bet; pt. lette; pt. slepte, slepten; wepte, wepten.

75. knowe knew knewen known

Here also belong blowe, crowe, growe, sowe, throwe; but growe has also pt. growed.

76. falle	fel, fil	fallen	fallen
holde	heeld	helden	holden
hange, honge	honge	hengen	hanged
wasshe	wesh	wesshen	wasshen

77. The forms of the verb boten (to command, promise, be called) are very confused. Hight and highte occur indiscriminately as both present and preterit.

INFLECTION OF PRESENT

78. The inflections of the present indicative and present subjunctive are the same for both strong and weak verbs:

Indic. Sing.	1. -e	Subj. Sing.	1, 2, 3. -e
	2. -est
	3. -eth, -th
Plur.	1, 2, 3. -e	Plur.	1, 2, 3. -e (n)

79. In both the singular and the plural the unstressed e is sometimes silent or slurred. In the second and third person in the singular it is sometimes omitted in the spelling: seist, liib, comib.

80. The following contracted forms occur in the singular: lixt (liest), bit (bids), brst (bursts), fiut (finds), et (eats), forget (forgets), halt, holt (holds) hight (is called), rit (rides), set (sets) sit (sits), stont (stands), worth (becomes).

81. A few instances of northern 3 s. ind. in es occur in the early poems and in the northern tales; but the northern forms do not belong to Chaucer's usage.

82. The verb have inflects: sing. have, hast, hath; pl. haven, han, have, haveth. Verbs like see inflect: sing. see, seest, seeth; pl. seen, see.

83. Subjunctive. — The subjunctive forms often drop the final n of the plural.

84. Imperative. — The imperative singular of strong verbs has properly no inflectional e, although a written e sometimes appears in the manuscripts, as helpe me, I, 2312. Some weak verbs, on the other hand, are entitled to a final e, but this is often not sounded, as have, I, 2225, clepe, I, 3432, looke, I, 3431. In the plural both strong and weak verbs regularly have the ending eth: helpeth, studieth.

85. Infinitive. — Endings en and e occur with approximately equal frequency, and the final e is often silent, especially in common words like have. The gerund is usually like the infinitive, but a few forms occur which preserve the older inflection: to done, to seyne.

86. Participle. — The present participle regularly ends in inge, but the final e is often silent except in rhyme; but it seems to be pronounced in folowyng, I, 2367.

87. INFLECTION OF THE PRETERIT

	Strong		Weak
Sing.
song	bigan	lovede	wende
songe	bigonne	lovedest	wendest
song	bigan	lovede	wende
Pl.
songen	bigonnen	loveden	wenden

The plural often drops the final n, and in all forms a final e is sometimes dropped or silent, especially in words of more than two syllables. Occasionally the forms of the preterit singular of strong verbs are used for those of the plural: bigan, lay, yaf.

88. Subjunctive. — The preterit subjunctive has: singular e, pl. en. In strong verbs these endings are usually attached to the stem of the preterit plural, but in a few instances the stem of the preterit singular is used.

89. Past Participle. — As the forms of the past participle have been given for each verb, little need be said about them. The participles of weak verbs end in ed, d, or t, those of strong verbs regularly in en, but forms without final n often occur, as falle, swore, wonne. Stems ending in l, r, or a vowel frequently syncopate the e of the ending: stoln, sworn, leyn, slayn.

90. The past participle, strong or weak, often has the prefix y- (OE ge-): ycomen, yfallen, ymaad, yserved.

91. PRETERIT PRESENT VERBS

These verbs which originally had a preterit tense with a present meaning had formed new preterits in OE. They are used as auxiliaries.

Can. Pres. ind. can, canst, can; connen, conne, can. Inf. connen, conne. Pret. kouth, koude. P.p. kouth.

Dar. Pres. ind. dar, darst, dar; dor, dar. Pret. dorste.

Thar. Pres. ind. thar, tharst, thar; ibar.

Shal. Pres. ind. shal, shalt, shal; shullen, shuln, shul, shal. Pret. sholde.

May. Pres. ind. may, might, mayst, may; mowen, mowe, mow, may. Pres. subj. mowe. Pret. mighte.

Moot. Pres. ind. moot, moost, moot; mooten, moote, moot. Pres. subj. moote. Pret. moote.

Woot. Pres. ind. woot, woost, woot; witen, wite, woot. Pres. subj. wite. Imp. wite. Inf. witen, wite. Part. pres. witinge. Pret. wiste. P.p. wist.

Owe. Pres. ind. owe, owest, oweth. Pret. oughie.

92. ANOMALOUS VERBS

Four very common verbs are entirely anomalous in their inflections.

Go. Pres. ind. sg. go, goost, gooth; Pl. goon, Subj. sg. go; Pl. gooth. Imp. sg. go; Pl. gooth. Inf. goon, go. Ptc. pres. going. Ptc. p. goon, go (especially in ygo, ago). Yeede and wente, from wenden, are used as preterites: both forms are inflected weak.

- Doo. Pres. ind. doo, doost, dooth; doon. Subj. doo; doon. Imp. doo; dooth.
 Inf. doon, doo. P. pres. doing. P.p. doon, doon, doo. Pret. dide (weak).
- Verb. Subst. Pres. ind. am, art, is; been, bee, rarely arn. Subj. bee; been, bee.
 Imp. bee; beeth. Inf. been, bee. P. pres. being. P.p. been, bee. Pret. was, were, was; weren, were. Subj. were; weren, were.
- Wil. Pres. ind. wil, wol, wilt, wolt, wil, wol; wiln, wil, woln, wol. Subj. wile, wolle. Pret. wolde. P.p. wold, woold.

SYNTAX

The syntax of Chaucer, like that of most early writers, is looser, easier, less formal than that of modern English. The student will often find that constructions which at first sight seem difficult become familiar and easy when read aloud and regarded as careless, informal talk. Indeed, one source of Chaucer's perennial freshness and charm lies in the easy informality of his style.

To the production of this tone and manner three separate causes probably contributed. In the first place, the writing of English was not subjected to the regularizing and formalizing influence of stylistic and syntactical ideals established by schoolmasters enamoured of logic and of Ciceronian regularity. In the second place, although Chaucer appeals now and then to those "that reden that I wryte," not only was most of his work cast in the form of tales told by a group of lively talkers, but all of it was composed for an audience more accustomed to listening than to reading, more responsive to conversation than to books. Finally, we must believe that Chaucer's own temperament and taste played no small part in the result.

In the main, of course, the syntax of English in Chaucer's day was the same as in ours. No attempt to give a general outline of it need therefore be made, and no special study of it is necessary before beginning to read Chaucer. But the student may find both interest and help in noting some outstanding peculiarities.

THE SENTENCE

93. Ellipsis. — Like modern colloquial speech, Chaucer's language freely omits what can readily be understood and supplied.

94. Omission of the subject:

And [we] made forward erly for to ryse I, 33;

And by his covenaut [he] yaf the rekenyng I, 600;

And [we] graunted hym withouten moore avys I, 786.

95. The introductory or impersonal it, usually expressed in PE, is freely omitted:

[It] Bifil that in that seson on a day I, 19;

But nathelees passe over, [it] is no fors VI, 303.

96. Omission of the predicate:

His heed was balled, that shoon as any glas;

And eek his face [shoon], as it had been enoynt I, 198 f;

a worthy clerk,

As [is] preved by his wordes and his werk IV, 27 f.

97. In the following it is difficult to decide whether is is omitted or is consolidated in pronunciation with the preceding this:

But this [is] his tale, which that ye may heere IV, 56;

This [is] al and som, that Arcite moot dye I, 2761.

98. In descriptions details are often stated without a pred-icating verb. Whether these instances belong here or are to be regarded as of the nature of absolute constructions may be questioned. A striking series of such details is the following:

Upon an amblere esily she sat;

Ywympled wel, and on hir heed an hat

As brood as is a bokeler or a targe;

A foot mantel aboute hir hipes large,

And on hire feet a paire of spores sharpe I, 469-73.

Hundreds of other examples can easily be found: cf. I, 50, 115, 201, 203, 304, 361 f, 367 f, 457, 495, etc.

99. In Chaucer, as in OE and ME in general, a verb of motion need not be expressed after an auxiliary:

And som man wolde out of his prison fayn I, 1257.

Of the same nature is this:

That day by day [to go] to scole was his wone VII, 1694.

100. The following would indicate that any omission that could readily be supplied was permissible:

And therfore if that I myssspeke or [mis]seye I, 3139;

Cf. also I, 2827 f.

101. Repetition of Subject. — A superfluous pronominal subject is sometimes used, perhaps for clearness or emphasis:

Diverse folk diversely they seyde I, 3857;

Ye seyde right sooth; this monk he clappeth lowde VII, 3971;

He that his hand wol putte in this mitayn,

He shal have multiplieng of his grayn VI, 374 f.

102. Superfluous Object. — Similar to the superfluous subject is the superfluous object:

But al that he myghte of his freendes hente

On bookes and on lernynge he it spente I, 299 f;

He gan to grucche and blamed it a lite I, 3863.

Similar to the repetition of subject or object is the use of ther to repeat an idea just expressed:

In love dayes ther koude he muchel helpe I, 258;

At sessions ther was he lord and sire I, 357.

103. Many other instances of pleonasm occur, as in all early literature (cf. Shakespeare's "many a time and oft") and in colloquial speech:

And eek also VII, 1695, and often;

And wel we weren esed atte beste I, 29;

And eek in what array that they were inne I, 41.

104. Parataxis and anacoluthon. — The informal, colloquial tone of Chaucer's writings makes natural the occurrence of parataxis and anacoluthon. Examples of the former are:

An horn he bar, the bawdryk was of grene I, 116;

Therto he koude endite and make a thyng;
 Ther koude no wight pynchen at his writyng I, 325 f.

105. Anacolutha are not uncommon; here are characteristic examples:

The reule of Seint Maure, or of Seint Beneit,
 Bycause that it was old, and somdel streit —
 This ilke monk leet olde thynges pace I, 173-75;

Cf. I, 1534 ff, 2089 ff.

Perhaps also:

But precheth nat as freres don in Lente,
 To make us for oure olde synnes wepe,
 Ne that thy tale make us nat to slepe IV, 12 ff.

For similar broken or loose constructions, see also III, 1125-27, IV, 87-91, VII, 4257-65, and especially the long series in I, 2496-2520.

106. Conflation. — Expressions resulting from the combination or confusion of two constructions are not uncommon:

Oon of the beste farynge man on lyve V, 932.

Compare our colloquial confusion: "One of the best men that ever was." The normal construction is seen in

For she was oon the faireste under sonne V, 734.

Though criticized by formalists, the following is unquestionably idiomatic:

Thanne wol I love yow best of any man V, 997.

107. The two constructions "she hadde lever" and "hir were lever" are confused in the following:

Al had hir levere have born a knave child IV, 444.

108. Absolute constructions of various sorts are frequent and usually make for simplicity and rapidity. Some of the most common of these have been treated above as examples of ellipsis (see §§ 96-98). More interesting grammatically is the absolute use of the infinitive:

And ye, my lord, to doon right as yow leste IV, 105;

And nevere ye to grucche it nyght ne day IV, 354;

And we also to bere hym companye VIII, 315.

109. The so-called "ablative absolute" is represented by such constructions as:

The cause yknowe and of his harm the roote I, 423.

110. Instead of a noun-clause introduced by that, an infinitive clause is common:

No wonder is a lewed man to ruste I, 502;

But it is good a man been at his large I, 2288.

111. Apposition. — We have become so accustomed to such constructions as "the city of London" that they seem more natural than the logically correct apposition, "the city London." Chaucer has both "the citee of Rome," VII, 4560, and "Thebes the citee," I, 939, II, 289.

112. The following look like examples of apposition, but may be due to other causes (cf. § 117):

a barel ale VII, 3083;

no morsel breed VII, 3624;

a botel hay IX, 14;

the beste galoun wyn IX, 24;

a thousand last quaad yeer VII, 1628;

children an heep VII, 1687.

113. Similar in form, though of different origin is the use of maner:

A maner Latyn corrupt was hir speche II, 519;

Swiche manere doctrine as men used there VII, 1689;

For she was, as it were, a maner deye VII, 4036.

114. Common, but easily explicable, are such failures in case agreement as the following:

Preye eek for us, we synful folk unstable VII, 1877.

115. Examples of nouns in apposition with pronouns are of course common, but many cases which apparently belong here illustrate rather the use of a personal pronoun as a strong demonstrative, meaning "that well-known or notorious, or the like":

Certes he Jakke Strawe and his meynee VII, 4584;

To sleen hym Olofernes in his tente II, 940;

Bitwixen Theseus and hym Arcite I, 1210.

PARTS OF SPEECH

NOUNS

116. A partitive sense is expressed by of followed by a noun:

Of smale houndes hadde she I, 146;

Of remedies of love she knew I, 475.

117. The omission of of with manere and with nouns of measure has been treated above; see §§ 112-13.

PRONOUNS

118. As in PE, the possessive adjective is usually indistinguishable in form from the genitive case of the personal pronouns. But examples of the genitive do occur; for example:

In youre despite (in despite of you) VII, 1753.

119. The following are examples of the ethical dative, or of the dative of advantage or disadvantage:

And to the hors he goth hym faire and wel I, 4062;

To seken hym a chaunterie for soules I, 510;

The millere sholde nat stele hem half a pekke I, 4010.

120. The personal pronoun is often used reflexively:

To be my wyf and reule hire after me IV, 327;

And wondred hem in how honeste manere

And tentify she kepte hir fader deere IV, 333 f;

Ne at this tale I saugh no man hym greve I, 3859.

121. Pronouns with self are used intensively as in PE:

Ther walketh now the lymytour hymself III, 874;

. . . that we

Ne koude nat us-self devysen how IV, 107 f.

122. The compound with self is also sometimes used like the simple personal pronoun, perhaps for emphasis:

Hymself drank water of the welle VII, 2105.

123. A curious substitute for the personal pronoun occurs in II, 1185:

My joly body shal a tale telle II, 1185.

RELATIVE PRONOUNS

124. Attention has already been called to the fact that the common mode of forming a relative is with that alone or that followed by some case form of the personal pronoun. For the relative referring to a personal antecedent see I, 27, 286, 302, 310, etc. For that he meaning who see I, 44-45, 3111; for that his meaning whose see VII, 1694. With the omission of that the personal pronoun may appear to have a relative force:

And to be bounde under subjeccion

Of oon she knoweth nat his condicion I, 270 f.

125. In PE the pronoun is omitted in a relative clause only when the construction calls for the objective case. In older English it may be omitted even when it would be the subject of the clause:

With hym ther was dwellyng a poure scoler

Had lerned art I, 3190 f;

And over that a fyn hawberk

Was al ywroght of Jewes werk VII, 2053 f;

Ye ryde as coy and stille as doth a mayde

Were newe spoused . . . IV, 2 f.

Shakespeare has this construction:

There's a devil haunts thee in the likeness of a fat old man

I Henry IV, II, iv, 492.

It also occurs today in colloquial idiom: "There's a fellow comes here now and then."

126. A relative clause is used with a peculiar conditional force in such examples as the following:

But whoso koude in oother thyng hym grope I, 643 f;

Eek Plato seith, whoso kan hym rede, I, 741;

Whoso that wole his large volume seke II, 60.

127. The compound relative is usually expressed by that:

He keppe that he wan in pestilence, I, 442.

but what also occurs, as in PE. An example of the adjectival use of what is the following:

What wyf that I take . . . IV, 165.

INTERROGATIVE PRONOUNS

128. In addition to the usual interrogative pronouns, occur which and what, meaning what sort:

And whiche they weren and of what degree I, 40;

And seyde thus: 'What man artow?' VII, 1885.

129. Interrogative what occurs often in the sense of why:

What sholde he studie and make hymselfen wood I, 184;

What sholde we speke alday of hooly writ? I, 3902.

INDEFINITE PRONOUNS

130. Som still retained much of its original force. Where we say one and all Chaucer's idiom was alle and some:

'Now herkneth', quod the Millere, 'alle and some!' I, 3136.

131. The indefinite relative is sometimes expressed by looke who, looke what or wayte what. These idioms have usually been misunderstood; see the notes on V, 771 and 992. Looke whan (VI, 826) may belong to the same group.

132. As in PE, an adjective is sometimes used in Chaucer where an adverb might be expected:

Ful fressh and newe hir geere apyked was I, 365;

O Lord, our Lord, thy name how merveillous

Is in this large world ysprad! VII, 1643 f.

133. Conversely we sometimes have an adverb for an adjective:

But loked holwe and therto sobrelly I, 289;

Aproche neer and looke up murily VI, 1888.

134. After swich the usual correlative is whiche:

in swich licour

Of which vertu engendred is the flour I, 3 f;

And synge of swich sentence

Which is agayn youre lawes reverence VII, 1753 f.

135. Before a concrete noun in the singular a is often omitted after swich: "swich thyng," VII, 3968 f, 4001; "swich caas," I, 655.

136. The numeral bothe is usually reinforced by two: "bothe two," I, 3184.

ADVERBS

137. Very does not, I think, occur at all in Chaucer as an intensive adverb. In "a verray, parfit, gentil knyght" (I, 72), "a verray, parfit practisour" (I, 422), "this benigne, verray, feithful mayde" (IV, 343), we have the only examples which could be mistaken for intensive adverbs, and here the word is clearly an adjective, as it is in "for verray feere" (V, 860), etc.

138. The usual intensive adverbs are ful, right, wel and al: "ful devout corage" (I, 22), "ful plesaunt" (I, 138); "nat right fat" (I, 288), "right a myrie cheere" (I, 857); "wel bettre than" (I, 256), "a wel good wrighte" (I, 614); "al bismotered" (I, 76), "His goode steed al he bistrode" (VII, 2093).

139. Intensive adverbial phrases equivalent to very are: "for the maistrie" (I, 165), "for the nones" (I, 545). In I, 379 "for the nones" is adjectival, modifying "cook" (cf. note on the passage).

140. The idea expressed in PE by at all is expressed by ogbt: "To tell hire if hir child wente oght forby" (VII, 1792).

141. As in PE, the purely introductory there is common in Chaucer: "A knyght ther was" (I, 43), "With him ther was his sone" (I, 79). To this category seem to belong the following:

This sentence and an hundred thynges worse
Writeth this man — ther God his bones corse! IV, 1307 f; Arcite is cold — ther Mars his soule gye I, 2815.

142. In Chaucer the usual relative adverb is ther or ther-as:

That proved wel, for over-al ther he cam
At wrastlynge he wolde have alwey the ram I, 547 f;
And certainly, ther Nature wol nat wirche,
Farewel phisik! go bere the man to chirche I, 2759 f;
To take oure wey ther-as I you devyse I, 34;
Ther-as this lord was kepere of the celle I, 172.

143. But wher, wher-as and wher-that are also common:

That oother wher hym list may ride or go I, 1351;
Unto this preestes chambre, wher he lay VIII, 1023;
He seketh every hour and every place
Wher-as he hopeth for to fynde grace III, 919 f;
Freely to goon wher-that hym liste, over-al I, 1207.

144. Homward is used as an adverb of place as well as of direction:

And homward he shal tellen othere two I, 794;
His felawe taughte hym homward prively VII, 1734.

145. Negation is expressed with combinations of negative pronouns, adjectives, and adverbs. Two or even three negatives may be used cumulatively: cf. I, 70 f, 251, 288, 321, 404, 412, 492 f., 513, 550, 603 f, 629-33, 689, 726; III, 10; VI, 444; VII, 3085, 3974. But a single negative is sometimes used: "he was nat gay" (I, 74); "he hadde geten hym yet no benefice"

(I, 291); "Noght o word spak he moore than was neede" (I, 304); "Ther koude no wight pynchen at his writyng" (I, 326).

146. As is often used to introduce an imperative:

As keepe me fro thy vengeaunce and thyn ire I, 2302;

For Goddes sake, as beth of bettre chere! IV, 7.

147. The origin of this idiom is obscure but it is perhaps not unrelated to the general use of as in specification: compare the following:

Acorded nat, as by his facultee I, 244;

Was, as in lengthe, the same quantite II, 8;

And for that day, as in that latitude II, 13;

and as by wey of kynde VII, 1840;

I loved alwey, as after my konnyng VII, 1847;

as to my wit (= in my opinion) III, 4.

148. In comparisons of degree the normal construction in Chaucer, as in PE, is as . . . as:

Grehoundes he hadde, as swift as fowel in flight I, 190;

His palfrey was as broun as is a berye I, 207.

But the first as is omitted more frequently than it is even in modern colloquial speech:

His nekke whit was as the flour delys I, 238;

Ther to he strong was as a champion I, 239;

To ride by the weye doumb as the stoon I, 774.

149. In comparisons of similarity Chaucer regularly uses as where modern idiom requires like:

That stemed as a forneys of a leed I, 202;

He was nat pale, as a forpyned goost I, 204.

Apparently he felt the influence of the suppressed predicate; compare:

And rage he koude, as it were right a whelpe I, 257.

150. Instead of the modern as if, Chaucer regularly uses the conjunctive adverb as:

With lokkes crulle, as they were leyd in presse I, 81;
 Embrouded was he, as it were a meede I, 89;
 And eek his face, as it hadde been enoynt I, 199;
 Oure Hoost gan to swere, as he were wood VI, 287.

151. The as correlative with so is often omitted:

Ne was so worldly for to have office I, 292;
 That no man be so boold, ne preest ne clerk,
 Me to destourbe of Cristes hooly werk VI, 339 f.

152. Instead of besides, Chaucer regularly has therto or yet:

And therto hadde he riden, no man ferre I, 48;
 And have a thank and yet a gowne and hood I, 612.

VERBS

153. Agreement of Subject. — The verb to be agrees, not — as in PE — with the preceding subject, but with the predicate noun or pronoun:

Forsothe it am nat I I, 602.

154. Object. — Some verbs which now require a preposition take a direct object in Chaucer:

And eek hir wyves wolde it wel assente I, 374.

On the other hand, verbs which now take a direct object are sometimes used with a preposition:

And they to his comandement obeye VI, 194.

155. The use of two objects was more common in Chaucer than it now is:

Wyte it the ale of Southwerk I, 3140;
 Goode men and wommen o thyng warne I yow VI, 377;
 I yow relese
 That choys IV, 153 f;

But after the verb teach Chaucer sometimes has a preposition with the thing:

I shal my-self to herbes techen yow VII, 4139.

156. Impersonal Verbs. — The impersonal construction is very common: see I, 37, 385, 486, 534, 583, 682, 750, 756, 777, 785, 787, 828. Lyketh may be followed either by a direct object or by to;

And all that liketh me, I dar wel seyn

It liketh thee IV, 311 f;

It liketh to youre fader and to me IV, 345.

157. Intransitive Verbs. — The compound tenses of intransitive verbs are usually made, not with have, but with be:

At nyght were come into that hostelrye I, 23;

That from the tyme of kyng William were falle I, 324.

158. Inconsistency of Tenses. — In narration Chaucer continually shifts from past to present and from present to past without any apparent reason but the requirements of rhyme and meter; compare IV, 183 ff, 190-93, 260 ff, 276 ff, 292 f, 300 f, 365 f, 423 f.

159. Where we use a progressive form Chaucer commonly used a simple preterit. A striking example is:

Wente for to doon his pilgrymage. I, 78.

160. The Infinitive. — The simple infinitive, the infinitive with to, and the infinitive with for to are used with apparent indifference:

And thoghte, "Now is tyme wake al night I, 3672;

As monkes been or elles oghte be VII, 1833;

Lo, this declaryng oghte ynogh suffise VII, 3172;

Man schal nat suffer his wyf go roule aboute III, 653;

No wonder is a lewed man to ruste I, 502;

Wel oghte a preest ensample for to yeve I, 505;

Tel me what is thy cause for to synge VII, 1837.

161. After the verb let, the subject of a following infinitive may be either expressed or omitted:

Abyde and lat us werken thriftily I, 3131;
 Lat se now who shall telle another tale I, 3116;
 Lat maken with this water his potage VI, 368.

162. The subject of the infinitive is omitted in other constructions when it is unimportant or easily supplied:

He Alma redemptoris herde synge VII, 1708;

163. The following exemplify the complementary infinitive:

'Do come', he seyde, 'my mynstrales' VII, 2035;
 Do thilke carte aresten boldly VII, 4210.

164. The past participle may replace the infinitive:

Thise marchaunts han doon fraught hir shippes newe II, 171;
 He leet the feeste of his nativitee
 Doon cryen thurghout Sarray his citee V, 45 f.

165. The gerund with passive meaning is more widely used in Chaucer than in PE:

Noght wiste he what this Latyn was to seye VII, 1713.

166. The Subjunctive. — The subjunctive is used more freely in Chaucer than in PE, but there are perhaps no usages which should cause any difficulty or doubt as to meaning.

167. The hortative use is naturally one of the most frequent:

The blisful martir quite yow youre meede I, 770;
 And therfore whoso list it nat yheere
 Turne over the leaf and chese another tale I, 3176 f.

168. Any idea stated as a conception may be expressed by the subjunctive:

He wolde the see were kept for any thing I, 276;
 I trowe he were a geldyng or a mare I, 691;

173. Clauses introduced by al be or al be it, even when expressing an assumption, may take the indicative:

But al be that he was a philosophre I, 297;

Al be it that I dar hire nat withstonde VII, 3110.

PREPOSITIONS

174. Prepositions are, in general, used in the same way as in PE and, as a rule, have the same meanings. But there are many differences; they can best be illustrated by examples.

After (for)

This poure wydwe awaiteth al that nyght

After hir litel child but he cam noght VII, 1776 f;

That in that place after hir sone she cryde

Where he was casten in a pit bisyde VII, 1795 f.

At

I have be shryven this day at (by) my curat III, 2095;

What eyleth this love at (with respect to) me VII, 1975.

Specially noteworthy are at his large (I, 2288), 'free'; at eye (I, 3016), 'clearly, with one's own eyes'; bunte at wilde deer (VII, 1926), cf. 'play at marbles.'

For

For (to prevent) Percyng of his herte VII, 2052;

He wolde the see were kept for (in spite of) any thing I, 276;

The cook yscalded, for al his longe ladel I, 2020;

For (as for) blankmanger that made he with the beste I, 387;

'Ha! ha!' quod he, 'for (by) Cristes passion' I, 4327.

In-with (= within)

Yaf in hir thoght in-with a litel space VII, 1794;

In-with youre chambre dar I sauflly sayn IV, 870;

Considered hath in-with hise dayes olde IV, 1394;

This purs hath she in-with hir bosom hyd IV, 1944.

Of

. . . this song I have herd seye
 Was maked of (about) oure blisful lady free VII, 1721 f;
 This Millere smyled of (at) hir nycetee I, 4046;
 But if he wolde be slayn of (by) Symkyn I, 3959;
 Of (from) many a pilgrym hastow Cristes curs I, 4349;
 And by hym baiteth his dextrer
 Of (on) herbes fyne and goode VII, 2103 f.

On

Sik lay the maunciple on (of) a maladye I, 3993.

To

And shortly whan the sonne was to (at) reste I, 30.

Toward

To scoleward and homward whan he wente VII, 1739.

Upon (specifying a penalty)

And Arcite is exiled upon his heed I, 1344.

With (by)

With many a tempest hadde his berd been shake I, 406;
 The hunte strangled with the wilde beres I, 2018;
 The cartere overridden with his carte I, 2022.

175. In the following, with is an adverbial particle, attached to the verb:

Ech of yow, to shorte with oure weye
 In this viage, shal telle tales tweye I, 792 f;
 And herbes shal I right ynowe yfynde,
 To hele with youre hurtes hastily V, 470 f.

Cf. also V, 461 and the similar use of upon and on:

And wered upon my gaye scarlet gytes III, 559;
 That wereth on a coverchief or a calle III, 1018.

VII

VERSIFICATION

1. Stress. — A characteristic feature of the English language is the variation of stress with which different syllables are pronounced. Some are strongly stressed; some less strongly; some not at all. There may, indeed, be several degrees of stress; for practical purposes it is sufficient to distinguish two, primary stress (marked ') and secondary stress (marked ").

The different arrangements of stressed and unstressed syllables exhibited by words and phrases give different patterns of movement. In ordinary speech and in normal prose these patterns are so various and so unrelated to one another in form as to be subject to no perceptible laws of arrangement. In verse, however, only such phrasal stress-patterns can be used as are adapted to the particular verse form aimed at; that is, only such as do not defeat the persistence of the fundamental rhythmical pattern of the verse. If the phrasal stress-patterns repeat the verse pattern with absolute identity, the result is monotony; if they counteract the verse pattern throughout, the result is roughness of movement or absence of the expected rhythm; if the interplay of the two kinds of patterns is skillfully adjusted, the result is a movement agreeable because of its variety in unity.

Rhythm is a basic element of both music and verse. Other elements enter into each: melody and harmony into music; tone color and various obscure relations and associations into verse; but rhythm is fundamental. The time relations of the notes composing the bars of modern music are theoretically exact and absolute, and music is written in conformity to theory. In execution, however, effective expression commonly demands some variation from mechanical regularity. The time relations of the syllables composing the measures of verse are theoretically as exact as those of music, but wider variations from mechanical regularity are not only permissible but desirable; because the beauty of verse lies so largely in the variety of movement produced by the phrasal patterns that are fitted into the verse pattern.

The general principles of stress and movement in Chaucer's language and in his verse patterns are, so far as we can discover, essentially the same as for Present English. There are, to be sure, differences in the position of stress in certain words and word-groups; there are probably differences in the relative weight of syllables, stressed and unstressed; but these are mere matters of detail. There are also differences between Chaucer and some modern poets in their conceptions of allowable and desirable variations from the normal verse pattern; but they are not greater than those between Shakespeare and Milton on the one hand and Pope and Johnson on the other.

There is, however, a difference between Chaucer's English and Present English which is of much importance to the versification. This consists in the fact that a majority of the words in Chaucer's English ended in an unstressed final e or en or es. Since Chaucerian words contained the same syllables as their modern descendants plus this unstressed e, any equal sequence of words would usually contain a larger number of very lightly stressed syllables than in Present English; for example:

Present Eng. — And small fowls make melody;
Chaucer — And smale fowles maken melodye.

This resulted in giving lighter weight and a more rapid movement in the greater number of the lines of verse. The general character of the verse was also affected by the fact that a large number of lines ended in so-called feminine rhymes; that is, in rhymes consisting of a stressed syllable followed by an unstressed one.

In versification unstressed final e's were often either slurred or entirely suppressed. The conditions of such slurring or suppression will be explained below.

SOURCES OF UNSTRESSED FINAL ES, EN, E

Final es is the regular ending for the genitive singular and for all cases of the plural of nouns. It is usually given full syllabic value, as for example: bookes, endes, cord'ges; but in words of three syllables or more it usually loses its syllabic value unless the syllable immediately preceding is accented. The different forms of the word corone (crown) illustrate this well: coro'nēs, co'rouns. Other examples of the syncopation of the vowel are merchaunts, lovyers.

Final en appears as the ending of the infinitive and of the plural of the indicative and subjunctive of all verbs and of the past participle of strong verbs.

In a few verbs like haven, sayen, seyen, the e is suppressed and the n retained: ban, sayn, seyn. In most verbs, however, this is not possible, and the en is either retained in full or the syllable is reduced to e by dropping the n. The final e thus produced is treated like final e from any other source.

The en forming the plural of such words as oxen, eyen, and the like (see § 20) is treated in the same way.

Besides the final e derived from the dropping of n, two main classes demand consideration: (1) final e belonging to the basic form; (2) inflectional e.

(1) Final e Belonging to the Basic Form. — All nouns which in OE ended in the nominative singular in e or any other vowel have final e in Chaucer; for example, ende, ende; nama, name; sunu, sone. All nouns of feminine gender in OE, whether they originally ended in a vowel or not, have final e in Chaucer. This is because so many of the case forms of feminine nouns ended in final e that the e was extended even to those forms not entitled to it; examples: lār, lore; māð, meede; cwēn, queene. The only exceptions are a few words like bond, which because of their peculiar inflections had few forms in final e.

In OE some adjectives had a final vowel in the basic forms, as grēne, swēte, nīwe. These naturally retain the vowel in Chaucerian English: greene, sweete, newe. Others had no vowel-ending in the strong forms of the nominative; e.g. gōð, eald. These are without final e in Chaucer except when they take an inflectional e for the plural or the definite use: good, old (see § 26).

Adverbs regularly end in e or liche, both of which are derived directly from OE forms: adj. slow, adv. slowe; glad, gladliche. The ending liche was often reduced to ly.

Prepositions and conjunctions often show in Chaucer a final e which is derived from some fuller form in OE and has disappeared in PE pronunciation, as above (OE onbufan), aboute (OE onbūtan).

(2) Inflectional e. — In Chaucerian English few nouns can really be said to take an inflectional e under any conditions. There are some instances of an inflectional e in the dative of certain nouns which do not have e in the nominative singular; but these are exceptional forms, preserved in petrified phrases like to bedde, in bedde, on fyre, on lyve, in londe.

Adjectives which have no final vowel in the basic forms take an inflectional e when used in the plural or in the definite inflection (see § 25).

Verbs have final inflectional e in the following forms: pr. ind. 1 s.; pr. subj. 1, 2, 3, s.; pr. imp. 2 s.; strong verbs: pt. ind. 2 s.; pt. subj. 1, 2, 3, s.; weak verbs: pt. ind. 1, 3, s.; pt. subj. 1, 2, 3, s. These inflectional e's are, however, very unstable, and are often silent, especially in a word of three or more syllables.

Many of the final e's enumerated above were on the point of disappearing from pronunciation in the ordinary speech of Chaucer's time. Indeed the history of the language seems to show that Chaucer was decidedly conservative in retaining so many of these e's. His language was doubtless that of the most cultivated and conservative classes of society, the court and the nobility. The instability of these e's in ordinary speech made it quite natural that in versification they should be treated with considerable freedom, being pronounced or not as the verse required it. As has already been said, the tendency to silencing was much greater at the end of long words than at the end of short ones.

In addition to the general suppression of final unstressed e, many e's disappeared in verse as an effect of elision.

ELISION

Final unstressed e was regularly elided in verse when followed by a word beginning with a vowel or with a silent or lightly stressed h. In words of French origin initial h was regularly silent: honour, honest, bumble, and the like. It was lightly stressed in a few common words of native origin: be, bis, bym, bir, bem, have, hadde, and a few other words when occurring in unemphatic position. Before a strongly pronounced b elision does not occur:

To fernè halwès kowthe in sondry londès I, 14.

Examples of elision before vowels are:

So priketh hem nature in hir corages I, 11;

Trouthe and honour, fredom and curteisie I, 46;

For he was late ycomē from his viage I, 77.

The following show elision before a weak b:

And everē honoured for his worthynesse I, 50;

Ne wette hir fyngres in hir sauce depe I, 129;

By his clennessē how that his sheep sholde lyve I, 506.

The e of such slightly stressed words as the definite article, the negative particle ne, and unemphatic pronouns is often elided. In some of the following examples the two words involved are written as one word (see the italicized words):

Of woodecraft wel koude he al the usage I, 110;

The staat, tharray the nombre and eek the cause I, 716;

That ye narete it nat my vileynye I, 726;

That hast the sighte of hir, and I thabsence I, 1239;

Allas! he nadde holde him by his ladel VIII, 51;

Why ne hadde I now thy sentence and thy lore VII, 4546;

Mathynketh that I shal reherce it here I, 3170.

Elision is not confined to the vowel e. The unstressed o in to is sometimes elided before such words as abyde (II, 797), acord (IX, 98), escape (V, 1357), espye (VII, 1989), Athenes (I, 1194, 1391).

Similarly the o in so seems sometimes to be elided before such words as estaatly:

So estaatly was he of his governaunce I, 281

When the personal pronouns I and thou preceded an initial vowel the second vowel was probably dropped:

And slee me in this wode ther I am inne
But, for as muche thou art a worthy knight.

When the pronoun thee is contracted with a following e it is impossible to determine which vowel disappears:

If I thexcuse, though thou shul be spilt III, 1611.

SUPPRESSION AND SLURRING

There are many instances in Chaucer's verse in which a final e that might be pronounced is undoubtedly entirely suppressed. Examples of this occur on every page; see Prologue, lines 1, 23, 35, 64, 68, 85, 88, 93, 97, 98. It would be difficult to give rules covering all the cases that occur; and the rules, if given, would be too complicated to be of much value. A little experience in the reading of Chaucer's verse will soon enable the student to deal easily with practically every instance that may occur.

It is to be borne in mind, however, that Chaucer's verse is not mechanical in its movement, and that it is not necessary to suppress as many unstressed syllables as some editors have supposed. In general the evidence seems to indicate that slurring — that is, rapid pronunciation with very light stress — is a better way of dealing with groups of two unstressed syllables between stresses than is the usual mode of suppressing one of them. In I, 567 and 586 it does not seem necessary to suppress the final e of maunciple. In I, 1176 perpetuelly has, in my opinion, five syllables, and it is not necessary to reduce them to four, although they occupy the time of only four. There are clearly two unstressed syllables before the first stress in the following lines:

With a thredbar cope, as is a poure scoler I, 260;

Sevene hennes, for to doon al his pleasaunce VII, 4056.

There is also little doubt that the first foot of VII, 4157 consists of the words pekke hem up, with the stress on the last word:

Pekke hem up' right'' as they growe,' and ete' hem in.'

In I, 975 light and rapid pronunciation seems better than running together the final syllable of statue and the word of:

The rede statue of Mars, with spere and targe.

In like manner it seems more satisfactory to pronounce lightly the final y of many than to join it with a following vowel:

For many a man so hard is of his herte I, 229;

And eek with staves many another man VII, 4572.

The tendency to reduce two syllables to one in such cases as those discussed and in many others seems to be based upon mechanical theories of versification inherited from the eighteenth century. There can be no question that such theories have seriously affected, not only the reading of Chaucer, but the attitude of his editors in the treatment of the text of his poems. They have rejected readings well supported by manuscript authorities, merely because the resulting lines did not conform to the theories of versification in which they believed, and which therefore they felt sure Chaucer must have followed. A study of the manuscripts indicates that Chaucer was as free in the use of light extra syllables as was Shakespeare or Milton or any of the poets of recent years. The extra syllable is naturally most frequent at the caesural pause, but many instances of it occur in other parts of the line. The following examples illustrate the extra syllable at the caesural pause:

To Caunterbury || with ful devout corage I, 22;

And wonderly delyvere || and of greet strengthe I, 84;

That in hir coppe || ther was no ferthyng sene I, 134;

She was so charitable || and so pitous I, 143;

What sholde he studie || and make hym-selven wood I, 184;

I seigh his sleves || ypurfild at the hond I, 193;

His bootes souple, || his hors in greet estaat I, 203;

Wyd was his parisshe || and houses fer asonder I, 491;

By good ensample, || this was his bisynesse I, 520;

But ye be merye, I wol yeve yow myn heed I, 782;

As any wesele hir body gent and smal I, 3234.

The following illustrate the occurrence of an extra syllable elsewhere than at the caesural pause:

Of Engelond to Caunturbury they wende I, 16;
 Of Algezir and riden in Belmarye I, 57;
 His hors weren goode, but he was nat gay I, 74;
 A Cristophere on his brest of silver sheene I, 115;
 Wel koude she carie a morsel and wel kepe I, 130;
 But soore wepte she if any of hem were deed I, 148;
 So muchel of daliaunce and fair langage I, 211;
 For hym was levere have at his beddes heed I, 293;
 He semed swich, hise wordes weren so wise I, 313;
 Ther koude no wight pynchen at his writyng I, 326;
 It is ful fair to been ycleped Madame I, 376;
 And where they engendred and of what humour I, 421;
 That on a Sonday weren upon hir heed I, 455.

THE CAESURAL PAUSE AND ELISION

The varied beauty of the caesural pause in Chaucer's decasyllabic verse is a striking manifestation of his skill as a metrist, and well deserves the attention of the student of English versification. Not less striking is the manner in which he relates it to sequences of two unstressed syllables and to the confluence of vowels. The former have been discussed in the preceding section. The use of the caesura to prevent elision requires no discussion, and needs to be illustrated by only a few examples:

And whiche they werē; and of what degree I, 40;
 Wel knew he th' oldē/Esculapius I, 429;
 Til that he haddē/al the sighte yseyn I, 4379;
 The teeris of Eleyne,/and the wo II, 70.

But naturally where the pause is slight, elision is not prevented by the caesura. Examples can be found on almost every page of the Canterbury Tales.

NINE-SYLLABLE LINES

Some scholars have been very loth to admit that Chaucer wrote lines in the so-called heroic verse which lacked the unstressed syllable of the first foot — what is technically called the anacrusis. Here again, however, the authority of the manuscripts seems decisive. There are many instances in which all the manuscripts agree in presenting a line in which anacrusis is lacking, and in numerous others it is lacking in the best manuscripts. Chaucer was not alone in his use of such lines. Many examples occur in the original texts of Elizabethan dramatists; they have been removed from the standard texts only by arbitrary editorial assumptions. Indubitable examples in Chaucer's Prologue are the following:

- Al bismotered with his habergeon I, 76;
 Gynglen in a whistlynge wynd als cleere I, 170;
 For to deelen with no swich poraille I, 247;
 Twenty bookes clad in blak or reed I, 294;
 Everich for the wisdom that he kan I, 371;
 Maken mortreux and wel bake a pye I, 384.

That Chaucer, unlike some of his modern editors, did not feel such lines to be objectionable is shown not only by the frequent occurrence of them in the Canterbury Tales but also by the considerable number which appear in that portion of the Tales which is supposed to have been most carefully revised. It is worthy of attention that the very first line of the Prologue is a line of this character. Editors have attempted to formalize the line by giving three syllables to the word Aprille, but no one has ever produced any evidence to support this pronunciation and the etymology of the word is against it. The line should be read:

Whan' that A'prille with' hise shou'res soo'te.

A careful study of all the lines lacking anacrusis indicates that Chaucer constantly used this device to secure special metrical effects. And in view of the fact that no one objects to the absence of an unstressed syllable between the caesura and the following stress, it is difficult to see why anyone but a counter of syllables can object to the absence of the unstressed syllable at the beginning of a line. The rhythmical effect is the same in both cases. If the caesura is not actually a pause which divides one part of the line from another, it is difficult to see what rhythmical function it has.

HINTS ON READING CHAUCER'S VERSE

It is far from certain that we know exactly how Chaucer would have read his own verse. Scholars differ with regard to such questions as the extent to which he admitted nine-syllabled lines, the conflicting claims of slurring and syncopation, and the treatment of extra syllables and of hiatus at the caesura. But any person of reasonably good ear can easily read most verses in harmony with his own sense of the rhythm pattern, without troubling very much to inquire into the historical justification for silencing final e or pronouncing it. It is safe to say that any one who will give to words and phrases their natural stresses — which are in most cases identical with those of Modern English — can read Chaucer's verse acceptably, without stopping often to inquire why a final e is or is not sounded. In the few instances in which difficulty is encountered, reference to the proper grammatical section in this introduction will settle the question of final e and a brief investigation of the history of English accent (see Jespersen, A Modern English Grammar, I, ch. V) will usually suffice to account for any word not accented as it is in Present English.

STANZA FORMS

All of Chaucer's narrative verse, except the 'Monk's Tale,' is written either in rhymed couplets or in stanzas of seven lines.

The rhymed couplet is his favorite form for both decasyllabic and octosyllabic verse. It is not our intention to discuss Chaucer's management of the couplet in detail, but it is worth while to mention the skill with which he avoids the monotony which arises from allowing the end of the couplet always to coincide with the end of a sentence or clause. His skill in this respect is particularly noticeable in the Prologue, where not only a sentence pause, but even a paragraph pause, often occurs at the middle of the couplet. Chaucer also freely uses run-on lines in both his octosyllabic and his decasyllabic verse, though far more frequently in the former than in the latter.

The seven-line stanza is used in The Parlement of Foules and in several of the Canterbury Tales. The arrangement of the rhymes is ababbcc. Examples of it are abundant in the selections.

In the 'Rime of Sir Thopas' Chaucer has imitated, with variations, a stanza form in frequent use in the metrical romances, which he was using as the vehicle of his burlesque. The basic form of this stanza consists of six lines, four of four beats each and two of three beats each. The short lines rhyme together; the four-beat lines sometimes rhyme in couplets and sometimes all four together, giving two fundamental rhyme schemes: aabccb or aabaab. Into these fundamental schemes is sometimes introduced a short line of only one beat. This may be introduced either before or after the second section. When it is introduced after the second section, it is followed by a third section of three lines. Whenever this line of one beat is present, the section which follows rhymes its third line with the one-beat line. The rhymes of the couplet in this section may or may not be the same as those of the preceding section. Students will find it interesting to work out these variations and to notice the curious effects produced by them.

Other stanza forms are used in some of the minor poems. We have at present no concern with them; but the experiment in terza rima (in A Complaynte to His Lady) is interesting biographically; and the "Complaynte" in Anelida and Arcite is a remarkable tour de force of versification and rhyming.

VIII

ASTRONOMY AND ASTROLOGY

Chaucer was much interested in the scientific knowledge and theories of his time, and in his writings he makes considerable use of terms and ideas belonging to several of the sciences. The allusions to physiology and medicine and to alchemy are dealt with in the notes as they occur, but those to astronomy and astrology are so numerous that a brief outline of the fundamental principles of these branches of knowledge seems necessary.

ASTRONOMY

The system of astronomy prevalent throughout the Middle Ages was that known as the Ptolemaic System, from Claudius Ptolemaeus, a celebrated mathematician, astronomer, and geographer who lived in Egypt in the second century after Christ. Ptolemy was not the founder of the science but a continuator of the discoveries and theories of the Greeks, Egyptians, and Babylonians. His greatest astronomical work, the Almagest, incorporating the ideas and calculations of his predecessors, was the consummation of Greek astronomy and remained throughout the Middle Ages a principal authority on the subject. His work was taken up and continued from the ninth to the thirteenth century by Arabian scholars and their successors in western Europe. Of especial interest historically are the Tolentan Tables of the positions and motions of the heavenly bodies, drawn up at Toledo in 1080, and the Alphonsine Tables, prepared in 1252 under the authority of Alphonso X, king of Castile. One of the most important treatises was Sphaera Mundi, written in the thirteenth century by an Englishman, John Holywood, whose name was latinized as Johannes de Sacro Bosco. In the following sketch we shall disregard refinements of the subject; and to simplify the exposition, shall expound the system as if it were true.

The General Cosmic Plan. — At the center of the world, or cosmos, is the earth, which is spherical in form and approximately 18,000 miles in circumference. The earth is fixed in position and does not revolve on its axis. The alternation of day and night, the motions of the planets, the rising and setting of the fixed stars, and other celestial phenomena are caused by the motions of the heavenly bodies. These are placed in eight concentric hollow spheres, each of which has its own independent motion; but all of which are also subject to an additional motion, due to the outer or ninth sphere — the primum mobile, or “firste moeving” (as Chaucer translates the name).

The Planets. — The seven spheres nearest the earth contain the seven planets. These are: the Moon, Mercury, Venus, the Sun, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn. Each of the planets is carried round the earth in a definite period of time by the revolution of its sphere. The periodic times of the planets are: for the Moon, twenty-seven days, eight hours; for Mercury, Venus, and the Sun, three hundred and sixty-five days and about six hours; for Mars, two and a half years; for Jupiter, twelve years; for Saturn, thirty years. In addition to the movement imparted by its sphere, each planet has also a movement within its sphere round a fixed center. It is this movement that causes the apparently erratic motions of the planets in the sky. When the movement of the planet is in the same direction as that of its sphere, that is, from west to east, its motion is called direct; when opposed to the direction of the sphere the motion is called retrograde.

The Fixed Stars. — The eighth sphere, counting from the earth as a center, contains the fixed stars, which are set in the sphere and have no individual motions; but the sphere as a whole has a motion of its own from west to east, but so slow that 36,000 years are required for a complete revolution.

The Primum Mobile. — The ninth sphere makes a complete revolution from east to west in twenty-four hours. It contains no heavenly bodies but its motion is so powerful that it causes all the other spheres to revolve with it. It is this action to which Chaucer refers in the lines:

O firste moevyng! crueel firmament,
With thy diurnal sweigh that crowdest ay
And hurlest al from est til occident,
That naturelly wolde holde another way! II, 295-298.

It is called a cruel firmament because its daily motion forces all the heavenly bodies to revolve round the earth in a direction contrary to their natural motions.

The Zodiac. — The celestial equator may be regarded as lying in the ninth sphere and, naturally, as everywhere distant by ninety degrees from the celestial poles, that is, the axial points of the celestial revolutions. Crossing the celestial equator at two exactly opposite points, called the equinoctial points, and inclined to the equator at an angle of $23\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ is the line of the ecliptic. On each side of the ecliptic, in a zone 16° wide, lie the signs of the zodiac. As there are twelve of them and they are of equal size, each sign occupies 30° on the line of the ecliptic. Beginning at the vernal equinox, or first point of the zodiac, the names of the signs are: Aries, the Ram; Taurus, the Bull; Gemini, the Twins; Cancer, the Crab; Leo, the Lion; Virgo, the Virgin; Libra, the Balances; Scorpius, the Scorpion; Sagittarius, the Bowman; Capricornus, the Goat; Aquarius, the Waterman; Pisces, the Fishes. The signs of the zodiac are supposed to have coincided originally with the constellations bearing the same names, but in Chaucer's time constellation and sign no longer occupied identical positions.

As seen from the earth, the motions of the Sun and the other planets seem always to lie within the zodiacal belt, and the planets are therefore spoken of as moving through the signs of the zodiac. As the Sun accomplishes a complete revolution of the earth in 365 days, his motion is approximately one degree a day, or one sign a month. But inasmuch as the first point of the zodiac, the vernal equinox, is reached near the middle of March, the progress of the Sun through any sign occupies parts of two months. In the present century, the Sun passes the equinoctial point about the twenty-first of March, but in Chaucer's time, owing to a slight error in the length of the calendar year as calculated by Julius Caesar, the equinoctial point had slipped back nine days, and the Sun entered the first degree of Aries a little before noon on March 12, as Chaucer himself says in his treatise on the Astrolabe, pt. ii, § 1.

Prominent Stars. — In observing the positions and motions of the heavenly bodies, reference was naturally made to the more prominent fixed stars. Many of these had been carefully observed by ancient astronomers and named for purposes of cataloguing and reference. Thus Chaucer in the 'Squire's Tale' (IV, 265) fixes the time as that when the sign Leo¹ was just ascending above the horizon with the fixed star Aldrian, or, as it is now called, Aldiran. Professor Skeat thinks this was the star catalogued by modern astronomers as θ Hydrae, but it may have been the more brilliant star (α Leonis), more commonly called Regulus. In the same way, in the 'Franklin's

¹ The gentil Leon, with his Aldrian.

Tale' (V, 1281) Chaucer speaks of the star Alnath (α Arietis), which was supposed to have originally coincided with the imaginary equinoctial point lying in the ninth sphere, but which, because of the precession of the equinoxes (attributed to the slipping of the eighth sphere), was in Chaucer's time several degrees distant from it.

Astronomical Calculations.—The motions of the heavenly bodies and the phenomena resulting from these motions had been carefully observed by the ancient astronomers; and calculations based upon these observations could be made to ascertain the positions and motions at any time in the past, present, or future. The apparatus for these calculations may seem to the beginner rather complicated, but in reality they are comparatively simple; and surprisingly accurate, considering the lack of telescopes and the general inaccuracy of measurements in all science until very recent times. In general, the position of any planet at any required time was calculated in the following manner. The inquirer first consulted his tables (Tables Toletanes) to ascertain the position which the planet had occupied at the birth of Christ. This position was known as the "root." He then looked in a table of motions for "collect yeeres," which showed the number of signs, degrees, minutes, and seconds to be added to the root for the motion of the planet during long periods: 1000, 500, 400, 300, 200, and 100 years. This would give the position of the center of the planetary orb or epicycle at the beginning of the century in question. To this would next be added the motions shown in a table of "expanse yeeres," which would result in giving the position of the planetary center at the beginning of the year in question. Another set of tables would give the motion of the planetary center by months, days, hours, and minutes, and would enable the inquirer to ascertain the position of the planetary center at the exact time desired. Corrections would then have to be made for the revolution of the planet in its epicycle round the fixed center which lay in its sphere; and if minute accuracy were desired, further corrections would have to be taken from tables showing the equations for the relative motions of the planetary sphere, the sphere of the fixed stars, and the primum mobile or ninth sphere. The passage in which Chaucer speaks with greatest detail of such calculations is that in the 'Franklin's Tale' describing the operations of the Orleans clerk to ascertain a suitable time for the removal of the rocks from the coast of Brittany (cf. V, 1273-83).

ASTROLOGY

In modern times we distinguish sharply between the scientific study of the nature and motions of the stars, which we call astronomy, and the study of the influences supposed to be exerted upon the affairs of the world, and the characters and fortunes of men by the stars individually and in combination with one another, which is called astrology. In ancient times both studies flourished together, and although there were some strong opponents of astrology even in the Middle Ages, there was no strict separation of the subjects until comparatively recent times. The adoption of the Copernican System seemed a severe blow to believers in astrology, but modern practitioners and believers assert that the truth of astrology has not been at all affected by the change in astronomical theory. Chaucer's real attitude toward astrology is difficult to understand. In a well-known passage in the treatise on the Astrolabe he denies belief, saying: "Nathales, thise ben observaunce of judicial matiere and rytes of payens, in which my spirit ne hath no feith, ne no knowing of hir horoscopum," but he obviously had considerable knowledge of the subject and in his writings uses its doctrines as if he believed them.

The chief sources and causes of influence were supposed to be: the seven planets, singly or in combination; the north and south points in which the moon crosses the ecliptic, technically called the Dragon's Head and the Dragon's Tail; the signs of the zodiac, with various subdivisions of them; and certain fixed segments of the heavens, independently of their relations to the zodiac.

The Planets. — To each of the seven planets were ascribed particular qualities and the capacity for various influences upon the characters and fortunes of men under certain favorable or unfavorable circumstances.

For example, Mars is described as a hot, dry, fiery, choleric, masculine, nocturnal, malignant, violent planet. Anyone born when his influence is predominant will have a strong, well-set, but short body, bony, lean, and muscular; complexion red rather than ruddy; sharp hazel eyes; violent countenance — “some say a round face, but this is seldom the truth; light brown, flaxen, or red hair, but this cannot be depended upon.” If Mars is well situated with reference to other heavenly bodies — “well dignified” is the technical term — the person born under his domination will be fearless, violent, irascible, and unsubmitting; fond of war and contention, but in other respects prudent, rational, and even generous and magnanimous. If Mars is ill dignified, the native will be wholly destitute of any virtue; prone to violence, quarrels, treachery, robbery, murder, treason, and every species of cruelty and wickedness.

Venus is described as hot and moist and feminine, nocturnal and temperate. Those born under her influence are said to be elegantly formed and extremely beautiful; with sparkling hazel or black eyes, round, smooth face, light or chestnut hair, dimples in the cheek or chin, a wandering eye denoting desire, a sweet voice, and a very engaging address. If Venus is well dignified, the person born under her influence will be even-tempered, kind, and sweet; very merry and cheerful; neat and a lover of dress; fond of music and every elegant amusement; very prone to love, yet truly virtuous; much inclined to be jealous. If Venus is ill dignified, the native will be lewd, profligate, shameless, and wholly abandoned and inclined to every species of lust and depravity.

Each of the planets is said to govern certain parts of the body and regions of the earth, and to exert especial influence upon certain diseases.

Properties of the Signs. — The amount and nature of the influence exerted by a planet depends partly upon its situation in the zodiac. Each of the zodiacal signs has certain qualities and influences of its own. For example, Aries is a vernal, hot, dry, fiery, cardinal, masculine, equinoctial, movable, diurnal, eastern, commanding, northern, choleric, luxuriant, violent, four-footed, fortunate, hoarse sign. It is the day house of Mars and the exaltation of the sun (in 19°).

Taurus is a vernal, cold, dry, earthy, melancholy, feminine, fixed, nocturnal, crooked, commanding, northern, four-footed, hoarse sign. It is the night house of Venus and the exaltation of the Moon (in 3°). When it is "in the ascendant" — that is, just ascending on the eastern horizon — at the moment of any person's birth, the native will have a broad forehead, thick nostrils and lips, dark curly hair; will be dull and unfeeling, slow to anger and rather melancholy; but if once provoked, very malicious. It governs the neck and throat; and its diseases are consumption, scrofula, croup, melancholy, quinsy, and wens on the neck, etc. It governs Ireland, parts of Poland and Russia, Holland, Persia, Asia Minor, and various other countries. Similar characteristic influences are ascribed to the other signs.

Mansions. — Each sign is the "mansion," or "house," of one of the planets; the Sun and the Moon having one house each; the other planets two, a day house and a night house. Thus the day house of Mars is Aries, and the night house Scorpius; and the day house of Venus is Libra, and the night house Taurus. When a planet is situated in its house it is supposed to exercise a particularly strong influence. Each of the signs, except Leo, Scorpius, and Aquarius — or, more strictly a particular degree in each — is also called the "exaltation" of one of the planets or of the Dragon's Head or the Dragon's Tail; and in like manner each of them, except Taurus, Leo and Aquarius, is called the "fall" of one of the bodies just mentioned. Thus the Moon is in its exaltation when situated in the 3° of Taurus; Mars is in his fall when in the 28° of Cancer. In counting the "dignities" or powers of a planet an exaltation is a "dignity" of four degrees; and a fall, a "debility" of four.

Divisions of the Signs. — For the further complication of the matter, each sign is divided into five unequal parts, called "terms," and also into three equal parts, called "faces." Each term and each face has its lord, which has a dignity of two degrees when situated in its term, and of one when situated in its face. Thus in Aries the terms and their lords are: 1° – 6° , Jupiter; 7° – 12° , Venus; 13° – 20° , Mercury; 21° – 25° , Mars; 26° – 30° , Saturn. The faces of Aries, with their lords, are: 1° – 10° , Mars; 11° – 20° , Sun; 21° – 30° , Venus. A further dignity of three degrees is conferred by a "triplicity," that is, a combination of three signs, 120° apart.

Other Dignities. — Besides these "essential dignities" dependent upon the absolute situation of a planet, there are twenty-one others, dependent upon various features of its situation or motion, and varying in value from 5° to 1° .

When a sign is in the ascendant, the "lord of the ascendant" — that is, the planet whose mansion the sign is — is of especial importance; and the strength of his influence depends upon his dignities. That is, if he is in his own house at the time, or "in mutual reception by house" — that is, in another house situated so as to be in favorable aspect and belonging to a planet then situated in the first planet's house — he has a dignity or power of 5° . In like manner, if he is in the mid-heaven, or more than $8\frac{1}{2}^\circ$ from the sun (not "combust"), or less than $17'$ from it ("in Cazimi"), he has a dignity of 5° ; and if he is "direct" and "swift of motion," and "increasing in light," he has additional dignities of 4° , 2° , and 2° . A planet situated in a sign where it has no essential dignity of any kind and is not in reception with any other planet is called "peregrine" — a condition which involves a debility of 5° . But the details of this matter are too numerous and too complicated to be fully explained here.

Aspects. — Most important for the influences of the planets are the aspects, or familiarities. According to Ptolemy these are six in number: conjunction, when two planets are within half the distance of the sum of their orbs; opposition, when they are 180° apart; trine aspect, or 120° apart; quartile, or 90° apart; and sextile, or 60° apart. Of these, the conjunction is good with good stars and bad with evil ones; the opposition is always an evil aspect. Trine is the best aspect of all; sextile is also good, but is not so powerful; and quartile is evil, but in a secondary degree. Properly, of course, conjunction is not an "aspect," for the planets in conjunction cannot look toward each other.

HOUSES

In astrology there are two kinds of houses, "mundane" and "planetary." Although these are entirely different from one another they are sometimes confused by persons unfamiliar with the subject.

Planetary Houses or Mansions. — Planetary houses are the signs of the zodiac; which, as has already been said, are distributed among the planets as houses, or mansions. The signs of the zodiac belong to what the astrologers call the essential nature of the circle, “esse circuli essentialia.”

Mundane Houses. — The mundane houses — which are changeable features of the circle or ecliptic, “esse circuli accidentalia” — are formed by dividing the whole expanse of the firmament into twelve parts. The authorities differed much as to the method of making this division. That expounded by Alcabitus was, I fancy, chiefly followed in Chaucer’s day. This can perhaps best be understood by imagining the ecliptic belt to be cut into parts by several planes. First imagine a plane passing through the poles of the celestial equator and the zenith, and cutting the firmament into two equal parts. Each of these parts is in turn divided into two parts by another plane passing also through the poles and the points at which the ecliptic cuts the circle of the horizon. Each of the four segments thus produced is further divided into three unequal parts, according to the obliquity of ascension of the ascendant, by planes also passing through the poles. The twelve divisions or “houses,” thus constituted do not revolve with the daily revolution of the primum mobile, but are fixed areas through which the heavenly bodies move in their revolutions.

Beginning at the eastern horizon and counting in the direction opposite to the apparent motion of the fixed stars, the mundane houses are numbered in succession from one to twelve. Thus No. 1 lies just below the eastern horizon, No. 6 just below the western; No. 7 just above the western horizon, and No. 12 just above the eastern. Any celestial body, therefore — and every sign of the zodiac — is by the daily revolution of the primum mobile moved through these houses in reverse order of their numbers; moving from the ascendent on the eastern horizon successively through the twelfth, eleventh, tenth, ninth, eighth, and seventh houses to sink beneath the western horizon. The zenith, or midpoint of the heavens, marks the division between the tenth and ninth houses.

Different degrees of influence and of effects, beneficial or injurious, are ascribed to the various mundane houses. The order of houses in dignity and strength, or rather of the planets when in them, is as follows: tenth, first, seventh, fourth, eleventh, fifth, ninth, third, second, eighth, sixth, and twelfth.

The houses are further grouped in sets of three; the first in each group being called an angle; the second, a succedent; the third, a cadent. Thus houses 1, 4, 7, and 10 are angles, 2, 5, 8, and 11 are succedents, and 3, 6, 9, and 12 are cadents. When in the 'Man of Law's Tale' (II, 302-304) Chaucer says

Infortunat ascendent tortuous,
Of which the lord is helpees falle, alas!
Out of his angle into the derkeste hous,

he tells us that: (1) the sign of the zodiac just ascending on the eastern horizon was an unfortunate one; (2) that, because of its position in the ecliptic, it ascended obliquely, i.e., was tortuous; (3) that the lord of it — that is, the planet whose mansion it was — had passed from a position in one of the four angles (mundane houses Nos. 1, 4, 7, and 10) into one of the cadent houses (Nos. 12, 3, 6, and 9). Perhaps, having been situated in house No. 1, an angle, it has, by the diurnal revolution of the primum mobile, been moved into the 12th house — which is a cadent, and as will be seen from the list given above, the darkest or most unfortunate of all the houses.

Genethliacal and Horary Astrology. — The two main branches of judicial astrology are called "genethliacal" and "horary." Genethliacal astrology has reference to the determination of a person's character and fortunes from the positions of the heavenly bodies at the moment of his birth. Horary astrology is the art of choosing suitable times for important undertakings. This choice, or "election," depends primarily upon the situation at birth, called the root, and consists in finding a time when the celestial bodies dominating the birth shall be in a favorable situation for the particular kind of undertaking contemplated. Thus in the passage from the 'Man of Law's Tale' just cited — see particularly ll. 309-315 — the emperor of Rome is reproached, not only for his negligence in not learning through expert astrologers that the time when his daughter began her journey was astrologically unsuitable, but for failing to ascertain on the basis of the root of her birth — which of course would be accurately known in the case of a person of high condition, as she was — what time would be propitious for undertaking a voyage. The principal element in such a calculation would be the position of the Hylech, or locus vitae, or perhaps of the Alcohoden, or dator annorum vitae, either of which, according to circumstances, might be the Sun, the Moon, the degree of the ascendent, or various other celestial bodies.

Planetary Days and Hours. — Each day of the week was assigned to one of the planets, as being under its special domination. Thus Sunday was assigned to the Sun; Monday to the Moon; Tuesday (Martis dies) to Mars; Wednesday (Mercurii dies) to Mercury; Thursday (Jovis dies) to Jupiter; Friday (Veneris dies) to Venus; and Saturday to Saturn.

But a still more specific assignment of time was made. The day was divided into twenty-four portions, called "planetary hours," or "inequal hours" (horae inaequales), each of which was assigned to the special influence of one of the planets. These were the "houres" in which the doctor watched ("kepte") his patients (I, 415 f.). Chaucer explains them in his treatise on the Astrolabe, ii, §§ 7-12.

The length of the inequal hours varies from day to day; and is different for the day and night, except at the equinoxes. To ascertain the inequal hours of any particular day divide the time from sunrise to sunset into twelve equal parts. These will be the inequal hours of the day. The division of the time from sunset to sunrise will give the inequal hours of the night. These inequal hours are assigned to the planets in order; beginning with the first hour after sunrise, which is assigned to the planet governing the day. The order of the planets for the assignment of the inequal hours is: Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, the Sun, Venus, Mercury, the Moon. This order is easily remembered in either of two ways: (1) It is the order of the planets themselves, beginning with the most distant. (2) It can also be obtained from the days of the week taken in the order 7, 5, 3, 1, 6, 4, 2. To ascertain which planet controls a given hour of a given day, divide the number of the hour by seven and assign the remaining hours to the planets in the order stated above, beginning with the one that controls the day. For example, if it is desired to know which planet governs the nineteenth hour of a Friday, divide 19 by 7, which leaves a remainder of 5. The first of the five hours in the remainder will go to Venus, the next to Mercury, the next to the moon, the next to Saturn, and the next or nineteenth to Jupiter.

REFERENCE LIST

Chaucer Bibliography

- D. D. Griffith, A Bibliography of Chaucer, 1908-24. Seattle, 1926.
 E. P. Hammond, Chaucer: A Bibliographical Manual. New York. 1908.
 J. E. Wells, A Manual of the Writings in Middle English, 1050-1400. New Haven. 1916. With supplements. 1927.

BACKGROUND

Bibliography

- Charles Gross, Sources and Literature of English History from the Earliest Times to about 1485. London. 1915. (2nd ed.)
 J. W. Thompson, Reference Studies in Medieval History. Chicago. c. 1923. (3rd ed.)

Political History

- William Hunt and R. L. Poole, The Political History of England. London. 1905-10. 12 vols.
 Vol. III, Henry III to Death of Edward III (T. F. Tout).
 Vol. IV, Richard II to Death of Richard III (C. Oman).

Social History

- M. Bateson, Medieval England, 1066-1350. New York. 1904.
 G. G. Coulton, Social Life in England from the Conquest to the Reformation. Cambridge (England). 1918.
 — The Medieval Village. Cambridge. 1925.
 — Chaucer and his England. London, New York. 1908.
 — A Mediaeval Garner. London, New York. 1910.
 E. L. Cutts, Scenes and Characters of the Middle Ages. New York. 1885.
 H. W. C. Davis, Medieval England. Oxford. 1924.
 A. Harvey, The Castles and Walled Towns of England. London. 1911.
 F. J. C. Hearnshaw, Medieval Contributions to Modern Civilization. London. 1921.
 J. J. Jusserand, English Wayfaring Life in the Middle Ages. London. 1890.
 E. Rickert, The Babees' Book. London. 1908.

- L. F. Salzmänn, English Life in the Middle Ages. Oxford. 1927.
J. Strutt, The Sports and Pastimes of the People of England. London. 1903.
(Enlarged and corrected by J. C. Cox.)
— A Complete View of the Dress and Habits of the English People. 1842.
H. D. Traill, Social England. London, Paris. 1894-97. 8 vols. Vol. II.
G. M. Trevelyan, England in the Age of Wyclif. London. 1899. 1920.
T. Wright, A History of Domestic Manners . . . in England. London. 1862.

Economic History

- W. Cunningham, The Growth of English Industry and Commerce. Cambridge (England). 1890-1903.
F. G. Davenport, The Economic Development of a Norfolk Manor 1086-1565. Cambridge (England). 1906.
N. J. Hone, The Manor and Manorial Records. London. 1912.
J. E. T. Rogers, Six Centuries of Work and Wages. New York. 1884.

Religious History

- W. W. Capes, The English Church in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries. London. 1900.
E. L. Cutts, Parish Priests and their People in the Middle Ages in England. New York. 1898.
F. A. Gasquet, English Monastic Life. London. 1904.
— Parish Life in Medieval England. New York. 1906.
A. Jessopp, The Coming of the Friars. London. 1889.
G. R. Owst, Preaching in Medieval England, c. 1350-1450. Cambridge. 1926.
Eileen Power, Medieval English Nunneries. Cambridge. 1922.
J. C. Wall, Shrines of British Saints. London. 1905.

Education

- J. W. Clark, The Care of Books. Cambridge. 1901.
C. H. Haskins, The Rise of Universities. New York. 1923.
A. F. Leach, The Schools of Medieval England. London, New York. 1915.
F. Madan, Books in Manuscript. London. 1893.
H. Rashdall, The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages. London. 1895.
3 vols. Vol. II (England).
E. A. Savage, Old English Libraries. London. 1912.

Art and Music

- H. Adams, Mont Saint Michel and Chartres. Washington. 1904.
Francis Bond, Screens and Galleries in English Churches. Oxford. 1922.
— Fonts and Font Covers. Oxford. 1924.
Rev. Dr. Cox, Pulpits and Lecterns in English Churches. Oxford. 1922.
F. W. Galpin, Old English Instruments of Music. Chicago. 1911.

- E. Mâle, Religious Art in France in the XIIIth Century. London, New York. 1913.
 Eric Millar, Early English Illuminated Manuscripts. Vol. I (to 1300). Vol. II (the 14th and 15th centuries). Oxford and Paris. 1926 and 1928.
 P. M. Johnston, Churches Chests, Doors, etc. Oxford. 1925.

Science and Philosophy

- W. C. Curry, Chaucer and the Mediaeval Sciences. New York. 1926.
 R. Steele, Medieval Lore. London. 1893.
 L. Thorndike, A History of Magic and Experimental Science. New York. 1923. 2 vols.

Literary Background

- B. A. K. ten Brink, History of English Literature. New York. 1887. Vol. II.
 J. J. Jusserand, A Literary History of the English People. New York. 1906. 3 vols. Vol. I.
 A. W. Ward and A. R. Waller, The Cambridge History of English Literature. New York, London. 1907-17. 14 vols. Vol. II.

Contemporary Literature

- Jean Froissart, Chronicles.
Aucassin and Nicolette, translated by Andrew Lang; by F. W. Bourdillon; also in Everyman's Library.
Ancient English Christmas Carols, modernized by Edith Rickert. London. 1910.
Early English Romances, modernized by Edith Rickert. London. 1908. 2 vols. (Romances of Love and Romances of Friendship.)

WORKS ON CHAUCER

Chaucer's Ancestry and Life

- A. A. Kern, The Ancestry of Chaucer. Baltimore. 1906.
Life Records of Chaucer (Chaucer Society). London. 1875-1900.
 Parts I and III, by W. W. Selby.
 Part II, by F. J. Furnival.
 Part IV, by R. E. G. Kirk.
 Index, by E. P. Kuhl. Chicago. (Modern Philology.) 1913.

Studies and Criticism

- A. Brusendorff, The Chaucer Tradition. London. 1926.
 G. L. Kittredge, Chaucer and his Poetry. Cambridge (Mass.). 1915.
 Emil Legouis, Chaucer. London. 1913.
 T. R. Lounsbury, Studies in Chaucer. New York. 1892. 3 vols.

- J. M. Manly, New Light on Chaucer. New York. 1925.
 R. K. Root, The Poetry of Chaucer. Boston. 1906, 1924.

Complete Edition

- W. W. Skeat, The Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer. Oxford. 1894-1900.
 7 vols.
 Alfred W. Pollard and Others, The Works of Geoffrey Chaucer. London. 1898.

DICTIONARIES AND ENCYCLOPEDIAS

- Oxford English Dictionary*
Dictionary of National Biography
 Bosworth-Toller, Anglo-Saxon Dictionary. Oxford.
 Bradley-Stratmann, Middle English Dictionary. Oxford.
 J. Brand, Observations on the Popular Antiquities of Great Britain. 1900-02.
 R. Chambers, Book of Days. 1863 (1899).
 J. L. Hall, Student's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary. Oxford.
 V. S. Lean, Collectanea. Bristol. 1902-04.
 J. S. P. Tatlock and A. G. Kennedy, a Concordance to the Complete Works of Geoffrey Chaucer. Carnegie Institution of Washington. 1927.

[FRAGMENT I (GROUP A)

PROLOGUE]

Here bygynneth the Book of the Tales of Caunterbury.

Whan that Aprille with hise shoures soote
The droghte of March hath perced to the roote,
And bathed every veyne in swich licour
Of which vertu engendred is the flour;	4
Whan Zephirus eek with his swete breeth
Inspired hath in every holt and heeth
The tendre croppes, and the yonge sonne
Hath in the Ram his halfe cours yronne;	8
And smale foweles maken melodye,
That slepen al the nyght with open eye —
So priketh hem nature in hir corages;
Thanne longen folk to goon on pilgrimages,	12
And palmeres for to seken straunge strondes
To ferne halwes, kowthe in sondry londes;
And specially from every shires ende
Of Engelond to Caunterbury they wende,	16
The hooly, blisful martir for to seke
That hem hath holpen whan that they were seeke.

Bifil that in that seson on a day,
In Southwerk at the Tabard as I lay,	20
Redy to wenden on my pilgrymage
To Caunterbury with ful devout corage,
At nyght were come into that hostelrye
Wel nyne and twenty in a compaignye,	24
Of sondry folk, by aventure yfalle
In felaweshipe; and pilgrimes were they alle,
That toward Caunterbury wolden ryde.
The chambres and the stables weren wyde,	28

And wel we weren esed atte beste.
 And shortly, whan the sonne was to reste,
 So hadde I spoken with hem everychon,
 That I was of hir felaweshipe anon. 32
 And made forward erly for to ryse,
 To take oure wey ther-as I yow devyse.

But nathelees, whil I have tyme and space,
 Er that I ferther in this tale pace, 36
 Me thynketh it acordaunt to reson
 To telle yow al the condicion
 Of ech of hem, so as it semed me,
 And whiche they werë, and of what degree, 40
 And eek in what array that they were inne;
 And at a Knyght than wol I first bigynne.

A KNYGHT ther was, and that a worthy man,
 That, fro the tyme that he first bigan 44
 To riden out, he loved chivalrie,
 Trouthe and honour, fredom and curteisie.
 Ful worthy was he in his lordes werre,
 And therto hadde he riden, no man ferre, 48
 As wel in cristendom as in hethenesse,
 And evere honoured for his worthynesse.

At Alisaundre he was whan it was wonne.
 Ful ofte tyme he hadde the bord bigonne 52
 Aboven alle nacions in Puce;
 In Lettow hadde he reysed and in Ruce —
 No Cristen man so ofte of his degree.
 In Gernade at the seege eek hadde he be 56
 Of Algezir, and riden in Belmarye.
 At Lyeys was he, and at Satalye,
 Whan they were wonne; and in the Grete See
 At many a noble armee hadde he be. 60
 At mortal batailles hadde he been fiftene,
 And foughten for oure feith at Tramysse
 In lystes thries, and ay slayn his foo.
 This ilke worthy knyght hadde been also 64
 Somtyme with the lord of Palatye

Agayn another hethen in Turkye.
And everemoore he hadde a sovereyn prys;
And though that he were worthy, he was wys, 68
And of his port as meeke as is a mayde.
He nevere yet no vileynye ne sayde
In al his lyf unto no maner wight.
He was a verray, parfit, gentil knyght. 72
But for to tellen yow of his array,
His hors weren goode, but he was nat gay;
Of fustian he wered a gypon
Al bismotered with his habergeon; 76
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wente for to doon his pilgrymage.

With hym ther was his sone, a yong SQUIER —
A lovyere and a lusty bachelor, 80
With lokkes crulle as they were leyd in presse.
Of twenty yeer of age he was, I gesse.
Of his stature he was of evene lengthe,
And wonderly delyvere, and of greet strengthe. 84
And he hadde been somtyme in chyvachie
In Flaundres, in Artoys, and Pycardie;
And born hym weel, as of so litel space,
In hope to stonden in his lady grace. 88

Embrouded was he as it were a meede,
Al ful of fresshe floures, whyte and reede.
Syngynge he was, or floytynge, al the day;
He was as fressh as is the monthe of May. 92
Short was his gowne with sleeves longe and wyde;
Wel koude he sitte on hors and faire ryde;
He koude songes make, and wel endite,
Juste, and eek daunce, and weel purtreie and write. 96
So hoot he lovede that by nyghtertale
He slepte namoore than dooth a nyghtyngale.

Curteis he was, lowely, and servysable,
And carf biforn his fader at the table.

A YEMAN hadde he, and servantz namo
At that tyme, for hym liste ride soo.

And he was clad in cote and hood of grene;
 A sheef of pecok arwes, bright and kene, 104
 Under his belt he bar ful thriftily;
 Wel koude he dresse his takel yemanly —
 Hise arwes drouped noght with fetheres lowe —
 And in his hand he baar a myghty bowe. 108
 A not heed hadde he, with a broun visage.
 Of woodecraft wel koude he al the usage.
 Upon his arm he baar a gay bracer,
 And by his syde a swerd and a bokeler; 112
 And on that oother syde a gay daggere,
 Harneised wel and sharpe as point of spere;
 A Cristophere on his brest, of silver sheene;
 An horn he bar, the bawdryk was of grene. 116
 A forster was he soothly, as I gesse.

Ther was also a nonne, a PRIORESSE,
 That of hir smylyng was ful symple and coy;
 Hire grettteste ooth was but by saint Loy. 120
 And she was cleped madame Eglentyne.
 Ful weel she soong the service dyvyne,
 Entuned in hir nose ful semeely;
 And Frenssh she spak ful faire and fetisly — 124
 After the scole of Stratford-atte-Bowe,
 For Frenssh of Parys was to hire unknowe.

At mete wel ytaught was she withalle:
 She leet no morsel from hir lippes falle, 128
 Ne wette hir fyngres in hir sauce depe;
 Wel koude she carie a morsel, and wel kepe
 That no drope ne fille upon hire brist —
 In curteisie was set ful muchel hir list; 132
 Hire over lippe wyped she so clene
 That in hir coppe ther was no ferthyng sene
 Of grece, whan she dronken hadde hir draughte;
 Ful semely after hir mete she raughte. 136
 And sikerly, she was of greet desport,
 And ful plesaunt, and amyable of port;
 And peyned hire to countrefete cheere
 Of court, and been estatlich of manere, 140

And to ben holden digne of reverence.

But for to speken of hire conscience,

She was so charitable and so pitous

She wolde wepe if that she saugh a mous

Kaught in a trappe, if it were deed or bledde.

Of smale houndes hadde she, that she fedde

With rosted flessch, or milk and wastel breed;

But soore wepte she if any of hem were deed,

Or if men smoot it with a yerde smerte.

And al was conscience and tendre herte.

Ful semyly hir wympul pynched was;

Hire nose tretys, hir eyen greye as glas;

Hir mouth ful smal, and ther to softe and reed;

But sikerly she hadde a fair forheed —

It was almoost a spanne brood, I trowe;

For hardily she was nat undergrowe.

Ful fetys was hir cloke, as I was war;

Of smal coral aboute hire arm she bar

A peire of bedes, gauded al with grene;

And theron heng a brooch of gold ful sheene,

On which ther was first write a crowned A,

And after Amor vincit omnia.

Another NONNE with hire hadde she,

That was hire chapeleyne, and PREESTES thre.

A MONK ther was, a fair for the maistrie;

An outridere, that lovede venerie;

A manly man, to been an abbot able.

Ful many a deyntee hors hadde he in stable;

And whan he rood, men myghte his brydel heere

Gynglen in a whistlynge wynd als cleere,

And eek as loude, as dooth the chapel belle

Ther-as this lord was kepere of the celle.

The reule of saint Maure, or of saint Beneit,

Bycause that it was old, and somdel streit —

This ilke Monk leet olde thynges pace,

And heeld after the newe world the space.

He yaf nat of that text a pulled hen

- That seith that hunters beth nat hooly men,
 Ne that a monk whan he is recchelees
 Is likned til a fissh that is waterlees — 180
 This is to seyn, a monk out of his cloystre;
 But thilke text heeld he nat worth an oystre.
 And I seyde his opinion was good;
 What sholde he studie and make hymselfen wood, 184
 Upon a book in cloystre alwey to poure,
 Or swynken with his handes, and laboure
 As Austyn bit? How shal the world be served?
 Lat Austyn have his swynk to him reserved. 188
 Therefore he was a prikasour aright;
 Grehoundes he hadde as swift as fowel in flight.
 Of prikyng and of huntynge for the hare
 Was al his lust; for no cost wolde he spare. 192
 I seigh his sleeves ypurfiled at the hond
 With grys, and that the fyneste of a lond;
 And for to festne his hood under his chyn,
 He hadde of gold ywroght a ful curious pyn — 196
 A love knotte in the gretter ende ther was.
 His heed was balled, that shoon as any glas —
 And eek his face, as it hadde been enoynt;
 He was a lord ful fat and in good poynt. 200
 Hise eyen stepe — and rollynge in his heed —
 That stemed as a forneys of a leed;
 His bootes souple, his hors in greet estaat.
 Now certainly he was a fair prelaat; 204
 He was nat pale, as a forpynded goost —
 A fat swan loved he best of any roost.
 His palfrey was as broun as is a berye.
 A FRERE ther was, a wantowne and a merye; 208
 A lymytour, a ful solempne man.
 In alle the ordres foure is noon that kan
 So muchel of daliaunce and fair langage.
 He hadde maad ful many a mariage 212
 Of yonge wommen at his owene cost.
 Unto his ordre he was a noble post,
 And wel biloved and famulier was he

With frankeleyns over-al in his contree, 216
 And with worthy wommen of the toun;
 For he hadde power of confessioun,
 As seyde hymself, moore than a curat,
 For of his ordre he was licenciati. 220
 Ful swetely herde he confession,
 And plesaunt was his absolucion;
 He was an esy man to yeve penaunce
 Ther-as he wiste to have a good pitaunce; 224
 For unto a poure ordre for to yive
 Is signe that a man is wel yshryve,
 For if he yaf, he dorste make avaunt,
 He wiste that a man was repentaunt; 228
 For many a man so harde is of his herte
 He may nat wepe althogh hym soore smerte.
 Therfore, instede of wepyng and preyes,
 Men moote yeve silver to the poure freres. 232
 His typet was ay farsed ful of knyves
 And pynnes, for to yeven yonge wyves.
 And certainly he hadde a murye note;
 Wel koude he synge, and pleyen on a rote; 236
 Of yeddynges he baar outrely the pris.
 His nekke whit was as the flourdelys;
 Therto he strong was as a champion.
 He knew the tavernes wel in al the toun, 240
 And everich hostiler and tappestere
 Bet than a lazar or a beggestere;
 For unto swich a worthy man as he Acorded nat, as by his facultee, 244
 To have with sike lazars aqueyntance.
 It is nat honeste — it may nat avance —
 For to deelen with no swich poraille,
 But al with riche and selleres of vitaille. 248
 And over-al, ther-as profit sholde arise,
 Curteis he was and lowely of servyse.
 Ther nas no man, nowher, so vertuous —
 He was the beste beggere in his hous; 252
 For thogh a wydwe hadde noght a sho,
 So plesaunt was his In principio

Yet wolde he have a ferthyng er he wente
 (His purchas was wel better than his rente); 256
 And rage he koude as it were right a whelpe.

In love dayes ther koude he muchel helpe;
 For there he was nat lyk a cloysterer,
 With a thredbare cope, as is a poure scoler, 260
 But he was lyk a maister, or a pope.

Of double worstede was his semycope,
 That rounded as a belle, out of the presse.
 Somwhat he lipped, for his wantownesse, 264
 To make his Englissh sweete upon his tonge.
 And in his harpyng, whan that he hadde songe,
 Hise eyen twynkled in his heed aryght
 As doon the sterres in the frosty nyght. 268

This worthy lymytour was cleped Huberd.

A MARCHANT was ther, with a forked berd,
 In motlee; and hye on horse he sat;
 Upon his heed a Flaundryssh bevere hat; 272
 His bootes clasped faire and fetisly.

Hise resons he spak ful solempnely,
 Sownynge alway thencrees of his wynnyng.
 He wolde the see were kept for anything 276
 Bitwixe Middelburgh and Orewelle.
 Wel koude he in eschaunge sheeldes selle.
 This worthy man ful wel his wit bisette;
 Ther wiste no wight that he was in dette, 280
 So estatly was he of his governaunce
 With his bargaynes and with his chevyssaunce.

For sothe he was a worthy man with alle;
 But sooth to seyn, I noot how men hym calle. 284

A CLERK ther was of Oxenford also,
 That unto logyk hadde longe ygo.
 As leene was his hors as is a rake;
 And he nas nat right fat, I undertake, 288
 But looked holwe, and ther-to sobrelly.
 Ful thredbare was his overeste courtepy;
 For he hadde geten hym yet no benefice,
 Ne was so worldly for to have office; 292

For hym was levere have at his beddes heed
 Twenty bookes clad in blak or reed
 Of Aristotle and his philosophie
 Than robes riche, or fithele, or sautrie. 296
 But al be that he was a philosophre,
 Yet hadde he but litel gold in cofre;
 But al that he myghte of his freendes hente
 On bookes and his lernynge he it spente; 300
 And bisily gan for the soules preye
 Of hem that yaf hym wherwith to scoleye;
 Of studie took he moost cure and moost heede.
 Noght o word spak he moore than was neede; 304
 And that was seyde in forme and reverence,
 And short, and quyk, and ful of hy sentence.
 Sownynge in moral vertu was his speche;
 And gladly wolde he lerne, and gladly teche. 308

A SERGEANT OF THE LAWE, war and wys,
 That often hadde been at the parvys,
 Ther was also, ful riche of excellence.
 Discreet he was, and of greet reverence — 312
 He semed swich, hise wordes weren so wise.
 Justice he was ful often in assise,
 By patente and by pleyn commissioun.
 For his science, and for his heigh renoun, 316
 Of fees and robes hadde he many oon.
 So greet a purchasour was nowher noon:
 Al was fee symple to hym in effect;
 His purchasyng myghte nat been infect. 320
 Nowher so bisy a man as he ther nas;
 And yet he semed bisier than he was.
 In termes hadde he caas and doomes alle
 That from the tyme of kyng William were falle. 324
 Therto he koude endite and make a thyng,
 Ther koude no wight pynchen at his writyng.
 And every statut koude he pleyn by rote.
 He rood but hoomly, in a medlee cote, 328
 Girt with a ceint of silk, with barres smale;
 Of his array telle I no lenger tale.

A FRANKLEYN was in his compaignye.
 Whit was his berd as is a dayesye; 332
 Of his complexion he was sangwyn.
 Wel loved he by the morwe a sope in wyn;
 To lyven in delit was evere his wone;
 For he was Epicurus owene sone, 336
 That heeld opinion that pleyn delit
 Was verrailly felicitee parfit.
 An housholdere, and that a greet, was he;
 Seint Julian was he in his contree. 340
 His breed, his ale, was always after oon;
 A bettre envyned man was nevere noon;
 Withoute bake mete was nevere his hous,
 Of fissh and flessh, and that so plenteuous 344
 It snewed in his hous of mete and drynke —
 Of alle deyntees that men koude thynke,
 After the sondry sesons of the yeer;
 So chaunged he his mete and his soper. 348
 Ful many a fat partrich hadde he in muwe,
 And many a breem and many a luce in stuwe.
 Wo was his cook but-if his sauce were Poynaunt and sharpe, and redy al his geere. 352
 His table dormant in his halle alway
 Stood redy covered al the longe day.
 At sessions ther was he lord and sire;
 Ful ofte tyme he was knyght of the shire. 356
 An anlaas, and a gipser al of silk,
 Heeng at his girdel, whit as morne milk.
 A shirreve hadde he been, and a countour.
 Was nowher swich a worthy vavasour. 360

AN HABERDASSHERE, and a CARPENTER,
 A WEBBE, a DYERE, and a TAPY CER —
 And they were clothed alle in o lyveree,
 Of a solempne and a greet fraternitee. 364
 Ful fressh and newe hir geere apiked was:
 Hir knyves were chaped, noght with bras,
 But al with silver; wrought ful clene and weel
 Hire girdles and hir pouches everydeel. 368

Wel semed ech of hem a fair burgeys,
 To sitten in a yeldehalle on a deys.
 Everich, for the wisdom that he kan,
 Was shaply for to been an alderman; 372
 For catel hadde they ynogh, and rente,
 And eek hir wyves wolde it wel assente;
 And elles certeyn were they to blame —
 It is ful fair to been ycleped Madame, 376
 And goon to vigilies al bifore,
 And have a mantel roialliche ybore.

A Cook they hadde with hem, for the nones,
 To boille the chiknes, with the marybones 380
 And poudre marchant tart and galyngale.
 Wel koude he knowe a draughte of London ale.
 He koude rooste, and sethe, and broille, and frye,
 Maken mortreux, and wel bake a pye; 384
 But greet harm was it, as it thoughte me,
 That on his shyne a mormal hadde he.
 For blankmanger, that made he with the beste.

A SHIPMAN was ther, wonynge fer by weste;
 For aught I woot he was of Dertemouthe. 389
 He rood upon a rouncy as he kouthē,
 In a gowne of faldyng to the knee.
 A daggere hangynge on a laas hadde he 392
 Aboute his nekke under his arm adoun.
 The hote somer hadde maad his hewe al broun;
 And certainly he was a good felawe:
 Ful many a draughte of wyn had he ydrawe 396
 Fro Burdeux ward, whil that the chapman sleepe.
 Of nyce conscience took he no keepe:
 If that he faught and hadde the hyer hond,
 By water he sente hem hoom to every lond. 400
 But of his craft, to rekene wel his tydes,
 His stremes, and his daungers hym bisides,
 His herberwe, and his moone, his lodemenage,
 Ther nas noon swich from Hulle to Cartage. 404
 Hardy he was and wys, to undertake.
 With many a tempest hadde his berd been shake.

He knew alle the havenes, as they were,
 Fro Gootlond to the Cape of Fynystere; 408
 And every cryke in Britaigne and in Spayne.
 His barge ycleped was the Maudelayne.

With us ther was a DOCTOUR OF PHISIK.
 In al this world ne was ther noon hym lik— 412
 To speke of phisik and of surgerie;
 For he was grounded in astronomye.
 He kepte his pacient a ful greet deel
 In houres by his magyk natureel; 416
 Wel koude he fortunen the ascendent
 Of his ymages for his pacient;
 He knew the cause of everich maladye —
 Were it of hoot, or cold, or moyste, or drye — 420
 And where they engendred, and of what humour;
 He was a verray, parfit praktisour.
 The cause yknowe and of his harm the roote,
 Anon he yaf the sike man his boote. 424
 Ful redy hadde he hise apothecaries
 To sende him drogges and his letuaries;
 For ech of hem made oother for to wynne —
 Hir frendshipe nas nat newe to bigynne. 428
 Wel knew he the oldē Esculapius,
 And Deÿscorides, and eek Rufus,
 Olde Ypocras, Haly, and Galyen,
 Serapion, Razis, and Avycen, 432
 Averrois, Damascien, and Constantyn,
 Bernard, and Gatesden, and Gilbertyn.
 Of his diete mesurable was he;
 For it was of no superfluitee, 436
 But of greet norissyng and digestible.
 His studie was but litel on the Bible.
 In sangwyn and in pers he clad was al,
 Lyned with taffata and with sendal; 440
 And yet he was but esy of dispence,
 He kepte that he wan in pestilence.
 For gold in phisik is a cordial;
 Therefore he lovede gold in special. 444

A GOOD WIF was ther, of biside BATHE;
But she was somdel deef, and that was scathe.
Of clooth makying she hadde swich an haunt
She passed hem of Ypres and of Gaunt. 448

In al the parisshe wif ne was ther noon
That to the offrynge bifore hire sholde goon;
And if ther dide, certeyn so wrooth was she
That she was out of alle charitee. 452

Hir coverchiefs ful fyne weren of ground —
I dorste swere they weyeden ten pound
That on a Sonday weren upon hir heed.
Hir hosen weren of fyn scarlet reed, 456
Ful streite yteyd, and shoes ful moyste and newe.
Boold was hir face, and fair, and reed of hewe.

She was a worthy womman al hir lyve;
Housbondes at chirche dore she hadde fyve, 460
Withouten oother compaignye in youthe;
But therof nedeth nat to speke as nowthe.

And thries hadde she been at Jerusalem;
She hadde passed many a straunge strem — 464
At Rome she hadde been, and at Boloigne,
In Galice at Seint Jame, and at Coloigne.
She koude muchel of wandrynge by the weye.
Gat-tothed was she, soothly for to seye. 468

Upon an amblere esily she sat,
Ywympled wel, and on hir heed an hat
As brood as is a bokeler or a targe;
A foot mantel aboute hir hipes large; 472
And on hire feet a paire of spores sharpe.

In felaweshipe wel koude she laughe and carpe;
Of remedies of love she knew per chaunce,
For she koude of that art the olde daunce. 476

A good man was ther of religioun,
And was a poure PERSON of a toun;
But riche he was of hooly thoght and werk.
He was also a lerned man, a clerk, 480
That Cristes gospel trewely wolde preche.
Hise parissheis devoutly wolde he teche;

Benygne he was, and wonder diligent,
 And in adversitee ful pacient, 484
 And swich he was ypreved ofte sithes.
 Ful looth were hym to cursen for hise tithes,
 But rather wolde he yeven, out of doute,
 Unto his poure parisshe aboute 488
 Of his offryng and eek of his substaunce;
 He koude in litel thyng have suffisaunce.
 Wyd was his parisshe, and houses fer asonder,
 But he ne lafte nat, for reyn ne thonder, 492
 In siknesse nor in meschief to visite
 The ferreste in his parisshe, muche and lite,
 Upon his feet, and in his hand a staf.
 This noble ensample to his sheepe he yaf, 496
 That 'firste he wroghte and afterward that he taughte.'
 Out of the gospel he tho wordes caughte,
 And this figure he added eek therto:
 That 'if gold ruste, what shal iren doo?' 500
 For if a preest be foul, on whom we truste,
 No wonder is a lewed man to ruste;
 And shame it is — if a prest take keep —
 A filthy shepherde and a clene sheep. 504
 Wel oghte a preest ensample for to yive
 By his clenness how that his sheep sholde lyve.
 He sette nat his benefice to hyre,
 And leet his sheepe encombred in the myre 508
 And ran to London, unto Seint Poules,
 To seken hym a chaunterie for soules;
 Or with a bretherhed to been withholde;
 But dwelleth at hoom and kepte wel his folde, 512
 So that the wolf ne made it nat myscarie.
 He was a shepherde and noght a mercenarie.
 And though he hooly were and vertuous,
 He was to synful man nat despitous, 516
 Ne of his speche daungerous ne digne,
 But in his techyng discreet and benygne;
 To drawn folk to hevene by fairnesse,
 By good ensample, this was his bisynesse. 520
 But it were any persone obstinat,

What-so he were, of heigh or lough estat,
Hym wolde he snybben sharply for the nonys.
A bettre preest I trowe that nowher noon ys. 524
He waitede after no pompe and reverence,
Ne maked him a spiced conscience;
But Cristes loore and his apostles twelve
He taughte, but first he folwed it hymselfe. 528

With hym ther was a PLOWMAN, was his brother,
That hadde ylad of dong ful many a fother;
A trewe swynkere and a good was he,
Lyvyng in pees and parfit charitee. 532
God loved he best, with al his hoole herte,
At alle tymes, thogh him gamed or smerte;
And thanne his neighebore right as hymselfe:
He wolde thresshe, and therto dyke and delve, 536
For Cristes sake, for every poure wight
Withouten hire, if it lay in his myght.
Hise tithes payde he ful faire and wel
Bothe of his propre swynk and his catel. 540
In a tabard he rood upon a mere.

Ther was also a reve, and a millere;
A somnour, and a pardoner also;
A maunciple, and myself — ther were namo.

The MILLERE was a stout carl for the nones;
Ful byg he was of brawn, and eek of bones.
That proved wel, for over-al ther he cam,
At wrastlyng he wolde have alwey the ram. 548
He was short sholdred, brood, a thikke knarre;
Ther was no dore that he ne wolde heve of harre,
Or breke it, at a rennyng with his heed.
His berd as any sowe or fox was reed, 552
And therto brood as though it were a spade.
Upon the cope right of his nose he hade
A werte; and theron stood a toft of herys
Reed as the brustles of a sowes erys; 556
Hise nosethirles blake were and wyde.

A swerd and a bokeler bar he by his syde.
 His mouth as greet was as a greet forneys;
 He was a jangler, and a goliardeys — 560
 And that was moost of synne and harlotries.
 Wel koude he stelen corn and tollen thries;
 And yet he hadde a thombe of gold, pardee.
 A whit cote and a blew hood wered he. 564
 A baggepipe wel koude he blowe and sowne,
 And therwithal he broghte us out of towne.

A gentil MAUNCIPLE was ther of a Temple,
 Of which achatours myghte take exemple 568
 For to be wise in byynge of vitaille;
 For wheither that he payde or took by taille,
 Algate he wayted so in his achaat
 That he was ay biforn and in good staat. 572
 Now is nat that of God a ful fair grace
 That swich a lewed mannes wit shal pace
 The wisdom of an heepe of lerned men?
 Of maistres hadde he mo than thries ten, 576
 That weren of lawe expert and curious —
 Of whiche ther weren a duszeyne in that hous
 Worthy to been stywardes of rente and lond
 Of any lord that is in Engeland, 580
 To maken hym lyve by his propre good,
 In honour dettelees, but-if he were wood,
 Or lyve as scarsly as hym list desire;
 And able for to helpen al a shire 584
 In any caas that myghte falle or happe —
 And yet this Manciple sette hir aller cappe!

The REVE was a sclendre, colerik man;
 His berd was shave as ny as ever he kan; 588
 His heer was by his erys round yshorn;
 His tope was dokked lyk a preest biforn.
 Ful longe were his legges, and ful lene,
 Ylyk a staf; ther was no calf ysene. 592

Wel koude he kepe a gerner and a bynne;
 Ther was noon auditour koude of him wyne.
 Wel wiste he by the droghte and by the reyn

THE REVE

165

The yeldynge of his seed and of his greyn. 596
His lordes sheep, his neet, his dayerye,
His swyn, his hors, his stoor, and his pultrye
Was hoolly in this Reves governyng;
And by his covenant yaf the rekenyng 600
Syn that his lord was twenty yeer of age.
Ther koude no man brynge hym in arrerage;
Ther nas baillif, ne hierde, nor oother hyne,
That he ne knew his sleighte and his covyne — 604
They were adrad of hym as of the deeth.

His wonyng was ful faire upon an heeth;
With grene treës shadwed was his place.
He koude better than his lord purchace; 608
Ful riche he was astored pryvely.
His lord wel koude he plesen subtilly,
To yeve and lene hym of his owene good,
And have a thank and yet a gowne and hood. 612

In youthe he hadde lerned a good myster;
He was a wel good wrighte, a carpenter.

This Reve sat upon a ful good stot
That was al pomely grey and highte Scot. 616
A long surcote of pers upon he hade,
And by his syde he baar a rusty blade.

Of Northfolk was this Reve of which I telle,
Beside a toun men clepen Baldeswelle. 620
Tukked he was, as is a frere, aboute;
And evere he rood the hyndreste of oure route.

A SOMONOUR was ther with us in that place;
That hadde a fyr-reed cherubynnes face, 624
For sawcefleem he was, with eyen narwe.
As hoot he was and lecherous as a sparwe,
With scaled browes blake, and piled berd.
Of his visage children were aferd. 628
Ther nas quyksilver, lytarge, ne brymstoon,
Boras, ceruce, ne oille of tartre noon,
Ne oynement that wolde clense and byte,
That hym myghte helpen of the whelkes white 632
Nor of the knobbes sittynge on his chekes.

Wel loved he garleek, oynons, and eek lekes;
 And for to drynken strong wyn, reed as blood.
 Thanne wolde he speke and crie as he were wood. 636
 And whan that he wel dronken hadde the wyn,
 Than wolde he speke no word but Latyn.
 A fewe termes hadde he — two or thre —
 That he had lerned out of som decree — 640
 No wonder is, he herde it al the day;
 And eek ye knowen wel how that a jay
 Kan clepen Watte as wel as kan the pope.
 But whoso koude in oother thyng hym grope, 644
 Thanne hadde he spent al his philosophie.
Ay, questio quid iuris! wolde he crie.
 He was a gentil harlot and a kynde.
 A better felawe sholde men noght fynde: 648
 He wolde suffre for a quart of wyn
 A good felawe to have his concubyn
 A twelf monthe and excuse hym atte fulle;
 And prively a fynch eek koude he pulle. 652
 And if he foond owher a good felawe,
 He wolde techen him to have noon awe,
 In swich caas, of the ercedekenes curs,
 But-if a mannes soule were in his purs; 656
 For in his purs he sholde ypunysshed be.
 ‘Purs is the ercedekenes helle,’ seyde he.
 But wel I woot he lyed right in dede.
 Of cursyng oghte ech gilty man him drede; 660
 For curs wol slee, right as assoillyng savith —
 And also war him of a Significavit!
 In daunger hadde he at his owene gise
 The yonge girles of the diocise; 664
 And knew hir conseil, and was al hir reed.
 A gerland hadde he set upon his heed,
 As greet as it were for an ale stake;
 A bokeleer hadde he maad him of a cake. 668

With hym ther was a gentil PARDONER
 Of Rouncivale, his freend and his compeer;
 That streight was comen fro the court of Rome.

Ful loude he soong, 'Com bider, love, to me!'
 This Somonour bar to hym a stif burdoun;
 Was nevere trompe of half so greet a soun.

672

This Pardoner hadde heer as yelow as wex;
 But smothe it heeng, as dooth a strike of flex;
 By ounces henge hise lokkes that he hadde,
 And therwith he hise shuldres overspradde;
 But thynne it lay, by colpons, oon and oon.
 But hood, for jolitee, wered he noon,
 For it was trussed up in his walet;
 Hym thoughte he rood al of the newe jet —
 Dischevelee save his cappe, he rood al bare.
 Swiche glarynge eyen hadde he as an hare.
 A vernycle hadde he sowed upon his cappe;
 His walet lay biforn hym in his lappe,
 Bret-ful of pardon, comen from Rome al hoot.

676

680

684

A voys he hadde as smal as hath a goot —
 No berd hadde he, ne nevere sholde have;
 As smothe it was as it were late shave;
 I trowe he were a geldyng or a mare.

688

But of his craft, fro Berwyk into Ware,
 Ne was ther swich another pardoner;
 For in his male he hadde a pilwebeer
 Which that he seyde was Oure Lady veyl;
 He seyde he hadde a gobet of the seyl
 That Seint Peter hadde whan that he wente
 Upon the see, til Jesu Crist hym hente;
 He hadde a croys of laton, ful of stones,
 And in a glas he hadde pigges bones.

692

696

700

But with thise relikes whan that he fond
 A poure person dwellynge upon lond,
 Upon a day he gat hym moore moneye
 Than that the person gat in monthes tweye.
 And thus with feyned flattery and japes
 He made the person and the peple his apes.
 But trewely to tellen atte laste,
 He was in chirche a noble ecclesiaste.
 Wel koude he rede a lesson or a storie,
 But alderbest he song an offertorie;

704

708

For wel he wiste, whan that song was songe,
He moste preche, and wel affile his tonge 712
To wynne silver — as he ful wel koude;
Therefore he song the murierly and loude.

Now have I toold you — shortly, in a clause —
The staat, tharray, the nombre, and eek the cause 716
Why that assembled was this compaignye
In Southwerk, at this gentil hostelrye
That highte the Tabard, faste by the Belle.
But now is tyme to yow for to telle 720
How that we baren us that ilke nyght,
Whan we were in that hostelrie alyght;
And after wol I telle of our viage,
And al the remenaunt of oure pilgrimage. 724

But first I pray yow, of youre curteisye,
That ye narette it nat my vileynye,
Thogh that I pleylnly speke in this mateere,
To telle yow hir wordes and hir cheere; 728
Ne thogh I speke hir wordes proprely.
For this ye knowen al so wel as I:
Whoso shal telle a tale after a man,
He moote reherce, as ny as evere he kan, 732
Everich a word, if it be in his charge,
Al speke he never so rudeliche or large;
Or ellis he moot telle his tale untrewe,
Or feyne thyng, or fynde wordes newe. 736
He may nat spare, althogh he were his brother;
He moot as wel seye o word as another.
Crist spak hymself ful brode in hooly writ,
And wel ye woot no vileynye is it. 740
Eek Plato seith — whoso that kan hym rede —
‘The wordes moote be cosyn to the dede.’

Also I prey yow to foryeve it me,
Al have I nat set folk in hir degree 744
Heere in this tale, as that they sholde stonde;
My wit is short, ye may wel understonde.

Greet chiere made oure Hoost us everichon,
And to the soper sette he us anon. 748

He served us with vitaille at the beste;
Strong was the wyn, and wel to drynke us leste.

A semely man oure Hooste was withalle
For to been a marchal in an halle.

752

A large man he was, with eyen stepe —
A fairer burgeys was ther noon in Chepe —
Boold of his speche, and wys, and well ytaught;
And of manhod hym lakkede right naught.

756

Eek therto he was right a myrie man;
And after soper pleyen he bigan,
And spak of myrthe, amonges othere thynges —

Whan that we hadde maad our rekenynges —

760

And seyde thus: 'Now, lordynges, trewely,
Ye been to me right welcome, hertely;

For by my trouthe, if that I shal nat lye,
I saugh nat this yeer so myrie a compaignye
Atones in this herberwe as is now.

764

Fayn wolde I doon yow myrthe, wiste I how.

And of a myrthe I am right now bythoght

To doon yow ese, and it shal coste noght.

768

'Ye goon to Caunterbury — God yow speede!

The blisful martir quite yow youre meede! —

And wel I woot, as ye goon by the weye,

Ye shapen yow to talen and to pleye;

772

For trewely confort ne myrthe is noon

To ride by the weye doun as the stoon.

And therfore wol I maken yow disport,

As I seyde erst, and doon yow som confort.

776

And if yow liketh alle, by oon assent,

For to stonden at my juggement,

And for to werken as I shal yow seye,

Tomorwe whan ye riden by the weye,

780

Now by my fader soule that is deed,

But-if ye be myrie, I wol yeve yow myn heed!

Hoold up youre hond, withouten moore spechel'

Oure conseil was nat longe for to seche —

784

Us thoughte it was noght worth to make it wys —

And graunted hym withouten moore avys,

And bad him seye his voidit as hym leste.

'Lordynges,' quod he, 'now herkneth, for the beste; 788
 But taak it nought, I prey yow, in desdeyn.
 This is the poynt — to speken short and pleyn —
 That ech of yow, to shorte with oure weye
 In this viage, shal telle tales tweye — 792
 To Caunterbury ward, I mene it so;
 And homward he shal tellen othere two —
 Of aventures that whilom han bifalle.
 And which of yow that bereth hym best of alle — 796
 That is to seyn, that telleth in this caas
 Tales of best sentence and moost solaas —
 Shal have a soper at oure aller cost,
 Heere in this place, sittynge by this post, 800
 Whan that we come agayn fro Caunterbury.
 And for to make yow the moore mury,
 I wol myselven goodly with yow ryde,
 Right at myn owene cost, and be youre gyde. 804
 And whoso wole my juggement withseye
 Shal paye al that we spenden by the weye.
 And if ye vouche sauf that it be so,
 Tel me anon withouten wordes mo, 808
 And I wol erly shape me therfore.'
 This thyng was graunted, and oure othes swore
 With ful glad herte; and preyden hym also
 That he wolde vouche sauf for to do so; 812
 And that he wolde been oure governour,
 And of our tales juge and reportour,
 And sette a soper at a certeyn pris;
 And we wol reuled been at his devys 816
 In heigh and lough. And thus by oon assent,
 We been acorded to his juggement.
 And therupon the wyn was fet anon;
 We dronken, and to reste wente echon 820
 Withouten any lenger tarynge.
 Amorwe, whan that day gan for to sprynge,
 Up roos oure Hoost, and was oure aller cok;
 And gadrede us togidre, alle in a flok; 824
 And forth we riden a litel moore than paas
 Unto the wateryng of Seint Thomas.

And there oure Hoost bigan his hors areste,
And seyde, 'Lordynges, herkneth, if yow leste! 828
Ye woot youre foreward and it yow recorde.
If even-song and morwe-song accorde,
Lat se now who shal telle the firste tale.
As evere mote I drynke wyn or ale, 832
Whoso be rebel to my juggement
Shal paye for al that by the wey is spent.
Now draweth cut, er that we ferrer twynne;
He which that hath the shorteste shal bigynne. 836
Sire Knyght,' quod he, 'my mayster and my lord.
Now draweth cut, for that is myn accord.
Cometh neer,' quod he, 'my lady Prioress.
And ye, sire Clerk, lat be your shamefastnesse, 840
Ne studieth noght. Ley hond to, every man.'
Anon to drawen every wight bigan;
And shortly for to tellen, as it was,
Were it by aventure, or sort, or cas, 844
The sothe is this, the cut fil to the Knyght —
Of which ful blithe and glad was every wyght —
And telle he moste his tale, as was reson,
By foreward and by composicion, 848
As ye han herd; what nedeth wordes mo?
And whan this goode man saugh that it was so,
As he that wys was and obedient
To kepe his foreward by his free assent, 852
He seyde, 'Syn I shal bigynne the game,
What, welcome be the cut, a Goddes name!
Now lat us ryde and herkneth what I seye.'
And with that word we ryden forth oure weye; 856
And he bigan, with right a myrie cheere,
His tale anon, and seyde in this manere.

Here bigynneth the Knyghtes Tale.

Whilom, as olde stories tellen us,
Ther was a duc that highte Theseus.
Of Atthenes he was lord and governour, 861
And in his tyme swich a conquerour

That gretter was ther noon under the sonne.
 Ful many a riche contree hadde he wonne; 864
 What with his wysdom and his chivalrie,
 He conquered al the regne of Femenye,
 That whilom was ycleped Scithia;
 And weddede the queene, Ypolita, 868
 And broghte hire hoom with hym in his contree
 With muchel glorie and greet solempnytee,
 And eek hir faire suster Emelye.
 And thus with victorie and with melodye 872
 Lete I this noble duc to Atthenes ryde,
 And al his hoost in armes hym bisyde.
 And certes, if it nere to long to heere,
 I wolde have toold yow fully the manere 876
 How wonnen was the regne of Femenye
 By Theseus and by his chivalrye;
 And of the grete bataille for the nones
 Bitwixen Atthenes and Amazones; 880
 And how asseged was Ypolita,
 The faire, hardy queene of Scithia;
 And of the feste that was at hir weddyng;
 And of the tempest at hir hoom comyng. 884
 But al that thyng I moot as now forbere;
 I have, God woot, a large feeld to ere,
 And wayke been the oxen in my plough;
 The remenant of the tale is long ynough. 888
 I wol nat letten eek noon of this route;
 Lat every felawe telle his tale aboute,
 And lat se now who shal the soper wynne.
 And ther I lefte I wol ayeyn bigynne. 892
 This duc of whom I make mencion,
 Whan he was come almoost unto the toun,
 In al his wele and in his mooste pride,
 He was war, as he caste his eye aside, 896
 Where that ther kneled in the hye weye
 A compaignye of ladyes, tweye and tweye,
 Ech after oother, clad in clothes blake.
 But swich a cry and swich a wo they make 900
 That in this world nys creature lyvyng

That herde swich another waymentynge;
And of this cry they nolde nevere stenten
Til they the reynes of his brydel henten.

904

‘What folk been ye that at myn hom comynge
Perturben so my feste with criynge?’
Quod Theseus. ‘Have ye so greet envye
Of myn honour, that thus compleyne and crye?
Or who hath yow mysboden or offended?
And telleth me if it may been amended,
And why that ye been clothed thus in blak.

908

The eldeste lady of hem alle spak,
Whan she hadde swowned with a deedly cheere,
That it was routhe for to seen and heere,
And seyde, ‘Lord, to whom Fortune hath yeven
Victorie, and as a conqueror to lyven,
Nat greveth us youre glorie and youre honour;
But we biseken mercy and socour.

912

Have mercy on oure wo and oure distresse!
Som drope of pitee, thurgh thy gentillesse,
Upon us wrecched wommen lat thou falle!
For certes, lord, ther is noon of us alle
That she ne hath been a duchesse or a queene.
Now be we caytyves, as it is wel seene,
Thanked be Fortune and hire false wheel,
That noon estat assureth to be weel.

920

And certes, lord, to abyden youre presence
Heere in the temple of the goddessse Clemence
We han ben waitynge al this fourtenyght.
Now help us, lord, sith it is in thy myght!

924

‘I wrecche, which that wepe and crie thus,
Was whilom wyf to kyng Cappaneus,
That starf at Thebes — cursed be that day!
And alle we that been in this array
And maken al this lamentacioun,
We losten alle oure housbondes at that toun,
Whil that the seege therabout lay.
And yet now the olde Creon, weylaway!
That lord is now of Thebes the citee,
Fulfilde of ire and of iniquitee,

932

936

940

He for despit and for his tirannye,
To do the dede bodyes vileynye
Of alle oure lordes, whiche that been slawe,
He hath alle the bodyes on an heepe ydrawe; 944
And wol nat suffren hem, by noon assent,
Neither to been yburyed nor ybrent,
But maketh houndes ete hem in despit.'

And with that word, withouten moore respit, 948
They fillen gruf, and criden pitously,
'Have on us wrecched wommen som mercy,
And lat oure sorwe synken in thyn herte!'

This gentil duc down from his courser sterte 952
With herte pitous, whan he herde hem speke.

Hym thoughte that his herte wolde breke,
Whan he saugh hem so pitous and so maat
That whilom weren of so greet estaat; 956

And in his armes he hem alle up hente,
And hem conforteth in ful good entente;
And swoor his ooth, as he was trewe knyght,
He wolde doon so ferforthly his myght 960

Upon the tiraunt Creon hem to wreke
That all the peple of Grece sholde speke
How Creon was of Theseus yserved,
As he that hadde his deeth ful wel deserved. 964

And right anoon, withouten moore abood,
His baner he desplayeth, and forth rood
To Thebes ward, and al his hoost biside.
No neer Atthenes wolde he go ne ride, 968

Ne take his ese fully half a day,
But onward on his wey that nyght he lay;
And sente anon Ypolita the queene
And Emelye, hir yonge suster sheene, 972

Unto the toun of Atthenes to dwelle,
And forth he rit; ther is namoore to telle.

The rede statue of Mars with spere and targe
So shyneth in his white baner large 976
That alle the feeldes glyteren up and down;
And by his baner born is his penoun
Of gold ful riche, in which ther was ybete

The Mynotaur, which that he slough in Crete.

980

Thus rit this duc; thus rit this conquerour,

And in his hoost of chivalrie the flour,

Til that he cam to Thebes and alighte

Faire in a feeld, ther-as he thoughte fighte.

984

But shortly for to speken of this thyng,

With Creon, which that was of Thebes kyng,

He faught, and slough hym manly as a knyght

In pleyn bataille, and putte the folk to flyght;

988

And by assaut he wan the citee after,

And rente adoun bothe wall and sparre and rafter.

And to the ladyes he restored agayn

The bones of hir housbondes that weren slayn,

992

To doon obsequies, as was tho the gyse.

But it were al to longe for to devyse

The grete clamour and the waymentynge

That the ladyes made at the brennyng

996

Of the bodies, and the grete honour

That Theseus, the noble conquerour,

Dooth to the ladyes whan they from hym wente —

But shortly for to telle is myn entente.

1000

Whan that this worthy duc, this Theseus,

Hath Creon slayn, and wonne Thebes thus,

Stille in that feeld he took al nyght his reste,

And dide with al the contree as hym leste.

1004

To ransake in the taas of bodyes dede,

Hem for to strepe of harneys and of wede,

The pilours diden bisynesse and cure,

After the bataille and disconfiture.

1008

And so bifel that in the taas they founde,

Thurgh-girt with many a grevous blody wounde,

Two yonge knyghtes, liggyng by and by,

Bothe in oon armes, wroght ful richely;

1012

Of whiche two Arcita highte that oon,

And that oother knyght highte Palamon.

Nat fully quyke ne fully dede they were;

But by here cote-armures and by hir gere

1016

The heraudes knewe hem best in special

As they that weren of the blood roial

Of Thebes and of sustren two yborn.
 Out of the taas the pilours han hem torn, 1020
 And han hem caried softe unto the tente
 Of Theseus; and ful soone he hem sente
 To Atthenes, to dwellen in prison
 Perpetuelly — he nolde no raunson. 1024
 And whan this worthy duc hath thus ydon,
 He took his hoost and hoom he rood anon,
 With laurer crowned as a conquerour.
 And ther he lyveth in joye and in honour 1028
 Terme of his lyve; what nedeth wordes mo?
 And in a tour, in angwissh and in wo,
 This Palamon and his felawe Arcite
 For everemoore; ther may no gold hem quite. 1032
 This passeth yeer by yeer and day by day,
 Till it fil ones, in a morwe of May,
 That Emelye that fairer was to sene
 Than is the lylie upon his stalke grene, 1036
 And fressher than the May with floures newe —
 For with the rose colour stroof hire hewe,
 I noot which was the fyner of hem two —
 Er it were day, as was hir wone to do, 1040
 She was arisen and al redy dight;
 For May wole have no slogardrie a-nyght.
 The seson priketh every gentil herte,
 And maketh hym out of his slepe to sterte, 1044
 And seith, 'Arys, and do thyn observance!'
 This maked Emelye have remembrance
 To doon honour to May, and for to ryse.
 Yclothed was she fressh for to devyse. 1048
 Hir yelow heer was broyded in a tresse
 Bihynde hir bak, a yerde long, I gesse.
 And in the gardyn, at the sonne upriste,
 She walketh up and doun, and as hire liste, 1052
 She gadereth floures, party white and rede,
 To make a subtil gerland for hire hede;
 And as an aungel hevenysshly she soong.
 The grete tour, that was so thikke and stroong, 1056
 Which of the castel was the chief dongeon,

Ther-as the knyghtes weren in prison,
Of whiche I tolde yow and tellen shal,
Was evene joynant to the gardyn wal 1060
Ther-as this Emelye hadde hir pleyynge.
Bright was the sonne and cleer that morwenynge,
And Palamon, this woful prisoner —
As was his wone, bi leve of his gayler — 1064
Was risen, and romed in a chambre on heigh,
In which he al the noble citee seigh,
And eek the gardyn, ful of braunches grene,
Ther-as this fresshe Emelye the sheene 1068
Was in hire walk and romed up and doun.
This sorweful prisoner, this Palamoun,
Goth in the chambre, romynge to and fro,
And to hymself compleynynge of his wo. 1072
That he was born ful ofte he seyde, 'Allas!'
And so bifel, by aventure or cas,
That thurgh a wyndow, thikke of many a barre
Of iren, greet and square as any sparre, 1076
He cast his eye upon Emelya
And therwithal he bleynte and cride, 'Al'
As though he stongen were unto the herte.
And with that cry, Arcite anon up sterte, 1080
And seyde, 'Cosyn myn, what eyleth thee,
That art so pale and deedly on to see?
Why cridestow? who hath thee doon offence?
For Goddes love, taak al in pácience 1084
Oure prison, for it may noon oother be.
Fortune hath yeven us this adversitee:
Som wikke aspect or disposicion
Of Saturne, by sum constellacion, 1088
Hath yeven us this, although we hadde it sworn,
So stood the hevene whan that we were born;
We moste endure, this is the short and playn.'
This Palamon answerde, and seyde agayn, 1092
'Cosyn, for sothe, of this opinion
Thow hast a veyn ymaginacion.
This prison caused me nat for to crye,
But I was hurt right now thurghout myn eye 1096

Into myn herte, that wol my bane be.
 The fairnesse of that lady that I see
 Yond in the gardyn romen to and fro
 Is cause of al my crying and my wo. 1100
 I noot wher she be womman or goddesse,
 But Venus is it soothly, as I gesse.
 And therwithal on kneës doun he fil,
 And seyde, 'Venus, if it be thy wil 1104
 Yow in this gardyn thus to transfigure
 Bifore me, sorweful, wrecche creature,
 Out of this prison helpe that we may scapen.
 And if so be my destynnee be shapen 1108
 By eterne word to dyen in prison,
 Of oure lynage have som compassion,
 That is so lowe ybrought by tyrannye.'
 And with that word Arcite gan espye 1112
 Wher-as this lady romed to and fro.
 And with that sighte, hir beautee hurte hym so
 That if that Palamon was wounded sore,
 Arcite is hurt as moche as he, or moore. 1116
 And with a sigh he seyde pitously,
 'The fresshe beautee sleeth me sodeynly
 Of hire that rometh in the yonder place;
 And but I have hir mercy and hir grace, 1120
 That I may seen hire, atte leeste weye,
 I nam but deed; ther is namoore to seye!'
 This Palamon, whan he tho wordes herde,
 Dispitously he looked, and answerde, 1124
 'Wheither seistow this in ernest or in pley?'
 'Nay,' quod Arcite, 'in ernest, by my fey!
 God helpe me so, me list ful yvele pleye.'
 This Palamon gan knytte his browes tweye; 1128
 'It nere,' quod he, 'to thee no greet honour
 For to be fals, ne for to be traitour,
 To me, that am thy cosyn, and thy brother
 Ysworn ful depe, and ech of us til oother, 1132
 That nevere, for to dyen in the peyne,
 Til that deeth departe shal us tweyne,
 Neither of us in love to hyndre oother,

Ne in noon oother cas, my leeve brother; 1136

But that thou sholdest trewely forthren me

In every cas, as I shal forthren thee.

This was thyn ooth and myn also certeyn;

I woot right wel, thou darst it nat withseyn. 1140

Thus artow of my conseil, out of doute,

And now thou woldest falsly been aboute

To love my lady, whom I love and serve

And evere shal til that myn herte sterve. 1144

Nay, certes, false Arcite, thou shalt nat so!

I loved hire first; and tolde thee my wo,

As to my conseil, and to my brother sworn

To forthre me, as I have toold biforn; 1148

For which thou art ybounden as a knyght

To helpen me, if it lay in thy myght;

Or elles artow fals, I dar wel seyn.'

This Arcite ful proudly spak ageyn; 1152

'Thow shalt,' quod he, 'be rather fals than I;

And thou art fals, I telle thee outrely!

For paramour I loved hire first er thou.

What wiltow seyn? Thou wistest nat yet now 1156

Wheither she be a womman or goddesse.

Thyn is affection of hoolynesse,

And myn is love, as to a creature;

For which I tolde thee myn aventure, 1160

As to my cosyn and my brother sworn.

'I pose that thou lovedest hire biforn.

Wostow nat wel the olde clerkes sawe,

That 'Who shal yeve a love any lawe?'

Love is a gretter lawe, by my pan,

Than may be yeve of any erthely man;

And therfore positif lawe and swich decree

Is broken al day for love, in ech degree. 1168

A man moot nedes love, maugree his heed.

He may nat flee it, thogh he sholde be deed,

Al be she mayde, or wydwe, or elles wyf.

And eek it is nat likly al thy lyf 1172

To stonden in hir grace — namoore shal I;

For wel thou woost thyselfen verrailly

That thou and I be dampned to prison
Perpetuelly; us gayneth no raunson. 1176
We stryven as dide the houndes for the boon;
They foughte al day, and yet hir part was noon;
Ther cam a kyte, whil they weren so wrothe,
And baar away the boon bitwixe hem bothe. 1180
And therfore, at the kynges court, my brother,
Ech man for hymself, ther is noon oother.
Love, if thee list; for I love, and ay shal.
And soothly, leeve brother, this is al: 1184
Heere in this prison moote we endure,
And everich of us take his aventure.'

Greet was the strif, and long, bitwix hem tweye,
If that I hadde leyser for to seye. 1188
But to theeffect: it happed on a day —
To telle it yow as shortly as I may —
A worthy duc that highte Perotheus,
That felawe was to this duc Theseus 1192
Syn thilke day that they were children lite,
Was come to Atthenes his felawe to visite,
And for to pleye, as he was wone to do;
For in this world he loved no man so — 1196
And he loved hym als tendrely agayn.
So wel they lovede, as olde bookes sayn,
That whan that oon was deed, soothly to telle,
His felawe wente and soughte hym down in helle. 1200
But of that storie list me nat to write.

Duc Perotheus loved wel Arcite,
And hadde hym knowe at Thebes, yeer by yere.
And finally, at requeste and preyere 1204
Of Perotheus, withouten any raunson,
Duc Theseus hym leet out of prison
Frely to goon wher that hym liste over-al,
In swich a gyse as I you tellen shal. 1208

This was the forward, pleyedly for tendite,
Bitwixen Theseus and hym Arcite:
That if so were that Arcite were yfounded
Evere in his lif, by day, or nyght, o stounde, 1212

In any contree of this Theseus,
And he were caught, it was acorded thus,
That with a swerd he sholde lese his heed.
Ther nas noon oother remedie ne reed; 1216
But taketh his leve, and homward he him spedde.
Lat hym be war, his nekke lith to wedde.

How greet a sorwe suffreth now Arcite!
The deeth he feeleth thurgh his herte smyte. 1220
He wepeth, wayleth, crieth pitously;
To sleen hym self he waiteth prively.
He seyde, 'Allas, that day that I was born!

Now is my prison worse than biforn. 1224
Now is me shape eternally to dwelle,
Nat in my purgatorie, but in helle.

Allas, that evere knew I Perotheus!
For elles hadde I dwelled with Theseus, 1228
Yfetered in his prison everemo.

Thanne hadde I been in blisse, and nat in wo.
Oonly the sighte of hire whom that I serve,
Though that I nevere hir grace may deserve, 1232
Wolde han suffised right ynough for me.

O deere cosyn Palamon,' quod he,
'Thyn is the victorie of this aventure!
Ful blisfully in prison maistow dure — 1236
In prison? certes nay, but in paradys!

Wel hath Fortune yturned thee the dys.
That hast the sighte of hire, and I thabsence.
For possible is — syn thou hast hire presence, 1240
And art a knyght, a worthy and an able —

That by som cas, syn Fortune is chaungeable,
Thow maist to thy desir som tyme atteyne.
But I, that am exiled and bareyne 1244
Of alle grace, and in so greet dispeir

That ther nys erthe, water, fir, ne eir,
Ne creature, that of hem maked is,
That may me heele or doon confort in this — 1248
Wel oughte I sterve in wanhope and distresse.

Farwel my lif, my lust, and my gladnesse!
Allas, why pleynten folk so in commune

On purvieaunce of God or of Fortune, 1252
 That yeveth hem ful ofte, in many a gyse,
 Wel bettre than they kan hemself devyse.
 Som man desireth for to han richesse,
 That cause is of his moerdre, or greet siknesse; 1256
 And som man wolde out of his prison fayn,
 That in his hous is of his meynee slayn.
 Infinite harmes been in this mateere;
 We witen nat what thing we preyen heere. 1260
 We faren as he that dronke is as a mous:
 A dronke man woot wel he hath an hous;
 But he noot which the righte wey is thider,
 And to a dronke man the wey is slider. 1264
 And certes in this world so faren we;
 We seken faste after felicitee,
 But we goon wrong ful often, trewely.
 Thus may we seyen alle; and namely I, 1268
 That wende and hadde a greet opinion
 That if I myghte escapen from prison,
 Thanne hadde I been in joye and perfit heele,
 That now I am exiled fro my wele. 1272
 Syn that I may nat seen you, Emelye,
 I nam but deed; ther nys no remedye.
 Upon that oother syde, Palamon,
 Whan that he wiste Arcite was agon, 1276
 Swich sorwe he maketh that the grete tour
 Resounded of his youlyng and clamour.
 The pure fettres on his shynes grete
 Weren of his bittre, salte teeres wete. 1280
 'Allas,' quod he, 'Arcita, cosyn myn,
 Of al oure strif, God woot, the frut is thyn.
 Thow walkest now in Thebes at thy large,
 And of my wo thow yevest litel charge. 1284
 Thou mayst, syn thou hast wysdom and manhede,
 Assemblen alle the folk of oure kynrede,
 And make a werre so sharpe on this citee
 That by som aventure or som tretee 1288
 Thow mayst have hire to lady and to wyf,
 For whom that I moste nedes lese my lyf.

- For, as by wey of possibilittee,
 Sith thou art at thy large, of prison free, 1292
 And art a lord, greet is thyn avauntage —
 Moore than is myn that sterve here in a cage.
 For I moot wepe and wayle whil I lyve
 With al the wo that prison may me yeve; 1296
 And eek with peyne that love me yeveth also,
 That doubleth al my torment and my wo.⁷
 Therwith the fyr of jalousie up sterte
 Withinne his brest, and hente him by the herte 1300
 So woodly that he lyk was to biholde
 The boxtree or the asshe dede and colde.
 Thanne seyde he, 'O crueel goddes that governe
 This world with byndyng of youre word eterne, 1304
 And writen in the table of athamaunt
 Youre parlement and youre eterne graunt,
 What is mankynde moore unto you holde
 Than is the sheepe that rouketh in the folde? 1308
 For slayn is man right as another beest,
 And dwelleth eek in prison and arreest,
 And hath siknesse and greet adversitee,
 And ofte tymes giltelees, pardee. 1312
 What governance is in this prescience
 That giltelees tormenteth innocence?
 And yet encresseth this al my penaunce
 That man is bounden to his observaunce, 1316
 For Goddes sake, to letten of his wille,
 Ther-as a beest may al his lust fulfille;
 And whan a beest is deed, he hath no peyne;
 But after his deeth man moot wepe and pleyne, 1320
 Though in this world he have care and wo;
 Withouten doutē it may stonden so.
 The answeere of this I lete to dyvynys,
 But well I woot that in this world greet pyne ys. 1324
 Allas! I se a serpent, or a thief
 That many a trewe man hath doon mescheef,
 Goon at his large and, where hym list, may turne;
 But I moot been in prison thurgh Saturne, 1328
 And eek thurgh Juno, jalous and eek wood,

That hath destroyed wel ny al the blood
 Of Thebes, with hise waste walles wyde.
 And Venus sleeth me on that oother syde
 For jalousie and fere of hym Arcite.' 1332

Now wol I stynte of Palamon a lite,
 And lete hym in his prison stille dwelle,
 And of Arcite forth I wol yow telle. 1336

The sommer passeth, and the nyghtes longe
 Encressen double wise the peynes stronge
 Bothe of the love and the prisoner.
 I noot which hath the wofuller mester; 1340

For, shortly for to seyn, this Palamon
 Perpetuelly is dampned to prison,
 In cheynes and in fettres to been deed;
 And Arcite is exiled upon his heed 1344
 Foreveremo, as out of that contree,
 Ne neveremo he shal his lady see.

Yow loveres axe I now this question,
 Who hath the worse, Arcite or Palamon?
 That oon may seen his lady day by day 1348
 But in prison he moot dwelle alway;

That oother wher hym list may ride or go,
 But seen his lady shal he neveremo. 1352

Now demeth as yow liste, ye that kan,
 For I wol telle forth as I bigan.

Explicit prima pars. Sequitur pars secunda.

Whan that Arcite to Thebes comen was,
 Ful ofte a day he swelte and seyde, 'Allas!' 1356
 For seen his lady shal he neveremo.

And shortly to concluden al his wo,
 So muche sorwe hadde nevere creature
 That is, or shal, whil that the world may dure. 1360

His slepe, his mete, his drynke, is hym biraft,
 That lene he wex, and drye as is a shaft;
 Hise eyen holwe, and grisly to biholde;
 His hewe falow, and pale as asshe colde; 1364

- And solitarie he was, and evere allone.
 And waillynge al the nyght, makynge his mone;
 And if he herde song or instrument,
 Thanne wolde he wepe, he myghte nat be stent. 1368
 So feble eek were hise spiritz, and so lowe,
 And chaunged so that no man koude knowe
 His speche nor his voys, though men it herde;
 And in his geere, for al the world he ferde, 1372
 Nat oonly lik the loveris maladye
 Of Hereos, but rather lyk manye,
 Engendred, of humour malencolik,
 Biforn his owene celle fantastik. 1376
 And shortly, turned was al up-so-doun
 Bothe habit and eek disposicioun
 Of hym, this woful love, Daun Arcite.
 What sholde I al day of his wo endite? 1380
 Whan he endured hadde a yeer or two
 This crueel torment and this peyne and woo,
 At Thebes, in his contree, as I seyde,
 Upon a nyght, in sleepe as he hym leyde, 1384
 Hym thoughte how that the wynged god Mercurie
 Biforn hym stood, and bad hym to be murie.
 His slepy yerde in hond he bar uprighte;
 An hat he werede upon hise heris brighte. 1388
 Arrayed was this god, as I took keep,
 As he was whan that Argus took his sleep;
 And seyde hym thus: 'To Atthenes shaltou wende.
 Ther is thee shapen of thy wo an ende.' 1392
 And with that word, Arcite wook, and sterte.
 'Now trewely, hou soore that me smerte,'
 Quod he, 'to Atthenes right now wol I fare,
 Ne for the drede of deeth shal I nat spare 1396
 To se my lady, that I love and serve;
 In hire presence I recche nat to sterve.'
 And with that word, he caughte a greet mirour,
 And saugh that chaunged was al his colour; 1400
 And saugh his visage al in another kynde.
 And right anon it ran hym in his mynde,
 That sith his face was so disfigured

Of maladye the which he hadde endured, 1404
He myghte wel, if that he bar hym lowe,
Lyve in Atthenes everemoore unknowe,
And seen his lady wel ny day by day.
And right anon he chaunged his array, 1408
And cladde hym as a poure laborer;
And al allone, save oonly a squier
That knew his privetee and al his cas,
Which was disguised pourely as he was, 1412
To Atthenes is he goon the nexte way.
And to the court he wente upon a day,
And at the gate he profreth his servyse,
To drugge and drawe, what-so men wol devyse. 1416
And shortly of this matere for to seyn,
He fil in office with a chamberleyn,
The which that dwellynge was with Emelye;
For he was wys, and koude soone espye 1420
Of every servant which that serveth here.
Wel koude he hewen wode and water bere,
For he was yong and myghty for the nones,
And therto he was long, and big of bones, 1424
To doon that any might kan hym devyse.
A yeer or two he was in this servyse,
Page of the chambre of Emelye the brighte;
And Philostrate he seyde that he highte. 1428
But half so wel biloved a man as he
Ne was ther nevere in court of his degree.
He was so gentil of his condicioun
That thurghout al the court was his renoun. 1432
They seyden that it were a charitee
That Theseus wolde enhauncen his degree,
And putten hym in worshipful servyse,
Ther-as he myghte his vertu excercise. 1436
And thus withinne a while his name is spronge,
Bothe of hise dedes and his goode tonge,
That Theseus hath taken hym so neer
That of his chambre he made hym a squier, 1440
And gaf him gold to mayntene his degree.
And eek men broghte hym out of his contree,

From yeer to yeer, ful pryvely, his rente;
 But honestly and slyly he it spente, 1444
 That no man wondred how that he it hadde.
 And thre yeer in this wise his lif he ladde,
 And bar hym so in pees and eek in werre,
 Ther was no man that Theseus hath derre. 1448
 And in this blisse lete I now Arcite,
 And speke I wole of Palamon a lite.

In derknesse and horrible and strong prison
 Thise seven yeer hath seten Palamon, 1452
 Forpyned, what for wo and for distresse.
 Who feeleth double soor and hevynesse
 But Palamon? that love destreyneth so
 That wood out of his wit he goth for wo. 1456
 And eek therto, he is a prisoner
 Perpetuelly, noght oonly for a yer.

Who koude ryme in Englyssh proprely
 His martirdom? For sothe it am nat I. 1460
 Therfore I passe as lightly as I may.

It fel that in the seventhe yer, in May,
 The thridde nyght, as olde bookes seyn,
 That al this storie tellen moore pleyn, 1464
 Were it by aventure or destyne —
 As whan a thyng is shapen, it shal be —
 That soone after the mydnyght Palamon,
 By helpyng of a freend, brak his prison, 1468
 And fleeth the citee faste as he may go.

For he hade yeve his gayler drynke so
 Of a clarree maad of a certeyn wyn,
 Of nercotikes, and opie of Thebes fyn,
 That al that nyght thogh that men wolde hym shake,
 The gayler sleep, he myghte nat awake.
 And thus he fleeth as faste as evere he may.

The nyght was short, and faste by the day, 1476
 That nedes cost he moot hymselfen hyde;
 And til a grove, faste ther bisyde,
 With dredeful foot thanne stalketh Palamon.
 For, shortly, this was his opinion, 1480

That in that grove he wolde hym hyde al day,
And in the nyght thanne wolde he take his way
To Thebes ward, his freendes for to preye
On Theseus to helpe him to werreye; 1484
And shortly, outhur he wolde lese his lif
Or wynnen Emelye unto his wyf.
This is theeffect and his entente pleyn.

Now wol I turne to Arcite ageyn, 1488
That litel wiste how ny that was his care,
Til that Fortune had broght him in the snare.

The bisy larke, messenger of day,
Salueth in hir song the morwe gray, 1492
And firy Phebus riseth up so brighte
That al the orient laugheth of the lighte,
And with hise stremes dryeth in the greves
The silver dropes hangynge on the leves. 1496
And Arcita, that is in the court roial
With Theseus, his squier principal,
Is risen, and looketh on the myrie day;
And for to doon his observaunce to May — 1500
Remembrynge on the poynt of his desir —
He on a courser, startlynge as the fir,
Is riden into the feeldes, hym to pleye,
Out of the court, were it a myle or tweye; 1504
And to the grove of which that I yow tolde
By aventure his wey he gan to holde,
To maken hym a gerland of the greves,
Were it of wodebynde or hawethorn leves; 1508
And loude he song ayeyn the sonne shene:
'May, with alle thy floures and thy grene,
Welcome be thou, faire, fresshe May,
In hope that I som grene gete may!' 1512

And from his courser, with a lusty herte,
Into a grove ful hastily he sterte;
And in a path he rometh up and doun,
Ther-as by aventure this Palamon 1516
Was in a bussh, that no man myghte hym se —
For soore aferd of his deeth thanne was he.

- Nothing ne knew he that it was Arcite.
God woot, he wolde have trowed it ful lite; 1520
But sooth is seyde, go sithen many yeres,
That 'Feeld hath eyen and the wode hath eres.
It is ful fair, a man to bere hym evene,
For 'Al day meeteth men at unset stevene.' 1524
Ful litel woot Arcite of his felawe,
That was so ny to herkennen al his sawe;
For in the bussh he sitteth now ful stille.
Whan that Arcite hadde romed al his fille, 1528
And songen al the roundel lustily,
Into a studie he fil al sodeynly,
As doon thise loveres in hir queynte geres —
Now in the crope, now down in the breres; 1532
Now up, now down, as boket in a welle.
Right as the Friday, soothly for to telle,
Now it shyneth, now it reyneth faste,
Right so kan geery Venus overcaste 1536
The hertes of hir folk. Right as hir day
Is gereful, right so chaungeth she array —
Selde is the Friday al the wowke ylike.
Whan that Arcite had songe, he gan to sike, 1540
And sette hym down withouten any moore.
'Allas,' quod he, 'that day that I was bore!
How longe, Juno, thurgh thy crueltee,
Woltow werreyen Thebes the citee? 1544
Allas! ybrought is to confusion
The blood roial of Cadme and Amphion —
Of Cadmus, which that was the firste man
That Thebes bulte, or first the toun bigan, 1548
And of the citee first was crouned kyng.
Of his lynage am I, and his ofspryng
By verray ligne, as of the stok roial;
And now I am so caytyf and so thral 1552
That he that is my mortal enemy,
I serve hym as his squier pourely.
And yet dooth Juno me wel moore shame,
For I dar noght biknowe myn owene name; 1556
But ther-as I was wont to highte Arcite,

Now highte I Philostrate — noght worth a myte!
 Allas, thou felle Mars! allas, Juno!
 Thus hath youre ire oure kynrede al fordo, 1560
 Save oonly me and wrecched Palamon,
 That Theseus martireth in prison.
 And over al this, to sleen me outrely,
 Love hath his fry dart so brennyngly 1564
 Ystiked thurgh my trewe, careful herte
 That shapen was my deeth erst than my sherte.
 Ye sleen me with youre eyen, Emelye!
 Ye been the cause wherfore that I dye. 1568
 Of al the remenant of myn oother care
 Ne sette I nat the montance of a tare,
 So that I koude doon aught to youre plesaunce.
 And with that word he fil down in a traunce 1572
 A longe tyme, and after he up sterte.
 This Palamon, that thoughte that thurgh his herte
 He felte a coold swerd sodeynliche glyde,
 For ire he quook; no lenger wolde he byde; 1576
 And whan that he had herd Arcites tale,
 As he were wood, with face deed and pale,
 He stirte hym up out of the buskes thikke,
 And seide, 'Arcite, false traytour wikke! 1580
 Now artow hent that lovest my lady so,
 For whom that I have al this peyne and wo;
 And art my blood, and to my conseil sworn,
 As I ful ofte have seyde thee heer biforn; 1584
 And hast byjaped heere Duc Theseus,
 And falsly chaunged hast thy name thus.
 I wol be deed, or elles thou shalt dye!
 Thou shalt nat love my lady Emelye, 1588
 But I wol love hire oonly and namo;
 For I am Palamon, thy mortal foo;
 And though that I no wepene have in this place,
 But out of prison am astert by grace, 1592
 I drede noght that outhur thou shalt dye,
 Or thou ne shalt nat loven Emelye.
 Chees which thou wolt, for thou shalt nat asterte.
 This Arcite, with ful despitous herte, 1596

Whan he hym knew, and hadde his tale herd,
As fiers as leon pulled out his swerd,
And seyde thus: 'By God that sit above,
Nere it that thou art sik and wood for love, 1600
And eek that thow no wepne hast in this place,
Thou sholdest nevere out of this grove pace,
That thou ne sholdest dyen of myn hond.
For I defye the seurete and the bond 1604
Which that thou seist that I have maad to thee.
What, verray fool, thynk wel that 'love is fre!'
And I wol love hire mawgree al thy myght.
But forasmuche thou art a worthy knyght 1608
And wilnest to darreyne hire by bataille,
Have heer my trouthe, tomorwe I wol nat faile,
Withoute wityng of any oother wight,
That heere I wol be founden as a knyght, 1612
And bryngen harneys, right ynough for thee;
And chese the beste and leve the worste for me.
And mete and drynke this nyght wol I brynge,
Ynough for thee, and clothes for thy beddyng. 1616
And if so be that thou my lady wynne,
And sle me in this wode, ther I am inne,
Thow mayst wel have thy lady as for me.'
This Palamon answerde, 'I graunte it thee.' 1620
And thus they been departed til amorwe,
Whan ech of hem had leyd his feith to borwe.

O Cupide, out of alle charitee!
O regne, that wolt no felawe have with thee! 1624
Ful sooth is seyde, that 'Love ne lordshipe
Wol noght, hir thanks, have no felaweshipe.'
Wel fynden that Arcite and Palamon.
Arcite is riden anon unto the toun, 1628
And on the morwe, er it were dayes light,
Ful prively two harneys hath he dight,
Bothe suffisaunt and mete to darreyne
The bataille in the feeld bitwix hem tweyne; 1632
And on his hors, allone as he was born,
He carieth al the harneys hym biforn.

And in the grove, at tyme and place yset,
This Arcite and this Palamon ben met. 1636

To chaungen gan the colour in hir face.
Right as the hunters in the regne of Trace,
That stondeth at the gappe with a spere,
Whan hunted is the leon and the bere, 1640
And hereth hym come russhyng in the greves
And breketh bothe bowes and the leves,
And thynketh, 'Heere cometh my mortal enemy.
Withoute faile, he moot be deed or I; 1644
For outhur I moot sleen hym at the gappe,
Or he moot sleen me, if that me myshappe' —
So ferden they, in chaungyng of hir hewe,
As fer as everich of hem oother knewe. 1648

Ther nas no 'good day' ne no saluyng;
But streight, withouten word or rehersyng,
Everich of hem heelp to armen oother
As freendly as he were his owene brother. 1652
And after that, with sharpe speres stronge
They foynen ech at oother wonder longe.
Thou myghtest wene that this Palamon
In his fightyng were a wood leon;
And as a cruell tigre was Arcite. 1656
As wilde bores gonne they to smyte,
That frothen whit as foom, for ire wood;
Up to the ancle foghte they in hir blood. 1660

And in this wise I lete hem fightyng dwelle,
And forth I wole of Theseus yow telle.

The Destinee, ministre general,
That executeth in the world, over-al, 1664
The purveiaunce that God hath seyn biforn —
So strong it is, that though the world had sworn
The contrarie of a thyng by ye or nay,
Yet somtyme it shal fallen on a day 1668
That falleth nat eft withinne a thousand yeere.
For certainly oure appetites heere,
Be it of werre, or pees, or hate, or love,
Al is this reuled by the Sighte above. 1672

A MAY PARTY

From the Très Riches Heures of Jehan duc de Berri, now at Chantilly. The MS was illuminated mainly by the Limbourg brothers, before 1416.

This mene I now by myghty Theseus,
That for to hunten is so desirus,
And namely at the grete hert in May,
That in his bed ther daweth hym no day 1676
That he nys clad, and redy for to ryde
With hunte and horn and houndes hym bisyde.
For in his huntyng hath he swich delit
That it is al his joye and appetit 1680
To been hymself the grete hertes bane;
For after Mars he serveth now Dyane.

Cleer was the day, as I have toold er this,
And Theseus with alle joye and blis, 1684
With his Ypolita, the faire queene,
And Emelye, clothed al in grene,
On huntyng be they riden roially.
And to the grove that stood ful faste by, 1688
In which ther was an hert, as men hym tolde,
Duc Theseus the streighte wey hath holde.
And to the launde he rideth hym ful right;
For thider was the hert wont have his flight, 1692
And over a brook, and so forth in his weye.
This duc wol han a cours at hym or tweye
With houndes, swiche as that hym list comaunde.

And whan this duc was come unto the launde, 1696
Under the sonne he looketh, and anon
He was war of Arcite and Palamon,
That foughten breme, as it were bores two.
The brighte swerdes wenten to and fro 1700
So hidously that with the leeste strook
It semed as it wolde fille an ook.
But what they were no thyng he ne woot.
This duc his courser with his spores smoot, 1704
And at a stert he was bitwix hem two;
And pulled out a swerd and cride, 'Hoo!
Namooore, up peyne of lesynge of youre heed!
By myghty Mars, he shal anon be deed 1708
That smyteth any strook that I may seen.
But telleth me what mystiers men ye been
That been so hardy for to fighten heere

Withouten juge or oother officere, 1712
As it were in a lystes roially?’

This Palamon answerde hastily
And seyde, ‘Sire, what nedeth wordes mo?
We have the deeth disserved bothe two. 1716

Two woful wrecches been we, two caytyves,
That been encombred of oure owene lyves;
And as thou art a rightful lord and juge,
Ne yeve us neither mercy ne refuge. 1720

But sle me first, for seinte charitee;
But sle my felawe eek, as wel as me.
Or sle hym first; for though thou knowest it lite,
This is thy mortal foo, this is Arcite, 1724

That fro thy lond is banysshed on his heed.
For which he hath deserved to be deed.
For this is he that cam unto thy gate,
And seyde that he highte Philostrate. 1728

Thus hath he japed thee ful many a yer;
And thou hast maked hym thy chief squier.
And this is he that loveth Emelye.
For sith the day is come that I shal dye, 1732

I make pleylnly my confession
That I am thilke woful Palamon
That hath thy prison broken wikkedly.
I am thy mortal foo; and it am I 1736

That loveth so hote Emelye the brighte
That I wol dye present in hir sighte.
Therefore I axe deeth, and my juwise.
But sle my felawe in the same wise; 1740

For bothe han we deserved to be slayn.’

This worthy duc answerde anon agayn
And seyde, ‘This is a short conclusion.
Youre owene mouth, by youre confession, 1744

Hath dampned yow, and I wol it recorde;
It nedeth noght to pyne yow with the corde.
Ye shal be deed, by myghty Mars the rede!’

The Queene anon, for verray wommanhede, 1748
Gan for to wepe; and so dide Emelye,
And alle the ladyes in the compaignye.

Greet pitee was it, as it thoughte hem alle,
That evere swich a chaunce sholde falle; 1752
For gentil men they were, of greet estaat,
And nothyng but for love was this debaat;
And saugh hir bloody woundes, wyde and soore.
And alle crieden, bothe lasse and moore, 1756
'Have mercy, lord, upon us wommen alle!'
And on hir bare knees adoun they falle,
And wolde have kist his feet, ther-as he stood;
Til at the laste aslaked was his mood, 1760
For pitee renneth soone in gentil herte.
And though he first for ire quook and stertere,
He hath considered, shortly, in a clause,
The trespass of hem bothe, and eek the cause; 1764
And although that his ire hir gilt accused,
Yet in his reson he hem bothe excused.
And thus he thoghte wel that every man
Wol helpe hymself in love, if that he kan, 1768
And eek delivere hymself out of prison.
And eek his herte hadde compassion
Of wommen, for they wepen evere in oon.
And in his gentil herte he thoughte anon 1772
And softe unto hymself he seyde, 'Fy
Upon a lord that wol have no mercy,
But been a leon, bothe in word and dede,
To hem that been in repentance and drede, 1776
As wel as to a proud, despitous man,
That wol maynteyne that he first bigan.
That lord hath litel of discrecion
That in swich cas kan no division, 1780
But weyeth pride and humblesse after oon.'
And shortly, whan his ire is thus agoon,
He gan to looken up with eyen lighte,
And spak thise same wordes al on highte: 1784
'The god of love, a, benedicite,
How myghty and how greet a lord is he!
Ayeyns his myght ther gayneth none obstacles.
He may be cleped a god for hise myracles, 1788
For he kan maken, at his owene gyse,

Of everich herte as that hym list divyse.

Lo, heere this Arcite and this Palamon,

That quitly weren out of my prison

1792

And myghte han lyved in Thebes roially,

And witen I am hir mortal enemy,

And that hir deth lith in my myght also —

And yet hath love, maugree hir eyen two,

1796

Brought hem hyder bothe for to dye.

Now looketh, is nat that an heigh folye?

Who may been a fole but-if he love?

Bihoold, for Goddes sake that sit above!

1800

Se how they blede! Be they noght wel arrayed?

Thus hath hir lord, the god of love, ypayed

Hir wages and hir fees for hir servyse.

And yet they wenen for to been ful wyse

1804

That serven love, for aught that may bifalle.

But this is yet the beste game of alle,

That she, for whom they han this jolitee,

Kan hem therfore as muche thank as me.

1808

She woot namoore of al this hoot fare,

By God, than woot a cokkow of an hare.

But all moot ben assayed, hoot and coold;

A man moot ben a fool, or yong or oold.

1812

I woot it by myself ful yore agon,

For in my tyme a servant was I oon.

And therfore, syn I knowe of loves payne,

And woot hou soore it kan a man distreyne —

1816

As he that hath ben caught ofte in his laas,

I yow foryeve al hoolly this trespaaas

At requeste of the Queene, that kneleth heere.

And eek of Emelye, my suster deere.

1820

And ye shul bothe anon unto me swere,

That neveremo ye shal my contree dere,

Ne make werre upon me nyght ne day,

But been my freendes in al that ye may.

1824

I yow foryeve this trespas every deel.'

And they him sworn his axyng, faire and weel;

And hym of lordshipe and of mercy preyde.

And he hem graunteth grace, and thus he seyde:

1828

'To speke of roial lynage and richesse,
 Though that she were a queene or a princesse,
 Ech of you bothe is worthy, doutelees,
 To wedden whan tyme is; but nathelees — 1832
 I speke as for my suster Emelye,
 For whom ye have this strif and jalousye —
 Ye woot yourself she may nat wedden two Atones, though ye fighten everemo. 1836
 That oon of you, al be hym looth or lief,
 He moot pipen in an yvy leef —
 This is to seyn, she may nat now han bothe,
 Al be ye never so jalouse ne so wrothe. 1840
 And for-thy, I yow putte in this degree,
 That ech of yow shal have his destynnee
 As hym is shape; and herkneth in what wyse —
 Lo heere your ende of that I shal devyse: 1844
 'My wyl is this, for plat conclusion,
 Withouten any replicacion —
 If that you liketh, take it for the beste —
 That everich of you shal goon where hym leste, 1848
 Frely, withouten raunson or daunger;
 And this day fifty wykes, fer ne ner,
 Everich of you shal brynge an hundred knyghtes,
 Armed for lystes, up at alle rightes, 1852
 Al redy to darreyne hire by bataille.
 And this bihote I yow withouten faille,
 Upon my trouthe, and as I am a knyght,
 That wheither of yow bothe that hath myght — 1856
 This is to seyn, that wheither he or thow
 May with his hundred, as I spak of now,
 Sleen his contrarie or out of lystes dryve,
 Thanne shal I yeve Emelya to wyve 1860
 To whom that Fortune yeveth so fair a grace.
 Tho lystes shal I maken in this place;
 And God so wisly on my soule rewe,
 As I shal evene jугe been and trewe. 1864
 Ye shul noon oother ende with me maken,
 That oon of yow ne shal be deed or taken.
 And if yow thynketh this is weel ysayd,

Seyeth youre avys, and holdeth you apayd; 1868
 This is youre ende and youre conclusion.'

Who looketh lightly now but Palamon?
 Who spryngeth up for joye but Arcite?
 Who kouthe tellē, or who kouthe endite, 1872
 The joye that is makid in the place
 Whan Theseus hath doon so fair a grace?
 But down on knees wente every maner wight,
 And thonken hym with al hir herte and myght; 1876
 And namely the Thebans often sithe.
 And thus with good hope and with herte blithe,
 They taken hir leve, and homward gonne they ride
 To Thebes, with hise olde walles wyde. 1880

Explicit secunda pars. Sequitur pars tercia.

I trowe men wolde deme it negligence
 If I foryete to tellen the dispence
 Of Theseus, that gooth so bisily
 To maken up the lystes roially, 1884
 That swich a noble theatre as it was,
 I dar wel seyen, in this world ther nas.
 The circuit a myle was aboute,
 Walled of stoon, and dyched al withoute. 1888
 Round was the shape, in manere of compaas,
 Ful of degrees, the heighte of sixty pas,
 That whan a man was set on o degree,
 He lette nat his felawe for to see. 1892

Estward ther stood a gate of marbul whit;
 Westward right swich another in the opposit.

And shortly to concluden, swich a place
 Was noon in erthe, as in so litel space. 1896
 For in the lond ther was no crafty man
 That geometrie or ars metrik kan,
 Ne portreitour, ne kervere of ymages,
 That Theseus ne yaf him mete and wages 1900
 The theatre for to maken and devyse.
 And for to doon his ryte and sacrificse,
 He estward hath upon the gate above,

THE KNYGHTES TALE

199

In worshiþe of Venus, goddesse of love, 1904

Doon make an auter and an oratorie;

And on the gate westward, in memorie

Of Mars, he maketh hath right swich another,

That coste largely of gold a fother;

1908

And northward, in a touret on the wal,

Of alabastre whit and reed coral

An oratorie, riche for to see,

In worshiþe of Dyane of chastitee,

1912

Hath Theseus doon wrought in noble wyse.

But yet hadde I foryeten to devyse

The noble kervyng and the portreitures,

The shape, the contenance, and the figures,

1916

That weren in thise oratories thre.

First, in the temple of Venus maystow se,

Wrought on the wal, ful pitous to biholde,

The broken slepes, and the sikes colde,

1920

The sacred teeris, and the waymentyng,

The fry strokes, and the desiryng,

That loves servauntz in this lyf endure.

The othes that her covenantz assuren;

1924

Plesaunce and Hope, Desir, Foolhardynesse,

Beautee and Youthe, Bauderie, Richesse,

Charmes and Force, Lesynges, Flaterye,

Despense, Bisynesse and Jalousye —

1928

That wered of yelewe gooldes a gerland,

And a cokkow sittynge on hir hand;

Festes, instrumentz, caroles, daunces,

Lust and Array, and alle the circumstaunces

1932

Of love, whiche that I rekned have and rekne shal,

By ordre weren peynted on the wal,

And mo than I kan make of mencion;

For soothly al the mount of Citheron,

1936

Ther Venus hath hir principal dwellyng,

Was shewed on the wal in portreyng,

With al the gardyn and the lustynesse.

Nat was foryeten the porter Ydelnesse,

1940

Ne Narcisus the faire, of yore agon,

Ne yet the folye of kyng Salamon,

- Ne yet the grete strengthe of Ercules,
 Thenchautementz of Medea and Circes, 1944
 Ne of Turnus the hardy fiers corage,
 The riche Cresus, kaytyf in servage.
 Thus may ye seen that Wysdom ne Richesse,
 Beautee ne Sleighte, Strengthe, Hardynesse, 1948
 Ne may with Venus holde champartie;
 For as hir list, the world than may she gye.
 Lo, alle thise folk so caught were in hir las Til they for wo ful ofte seyde, 'Allas!' 1952
 Suffiseth heere ensamples oon or two,
 And though I koude rekene a thousand mo.
 The statue of Venus, glorious for to se,
 Was naked, fletynge in the large see; 1956
 And fro the navele doun al covered was
 With wawes grene, and brighte as any glas.
 A citole in hir right hand hadde she;
 And on hir heed, ful semely for to se, 1960
 A rose gerland, fressh and wel smellynge;
 Above hir heed hir dowves flikerynge.
 Biforn hire stood hir sone, Cupido.
 Upon his shuldres wynges hadde he two, 1964
 And blynd he was, as it was often seene;
 A bowe he bar, and arwes brighte and kene.
 Why sholde I noght as wel eek telle yow al
 The portreiture that was upon the wal 1968
 Withinne the temple of myghty Mars the rede?
 Al peynted was the wal, in lengthe and brede,
 Lyk to the estres of the grisly place
 That highte the grete temple of Mars in Trace — 1972
 In thilke colde, frosty region
 Ther-as Mars hath his sovereyn mansion.
 First, on the wal was peynted a forest,
 In which ther dwelleth neither man ne best; 1976
 With knotty, knarry, bareyne trees olde,
 Of stubbes sharpe and hidouse to biholde;
 In which ther ran a rumbel and a swough,
 As though a storm sholde bresten every bough; 1980
 And downward from an hille, under a bente,

Ther stood the temple of Mars armypotente,
 Wroght al of burned steel; of which the entree
 Was long, and streit, and gastly for to see; 1984
 And therout came a rage, and suche a veze
 That it made al the gate for to rese.

The northren lyght in at the dores shoon;
 For wyndowe on the wal ne was ther noon, 1988
 Thurgh which men myghten any light discerne.

The dore was al of adamant eterne,
 Yclenched overthwart and endelong
 With iren tough; and for to make it strong, 1992
 Every pyler, the temple to sustene,
 Was tonne greet, of iren bright and shene.

Ther saugh I, first, the dirke ymaginyng
 Of Felonye, and al the compassyng; 1996
 The cruell Ire, reed as any gleede;
 The pykepurs, and eek the pale Drede;
 The smylere with the knyfe under the cloke;
 The shepne, brennyng, with the blake smoke; 2000
 The treson of the mordrynge in the bedde;
 The open werre, with woundes al bibledded;
 Contek with blody knyf and sharpe manace.
 Al ful of chirkyng was that sory place! 2004

The sleere of hymself yet saugh I ther —
 His herte blood hath bathed al his heer;
 The nayl ydryven in the shode a-nyght;
 The colde deeth, with mouth gapyng upright. 2008
 Amyddes of the temple sat Meschaunce,
 With Disconfort, and Sory Contenaunce.

Yet saugh I Woodnesse, laughynge in his rage;
 Armed Complaint, Out-hees, and fiers Outrage; 2012
 The careyne in the busk, with throte ycorve;
 A thousand slayn, and nat of qualm ystorve;
 The tiraunt with the pray by force yraft;
 The toun destroyed — ther was no thyng laft. 2016

Yet saugh I brent the shippes hoppesteres;
 The hunte strangled with the wilde beres;
 The sowe frenen the child right in the cradel;
 The cook yscalded, for al his longe ladel. 2020

Noght was foryeten by the infortune of Marte —
 The cartere over-ryden with his carte,
 Under the wheel, ful lowe, he lay adoun.

Ther were also, of Martes divisioun, 2024
 The laborer, and the bocher, and the smyth,
 That forgeth sharpe swerdes on his styth.

And al above, depeynted in a tour,
 Saugh I Conquest, sittynge in greet honour, 2028
 With the sharpe sword over his heed
 Hangynge by a soutil twynnes threed.

Depeynted was the slaughtre of Julius,
 Of grete Nero, and of Antonius; 2032
 Al be that thilke tyme they were unborn,
 Yet was hir deth depeynted ther biforn,
 By manasyng of Mars, right by figure.
 So was it shewed in that portreiture, 2036
 As is depeynted in the sterres above
 Who shal be slayn or elles deed for love.
 Suffiseth oon ensample in stories olde;
 I may nat rekene hem alle, though I wolde. 2040

The statue of Mars upon a carte stood,
 Armed, and looked grym, as he were wood.
 And over his heed ther shynen two figures
 Of sterres, that been cleped in scriptures, 2044
 That oon Puella, that oother Rubeus —
 This god of armes was arrayed thus.
 A wolf ther stood biforn hym at his feet,
 With eyen rede, and of a man he eet. 2048
 With soutil pencil was depeynted this storie,
 In redoutynge of Mars and of his glorie.

Now to the temple of Dyane the chaste,
 As shortly as I kan, I wol me haste, 2052
 To telle yow al the descripsioun.
 Depeynted been the walles up and doun
 Of huntyng and of shamefast chastitee.

Ther saugh I how woful Calistopee, 2056
 Whan that Diane agreved was with here,
 Was turned from a womman to a bere;
 And after was she maad the loode sterre.

Thus was it peynted; I kan sey yow no ferre. 2060
 Hir sone is eek a sterre, as men may see.

Ther saugh I Dane, yturned til a tree —
 I mene nat the goddesse Diane,
 But Penneus doughter, which that highte Dane. 2064

Ther saugh I Attheon, an hert ymaked
 For vengeance that he saugh Diane al naked.
 I saugh how that hise houndes have hym caught,
 And freeten hym, for that they knewe hym naught. 2068

Yet peynted was a litel forthermoor
 How Atthalante hunted the wilde boor,
 And Meleagree, and many another mo;
 For which Dyane wroghte hym care and wo. 2072

Ther saugh I many another wonder storie,
 The whiche me list nat drawen to memorie.

This goddesse on an hert ful hye seet,
 With smale houndes al aboute hir feet; 2076
 And undernethe hir feet she hadde a moone —
 Wexynge it was and sholde wanye soone;

In gaude grene hir statue clothed was,
 With bowe in honde, and arwes in a cas; 2080
 Hir eyen caste she ful lowe adoun
 Ther Pluto hath his derke regioun.

A womman travailynge was hire biforn;
 But, for hir child so longe was unborn, 2084
 Ful pitously Lucyna gañ she calle,
 And seyde, 'Help, for thou mayst best of alle!'
 Wel koude he peynten lifly that it wroghte;
 With many a floryn he the hewes boghte. 2088

Now been the lystes maad, and Theseus,
 That at his grete cost arrayed thus
 The temples and the theatre every deel,
 Whan it was doon hym lyked wonder weel. 2092
 But stynte I wole of Theseus a lite,
 And speke of Palamon and of Arcite.

The day approacheth of hir retournynge,
 That everich sholde an hundred knyghtes brynge, 2096
 The bataille to darreyne, as I yow tolde.

And til Atthenes, hir covenantz for to holde,
 Hath everich of hem broght an hundred knyghtes,
 Wel armed for the werre, at alle rightes. 2100

And sikerly ther trowed many a man
 That nevere sithen that the world bigan,
 As for to speke of knyghthod of hir hond,
 As fer as god hath maked see or lond, 2104

Nas of so fewe so noble a compaignye;
 For every wight that lovede chivalrye,
 And wolde, his thanks, han a passant name,
 Hath preyd that he myghte been of that game. 2108

And wel was hym that therto chosen was;
 For if ther fille tomorwe swich a caas,
 Ye knowen wel that every lusty knyght
 That loveth paramours and hath his myght — 2112

Were it in Engelond or elleswhere —
 They wolde, hir thanks, wilnen to be there,
 To fighte for a lady. Benedicitee,
 It were a lusty sighte for to see! 2116

And right so ferden they with Palamon;
 With hym ther wenten knyghtes many on.
 Som wol ben armed in an haubergeon
 And in bristplate and in a light gypon; 2120

And somme woln have a paire plates large;
 And somme woln have a Pruce sheeld, or a targe;
 Somme woln ben armed on hir legges weel,
 And have an ax; and somme a mace of steel — 2124

Ther is no newe gyse that it nas old.
 Armed were they, as I have yow told,
 Everych after his opinion.

Ther maistow seen, comynge with Palamon, 2128
 Lygurge hymself, the grete kyng of Trace.
 Blak was his berd and manly was his face;

The cercles of hise eyen in his heed,
 They gloweden bitwyxen yelow and reed; 2132
 And lik a grifphon looked he aboute,

With kempe heeris on hise browes stoute;
 Hise lymes grete, hise bawnes harde and stronge,
 Hise shuldres brode, hise armes rounde and longe. 2136

And as the gyse was in his contree,
 Ful hye upon a chaar of gold stood he,
 With foure white boles in the trays.
 In stede of cote-armure, over his harnays — 2140
 With nayles yelewe and brighte as any gold —
 He hadde a beres skyn, colblak for old.
 His longe heer was kembd bihynde his bak;
 As any ravenes fethere it shoon for blak. 2144
 A wrethe of gold, arm-greet, of huge wighte,
 Upon his heed, set ful of stones brighte —
 Of fyne rubyes and of dyamauntz.
 Aboute his chaar ther wenten white alauntz, 2148
 Twenty and mo, as grete as any steer,
 To hunten at the leon or the deer,
 And folwed hym with mosel faste ybounde,
 Colered of gold, and tourettes fyled rounde. 2152
 An hundred lordes hadde he in his route,
 Armed ful wel, with hertes stierne and stoute.
 With Arcite, in stories as men fynde,
 The grete Emetreus, the kyng of Inde, 2156
 Upon a steede bay, trapped in steel,
 Covered in clooth of gold, dyapred weel,
 Cam ridyng, lyk the god of armes, Mars.
 His cote-armure was of clooth of Tars, 2160
 Couched with perles white and rounde and grete;
 His sadel was of brend gold newe ybete;
 A mantel was upon his shulder hangyng,
 Brat-ful of rubyes, rede as fyr sparklyng. 2164
 His crispe heer lyk rynges was yronne;
 And that was yellow, and glytered as the sonne.
 His nose was heigh; hise eyen bright citryn;
 Hise lippes rounde; his colour was sangwyn; 2168
 A fewe frakenes in his face yspreynd,
 Bitwixen yelow and somdel blak ymeynd;
 And as a leon he his lookyng caste.
 Of fyve and twenty yeer his age I caste; 2172
 His berd was wel bigonne for to spryng,
 His voys was as a trompe thondryng.
 Upon his heed he wered of laurer grene

A gerland, fresssh and lusty for to sene. 2176
 Upon his hand he bar for his deduyt
 An egle tame, as any lilye whyt.

An hundred lordes hadde he with hym there,
 Al armed, save hir heddes, in al hir gere, 2180
 Ful richely in alle maner thynges;
 For trusteth wel that dukes, erles, kynges
 Were gadered in this noble compaignye,
 For love, and for encrees of chivalrye. 2184
 Aboute this kyng ther ran on every part
 Ful many a tame leon and leopard.

And in this wise thise lordes, alle and some,
 Been on the Sondag to the citee come, 2188
 Aboute pryme, and in the toun alight.

This Theseus, this duc, this worthy knyght,
 Whan he had broght hem into his citee,
 And inned hem, everich in his degree, 2192
 He festeth hem, and dooth so greet labour
 To esen hem, and doon hem al honour
 That yet men weneth that no maner wit
 Of noon estaat ne koude amenden it. 2196

The mynstralcy; the service at the feeste;
 The grete yiftes to the meeste and leeste;
 The riche array of Theseus paleys;
 Ne who sat first ne last upon the deys; 2200
 What ladyes fairest been, or best daunsynge,
 Or which of hem kan dauncen best and synge;
 Ne who moost felyngly speketh of love;
 What haukes sitten on the perche above 2204
 What houndes ligen in the floor adoun —
 Of al this make I now no mencion,
 But al theeffect, that thynketh me the beste;
 Now cometh the point, and herkneth if yow leste. 2208

The Sondag nyght, er day bigan to sprynge,
 Whan Palamon the larke herde synge —
 Although it nere nat day by houres two,
 Yet song the larke — and Palamon also, 2212
 With hooly herte and with an heigh corage,

He roos to wenden on his pilgrymage
Unto the blisful Citherea benigne —
I mene Venus, honorable and digne; 2216
And in hir houre he walketh forth a paas
Unto the lystes ther hire temple was;
And down he kneleth with ful humble cheer
And herte soor, and seyde in this manere: 2220
 'Faireste of faire! O lady myn, Venus;
Doughter to Jove and spouse of Vulcanus;
Thow gladere of the Mount of Citheron,
For thilke love thow haddest to Adoon, 2224
Have pitee of my bittre teeris smerte,
And taak myn humble preyere at thyn hertel
Allas! I ne have no langage to telle
Theffectes, ne the tormentz of myn helle. 2228
Myn herte may myne harmes nat biwreye;
I am so confus that I kan noght seye
But "Mercy, lady bright, that knowest weele
My thought and seest what harmes that I fee!" 2232
Considere al this, and rewe upon my soore,
As wisly as I shal foreveremoore,
Emforth my myght, thy trewe servant be,
And holden werre alwey with chastitee; 2236
That make I myn avow, so ye me helpe.
I kepe noght of armes for to yelpen,
Ne I ne axe nat tomorwe to have victorie,
Ne renoun in this cas, ne veyne glorie, 2240
Of pris of armes blowen up and down;
But I wolde have fully possessioun
Of Emelye, and dye in thy servyse.
Fynd thow the manere hou and in what wyse. 2244
I recche nat — but it may bettre be —
To have victorie of hem or they of me,
So that I have my lady in myne armes;
For though so be that Mars is god of armes, 2248
Youre vertu is so greet in hevene above,
That, if yow list, I shal wel have my love.
Thy temple wol I worshipe everemo;
And on thyn auter, where I ride or go, 2252

I wol doon sacrifice and fires beete.
And if ye wol nat so, my lady sweete,
Thanne preye I thee, tomorwe with a spere
That Arcita me thurgh the herte bere. 2256
Thanne rekke I noght, whan I have lost my lyf,
Though that Arcita wynne hire to his wyf.
This is theeffect and ende of my preyere:
Yif me my love, thow blisful lady deere!' 2260
Whan the orison was doon of Palamon,
His sacrifice he dide, and that anon,
Ful pitously, with alle circumstance,
Al telle I noght as now his observance; 2264
But atte laste the statue of Venus shook,
And made a signe, wherby that he took
That his preyere accepted was that day.
For thogh the signe shewed a delay, 2268
Yet wiste he wel that graunted was his boone,
And with glad herte he wente hym hoom ful soone.
The thridde houre inequal that Palamon
Bigan to Venus temple for to gon, 2272
Up roos the sonne; and up roos Emelye,
And to the temple of Dyane gan hye
Hir maydens, that she thider with hire ladde.
Ful redily with hem the fyr they ladde, 2276
Thencens, the clothes, and the remenant al
That to the sacrifice longen shal;
The hornes fulle of meeth, as was the gyse —
Ther lakked noght to doon hir sacrificse. 2280
Smokyng the temple, ful of clothes faire,
This Emelye, with herte debonaire,
Hir body wessh with water of a welle.
But hou she dide hir ryte I dar nat telle, 2284
But it be any thing in general,
And yet it were a game to heeren al —
To hym that meneth wel it were no charge;
But it is good a man been at his large. 2288
Hir brighte heer was kempd, untressed al.
A coroune of a grene ook cerial
Upon hir heed was set ful fair and meete.

Two fyres on the auter gan she beete,
 And dide hir thynges, as men may biholde
 In Stace of Thebes and thise bookes olde.

Whan kyndled was the fyr, with pitous cheere
 Unto Dyane she spak as ye may heere:

'O chaste goddesse of the wodes grene,
 To whom bothe hevene and erthe and see is sene;
 Queene of the regne of Pluto, derk and lowe;
 Goddess of maydens, that myn herte hast knowe

Ful many a yeer, and woost what I desire;
 As keepe me fro thy vengeance and thyn ire,
 That Attheon abouthte cruelly!

Chaste goddesse, wel wostow that I Desire to ben a mayden al my lyf,
 Ne nevere wol I be no love ne wyf.

I am, thow woost, yet of thy compaignye,
 A mayde, and love huntynge and venerye,
 And for to walken in the wodes wilde,

And noght to ben a wyf, and be with childe;
 Noght wol I knowe the compaignye of man.
 Now helpe me, lady, sith ye may and kan,

For tho thre formes that thou hast in thee!
 And Palamon, that hath swich love to me,
 And eek Arcite, that loveth me so soore —

This grace I preye thee, withoute moore,
 As sende love and pees bitwixe hem two,
 And fro me turne away hir hertes so

That al hire hoot love and hir desir,
 And al hir bisy torment and hir fir,
 Be queynt, or turned in another place.

And if so be thou wolt do me no grace,
 And if my destynnee be shapen so
 That I shal nedes have oon of hem two,

As sende me hym that moost desireth me!
 Bihoold, goddesse of clene chastitee,
 The bittre teeris that on my chekes falle.

Syn thou art mayde, and kepere of us alle,
 My maydenhede thou kepe and wel conserve;
 And whil I lyve, a mayde I wol thee serve.'

The fires brenne upon the auter cleere
Whil Emelye was thus in hir preyere; 2332
But sodeynly she saugh a sighte queynte;
For right anon oon of the fyres queynte,
And quyked agayn; and after that anon
That oother fyr was queynt and al agon; 2336
And as it queynte it made a whistlynge,
As doon thise wete brondes in hir brennynge;
And at the brondes ende out ran anon
As it were bloody drops many oon. 2340
For which so soore agast was Emelye
That she was wel ny mad, and gan to crye;
For she ne wiste what it signyfied,
But oonly for the feere thus hath she cried, 2344
And weep that it was pitee for to heere.
And therwithal Dyane gan appeere,
With bowe in honde, right as an hunteresse,
And seyde, 'Doghter, stynt thyn hevynesse. 2348
Among the goddes hye it is affermed,
And by eterne word writen and confermed,
Thou shalt ben wedded unto oon of tho
That han for thee so muchel care and wo; 2352
But unto which of hem I may nat telle.
Farwel, for I ne may no lenger dwelle.
The fires whiche that on myn auter brenne
Shulle thee declarë, er that thou go henne, 2356
Thyn aventure of love, as in this cas.'

And with that word the arwes in the caas
Of the goddesse clateren faste and rynge;
And forth she wente, and made a vanysshynge; 2360
For which this Emelye astoned was,
And seyde, 'What amounteth this, allas?
I putte me in thy proteccion,
Dyane, and in thy disposicion.' 2364
And hoom she goth anon the nexte weye;
This is theeffect, ther is nomoore to seye.
The nexte houre of Mars folwyng this,
Arcite unto the temple walked is 2368
Of fierse Mars, to doon his sacrificise
With alle the rytes of his payen wyse.

With pitous herte and heigh devocion,
Right thus to Mars he seyde his orison: 2372
 'O stronge god, that in the regnes colde
Of Trace honoured art and lord yholde;
And hast in every regne and every lond
Of armes al the brydel in thyn hond, 2376
And hem fortunest as thee lyst devyse,
Accepte of me my pitous sacrificse!
If so be that my youthe may deserve,
And that my myght be worthy for to serve 2380
Thy godhede that I may been oon of thyne,
Thanne preye I thee to rewe upon my pyne,
For thilke peyne, and thilke hoothe fir,
In which thou whilom brendest for desir, 2384
Whan that thou usedest the bëautee
Of faire, yonge, fresshe Venus free,
And haddest hire in armes at thy wille —
Although thee ones on a tyme mysfille, 2388
Whan Vulcanus hadde caught thee in his las,
And foond thee liggyng by his wyf, allas!
For thilke sorwe that was in thyn herte,
Have routhe as wel upon my peynes smerte. 2392
I am yong and unkonnyng, as thou woost,
And, as I trowe, with love offended moost
That evere was any lyves creature;
For she that dooth me al this wo endure 2396
Ne reccheth nevere wher I synke or fleete.
And wel I woot, er she me mercy heete,
I moot with strengthe wynne hire in the place;
And wel I woot, withouten helpe or grace 2400
Of thee, ne may my strengthe noght availle.
Thanne helpe me, lord, tomorwe in my bataille,
For thilke fyr that whilom brente thee,
As wel as thilke fyr now brenneth me; 2404
And do that I tomorwe have victòrie!
Myn be the travaille, and thyn be the glòrie.
Thy sovereyn temple wol I moost honouren
Of any place, and alwey moost labouren 2408
In thy plesance and in thy craftes stronge;
And in thy temple I wol my baner honge

And alle the armes of my compaignye;
 And everemo, unto that day I dye, 2412
 Eterne fir I wol biforn thee fynde.
 And eek to this avow I wol me bynde:
 My beerd, myn heer, that hongeth long adoun,
 That nevere yet ne felte offensioun 2416
 Of rasour nor of shere, I wol thee yeve,
 And ben thy trewe servant whil I lyve.
 Now, lord, have routhe upon my sorwes soore;
 Yif me the victorie, I aske thee namoore!' 2420
 The preyere stynt of Arcita the stronge.
 The rynges on the temple dore that honge,
 And eek the dores, clatereden ful faste;
 Of which Arcita somewhat hym agaste. 2424
 The fyres brenden upon the auter brighte,
 That it gan al the temple for to lighte;
 And sweete smel the ground anon up yaf.
 And Arcita anon his hand up haf, 2428
 And moore encens into the fyr he caste;
 With othere rytes mo; and atte last,
 The statue of Mars bigan his hauberk rynge.
 And with that soun he herde a murmurynge 2432
 Ful lowe and dym, and seyde thus, 'Victorie!'
 For which he yaf to Mars honour and glorie.
 And thus with joye, and hope wel to fare,
 Arcite anon unto his in is fare, 2436
 As fayn as fowel is of the brighte sonne.

And right anon swich strif ther is bigonne,
 For thilke grauntyng, in the hevene above,
 Bitwixe Venus, the goddessse of love, 2440
 And Mars, the stierne god armypotente,
 That Juppiter was bisy it to stente;
 Til that the pale Saturnus the colde,
 That knew so manye of adventures olde, 2444
 Foond in his olde experience an art
 That he ful soone hath plesed every part.
 As sooth is seyde, elde hath greet advantage;
 In elde is bothe wysdom and usage: 2448

'Men may the olde at-renne and noght at-rede.'

Saturne anon, to stynten strif and drede,

Al be it that it is agayn his kynde,

Of al this strif he gan remèdie fynde.

2452

'My deere doghter Venus,' quod Saturne,

'My cours, that hath so wyde for to turne,

Hath moore power than woot any man.

Myn is the drenchyng in the see so wan;

2456

Myn is the prison in the derke cote;

Myn is the stranglyng and hangyng by the throte;

The murmure and the cherles rebellyng;

The groynnyng, and the pryvee empoysonyng.

2460

I do vengeance and pleyn correccion

Whil I dwelle in signe of the Leon.

Myn is the ruyne of the hye halles;

The fallynge of the toures and of the walles

2464

Upon the mynour or the carpenter;

I slow Sampson, shakynge the piler;

And myne be the maladyes colde,

The derke tresons, and the castes olde;

2468

My lookyng is the fader of pestilence.

Now weepe namoore; I shal doon diligence

That Palamon, that is thyn owene knyght,

Shal have his lady, as thou hast him hight,

2472

Though Mars shal helpe his knyght yet nathelees.

Bitwixe yow ther moot be somtyme pees,

Al be ye noght of o compleccion,

That causeth al day swich division.

2476

I am thyn aiel, redy at thy wille.

Weepe now namoore; I wol thy lust fulfille.'

Now wol I stynten of the goddes above —

Of Mars, and of Venus, goddesses of love —

2480

And telle yow as pleynly as I kan

The grete effect, for which that I bygan.

Explicit tercia pars. Sequitur pars quarta.

Greet was the feeste in Arthenes that day;

And eek the lusty seson of that May 2484

Made every wight to been in such plesaunce
 That al that Monday justen they and daunce,
 And spenten it in Venus heigh servyse.
 But by the cause that they sholde ryse 2488
 Eerly for to seen the grete fight,
 Unto hir reste wenten they at nyght.
 And on the morwe, whan that day gan sprynge,
 Of hors and harneys noyse and claterynge 2492
 Ther was in the hostelryes al aboute.
 And to the paleys rood ther many a route
 Of lordes upon steedes and palfreys.
 Ther maystow seen divisynge of harneys, 2496
 So unkouth, and so riche, and wroght so weel,
 Of goldsmythrye, of browdyng, and of steel;
 The sheeldes brighte, testeres, and trappures,
 Gold hewen helmes, hauberkes, cote-armures; 2500
 Lordes in paramentz on hir courseres;
 Knyghtes of retenue; and eek squieres
 Nailynge the speres, and helmes bokelynge,
 Giggynge of sheeldes, with layneres lacyng — 2504
 There as nede is they weren no thyng ydel;
 The fomy steedes on the golden brydel
 Gnawynge; and faste the armurers also
 With fyle and hamer prikyng to and fro; 2508
 Yemen on foote, and communes many oon,
 With shorte staves, thikke as they may goon;
 Pypes, trompes, nakerers, clariounes,
 That in the bataille blowen bloody sounes; 2512
 The paleys ful of peples up and doun,
 Heere thre, ther ten, holdynge hir question —
 Dyvynynge of thise Thebane knyghtes two.
 Somme seyden thus; somme seyde, 'It shal be so.' 2516
 Somme helden with hym with the blake berd;
 Somme with the balled; somme with the thikke-herd.
 Somme seyde, 'He looked grymme'; and 'He wolde fighte';
 'He hath a sparth of twenty pound of wighte.' 2520
 Thus was the halle ful of divynynge
 Longe after that the sonne gan to sprynge.
 The grete Theseus, that of his sleep awaked

With mynstralcie and noyse that was maked,
Heeld yet the chambre of this paleys riche
Til that the Thebane knyghtes, bothe yliche
Honored, were into the paleys fet.

2524

Duc Theseus was at a wyndow set,
Arrayed right as he were a god in trone.
The peple preeseth thiderward ful soone,
Hym for to seen and doon heigh reverence,
And eek to herkne his heste and his sentence.

2528

2532

An heraud on a scaffold made an 'Oo!'
Til al the noyse of peple was ydo.
And whan he saugh the noyse of peple al stille,
Tho shewed he the myghty dukes wille.

2536

'The lord hath, of his heigh discrecion,
Considered that it were destruccion
To gentil blood to fighten in the gyse
Of mortal bataille now in this emprise.
Wherfore, to shapen that they shal nat dye,
He wolde his firste purpos modifye.

2540

'No man, therfore, up peyne of los of lyf,
No maner shot, polax, ne short knyf,
Into the lystes sende, ne thider brynge;
Ne short swerd for to stoke, with poynt bitynge,
No man ne drawe, ne bere by his syde.

2544

Ne no man shal unto his felawe ryde
But o cours with a sharpe ygrounde spere.
Foyne, if hym list, on foote, hymself to were.

2548

And he that is at meschief shal be take,
And noght slayn, but be broght unto the stake
That shal ben ordeyned on either syde.

2552

But thider he shal by force and there abyde.
And if so be the chieftayn be take
On outhur syde, or elles sleen his make,
No lenger shal the turneiynge laste.

2556

'God spede you! gooth forth, and ley on faste!
With long swerd and with maces fighteth youre fille.
Gooth now youre wey; this is the lordes will.'

2560

The voys of peple touchede the hevene,
So loude cride they with murie stevene,

'God save swich a lord, that is so good,
 He wilneth no destruccion of blood!' 2564
 Up goon the trompes and the melodye;
 And to the lystes rit the compaignye,
 By ordinance, thurghout the citee large,
 Hanged with clooth of gold, and nat with sarge. 2568
 Ful lik a lord, this noble duc gan ryde,
 Thise two Thebans upon either side;
 And after rood the queene and Emelye;
 And after that another compaignye 2572
 Of oon and oother, after hir degre.
 And thus they passen thurghout the citee,
 And to the lystes come they bytyme.
 It nas not of the day yet fully pryme 2576
 Whan set was Theseus ful riche and hye,
 Ypolita the queene, and Emelye,
 And othere ladys in degrees aboute.
 Unto the seetes preesseth al the route; 2580
 And westward, thurgh the gates under Marte,
 Arcite and eek the hondred of his parte
 With baner reed is entred right anon.
 And in that selve moment Palamon 2584
 Is under Venus, estward in the place,
 With baner whyt, and hardy chiere and face.
 In al the world to seken up and down,
 So evene, withouten variacioun, 2588
 Ther nere swiche compaignyes tweye;
 For ther was noon so wys that koude seye
 That any hadde of oother avauntage
 Of worthynesse, ne of estaat ne age — 2592
 So evene were they chosen, for to gesse;
 And in two renges faire they hem dresse.
 Whan that hir names rad were everichon,
 That in hir nombre gyle were ther noon, 2596
 Tho were the gates shet, and cried was loude,
 'Do now youre devoir, yonge knyghtes proude!'
 The heraudes lefte hir prikyng up and down;
 Now ryngen trompes loude and clarioun. 2600
 Ther is namoore to seyn, but west and est

In goon the speres ful sadly in arrest;
In gooth the sharpe spore into the syde;
Ther seen men who kan juste and who kan ryde;
Ther shyveren shaftes upon sheeldes thikke;
He feeleth thurgh the herte-spoon the prikke;
Up spryngen speres twenty foot on highte;
Out gooth the swerdes, as the silver brighte; 2608
The helmes they tohewen and toshrede;
Out brest the blood with stierne stremes rede;
With myghty maces the bones they tobreste;
He thurgh the thikkeste of the throng gan threste; 2612
Ther stomblen steedes stronge, and doun gooth al;
He rolleth under foot as dooth a bal;
He foyneth on his feet with his tronchon;
And he hym hurtleth with his hors adoun; 2616
He thurgh the body is hurt and sithen ytake,
Maugree his heed, and broght unto the stake —
As forward was, right ther he moste abyde;
Another lad is on that oother syde. 2620
And somtyme dooth hem Theseus to reste,
Hem to refresshen, and drynken if hem leste.
Ful ofte a day han thise Thebanes two Togydre ymet and wroght his felawe wo; 2624
Unhorsed hath ech oother of hem tweye.
Ther nas no tygre in the vale of Galgopheye,
Whan that hir whelp is stole whan it is lite,
So crueel on the hunte as is Arcite 2628
For jelous herte upon this Palamon;
Ne in Belmarye ther nys so fel leon,
That hunted is, or for his hunger wood,
Ne of his praye desireth so the blood, 2632
As Palamon to sleen his foo Arcite.
The jelous strokes on hir helmes byte;
Out renneth blood on bothe hir sydes rede.
Som tyme an ende ther is of every dede; 2636
For er the sonne unto the reste wente,
The stronge kyng Emetreus gan hente
This Palamon, as he faught with Arcite,
And made his swerd depe in his flessch to byte. 2640

And by the force of twenty is he take,
 Unyolden, and ydrawe unto the stake.
 And in the rescus of this Palamon
 The stronge kyng Lygurge is born adoun; 2644
 And kyng Emetreus, for al his strengthe,
 Is born out of his sadel a swerdes lengthe,
 So hitte him Palamon er he were take.
 But al for noght; he was broght to the stake. 2648
 His hardy herte myghte hym helpe naught;
 He moste abyde, whan that he was caught,
 By force, and eek by composicion.
 Who sorweth now but woful Palamon, 2652
 That moot namoore goon agayn to fighte?
 And whan that Theseus hadde seyn this sighte,
 Unto the folk that foghten thus echon
 He cryde, 'Hoo, namoore; for it is doon! 2656
 I wol be trewe juge and no partie.
 Arcite of Thebes shal have Emelie,
 That by his fortune hath hire faire ywonne.'
 Anon ther is a noyse of peple bigonne, 2660
 For joye of this, so loude and heighe withalle
 It semed that the lystes sholde falle.
 What kan now faire Venus doon above?
 What seith she now? What dooth this queene of love 2664
 But wepeth so, for wantynge of hir wille,
 Til that hir teeres in the lystes fille.
 She seyde, 'I am ashamed, doutelees.'
 Saturnus seyde, 'Doghter hoold thy pees! 2668
 Mars hath his wille; his knyght hath al his boone;
 And, by myn heed, thow shalt been esed soone.'
 The trompes, with the loude mynstralcie,
 The heraudes that ful loude yolle and crie, 2672
 Been in hire wele for joye of Daun Arcite.
 But herketh me, and stynteth now a lite,
 Which a myracle ther bifel anon.
 This fierse Arcite hath of his helm ydon, 2676
 And on a courser, for to shewe his face,
 He priketh endelong the large place,
 Lokynge upward upon Emelye;

And she agayn hym caste a freendlich eye,
And was al his chiere, as in his herte. 2680

Out of the ground a furie infernal sterte,
From Pluto sent, at requeste of Saturne;
For which his hors for fere gan to turne,
And leep aside and foundred as he leep. 2684

And er that Arcite may taken keep,
He pighte hym on the pomel of his heed,
That in the place he lay as he were deed,
His brest tobrosten with his sadel-bowe. 2688

As blak he lay as any cole or crowe,
So was the blood yronnen in his face. 2692

Anon he was yborn out of the place,
With herte soor, to Theseus paleys.

Tho was he korven out of his harneys,
And in a bed ybrought, ful faire and blyve, 2696
For he was yet in memorie and alyve,
And alwey crynge after Emelye.

Duc Theseus with al his compaignye
Is comen hoom to Atthenes his citee 2700
With alle blisse and greet solempnitee.

Al be it that this aventure was falle,
He nolde noght disconforten hem alle. 2704
Men seyde eek that Arcite shal nat dye;
He shal been heeled of his maladye.

And of another thyng they weren as fayn,
That of hem alle was ther noon yslayn, 2708

Al were they soore yhurt, and namely oon
That with a spere was thirled his brest boon.

To othere woundes and to broken armes
Somme hadden salves, and somme hadden charmes; 2712

Fermacies of herbes, and eek save
They dronken, for they wolde hir lymes have.

For which this noble duc, as he wel kan,
Conforteth and honoureth every man, 2716

And made revel al the longe nyght
Unto the straunge lordes, as was right.

Ne ther was holden no disconfitynge
But as a justes or a tourneyng; 2720

For soothly ther was no disconfiture,
For fallyng nys nat but an aventure.
Ne to be lad by force unto the stake,
Unyolden, and with twenty knyghtes take — 2724
O persone allone, withouten mo —
And haryed forth by arme, foot, and too;
And eke his steede dryven forth with staves
With footmen, bothe yemen and eek knaves — 2728
It nas aretted hym no vileynye;
Ther may no man clepen it cowardye.
For which anon Duc Theseus leet crye,
To stynten alle rancour and envye, 2732
The gree as wel of o syde as of oother,
And eyther syde ylik as ootheres brother;
And yaf hem yiftes after hir degree,
And fully heeld a feeste dayes three; 2736
And convoyed the kynges worthily
Out of his toun a journee largely.
And hoom wente every man the righte way;
Ther was namoore but 'Farewell' 'Have good day!' 2740
Of this bataille I wol namoore endite,
But speke of Palamon and of Arcyte.
Swellleth the brest of Arcite, and the soore
Encreeseth at his herte moore and moore. 2744
The clothered blood, for any lechecraft,
Corrupteth and is in his bouk ylaft,
That neither veyne blood, ne ventusynges,
Ne drynke of herbes may ben his helpynge. 2748
The vertu expulsif, or animal,
For thilke vertu cleped natural
Ne may the venym voyden ne expelle.
The pipes of his longes gonne to swelle 2752
And every lacerte in his brest adoun
Is shent with venym and corrupcion.
Hym gayneth neither, for to gete his lif,
Vomyt upward ne dounward laxatif. 2756
Al is tobrosten thilke regioun;
Nature hath now no dominacioun,
And certainly, ther Nature wol nat wirche,

- 'Farewel, Phisik! go ber the man to chirche!'
This al and som, that Arcita moot dye;
For which he sendeth after Emelye
And Palamon that was his cosyn deere.
Thanne seyde he thus, as ye shal after heere: 2760
 'Naught may the woful spirit in myn herte
Declare o point of alle my sorwes smerte
To yow, my lady, that I love moost;
But I biquethe the servyce of my goost 2768
To yow, aboven every creature,
Syn that my lyf ne may no lenger dure.
Allas, the wo! alas, the peynes stronge,
That I for yow have suffred, and so longe! 2772
Allas, the deeth! alas, myn Emelye!
Allas, departynge of our compaignye!
Allas, myn hertes queene! alas, my wyf,
Myn hertes lady, endere of my lyf! 2776
What is this world? what asketh men to have?
Now with his love; now in his colde grave,
Allone, withouten any compaignye!
Farewel, my swete foo, myn Emelye! 2780
And softe taak me in youre armes tweye,
For love of God, and herkneþ what I seye.
 'I have heer with my cosyn Palamon
Had strif and rancour, many a day agon, 2784
For love of yow, and for my jalousye.
And Juppiter so wys my soule gye,
To speken of a servant proprely,
With alle circumstances trewely — 2788
That is to seyn, trouthe, honour, knyghthede,
Wysdom, humblesse, estaat, and heigh kynrede,
Fredom, and al that longeth to that art —
So Juppiter have of my soule part, 2792
As in this world right now ne knowe I non
So worthy to ben loved as Palamon,
That serveth yow and wol doon al his lyf.
And if that evere ye shul ben a wyf, 2796
Foryet nat Palamon, the gentil man.'
- And with that word, his speche faille gan;

And from his herte up to his brest was come
The coold of deeth, that hadde hym overcome; 2800
And yet mooreover, for in hise armes two
The vital strengthe is lost and al ago.

Oonly the intellect, withouten moore,
That dwelled in his herte, syk and soore, 2804
Gan faillen when the herte felte deeth.
Dusked hise eyen two, and failled breeth;
But on his lady yet caste he his eye;
His laste word was 'Mercy, Emelye!' 2808

His spirit chaunged hous and wente ther,
As I cam nevere, I kan nat tellen wher.
Therefore I stynte; I nam no divinistre;
Of soules fynde I nat in this registre. 2812
Ne me ne list thilke opinions to telle
Of hem, though that they writen wher they dwelle.
Arcite is coold, ther Mars his soule gye!
Now wol I speken forth of Emelye. 2816

Shrighte Emelye, and howleth Palamon;
And Theseus his suster took anon
Swownynge, and baar hire fro the corps away.
What helpeth it to tarien forth the day, 2820
To tellen how she weep bothe eve and morwe?
For in swich cas wommen have swich sorwe,
Whan that hir housbond is from hem ago,
That for the moore part they sorwen so, 2824
Or ellis fallen in swich maladye,
That at the laste certainly they dye.

Infinite been the sorwes and the teeres
Of olde folk, and eek of tendre yeeres, 2828
In al the toun for deeth of this Theban;
For hym ther wepeth bothe child and man.
So greet a wepyng was ther noon certayn
Whan Ector was ybrought, al fressh yslayn, 2832
To Troye. Allas the pitee that was ther!
Cracchyng of chekes; rentynge eek of heer.
'Why woldestow be deed?' thise wommen crye,
'And haddest gold ynough, and Emelye.' 2836

No man myghte gladen Theseus,

Savynge his olde fader Egeus,
 That knew this worldes transmutacion,
 As he hadde seyn it up and down — 2840
 Joye after wo, and wo after gladnesse —
 And shewed hem ensamples and liknesse.
 'Right as ther dyed nevere man,' quod he,
 'That he ne lyvede in erthe in som degree, 2844
 Right so ther lyvede never man,' he seyde,
 'In al this world that som tyme he ne deyde.
 This world nys but a thurghfare ful of wo,
 And we been pilgrymes, passynge to and fro. 2848
 Deeth is an ende of every worldes soore.'
 And over al this, yet-seyde he muchel moore
 To this effect, ful wisely to enhorten
 The peple that they sholde hem reconforte. 2852
 Duc Theseus, with al his bisy cure,
 Cast bisily wher that the sepulture
 Of goode Arcite may best ymaked be,
 And eek moost honourable in his degree. 2856
 And at the laste he took conclusion
 That ther-as first Arcite and Palamon
 Hadden for love the bataille hem bitwene —
 That in that selve grove, swoote and grene, 2860
 Ther-as he hadde hise amoureuse desires,
 His compleynte, and for love hise hote fires,
 He wolde make a fyr, in which the office
 Funeral he myghte al accomplice. 2864
 And leet comande anon to hakke and hewe
 The okes olde, and leye hem on a rewe,
 In colpons wel arrayed for to brenne.
 Hise officers with swifte feet they renne 2868
 And ryden anon at his comandement.
 And after this Theseus hath ysent
 After a beere, and it al overspradde
 With clooth of gold, the richeste that he hadde; 2872
 And of the same suyte he cladde Arcite.
 Upon his hondes hadde he gloves white;
 Eek on his heed a coroune of laurer grene;
 And in his hond a swerd ful bright and kene. 2876

He leyde hym, bare the visage, on the beere.
 Therwith he weepe that pitee was to heere.
 And for the peple sholde seen hym alle,
 Whan it was day he broghte hym to the halle, 2880
 That roreth of the cryng and the soun.

Tho cam this woful Theban, Palamon,
 With flotery berd and rugged asschy heeres,
 In clothes blake, ydropped al with teeres; 2884
 And passynge othere of wepynge, Emelye,
 The rewefulleste of al the compaignye.

Inasmuche as the servyce sholde be
 The moore noble, and riche in his degree, 2888
 Duc Theseus leet forth thre steedes brynge,
 That trapped were in steel al gliterynge,
 And covered with the armes of Daun Arcite.

Upon thise steedes, that weren grete and white, 2892
 Ther sitten folk, of whiche oon baar his sheeld,
 Another his sperë in his hondes heeld,
 The thridde baar with hym his bowe Turkeys —
 Of brend gold was the caas and eek the harneys; 2896

And riden forth a paas, with sorweful cheere,
 Toward the grove, as ye shul after heere.
 The nobleste of the Grekes that ther were Upon hir shuldres caryeden the beere 2900

With slake paas, and eyen rede and wete,
 Thurghout the citee, by the maister strete,
 That sprad was al with blak; and wonder hye
 Right of the samë is the strete ywrye. 2904

Upon the right hond wente olde Egeus,
 And on that oother syde Duc Theseus,
 With vessel in hir hand, of gold ful fyn,
 Al ful of hony, milk, and blood, and wyn; 2908
 Eek Palamon with ful greet compaignye;

And after that cam woful Emelye,
 With fyr in honde, as was that tyme the gyse,
 To do the office of funeral servyse. 2912

To heigh labour and ful greet apparaillynge
 Was at the service and the fyr makynge,
 That with his grene tope the heven raughte,

And twenty fadme of brede the armes straughte — 2916
This is to seyn, the bowes weren so brode.
Of stree first ther was leyd ful many a lode;
But how the fyr was makid upon highte,
And eek the names that the treës highte — 2920
As ook, firre, birch, aspe, alder, holm, popeler,
Wylugh, elm, plane, asshe, box, chasteyn, lynde, laurer,
Mapul, thorn, bech, hasel, ew, whippeltre —
How they weren feld, shal nat be toold for me; 2924
Ne hou the goddes ronnen up and doun,
Disherited of hire habitacioun,
In whiche they woneden in reste and pees —
Nymphes, fawnes, and amadriades — 2928
Ne hou the beestes and the briddes alle
Fledden for fere, whan the wode was falle;
Ne how the ground agast was of the light,
That was nat wont to seen the sonne bright; 2932
Ne how the fyr was couched first with stree,
And thanne with drye stokkes, cloven a thre,
And thanne with grene wode and spicerye,
And thanne with clooth of gold and with perrye, 2936
And gerlandes hangyng, with ful many a flour;
The mirre, thencens, with al so greet odour;
Ne how Arcite lay among al this;
Ne what riches aboute his body is; 2940
Ne how that Emelye, as was the gyse,
Putte in the fyr of funeral servyse;
Ne how she swowned whan men made fyr;
Ne what she spak, ne what was hir desire; 2944
Ne what Jeweles men in the fyre tho caste,
Whan that the fyr was greet and brente faste;
Ne how somme caste hir sheeld, and somme hir spere,
And of hire vestimentz whiche that they were, 2948
And coppes full of wyn, and milk, and blood,
Into the fyr, that brente as it were wood;
Ne how the Grekes, with an huge route,
Thries riden al the place aboute, 2952
Upon the left hand, with a loud shoutyng,
And thries with hir speres clateryng;

And thries how the ladyes gonne crye;
 And how that lad was homward Emelye; 2956
 Ne how Arcite is brent to asshen colde;
 Ne how that lychē-wakē was yholde
 Al thilke nyght; ne how the Grekes pleye
 The wake pleyes. Ne kepe I nat to seye 2960
 Who wrastleth best, naked, with oille enoynt,
 Ne who that baar hym best in no disjoynt.
 I wol nat tellen eek how that they goon
 Hoom til Atthenes, whan the pley is doon. 2964
 But shortly to the point thanne wol I wende,
 And maken of my longe tale an ende.

By processe and by lengthe of certeyn yeres,
 Al styntyd is the moornynge and the teres 2968
 Of Grekes. By oon general assent,
 Thanne semed me, ther was a parlement
 At Atthenes upon certein poyntz and caas;
 Among the whiche poyntz yspoken was, 2972
 To have with certein contrees alliance,
 And have fully of Thebans obeissance.
 For which this noble Theseus anon
 Leet senden after gentil Palamon, 2976
 Unwist of hym what was the cause and why.
 But in hise blake clothes, sorwefully,
 He cam, at his comandement, in hye.
 Tho sente Theseus for Emelye. 2980
 Whan they were set, and hust was al the place,
 And Theseus abiden hadde a space,
 Er any word cam fram his wise brest,
 Hise eyen sette he ther as was his lest, 2984
 And with a sad visage he siked stille,
 And after that right thus he seyde his wille:
 'The Firste Moevere of the cause above,
 Whan he first made the faire cheyne of love, 2988
 Greet was theeffect, and heigh was his entente.
 Wel wiste he why and what therof he mente;
 For with that faire cheyne of love he bond
 The fyr, the eyr, the water, and the lond 2992
 In certeyn boundes, that they may nat flee.

- That same Prince and that same Moevere,' quod he,
 'Hath stablissed in this wrecched world adoun
 Certeyne dayes and duracioun 2996
 To al that is engendrid in this place;
 Over the whiche day they may nat pace,
 Al mowe they yet tho dayes wel abregge.
 Ther nedeth nought noon auctoritee allegge; 3000
 For it is preeved by experience,
 But that me list declaren my sentence.
 Thanne may men by this ordre wel discerne
 That thilke Moevere stable is and eterne. 3004
 Wel may men knowe, but it be a fool,
 That every part dirryveth from his hool;
 For nature hath taken his bigynnyng,
 Of no partie or cantel of a thyng, 3008
 But of a thyng that parfit is and stable,
 Descendynge so til it be corruptable.
 And therfore, of his wise purveiaunce,
 He hath so wel biset his ordinaunce 3012
 That spesces of thynges and progressions
 Shullen enduren by successions,
 And nat eterne, withouten any lye.
 This maystow understonde, and seen at eye. 3016
 Loo the ook that hath so long a norisshynge
 From tyme that it first bigynneth sprynge,
 And hath so long a lif, as we may see,
 Yet at the laste wasted is the tree. 3020
 Considereth eek how that the harde stoon
 Under oure feet, on which we trede and goon,
 Yit wasteth it, as it lyth by the weye.
 The brode ryver somtyme wexeth dreye; 3024
 The grete toures se we wane and wende.
 Thanne may ye se that al this thyng hath ende
 Of man and womman seen we wel also
 That nedeth, in oon of thise termes two — 3028
 This is to seyn, in youthe or elles age —
 He moot be deed, the kyng as shal a page;
 Som in his bed, som in the depe see,
 Som in the large feeld, as men may se. 3032

Ther helpeth noght; al goth that ilke weye.
 Thanne may I seyn that al this thyng moot deye.
 'What maketh this but Juppiter the kyng,
 That is prince, and cause of alle thyng, 3036
 Convertynge al unto his propre welle,
 From which it is dirryved, sooth to telle.
 And here agayns no creature on lyve,
 Of no degree, availleth for to stryve. 3040
 'Thanne is it wysdom, as it thynketh me,
 To maken vertu of necessitee,
 And take it weel that we may nat eschue,
 And namely that to us alle is due. 3044
 And whoso gruccheth ought, he dooth folye,
 And rebel is to hym that al may gye.
 And certainly a man hath moost honour
 To dyen in his excellence and flour, 3048
 Whan he is siker of his goode name;
 Thanne hath he doon his freend ne hym no shame.
 And gladder oghte his freend been of his deeth,
 Whan with honour up yolden is his breeth 3052
 Than whan his name apalled is for age,
 For al forgeten is his vassellage.
 Thanne is it best, as for a worthy fame,
 To dyen whan that he is best of name. 3056
 The contrarie of al this is wilfulnesse.
 Why grucchen we? why have we hevynesse
 That goode Arcite, of chivalrië flour,
 Departed is, with duetee and honour, 3060
 Out of this foule prison of this lyf?
 Why grucchen heere his cosyn and his wyf
 Of his welfare, that loved hem so weel?
 Kan he hem thank? Nay, God woot, never a deel — 3064
 That bothe his soule, and eek hemself offende,
 And yet they mowe hir lustes nat amende.
 'What may I conclude of this longe serye,
 But after wo I rede us to be merye 3068
 And thanken Juppiter of al his grace?
 And er that we departen from this place,
 I rede that we make of sorwes two

O parfit joye, lastyng everemo.

3072

And looketh now, wher moost sorwe is herinne,
Ther wol we first amenden and bigynne.

'Suster,' quod he, 'this is my fulle assent,

With all thavys heere of my parlement,

3076

That gentil Palamon, thyn owene knyght,

That serveth yow with wille, herte, and myght,

And evere hath doon, syn that ye first hym knewe,

That ye shul of your grace upon hym rewe,

3080

And taken hym for housbonde and for lord.

Lene me youre hond, for this is oure accord;

Lat se now of youre wommanly pitee.

He is a kynges brother sone, pardee;

3084

And though he were a poure bacheler,

Syn he hath served yow so many a yeer,

And had for yow so greet adversitee,

It moste been considered, leeveth me;

3088

For gentil mercy oghte to passen right.'

Thanne seyde he thus to Palamon ful right:

'I trowe ther nedeth litel sermonyng

To make yow assente to this thyng.

3092

Com neer, and taak youre lady by the hond.'

Bitwixen hem was maad anon the bond

That highte matrimoigne, or mariage,

By al the conseil and the baronage

3096

And thus, with alle blisse and melodye,

Hath Palamon ywedded Emelye.

And God, that al this wyde world hath wroght,

Sende hym his love that it deere aboght;

3100

For now is Palamon in alle wele,

Lyvyng in blisse, in riches, and in heele;

And Emelye hym loveth so tendrely,

And he hire serveth al so gentilly

3104

That nevere was ther no word hem bitwene

Of jalousie or any oother tene.

Thus endeth Palamon and Emelye;

And God save al this faire compaignye!

3108

Amen

Heere is ended the Knyghtes tale.

Heere folwen the words bitwene the Hoost and the Millere.

Whan that the Knyght had thus his tale ytoold,
In al the route ne was ther yong ne oold
That he ne seyde it was a noble storie,
And worthy for to drawn to memorie, 3112
And namely the gentils everichon.

Oure Hooste lough and swoor, 'So moot I gon,
This gooth aright; unboked is the male.
Lat se now who shal telle another tale; 3116
For trewely the game is wel bigonne.
Now telleth on, sire Monk, if that ye konne,
Sumwhat to quite with the Knyghtes tale.'

The Millere, that for dronken was al pale 3120
So that unnethe upon his hors he sat,
He nolde avalen neither hood ne hat,
Ne abyde no man for his curteisie;
But in Pilates voys he gan to crie, 3124
And swoor 'By armes and by blood and bones,
I kan a noble tale for the nones,
With which I wol now quite the Knyghtes tale.'

Oure Hooste saugh that he was dronke of ale, 3128
And seyde, 'Abyd, Robyn, my leeve brother;
Som better man shal telle us first another.
Abyde, and lat us werken thriftily.'

'By Goddes soule,' quod he, 'that wol nat I; 3132
For I wol speke, or elles go my wey.'

Oure Hoost answerde, 'Tel on, a devele wey!
Thou art a fool; thy wit is overcome.'

'Now herkneþ,' quod the Millere, 'alle and some! 3136
But first I make a protestacioun

That I am dronke — I knowe it by my soun —
And therfore if that I mysspeke or seye, 3140
Wyte it the ale of Southwerk, I you preye;

For I wol telle a legende and a lyf
Bothe of a carpenter and of his wyf,
How that a clerk hath set the wrightes cappe.'

The Reve answerde and seyde, 'Stynt thy clappe! 3144

Lat be thy lewed, dronken harlotrye!
 It is a synne and eek a greet folye
 To apeyren any man or hym defame,
 And eek to bryngen wyves in swich fame. 3148
 Thou mayst ynogh of othere thynges seyn.
 This dronke Millere spak ful soone ageyn
 And seyde, 'Leve brother Osewold,
 Who hath no wyf, he is no cokewold. 3152
 But I say nat therfore that thou art oon.
 Ther been ful goode wyves many oon;
 And evere a thousand goode ayeyns oon badde,
 That knowestow wel thyself but-if thou madde. 3156
 Why artow angry with my tale now?
 I have a wyf, pardee, as wel as thou;
 Yet nolde I for the oxen in my plogh
 Take upon me moore than ynogh 3160
 As demen of myself that I were oon.
 I wol bileve wel that I am noon.
 An housbonde shal nat been inquisityf
 Of goddes pryvetee nor of his wyf.' 3164

 What sholde I moore seyn but this Millere
 He nolde his wordes for no man forbere, 3168
 But tolde his cherles tale in his manere.
 Mathynketh that I shal reherce it heere;
 And therfore every gentil wight I preye,
 For Goddes love demeth nat that I seye 3172
 Of yvel entente, but that I moot reherce
 Hir tales alle, be they bettre or werse,
 Or elles falsen som of my mateere.
 And therfore whoso list it nat yheere 3176
 Turne over the leef and chese another tale;
 For he shal fynde ynowe grete and smale
 Of storial thyng that toucheth gentillesse,
 And eek moralitee and hoolynesse. 3180
 Blameth nat me if that ye chese amys;
 The Millere is a cherl, ye knowe wel this;
 So was the Reve and othere manye mo;
 And harlotrie they tolden bothe two. 3184

Avyseth yow; putteth me out of blame.
And eek men shal nat maken ernest of game.

[For remarks on the Miller's Tale and the reasons for its omission from the selections see the Notes. The tale is brilliantly written, as the following specimens will show.]

Heere bigynneth the Millere his tale.

Whilom ther was dwellynge at Oxenford
A riche gnof, that gestes heeld to bord;	3188
And of his craft he was a carpenter.
With hym ther was dwellynge a poure scoler
Hadde lerned art, but al his fantasye
Was turned for to lerne astrologye;	3192
And koude a certeyn of conclusions,
To demen by interrogacions,
If that men asked hym in certein houres,
Whan that men sholde have droghte or elles shoures,	3196
Of if men asked hym what sholde bifalle
Of every thyng; I may nat rekene hem alle.
This clerk was cleped hende Nicholas.
Of deerne love he koude, and of solas;	3200
And therto he was sleigh, and ful privee,
And lyk a mayden, meke for to see.
A chambre hadde he in that hostelrye,
Allone, withouten any compaignye,	3204
Ful fetisly ydight with herbes swoote;
And he hymself as sweete as is the roote
Of lycorys or any cetewale.
His Almageste, and bookes grete and smale,	3208
His astrelabie longynge for his art,
His augrym stones layen faire apart
On shelves, couched at his beddes heed;
His presse ycovered with a faldyng reed.	3212
And all above ther lay a gay sautrie,
On which he made a-nyghtes melodie
So swetely that al the chambre rong;
And Angelus ad virginem he song;	3216
And after that he song The Kynges Noot .

Ful often blessed was his myrie throte.
And thus this sweete clerk his tyme spent,
After his freendes fyndyng and his rente.

3220

This Carpenter hadde wedded newe a wyf,
Which that he lovede moore than his lyf.
Of eighteteene yeer she was of age.

Jalous he was, and heeld hire narwe in cage,
For she was yong and wylde, and he was old,
And demed hymself been lik a cokewold.

3224

He knew nat Catoun — for his wit was rude —
That bad man sholde wedde his simylitude.

3228

Men sholde wedden after hire estaat,
For youthe and elde is often at debaat.
But sith that he was fallen in the snare,
He moste endure, as oother folk, his care.

3232

Fair was this yonge wyf, and therwithal
As any wezele hir body gent and smal.

A ceynt she werede, ybarred al of silk;

A barmclooth as whit as morne milk

3236

Upon hir lendes, ful of many a goore.

Whit was hir smok, and broyden al bifoore

And eek bihynde on hir coler aboute

Of colblak silk, withinne and eek withoute.

3240

The tapes of hir white voluper

Were of the same suyte of hir coler;

Hir filet brood of silk and set ful hye.

And sikerly she hadde a likerous eye;

3244

Ful smale ypulled were hire browes two,

And tho were bent, and blake as any sloo.

She was ful moore blisful on to see

Than is the newe perejonette tree,

3248

And softer than the wolfe is of a wether.

And by hir girdel heeng a purs of lether,

Tasseled with grene and perled with latoun.

In al this world, to seken up and doun,

3252

There was no man so wys that koude thenche

So gay a popelote, or swich a wenche.

Ful brighter was the shynyng of hir hewe

Than in the tour the noble yforged newe.

3256

But of hir song, it was as loude and yerne
 As any swalwe sittynge on a berne.
 Therto she koude skippe, and make game,
 As any kyde or calf folwynge his dame. 3260
 Hir mouth was sweete as bragot, or the meeth,
 Or hoord of apples leyd in hey or heeth.
 Wynsynge she was, as is a joly colt;
 Long as a mast, and uprighte as a bolt. 3264
 A brooch sche baar upon hir lowe coler
 As brood as is the boos of a bokeler;
 Hir shoes were laced on hir legges hye.
 She was a prymerole, a piggesnye, 3268
 For any lord to leggen in his bedde,
 Or yet for any good yeman to wedde.

.
 Thanne fil it thus that to the paryssh chirche,
 Cristes owene werkes for to wirche, 3308
 This goode wyf went on an haliday.
 Hir forheed shoon as bright as any day,
 So was it wasshen whan she leet hir werk.
 Now was ther of that chirche a parissh clerk 3312
 The which that was ycleped Absolon.
 Crul was his heer, and as the gold it shoon,
 And strouted as a fanne large and brode;
 Ful streight and evene lay his joly shode. 3316
 His rode was reed; hise eyen greye as goos.
 With Powles wyndow corven on his shoos,
 In hoses rede he wente fetisly.
 Yclad he was, ful smal and proprely, 3320
 Al in a kirtel of a lyght waget;
 Ful faire and thikke been the poyntes set;
 And ther-upon he hadde a gay surplys,
 As whit as is the blosme upon the rys. 3324
 A myrie child he was, so God me save!
 Wel koude he laten blood and clippe and shave,
 And maken a chartre of lond or acquitaunce.
 In twenty manere koude he trippe and daunce, 3328
 After the scole of Oxenforde tho,
 And with his legges casten to and fro;

And pleyen songes on a small rubible.
 Therto he song somtyme a loud quynnyble, 3332
 And as wel koude he pleye on his giterne.
 In al the toun nas brewhous ne taverne
 That he ne visited with his solas,
 Ther any gaylard tappestere was. 3336

.
 This Absolon, that jolif was and gay,
 Gooth with a sencer on the haliday, 3340
 Sensynge the wyves of the parisshe faste,
 And many a lovely look on hem he caste,
 And namely on this carpenteris wyf.
 To loke on hire hym thoughte a myrie lyf; 3344
 She was so propre, and sweete, and likerous,
 I dar wel seyn if she hadde been a mous
 And he a cat, he wold hire hente anon.

The prologe of the Reves Tale.

Whan folk hadde laughen at this nyce cas
 Of Absolon and hende Nicholas, 3856
 Diverse folk diversely they seyde,
 But for the moore part they loughed and pleyde.
 Ne at this tale I saugh no man hym greve
 But it were oonly Osewold the Reve. 3860
 Bycause he was of carpenteris craft,
 A litel ire is in his herte ylaft;
 He gan to grucche, and blamed it a lite.
 'So theek,' quod he, 'ful wel koude I yow quite 3864
 With bleryng of a proud milleres eye,
 If that me liste speke of ribaudye.
 But ik am oold; me list no pley for age.
 Gras tyme is doon, my fodder is now forage; 3868
 This white top writeth myne olde yeris;
 Myn herte is mowled also as myne heris.

.
 Foure gleedes han we, whiche I shal devyse —
 Avauntynge, liyng, anger, coveitise. 3884

Thise foure sparkles longen unto eelde;
 Oure olde lemes mowe wel been unweelde,
 But wyl ne shal nat faillen, that is sooth.
 And yet ik have alwey a coltes tooth, 3888
 As many a yeer as it is passed henne
 Syn that my tappe of lif bigan to renne.
 For sikerly, whan I was bore, anon
 Deeth drough the tappe of lyf and leet it gon; 3892
 And ever sithe hath so the tappe yronne
 Til that almost al empty is the tonne.
 The streem of lyf now droppeth on the chymbe.
 The sely tonge may wel rynge and chymbe 3896
 Of wrecchednesse that passed is ful yoore;
 With olde folk, save dotage, is namoore.'
 Whan that oure Hoost hadde herd this sermonyng,
 He gan to speke as lordly as a kyng. 3900
 He seide, 'What amounteth al this wit?
 What shul we speke alday of hooly writ?
 The devel made a reve for to preche,
 And of a soutere shipman or a leche. 3904
 Sey forth thy tale, and tarie nat the tyme.
 Lo Depeford, and it is half wey pryme;
 Lo Grenewych, ther many a shrewe is inne.
 It were al tyme thy tale to bigynne.' 3908
 'Now sires,' quod this Osewold the Reve,
 'I pray yow alle that ye nat yow greve
 Thogh I answeere and somdeel sette his howve;
 For leveful is with force force of-showve. 3912
 'This dronke Millere hath ytoold us heer
 How that bigyled was a carpenteer —
 Peraventure in scorn, for I am oon.
 And by youre leve, I shal him quite anoon; 3916
 Right in his cherles termes wol I speke.
 I pray to God his nekke mote breke!
 He kan wel in myn eye seen a stalke,
 But in his owene he kan nat seen a balke.' 3920

Heere bigynneth the Reves Tale.

At Trumpyngton, nat fer fro Cantebrigge,
 Ther gooth a brook, and over that a brigge,
 Upon the whiche brook ther stant a melle;
 And this is verray sooth that I yow telle: 3924
 A millere was ther dwellynge many a day.
 As eny pecok he was proud and gay;
 Pipen he koude, and fissue, and nettes beete,
 And turne coppes, and wel wrastle and sheete. 3928
 And by his belt he baar a long panade,
 And of a swerd ful trenchant was the blade.
 A joly poppere baar he in his pouche —
 Ther was no man, for peril, dorste hym touche — 3932
 A Sheffield thwitel baar he in his hose.
 Round was his face, and camuse was his nose;
 As piled as an ape was his skulle.
 He was a market betere atte fulle. 3936
 Ther dorste no wight hand upon hym legge,
 That he ne swoor he sholde anon abegge.
 A theef he was of corn and eek of mele,
 And that a sly, and usaunt for to stele. 3940
 His name was hoote deynous Symkyn.
 A wyf he hadde ycomen of noble kyn —
 The person of the toun hir fader was.
 With hire he yaf ful many a panne of bras 3944
 For that Symkyn sholde in his blood allye.
 She was yfostred in a nonnerye;
 For Symkyn wolde no wyf, as he sayde,
 But-if she were wel ynorissed and a mayde, 3948
 To saven his estaat of yomanrye.
 And she was proud and peert as is a pye.
 A ful fair sighte was it upon hem two
 On haly dayes; biforn hire wolde he go, 3952
 With his typet bounde about his heed,
 And she cam after in a gyte of reed;
 And Symkyn hadde hosen of the same.
 Ther dorste no wight clepen hire but 'Dame'; 3956
 Was noon so hardy that wente by the weye

- That with hire dorste rage or ones pleye
 But-if he wolde be slayn of Symkyn
 With panade, or with knyf, or boidekyn; 3960
 For jalous folk ben perilous everemo —
 Algate, they wolde hire wyves wenden so.
 And eek, for she was somdel smoterlich,
 She was as digne as water in a dich — 3964
 As ful of hoker and of bismare.
 Hir thoughte that a lady sholde hire spare,
 What for hire kynrede, and hir nortelrie
 That she hadde lerned in the nonnerie. 3968
 A doghter hadde they bitwixe hem two,
 Of twenty yeer, withouten any mo,
 Savynge a child that was of half yeer age —
 In cradel it lay and was a propre page. 3972
 This wenche thikke and wel ygrowen was,
 With kamuse nose, and eyen greye as glas,
 Buttokes brode, and brestes rounde and hye;
 But right fair was hire heer, I wol nat lye. 3976
 This person of the toun, for she was feir,
 In purpos was to maken hire his heir,
 Bothe of his catel and of his mesuage;
 And straunge he made it of hir mariage. 3980
 His purpos was for to bistowe hire hye
 Into som worthy blood of auncetrye;
 For hooly chirches good moot been despended
 On hooly chirches blood that is descended; 3984
 Therfore he wolde his hooly blood honoure,
 Though that he hooly chirche sholde devoure.
 Gret sokene hath this millere, out of doute,
 With whete and malt of al the land aboute; 3988
 And nameliche ther was a greet collegge,
 Men clepen the Soler Halle at Cantebregge;
 Ther was hir whete and eek hir malt ygrounde.
 And on a day it happed in a stounde, 3992
 Sik lay the maunciple on a maladye —
 Men wenden wisly that he sholde dye —
 For which this millere stal bothe mele and corn
 An hundred tyme moore than biforn; 3996

For ther biforn he stal but curteisly,
 But now he was a theef outrageously;
 For which the wardeyn chidde and made fare,
 But therof sette the millere nat a tare; 4000
 He craketh boost and swoor it was nat so.

Thanne were ther yonge poure clerkes two
 That dwelten in this halle of which I seye.
 Testif they were and lusty for to pleye; 4004
 And oonly for hire myrthe and revelrye
 Upon the wardeyn bisily they crye,
 To yeve hem leve, but a litel stounde,
 To goon to mille and seen hir corn ygrounde; 4008
 And hardily they dorste leye hir nekke
 The millere shold nat stele hem half a pekke
 Of corn by sleighte, ne by force hem reve.
 And at the laste the wardeyn yaf hem leve. 4012
 John highte that oon, and Aleyn heet that oother;
 Of o toun were they born, that highte Strother,
 Fer in the north, I kan nat telle where.

This Aleyn maketh redy al his gere, 4016
 And on an hors the sak he caste anon.
 Forth goth Aleyn the clerk and also John,
 With good swerd and bokeler by hir side.
 John knew the wey — hem nedede no gyde — 4020
 And at the mille the sak adoun he layth.
 Aleyn spak first: 'Al hayl, Symond, yfayth!
 Hou fares thy faire doghter and thy wyf?'

'Aleyn, welcome,' quod Symkyn, 'by my lyf!
 And John also! how now? what do ye heer?' 4024

'Symond,' quod John, 'by God, nede has na peer;
 Hym boes serve hymselfe that has na swayn,
 Or elles he is a fool, as clerkes sayn. 4028

Oure manciple, I hope, he wil be deed,
 Swa werkes ay the wanges in his heed;
 And forthy is I come, and eek Alayn,
 To grynde oure corn and carie it ham agayn. 4032

I pray yow spede us heythen, that ye may.'
 'It shal be doon,' quod Symkyn, 'by my fay.
 What wol ye doon whil that it is in hande?'

- 'By God, right by the hopur wil I stande,' 4036
Quod John, 'and se how that the corn gas in.
Yet saugh I nevere, by my fader kyn,
How that the hopur waggis til and fra.'
Aleyn answerde: 'John, and wiltow swa? 4040
Thanne wil I be bynethe, by my croun,
And se how that the mele falles down
Into the trough; that sal be my disport —
For, John, yfaith, I may been of youre sort; 4044
I is as ille a millere as are ye.'
- This millere smyled of hir nycetee,
And thoghte, 'Al this nys doon but for a wyle;
They wene that no man may hem bigile. 4048
But by my thrift, yet shal I blere hir eye,
For al the sleighte in hir philosophye!
The moore queynte crekes that they make,
The moore wol I stele, whan I take. 4052
Instide of flour yet wol I yeve hem bren:
"The gretteste clerkes been noght wisest men,"
As whilom to the wolf thus spak the mare.
Of al hir art ne counte I noght a tare.' 4056
- Out at the dore he gooth ful pryvely.
Whan that he saugh his tyme, softly.
He looketh up and down til he hath founde
The clerkes hors, ther-as it stood ybounde, 4060
Bihynde the millë under a lefsel,
And to the hors he goth hym faire and wel;
He strepeth of the brydel right anon.
And whan the hors was laus, he gynneth gon 4064
Toward the fen, ther wilde mares renne
Forth with 'wehee!' thurgh thikkë and thurgh thenne.
- This millere gooth agayn; no word he seyde,
But dooth his note, and with the clerkes pleyde, 4068
Til that hir corn was faire and weel ygrounde.
And whan the mele is sakked and ybounde,
This John goth out and fynt his hors away;
And gan to crie, 'harrow!' and 'weylaway!' 4072
'Oure hors is lorn! Alayn, for Goddes banes,
Stepe on thy feet! Com out, man, al atanes

Allas, our wardeyn has his palfrey lorn!
 This Aleyn al forgat bothe mele and corn; 4076
 Al was out of his mynde his housbondrie.
 'What! whilk way is he geen?' he gan to crie.
 The wyf cam lepyng in ward with a ren;
 She seyde, 'Allas! youre hors goth to the fen 4080
 With wilde mares as faste as he may go.
 Unthank come on his hand that boond hym so,
 And he that bettre sholde han knyght the reyne!'

'Allas,' quod John, 'Aleyn, for Cristes peyne, 4084
 Lay doun thy swerd, and I wil myn alswa.
 I is ful wight, God waat, as is a raa.
 By Goddes herte! he sal nat scape us bathe.
 Why nadstow pit the capul in the lathe? 4088
 Ilhayl! by God, Aleyn, thou is a fonnel!'

This sely clerkes han ful faste yronne
 Toward the fen, bothe Aleyn and eek John.
 And whan the millere saugh that they were gon, 4092
 He half a busshel of hir flour hath take,
 And bad his wyf go knede it in a cake.
 He seyde, 'I trowe the clerkes were aferd.
 Yet kan a millere make a clerkes berd 4096
 For al his Art. Now lat hem goon hir weye.
 Lo, wher they goon! Ye, lat the children pleye;
 They gete hym nat so lightly, by my croun!'

Thise sely clerkes rennen up and doun 4100
 With 'Keepe! keepe! stand! stand! Jossa, warderere!
 Ga whistle, thou; and I shal kepe hym heere.'
 But shortly, til that it was verray nyght,
 They koude nat, though they do al hir myght, 4104
 Hir capul cacche — he ran alwey so faste —
 Til in a dych they caughte hym atte laste.

[The brilliantly written but vulgar tale of the Reeve is omitted from these selections. See the Notes.]

The prologe of the Cokes Tale.

The Cook of London, whil that the Reve spak,
 For joye him thoughte he clawed him on the bak.
 'Ha! ha!' quod he, 'for Cristes passion!
 This millere hadde a sharpe conclusion 4328
 Upon his argument of herbergage.
 Wel seyde Salomon in his langage
 "Ne brynge nat every man into thyn hous,"
 For herberwyng by nyghte is perilous. 4332
 Wel oghte a man avysed for to be
 Whom that he broghte into his pryvetee.
 I pray to God, so yeve me sorwe and care,
 If evere, sithe I highte Hogge of Ware, 4336
 Herde I a millere bettre yset a werk;
 He hadde a jape of malice in the derk.
 But God forbede that we stynte heere;
 And therfore if ye vouche sauf to heere 4340
 A tale of me, that am a poure man,
 I wol yow telle, as wel as evere I kan,
 A litel jape that fil in oure citee.'
 Oure Hoost answerde and seide, 'I graunte it thee. 4344
 Now telle on, Roger; looke that it be good;
 For many a pastee hastow laten blood,
 And many a Jakke of Dovere hastow soold,
 That hath been twies hoot and twies coold; 4348
 Of many a pilgrym hastow Cristes curs,
 For of thy percely yet they fare the wors,
 That they han eten with thy stubbel goos;
 For in thy shoppe is many a flye loos. 4352
 Now telle on, gentil Roger, by thy name!
 But yet, I pray thee, be nat wroth for game;
 A man may seye ful sooth in game and pley.'
 'Thou seist ful sooth,' quod Roger, 'by my fey, 4356
 But "sooth pley, quaad pley," as the Flemyng seith.
 And therfore, Herry Bailly, by thy feith,
 Be thou nat wrooth, er we departen heer,
 Though that my tale be of an hostileer. 4360
 But nathelees I wol nat telle it yit;

But er we parte, ywis thou shalt be quit.
And therwithal, he lough, and made cheere,
And seyde his tale, as ye shul after heere.

4364

Heere bigynneth the Cookes Tale.

A prentys whilom dwelled in oure citee,
And of a craft of vitailliers was hee.
Gaillard he was as goldfynch in the shawe;
Broun as a berye, a propre, short felawe, 4368
With lokkes blake, ykempd ful fetisly.
Dauncen he koude so wel and jolily
That he was cleped Perkyn revelour.
He was as ful of love and paramour 4372
As is the hyve ful of hony sweete;
Wel was the wenche with hym myghte meete.
At every bridale wolde he synge and hoppe;
He loved bet the taverne than the shoppe; 4376
For whan ther any ridyng was in Chepe,
Out of the shoppe thider wolde he lepe.
Til that he hadde al the sighte yseyn
And daunced wel, he wolde nat come ayeyn. 4380
And gadered hym a meynee of his sort,
To hoppe and synge, and maken swich disport.
And ther they setten stevene for to meete,
To playen at the dys, in swich a streete; 4384
For in the toun ne was ther no prentys
That fairer koude caste a paire of dys
Than Perkyn koude, and therto he was free
Of his dispense, in place of pryvetee. 4388
That fond his maister wel in his chaffare;
For often tyme he foond his box ful bare.
For sikerly a prentys revelour,
That haunteth dys, riot, or paramour, 4392
His maister shal it in his shoppe aby,
Al have he no part of the mynstralcy.
For thefte and riot, they been convertible,
Al konne he pleye on gyterne or ribible; 4396
Revel and trouthe, as in a lowe degree,

They been ful wrothe al day, as men may see.

This joly prentys with his maister bood
Til he were ny out of his prentishood, 4400

Al were he synbbed bothe erly and late,
And somtyme lad with revel to Newegate.

But atte laste his maister hym bithoghte —
Upon a day, whan he his papir soghte — 4404

Of a proverbe that seith this same word:

‘Wel bet is roten appul out of hoord

Than that it rotie al the remenaunt.’

So fareth it by a riotous servaunt; 4408

It is wel lasse harm to lete hym pace

Than he shende alle the servantz in the place.

Therefore his maister yaf hym acquitance,
And bad hym go, with sorwe, and with meschance! 4412

And thus this joly prentys hadde his leve.

Now lat hym riote al the nyght or leve!

And — for ther is no theef withoute a lowke,

That helpeth hym to wasten and to sowke 4416

Of that he brybe kan, or borwe may —

Anon he sente his bed and his array

Unto a compier of his owene sort

That lovede dys, and revel, and disport. 4420

.
[Chaucer seems to have left this tale unfinished.]

[FRAGMENT II (GROUP B¹)

MAN OF LAW'S HEAD-LINK]

The wordes of the Hoost to the compaignye.

Oure Hooste saugh wel that the brighte sonne
 The ark of his artificial day hath ronne
 The ferthe part and half an houre and moore;
 And though he were nat depe ystert in loore,
 He wiste it was the eightetenthe day
 Of Aprill, that is messenger to May;
 And saugh wel that the shadwe of every tree
 Was as in lengthe the same quantitee 8
 That was the body erect that caused it;
 And therfore by the shadwe he took his wit
 That Phebus, which that shoon so clere and brighte,
 Degrees was fyve and fourty clombe on highte; 12
 And for that day, as in that latitute,
 It was ten of the klokke he gan conclude.
 And sodeynly he plighte his hors aboute —
 'Lordynges,' quod he, 'I warne yow, al this route, 16
 The fourthe party of this day is gon.
 Now for the love of God and of Seint John,
 Leseth no tyme, as ferforth as ye may.
 Lordynges, the tyme wasteth nyght and day, 20
 And steleth from us, what pryvely slepynge,
 And what thurgh negligence in oure wakyng,
 As dooth the stream that turneth nevere agayn,
 Descendynge fro the montaigne into playn. 24
 'Wel kan Senec and many a philosophre
 Biwaillen tyme moore than gold in cofre;
 For "Losse of catel may recovered be
 But losse of tyme shendeth us," quod he. 28
 It wol nat come agayn; with-outen drede,
 Namooore than wole Malkynes maydenhede

Whan she hath lost it in hir wantownesse.
 Lat us nat mowlen thus in ydelnesse. 32
 'Sire Man of Lawe,' quod he, 'so have ye blis,
 Telle us a tale anon, as forward is.
 Ye been submytted thurgh youre free assent
 To stonden in this cas at my juggement; 36
 Acquiteth yow now of youre biheeste,
 Thanne have ye do youre devoir atte leeste.'
 'Hooste,' quod he, 'depardieux, ich assente;
 To breke forward is nat myn entente. 40
 "Biheste is dette," and I wole holde fayn
 Al my biheste; I kan no better sayn.
 For swich lawe as a man yeveth another wight,
 He sholde hymselfen usen it, by right. 44
 Thus wole oure text, but nathelees certeyn
 I kan right now no thrifty tale seyn
 That Chaucer, thogh he kan but lewedly
 On metres and on rymyng craftily, 48
 Hath seyde hem in swich Englissh as he kan
 Of olde tyme, as knoweth many a man.
 And if he have noght seyde hem, leve brother,
 In o book, he hath seyde hem in another; 52
 For he hath toold of loveris up and doun
 Mo than Ovide made of mencion
 In hise Epistles, that been ful olde.
 What sholde I tellen hem, syn they ben tolde? 56
 In youthe he made of Ceys and Alcione;
 And sitthen hath he spoken of everichone
 Thise noble wyves and thise loveris eke.
 Whoso that wole his large volume seke 60
 Cleped the Seintes Legende of Cupide,
 Ther may he seen the large woundes wyde
 Of Lucesse and of Babilan Tesbee;
 The swerd of Dido for the false Enee; 64
 The tree of Phillis for hire Demophon;
 The pleinte of Diane and of Hermyon,
 Of Adriane and of Isiphilee —
 The bareyne yle stondynge in the see; 68
 The dreynte Leandre for his Erro;

The teeris of Eleyne; and the wo
 Of Brixseyde and of the, Ladomya;
 The crueltee of the, queene Medea — 72
 Thy litel children hangynge by the hals —
 For thy Jason, that was in love so fals.
 O Ypermystra, Penolopee, Alceste,
 Youre wifhede he comendeth with the beste. 76
 But certainly no word ne writeth he
 Of thilke wikke ensample of Canacee,
 That loved hir owene brother synfully —
 Of swiche cursed stories I sey fy! — 80
 Or ellis of Tyro Appollonius,
 How that the cursed kyng Antiochus
 Birafted his doghter of hir maydenhede —
 That is so horrible a tale for to rede, 84
 Whan he hir threw upon the pavement.
 And therfore he, of ful avysement,
 Nolde nevere write in none of his sermons
 Of swiche unkynde abhomynacions. 88
 Ne I wol noon reherce, if that I may.
 But of my tale how shall I doon this day?
 Me were looth be likned, doutelees,
 To Muses that men clepe Pierides — 92
Metamorphosios woot what I mene —
 But nathelees I recche noght a bene
 Though I come after hym with hawebake.
 I speke in prose; and lat him rymes make. 96
 And with that word he with a sobre cheere
 Bigan his tale as ye shal after heere.

The prologe of the Mannes Tale of Lawe

O hateful harm! condicion of poverté! 99
 With thurst, with coold, with hunger so confoundid,
 To asken help thee shameth in thyn herte;
 If thou noon aske, so soore artow ywoundid 102
 That verray nede unwrappeth al thy wounde hid.
 Maugree thyn heed, thou most for indigence
 Or stele or begge or borwe thy despence. 105

Thow blamest Crist and seist ful bitterly
 He mysdeparteth richesse temporal;
 Thy neighebores thou wytest synfully,
 And seist thou hast to lite and he hath al. 109
 'Parfay!' seistow, 'sometyme he rekene shal,
 Whan that his tayl shal brennen in the gleede,
 For he noght helpeth needfulle in hir neede!' 112

Herke what is the sentence of the wise:
 'Bet is to dyen than have indigence;
 Thy selve neighebor wol thee despise.
 If thou be poure, farwel thy reverence.' 116
 Yet of the wise man take this sentence:
 'Alle dayes of poure men been wikke.'
 Be war therfore er thou come to that prikke. 119

'If thou be poure, thy brother hateth thee,
 And alle thy freendes fleen from thee, allas!
 O riche marchauntz, ful of wele been yee!
 O noble, o prudent folk! as in this cas, 123
 Youre bagges been nat fild with ambes as,
 But with sys cynk, that renneth for youre chaunce;
 At Cristemasse myrie may ye daunce. 126

Ye seken lond and see for yowre wynnynges;
 As wise folk ye knowen all thestaat
 Of regnes; ye been fadres of tidynges
 And tales, bothe of pees and of debaat 130
 I were right now of tales desolaat,
 Nere that a marchant, goon is many a yeere,
 Me taughte a tale, which that ye shal heere. 133

Heere begynneth the Man of Lawe his Tale.

In Surrye whilom dwelte a compaignye
 Of chapmen riche, and therto sadde and trewe,
 That wyde-where senten hir spicerye —
 Clothes of gold, and satyns riche of hewe. 137
 Hir chaffare was so thrifty and so newe
 That every wight hath deyntee to chaffare
 With hem and eek to sellen hem hire ware. 140

Now fil it that the maistres of that sort
Han shapen hem to Rome for to wende,
Were it for chapmanhode or for disport;
Noon oother message wolde they thider sende, 144
But comen hemself to Rome, this is the ende.
And in swich place as thoughte hem advantage
For hire entente they take hir herbergage. 147

Sojourned han thise marchantz in that toun
A certain tyme, as fil to hire plesance.
And so bifel that the excellent renoun
Of the emperoures doghter, Dame Custance, 151
Reported was with every circumstance
Unto thise Surryen marchantz in swich a wyse,
Fro day to day, as I shal yow devyse. 154

This was the commune voys of every man:
'Oure emperour of Rome — God hym see! —
A doghter hath, that syn the world bigan,
To rekene as wel hir goodnesse as beautee, 158
Nas nevere swich another as is shee.
I prey to God, in honour hire susteene;
And wolde she were of all Europe the queene!

'In hire is heigh beautee, withoute pride;
Yowthe, withoute grenehede or folye;
To alle hire werkes vertu is hir gyde;
Humblesse hath slayn in hire al tirannye; 165
She is mirour of alle curteisye;
Hir herte is verray chambre of hoolynesse;
Hir hand, ministre of fredam for almesse! 168

And al this voys was sooth, as God is trewe.
But now to purpos lat us turne agayn.
Thise marchantz han doon fraught hir shippes newe;
And whan they han this blisful mayden sayn, 172
Hoom to Surrye been they went ful fayn,
And doon hir nedes as they han doon yoore,
And lyven in wele; I kan sey yow namoore. 175

Now fil it that thise marchantz stode in grace
 Of hym that was the sowdan of Surrye;
 For whan they cam from any strange place,
 He wolde of his benigne curteisye 179
 Make hem good chiere and bisily espye
 Tidynge of sondry regnes, for to leere
 The wondres that they myghte seen or heere. 182

Amonges othere thynges specially,
 Thise marchantz han hym toold of Dame Custance
 So greet noblesse, in earnest, ceriously,
 That this sowdan hath caught so greet plesance 186
 To han hir figure in his remembrance
 That all his lust and al his bisy cure
 Was for to love hire while his lyf may dure. 189

Paraventure in thilke large book
 Which that men clipe the hevene ywriten was
 With sterres, whan that he his birthe took,
 That he for love sholde han his deeth, alas! 193
 For in the sterres, clerer than is glas,
 Is writen, God woot, whoso koude it rede,
 The deeth of every man, withouten drede. 196

In sterres many a wynter ther biforn
 Was writen the deeth of Ector, Achilles,
 Of Pompei, Julius, er they were born;
 The strif of Thebes; and of Ercules, 200
 Of Sampson, Turnus, and of Socrates,
 The deeth; but mennes wittes ben so dulle
 That no wight kan wel rede it atte fulle. 203

This sowdan for his privee conseil sente;
 And shortly of this matiere for to pace,
 He hath to hem declared his entente,
 And seyde hem certain but he myghte have grace 207
 To han Custance withinne a litel space,
 He nas but deed; and charged hem in hye
 To shapen for his lyf som remedye. 210

Diverse men diverse thynges seyden;
 They argumenten, casten up and doun;
 Many a subtil resoun forth they leyden;
 They speken of magyk and abusion; 214
 But finally, as in conclusion,
 They kan nat seen in that noon advantage,
 Ne in noon oother wey save mariage. 217

Thanne sawe they therinne swich difficultee
 By wey of reson — for to speke al playn,
 Because that ther was swich diversitee
 Bitwene hir bothe lawes — that they sayn 221
 They 'trowe that no Cristene prince wolde fayn
 Wedden his child under oure lawes sweete,
 That us were taught by Mahoun, oure prophete.' 224

And he answerde: 'Rather than I lese
 Custance, I wol be cristned, doutelees.
 I moot been hires; I may noon oother chese.
 I prey yow hoold youre argumentz in pees. 228
 Saveth my lyf, and beth noght recchelees
 To geten hire that hath my lyf in cure;
 For in this wo I may nat longe endure.' 231

What nedeth gretter dilatacion?
 I seye, by tretys and embassadrie,
 And by the popes mediacion,
 And al the chirche, and al the chivalrie, 235
 That in destruccion of maumetrie,
 And in encrees of Cristes lawe deere,
 They been acorded so as ye shal heere: 238

How that the sowdan and his baronage
 And alle hise liges sholde ycristned be,
 And he shal han Custance in mariage
 And certein gold, I noot what quantitee; 242
 And heer-to founden sufficient suretee.
 This same accord was sworn on eyther syde.
 Now, faire Custance, almyghty God thee gyde! 245

Now wolde som men waiten, as I gesse,
 That I sholde tellen al the purveiance
 That themperour, of his grete noblesse,
 Hath shapen for his doghter, Dame Custance. 249
 Wel may men knowen that so greet ordinance
 May no man tellen in a litel clause
 As was arrayed for so heigh a cause. 252

Bisshopes been shapen with hire for to wende,
 Lordes, ladies, knyghtes of renoun,
 And oother folk ynogh — this is thende —
 And notified is thurghout the toun 256
 That every wight with greet devocioun
 Sholde preyen Crist that he this mariage
 Receyve in gree, and spede this viage. 259

The day is comen of hir departynge;
 I seye the woful day fatal is come,
 That ther may be no lenger tariynge,
 But forthward they hem dresen, alle and some. 263
 Custance, that was with sorwe al overcome,
 Ful pale arist and dresseth hire to wende;
 For wel she seeth ther is noon oother ende. 266

Allas! what wonder is it thogh she wepte,
 That shal be sent to strange nacion
 Fro freendes that so tendrely hire kepte;
 And to be bounden under subjeccion 270
 Of oon she knoweth nat his condicion?
 Housbondes been alle goode, and han ben yore —
 That knowen wyves; I dar say yow na moore. 273

‘Fader,’ she seyde, ‘thy wrecched child, Custance —
 Thy yonge doghter fostred up so softe —
 And ye, my mooder, my soverayn plesance
 Over alle thyng, out-taken Crist on lofte — 277
 Custance, youre child, hire recomandeth ofte
 Unto your grace, for I shal to Surrye;
 Ne shal I nevere seen yow moore with eye. 280

'Allas, un-to the Barbre nacion
 I moste goon, syn that it is youre wille!
 But Crist, that starf for our savacion,
 So yeve me grace hise heestes to fulfille! 284
 I, wrecche womman, no fors though I spille!
 Wommen are born to thraldom and penance
 And to been under mannes governance.' 287

I trowe at Troye, whan Pirrus brak the wal
 Or Ilion brende, at Thebes the citee,
 Nat Rome for the harm thurgh Hanybal,
 That Romyans hath venquysshed tymes thre, 291
 Nas herd swich tendre wepyng for pitee
 As in the chambre was for hire departynge;
 But forth she moot, wher-so she wepe or synge. 294

O firste moevyng! cruell firmament,
 With thy diurnal sweigh that crowdest ay
 And hurlest al from est til occident,
 That naturelly wolde holde another way! 298
 Thy crowdyng set the hevene in swich array
 At the bigynnyng of this fiers viage
 That cruell Mars hath slayn this mariage. 301

Infortunat ascendent tortuous,
 Of which the lord is helplees falle, allas,
 Out of his angle into the derkeste hous!
 O Mars! O atazir, as in this cas! 305
 O fieble Moone, unhappy been thy paas;
 Thou knytttest thee ther thou art nat receyved;
 Ther thou were weel, fro thennes artow weyved. 308

Imprudent emperour of Rome! allas,
 Was ther no philosophre in al thy toun?
 Is no tyme bet than oother in swich cas?
 Of viage is ther noon eleccion, 312
 Namely to folk of heigh condicion? —
 Noght whan a roote is of a burthe yknowe?
 Allas, we been to lewed or to slowe! 315

To ship is come this woful faire mayde,
Solempnely, with every circumstance.
'Now Jhesu Crist be with yow alle!' she sayde.
Ther nys namoore but 'farewel, faire Custance!' 319
She peyneth hire to make good contenance;
And forth I lete hire saille in this manere,
And turne I wole agayn to my matere. 322

The mooder of the sowdan — welle of vices! —
Espied hath hir sones pleyn entente,
How he wol lete hise olde sacrifices;
And right anon she for hir conseil sente; 326
And they been come to knowe what she mente.
And whan assembled was this folk in feere,
She sette hire down and seyde as ye shal heere: 329

'Lordes,' she seyde, 'ye knowen everichon
How that my sone in point is for to lete
The hooly lawes of oure Alkaron,
Yeven by Goddes message, Makomete. 333
But oon avow to grete God I heete —
The lyf shal rather out of my body sterte
Than Makometes lawe out of myn herte! 336

'What sholde us tyden of this newe lawe
But thraldom to our bodies and penance,
And afterward in helle to be drawe,
For we reneyed Mahoun, oure creance? 340
But lordes, wol ye maken assurance
As I shal seyn, assentyng to my loore,
And I shal make us sauf for everemoore.' 343

They sworn and assenten every man
To lyve with hire and dye, and by hire stonde.
And everich, in the beste wise he kan,
To strengthen hire, shal alle hise frendes fonde. 347
And she hath this emprise ytake on honde
Which ye shal heren that I shal devyse;
And to hem alle she spak right in this wyse: 350

'We shul first feyne us cristendom to take —
Coold water shal nat greve us but a lite! —
And I shal swiche a feeste and revel make
That, as I trowe, I shal the Sowdan quite; 354
For thogh his wyf be cristned never so white,
She shal have nede to wasshe away the rede,
Thogh she a font-ful water with hire lede.' 357

O Sowdanesse, roote of iniquitee!
Virago! thou Semyrame the secounde!
O serpent under femynynytee,
Lik to the serpent depe in helle ybounde! 361
O feyned womman! al that may confounde
Vertu and innocence, thurgh thy malice,
Is bred in thee, as nest of every vice. 364

O Sathan, envious syn thilke day
That thou were chaced from oure heritage!
Wel knowestow to wommen the olde way;
Thou madest Eva brynge us in servage; 368
Thou wolt fordoon this Cristen mariage.
Thyn instrument so — weylawey the while! —
Makestow of wommen, whan thou wolt bigile. 371

This sowdanesse, whom I thus blame and warye, Leet prively hire conseil goon hire way. —
What sholde I in this tale lenger tarye?
She rydeth to the sowdan on a day, 375
And seyde hym that she wolde reneye hir lay,
And cristendom of preestes handes fonge,
Repentyng hire she hethen was so longe; 378

Bisechyng hym to doon hire that honour
That she moste han the Cristen folk to feeste —
'To plesen hem I wol do my labour.'
The sowdan seith, 'I wol doon at youre heeste,' 382
And knelyng thanketh hire of that requeste;
So glad he was he nyste what to seye.
She kiste hir sone, and hoome she gooth hir weye. 385

Explicit prima pars. Sequitur pars secunda.

Arryved been this cristen folk to londe
 In Surrye, with a greet solempne route;
 And hastifliche this sowdan sente his sonde
 First to his mooder, and all the regne aboute, 389
 And seyde his wyf was comen, oute of doute,
 And preyde hire for to ryde agayn the queene,
 The honour of his regne to susteene. 392

Greet was the prees, and riche was tharray,
 Of Surryens and Romainys met yfeere.
 The mooder of the sowdan, riche and gay,
 Recyveth hire with al so glad a cheere 396
 As any mooder myghte hir doghter deere;
 And to the nexte citee ther bisyde,
 A softe paas, solempnely they ryde. 399

Noght trowe I the triumpe of Julius,
 Of which that Lucan maketh swich a boost,
 Was roialler or moore curius
 Than was thassemblee of this blisful hoost; 403
 But this scorpioun, this wikked goost,
 The sowdanesse, for all hire flatteryng,
 Caste under this ful mortally to styng. 406

The sowdan comth hymself soone after this
 So roially that wonder is to telle,
 And welcometh hire with alle joye and blis.
 And thus in murthe and joye I lete hem dwelle; 410
 The fruyt of this matiere is that I telle.
 Whan tyme cam, men thoughte it for the beste
 The revel stynte and men goon to hir reste. 413

The tyme cam this olde sowdanesse
 Ordeyned hath this feeste of which I tolde,
 And to the feeste Cristen folk hem dresse,
 In general, ye, bothe yonge and olde. 417
 Heere may men feeste and roialtee bihold,
 And deyntees mo than I kan yow devyse;
 But all to deere they boghte it er they ryse. 420

O sodeyn wo, that evere art successour
 To worldly blisse, spreynð with bitternesse!
 The ende of the joye of oure worldly labour!
 Wo occupieth the fyn of oure gladnesse. 424
 Herke this conseil, for thy sikernessee:
 Upon thy glade day have in thy mynde
 The unwar wo or harm that comth bihynde. 427

For soothly for to tellen at o word,
 The sowdan and the Cristen everichone
 Been al tohewe and stiked at the bord,
 But it were oonly Dame Custance allone. 431
 This olde sowdanesse — cursed krone! —
 Hath with hir freendes doon this cursed dede,
 For she herself wolde all the contree lede. 434

Ne was Surryen noon that was converted,
 That of the conseil of the sowdan woot,
 That he nas al tohewe er he astarted;
 And Custance han they take anon, foot hoot, 438
 And in a ship, all steerelees, God woot,
 They han hir set, and biddeth hire lerne saille
 Out of Surrye agaynward to Ytaille. 441

A certain tresor that she with hire ladde,
 And, sooth to seyn, vitaille greet plentee
 They han hire yeven; and clothes eek she hadde;
 And forth she sailleth in the salte see. 445
 O my Custance, ful of benignytee!
 O emperoures yonge doghter deere,
 He that is Lord of Fortune be thy steere! 448

She blesseth hire, and with ful pitous voys Unto the croys of Crist thus seyde she:
 'O cleere, O weleful auter, hooly croys,
 Reed of the Lambes blood, ful of pitee, 452
 That wesshe the world fro the olde iniquitee,
 Me fro the feend, and fro his clawes kepe,
 That day that I shall drenchen in the depe! 455

'Victorious tree, proteccion of trewe,
 That oonly worthy were for to bere
 The Kyng of Hevene, with his woundes newe,
 The white Lamb, that hurt was with the spere! 459
 Flemere of feendes out of hym and here
 On which thy lymes feithfully extenden,
 Me helpe, and yif me myght my lyf tamenden!' 462

Yeres and dayes fleteth this creature
 Thurghout the See of Grece unto the Strayte
 Of Marrok, as it was hire aventure.
 On many a sory meel now may she bayte; 466
 After hir deeth ful often may she wayte,
 Er that the wilde wawes wol hire dryve
 Unto the place ther she shal arryve. 469

Men myghten asken why she was nat slayn.
 Eek at the feeste, who myghte hir body save?
 And I answer to that demande agayn,
 Who saved Danyel in the horrible cave, 473
 Ther every wight save he, maister and knave,
 Was with the leon frete er he avertere?
 No wight but God, that he bar in his herte. 476

God liste to shewe his wonderful myracle
 In hire, for we sholde seen his myghty werkis
 Crist, which that is to every harm triacle,
 By certeine meenes ofte, as knowen clerkis, 480
 Dooth thyng for certein ende that ful derk is
 To mannes wit, that, for oure ignorance,
 Ne konne noght knowe his prudent purveiance. 483

Now sith she was nat at the feeste yslawe,
 Who kepte hire fro the drenchyng in the see?
 Who kepte Jonas in the fisshes mawe,
 Til he was spouted up at Nynyvee? 487
 Wel may men knowe it was no wight but He
 That kepte peple Ebrayk from hir drenchyng,
 With drye feet thurgh out the see passyng. 490

Who bad the foure spirites of tempest,
That power han tanoyen lond and see,
Bothe north and south and also west and est,
'Anoyeth neither see, ne land, ne tree'? 494
Soothly the comandour of that was He
That fro the tempest ay this womman kepte,
As wel when she wook as whan she slepte. 497

Where myghte this womman mete and drynkē have?
Thre yeer and moore how lasteth hire vitaille?
Who fedde the Egypcien Marie in the cave,
Or in desert? No wight but Crist, sanz faille. 501
Fyve thousand folk it was as greet mervaille
With loves fyve and fisshes two to feede.
God sente his foysoun at hir grete neede. 504

She dryveth forth into oure occian,
Thurghout oure wilde see, til atte laste
Under an hoold that nempnen I ne kan,
Fer in Northhumberlond, the wawe hire caste. 508
And in the sond hir ship stiked so faste
That thennes wolde it noght of al a tyde;
The wyl of Crist was that she sholde abyde. 511

The constable of the castel doun is fare
To seen this wrak, and al the ship he soghte;
And foond this wery womman, ful of care;
He foond also the tresor that she broghte. 515
In hir langage mercy she bisoghte,
The lyf out of hire body for to twynne,
Hire to delivere of wo that she was inne. 518

A maner Latyn corrupt was hir speche,
But algates therby was she understonde.
The constable, whan hym lyst no lenger seche,
This woful womman broghte he to the londe. 522
She kneleth doun and thanketh Goddes sonde;
But what she was she wolde no man seye,
For foul ne fair, thogh that she sholde deye. 525

She seyde she was so mazed in the see
That she forgat hir mynde, by hir trouthe.
The constable hath of hire so greet pitee,
And eke his wyf, that they wepen for routhe. 529
She was so diligent, withouten slouthe,
To serve and plesen everich in that place
That alle hir loven that looken in hir face. 532

This constable and Dame Hermengyld his wyf
Were payens, and that contree everywhere;
But Hermengyld loved hire right as hir lyf.
And Custance hath so longe sojourned there 536
In orisons, with many a bitter teere,
Til Jesu hath converted thurgh his grace
Dame Hermengyld, constablesse of that place. 539

In al that lond no Cristen dorste route;
Alle Cristen folk been fled fro that contree,
Thurgh payens that conquereden al aboute
The plages of the north by land and see. 543
To Walys fledde the Cristyanytee
Of olde Britons dwellynge in this ile;
Ther was hir refut for the meene while. 546

But yet nere Cristene Britons so exiled
That ther nere somme that in hir privetee
Honoured Crist and hethen folk bigiled.
And ny the castel swiche ther dwelten three. 550
That oon of hem was blynd and myghte nat see,
But it were with thilke eyen of his mynde,
With whiche men seen whan that they ben blynde. 553

Bright was the sonne, as in that someres day,
For which the constable and his wyf also
And Custance han ytake the righte way
Toward the see, a furlong wey or two 557
To pleyen and to romen to and fro.
And in hir walk this blynde man they mette,
Croked and oold, with eyen faste yshette. 560

'In name of Crist,' cride this olde Briton,
'Dame Hermengyld, yif me my sighte agayn!'
This lady weex affrayed of the soun,
Lest that hir housbonde, shortly for to sayn, 564
Wolde hire for Jesu Cristes love han slayn,
Til Custance made hire boold, and bad hire wirche
The wyl of Crist, as doghter of his chirche. 567

The constable weex abasshed of that sight,
And seyde, 'What amounteth all this fare?'
Custance answerde, 'Sire, it is Cristes myght,
That helpeth folk out of the feendes snare.' 571
And so ferforth she gan oure lay declare
That she the Constable, er that it were eve,
Converteth and on Crist maketh hym bileve. 574

This constable was no thyng lord of this place
Of which I speke, ther he Custance fond,
But kepte it strongly many wyntres space
Under Alla, kyng of al Northhumbrelond, 578
That was ful wys and worthy of his hond
Agayn the Scottes, as men may wel heere.
But turne I wole agayn to my mateere. 581

Sathan, that evere us waiteth to bigile,
Saugh of Custance al hire perfeccioun,
And caste anon how he myghte quite hir while; .
And made a yong knyght that dwelte in that toun 585
Love hire so hoote, of foul affeccioun,
That verrailly hym thoughte he sholde spille
But he of hire myghte ones have his wille. 588

He woweth hire, but it availleth noght;
She wolde do no synne, by no weye.
And for despit he compassed in his thoght
To maken hire on shameful deeth to deye. 592
He wayteth whan the constable was awaye,
And pryvely upon a nyght he crepte
In Hermengyldes chambre, whil she slepte. 595

Wery, for-waked in hire orisons, Slepeth Custance and Hermengyld also.
 This knyght, thurgh Sathanas temptacions,
 All softely is to the bed ygo, 599
 And kitte the throte of Hermengyld atwo,
 And leyde the bloody knyf by Dame Custance,
 And wente his wey, ther God yeve hym meschance! 602

Soone after, cometh this constable hoom agayn —
 And eek Alla, that kyng was of that lond —
 And saugh his wyf despitously yslayn;
 For which ful ofte he weep, and wroong his hond. 606
 And in the bed the bloody knyf he fond
 By Dame Custance. Allas, what myghte she seye?
 For verray wo hir wit was al aweye. 609

To kyng Alla was toold al this meschance,
 And eek the tyme, and where, and in what wise,
 That in a ship was founden Dame Custance,
 As heer-biforn that ye han herd devyse. 613
 The kynges herte of pitee gan agryse,
 Whan he saugh so benigne a creature
 Falle in disese and in mysaventure; 616

For as the lomb toward his deeth is broght,
 So stant this innocent bfore the kyng.
 This false knyght that hath this treson wroght
 Berth hire on hond that she hath doon thys thyng. 620
 But nathelees ther was greet moornyng
 Among the peple, and seyn they kan nat gesse
 That she had doon so greet a wikkednesse, 623

For they han seyn hire evere so vertuous,
 And lovyng Hermengyld right as hir lyf.
 Of this baar wisesse everich in that hous,
 Save he that Hermengyld slow with his knyf. 627
 This gentil kyng hath caught a greet motyf
 Of this wisesse, and thoghte he wolde enquere
 Depper in this, a trouthe for to lere. 630

Allas, Custance, thou hast no champion,
Ne fighte kanstow noght, so, weylaway!
But He that starf for our redempcion
And boond Sathan — and yet lith ther he lay — 634
So be thy stronge champion this day;
For but-if Crist open myracle kithe,
Withouten gilt thou shalt be slayn as swithe. 637

She sit hire down on knees, and thus she sayde:
'Immortal God, that savedest Susanne
Fro fals blame, and thou merciful Mayde —
Mary, I meene, doghter to Seint Anne — 641
Bifore whos child angeles synge Osanne,
If I be giltles of this felonye, .
My socour be, or ellis shal I dye. 644

Have ye nat seyn som tyme a pale face
Among a prees, of hym that hath be lad
Toward his deeth, wher-as hym gat no grace,
And swich a colour in his face hath had 648
Men myghte knowe his face that was bistad
Amonges alle the faces in that route?
So stant Custance, and looketh hire aboute. 651

O queenes, lyvyng in prosperitee,
Duchesses, and ladyes everichone,
Haveth som routhe on hire adversitee!
An emperoures doghter stant allone; 655
She hath no wight to whom to make hir mone.
O blood roial, that stondest in this drede,
Fer been thy freendes at thy grete nede. 658

This Alla kyng hath swich compassioun,
As gentil herte is fulfild of pitee,
That from hise eyen ran the water down.
'Now hastily do fecche a book,' quod he, 662
'And if this knyght wol sweren how that she
This womman slow, yet wol we us avyse
Whom that we wole that shal been our justise. 665

A Briton book written with evaungiles
Was fet, and on this book he swoor anoon
She gilty was. And in the meene whiles,
An hand hym smoot upon the nekke boon, 669
That doun he fil atones as a stoon,
And bothe hise eyen broste out of his face,
In sighte of everybody in that place. 672

A voys was herd in general audience,
And seyde, 'Thou hast desclaundred, giltelees,
The doghter of hooly chirche, in heigh presence!
Thus hastou doon, and yet holde I my pees?' 676
Of this mervaille agast was al the prees;
As mazed folk they stoden everichone
For drede of wreche, save Custance allone. 679

Greet was the drede and eek the repentance
Of hem that hadden wronge suspencion
Upon this sely innocent, Custance;
And for this miracle, in conclusion, 683
And by Custances mediacion,
The kyng — and many another in that place —
Converted was, thanked be Cristes grace! 686

This false knyght was slayn for his untrouthe
By juggement of Alla hastily;
And yet Custance hadde of his deeth greet routhe.
And after this, Jesus of his mercy 690
Made Alla wedden ful solempnely
This hooly mayden, that is so bright and sheene;
And thus hath Crist ymaad Custance a queene. 693

But who was woful, if I shal nat lye,
Of this weddyng but Donegild, and na mo —
The kynges mooder, ful of tirannye?
Hir thoughte hir cursed herte braste atwo; 697
She wolde noght hir sone had do so.
Hir thoughte a despit that he sholde take
So strange a creature unto his make. 700

Me list nat of the chaf, or of the stree,
Maken so long a tale as of the corn.
What sholde I tellen of the roialtee
At mariages, or which cours goth biforn; 704
Who bloweth in the trumpe or in an horn?
The fruyt of every tale is for to seye:
They ete, and drynke, and daunce, and synge, and pleye.

They goon to bedde, as it was skile and right;
For thogh that wyves be ful hooly thynges,
They moste take in pacience at nyght
Swiche manere necessities as been plesynges 711
To folk that han ywedded hem with rynges,
And leye a lite hir hoolynesse aside,
As for the tyme; it may no bet bitide. 714

On hire he gat a knave childe anon;
And to a bisshop and his constable eke
He took his wyf to kepe, whan he is gon
To Scotlond ward, his foomen for to seke. 718
Now faire Custance, that is so humble and meke,
So longe is goon with childe til that stille
She halt hire chambre, abidyng Cristes wille. 721

The tyme is come a knave child she beer;
Mauricius at the fontstoon they hym calle.
This Constable dooth forth come a messageer,
And wroot unto his kyng, that cleped was Alle, 725
How that this blisful tidyng is bifalle,
And othere tidynges spedeful for to seye.
He taketh the lettre, and forth he gooth his weye. 728

This messenger, to doon his advantage,
Unto the kynges mooder rideth swithe,
And salueth hire ful faire in his langage.
'Madame,' quod he, 'ye may be glad and blithe, 732
And thanketh God an hundred thousand sithe.
My lady queene hath child, withouten doute,
To joye and blisse to al this regne aboute. 735

'Lo, heere the lettres seled of this thyng,
 That I moot bere with al the haste I may.
 If ye wol aught unto youre sone, the kyng,
 I am youre servant bothe nyght and day.' 739
 Donegild answerde, 'As now, at this tyme, nay;
 But heere al nyght I wol thou take thy reste.
 Tomorwe wol I seye thee what me leste.' 742

This messenger drank sadly ale and wyn,
 And stolen were hise lettres pryvely
 Out of his box, whil he sleep as a swyn;
 And countrefeted was ful subtilly 746
 Another lettre, wrought ful synfully,
 Unto the kyng direct of this mateere
 Fro his constable, as ye shal after heere. 749

The lettre spak the queene delivered was
 Of so horrible a feendly creature
 That in the castel noon so hardy was
 That any while dorste ther endure. 753
 The mooder was an elf, by aventure
 Ycomen — by charmes, or by sorcerie;
 And every wight hateth hir compaignye. 756

Wo was this kyng whan he this lettre had sayn,
 But to no wight he tolde his sorwes soore,
 But of his owene hand he wroot agayn:
 'Welcome the sonde of Crist for everemoore 760
 To me that am now lerned in his loore!
 Lord, welcome be thy lust and thy pleasance!
 My lust I putte al in thyn ordinance. 763

'Kepeth this child, al be it foul or feir,
 And eek my wyf unto myn hoom-comynge.
 Crist, whan hym list, may sende me an heir
 Moore agreable than this to my likynge.' 767
 This lettre he seleth, pryvely wepynge;
 Which to the messenger was take soone,
 And forth he gooth; ther is namoore to doone. 770

O messenger, fulfild of dronkenesse,
 Strong is thy breeth; thy lymes faltren ay;
 And thou biwreyest alle secreenesse;
 Thy mynde is lorn, thou janglest as a jay; 774
 Thy face is turned in a newe array.
 Ther dronkenesse regneth in any route,
 Ther is no conseil hyd, withouten doute. 777

O Donegild, I ne have noon Englissh digne
 Unto thy malice and thy tirannye,
 And therfore to the feend I thee resigne;
 Lat hym enditen of thy traitorie. 781
 Fy, mannysh, fy — O, nay, by God, I lye —
 Fy, feendlych spirit! for I dar wel telle,
 Thogh thou heere walke, thy spirit is in helle. 784

This messenger comth fro the kyng agayn,
 And at the kynges moodres court he lighte.
 And she was of this messenger ful fayn,
 And plesed hym in al that ever she myghte. 788
 He drank, and wel his girdel underpigthe;
 He slepeth, and he snoreth in his gyse,
 All nyght til the sonne gan aryse. 791

Eft were hise lettres stolen everychon,
 And countrefeted lettres in this wyse:
 'The king comandeth his constable anon,
 Up peyne of hangyng and on heigh juyse, 795
 That he ne sholde suffren in no wyse
 Custance in-with his reawme for tabyde
 Thre dayes and o quarter of a tyde; 798

But in the same ship as he hire fond
 Hire and hir yonge sone and al hir geere
 He sholde putte, and croude hire fro the lond,
 And chargen hire she never eft coome theree.' 802
 O my Custance, wel may thy goost have feere,
 And slepyng, in thy dreem, been in penance,
 Whan Donegild cast al this ordinance. 805

This messenger, on morwe whan he wook,
 Unto the castel halt the nexte way,
 And to the constable he the lettre took.
 And whan that he this pitous lettre say, 809
 Ful ofte he seyde, 'Allas, and weylaway!
 Lord Crist,' quod he, 'how may this world endure,
 So ful of synne is many a creature? 812

'O myghty God, if that it be thy wille,
 Sith thou art rightful juge, how may it be
 That thou wolt suffren innocentz to spille,
 And wikked folk regnen in prosperitee? 816
 O goode Custance! Allas, so wo is me,
 That I moot be thy tormentour or deye
 On shames deeth; ther is noon oother weye.' 819

Wepen bothe yonge and olde in al that place,
 Whan that the kyng this cursed lettre sente.
 And Custance, with a deedly, pale face,
 The ferthe day toward the ship she wente; 823
 But nathelees she taketh in good entente
 The wyl of Crist, and knelynge on the stronde,
 Sie seyde, 'Lord, ay welcome be thy sonde! 826

'He that me kepte fro the false blame,
 While I was on the lond amonges yow,
 He kan me kepe from harm, and eek fro shame,
 In salte see, although I se noght how. 830
 As strong as evere he was he is yet now.
 In hym triste I, and in his mooder deere,
 That is to me my seyl, and eek my steere.' 833

Hir litel child lay wepyng in hir arm;
 And knelynge, pitously to hym she seyde,
 'Pees, litel sone, I wol do thee noon harm!'
 With that hir coverchief of hir heed she breyde, 837
 And over hise litel eyen she it leyde;
 And in hir arm she lulleth it ful faste,
 And into hevene hire eyen up she caste. 840

'Mooder,' quod she, 'and mayde bright, Marie!
 Sooth is that thurgh wommanes eggement
 Mankynde was lorn, and damned ay to dye;
 For which thy child was on a croys yrent. 844
 Thy blisful eyen sawe al his torment;
 Thanne is ther no comparison bitwene
 Thy wo and any wo man may sustene. 847

Thow sawe thy child yslayn bifore thyne eyen,
 And yet now lyveth my litel child, parfay.
 Now, Lady bright, to whom alle woful cryen,
 Thow glorie of wommanhede, thow faire may, 851
 Thow haven of refut, brighte sterre of day,
 Rewe on my child, that of thy gentillesse
 Ruest on every reweful in distresse. 854

'O litel child, allas, what is thy gilt,
 That nevere wroghtest synne as yet, pardee?
 Why wil thyn harde fader han thee spilt?
 O mercy, deere constable,' quod she, 858
 'As lat my litel child dwelle heer with thee;
 And if thou darst nat saven hym, for blame,
 Yet kys hym ones in his fadres name.' 861

Therwith she looked bakward to the londe,
 And seyde, 'Farewel, housbonde routhelees!
 And up she rist, and walketh down the stronde
 Toward the ship; hir folweth al the prees. 865
 And evere she preyeth hire child to holde his pees;
 And taketh hir leve; and with an hooly entente,
 She blissed hire, and into ship she wente. 868

Vitailled was the ship, it is no drede,
 Habundantly for hire, ful longe space;
 And othere necessities that sholde nede
 She hadde ynogh, heryed be Goddes grace. 872
 For wynd and weder, Almyghty God purchase,
 And brynge hire hoom! I kan no bettre seye,
 But in the see she dryveth forth hir weye. 875

Explicit secunda pars. Sequitur pars tercia.

Alla the kyng comth hoom soone after this
Unto his castel of the which I tolde,
And asketh where his wyf and his child is.
The constable gan aboute his herte colde, 879
And pleynly al the manere he hym tolde
As ye han herd — I kan telle it no bettre —
And sheweth the kyng his seel and his lettre; 882

And seyde, 'Lord, as ye comanded me
Up payne of deeth, so have I doon, certain.'
This messenger tormented was til he Moste biknowe and tellen, plat and pleyn, 886
Fro nyght to nyght in what place he had leyn.
And thus by wit and sobtil enquerynge
Ymagined was by whom this harm gan sprynge. 889

The hand was knowe that the lettre wroot,
And all the venym of this cursed dede;
But in what wise certainly I noot.
Theffect is this, that Alla, out of drede, 893
His mooder slow — that may men pleynly rede —
For that she traitoure was to hire ligeance.
Thus endeth olde Donegild, with meschance! 896

The sorwe that this Alla nyght and day
Maketh for his wyf, and for his child also,
Ther is no tonge that it telle may.
But now wol I unto Custance go, 900
That fleteth in the see, in payne and wo,
Fyve yeer and moore, as liked Cristes sonde,
Er that hir ship approched unto the londe. 903

Under an hethen castel atte laste,
Of which the name in my text noght I fynde,
Custance, and eek hir child, the see up caste.
Almyghty God, that saved al mankynde, 907
Have on Custance, and on hir child, som mynde,
That fallen is in hethen hand eft soone,
In point to spille, as I shal telle yow soone. 910

Doun fro the castel comth ther many a wight
 To gauren on this ship, and on Custance.
 But shortly from the castel, on a nyght,
 The lordes styward — God yeve him meschance! 914
 A thief, that hadde reneyed oure creance —
 Came into the ship allone, and seyde he sholde
 Hir lemman be, wher-so she wolde or nolde. 917

Wo was this wrecched womman tho bigon;
 Hir child cride, and she cride pitously.
 But blisful Marie heelp hire right anon;
 For with hir struglyng wel and myghtily, 921
 The thief fil over bord al sodeynly,
 And in the see he dreynte, for vengeance.
 And thus hath Crist unwemmed kept Custance. 924

O foule lust of luxurie, lo, thyn ende!
 Nat oonly that thou feyntest mannes mynde,
 But verrailly thou wolt his body shende.
 Thende of thy werk, or of thy lustes blynde, 928
 Is compleynyng. Hou many oon may men fynde
 That noht for werk somtyme, but for thentente
 To doon this synne, been outhur slayn or shente! 931

How may this wayke womman han this strengthe
 Hire to defende agayn this renegat?
 O Golias, unmesurable of lengthe,
 Hou myghte David make thee so maat? 935
 So yong, and of armure so desolaat,
 Hou dorste he looke upon thy dredful face?
 Wel may men seen it nas but Goddes grace. 938

Who yaf Judith corage or hardynesse
 To sleen hym Olofernes in his tente,
 And to deliveren out of wrecchednesse
 The peple of God? I seye for this entente, 942
 That right as God spirit of vigour sente
 To hem, and saved hem out of meschance,
 So sente he myght and vigour to Custance. 945

Forth gooth hir ship thurghout the narwe mouth
 Of Jubaltare and Septe, dryvyng alway,
 Somtyme west, and somtyme north and south,
 And somtyme est, ful many a wery day, 949
 Til Cristes mooder — blessed be she ay! —
 Hath shapen, thurgh hir endeles goodnesse,
 To make an ende of al hir hevynesse. 952

Now lat us stynte of Custance but a throwe,
 And speke we of the Romain emperour,
 That out of Surrye hath by lettres knowe
 The slaughtre of Cristen folk, and dishonour 956
 Doon to his doghter by a fals traytour —
 I mene the cursed, wikked sowdanesse,
 That at the feeste leet sleen both moore and lesse; 959

For which this emperour hath sent anon
 His senatour, with roial ordinance
 And othere lordes, God woot, many oon,
 On Surryens to taken heigh vengeance. 963
 They brennen, sleen, and brynge hem to meschance
 Ful many a day; but shortly — this is thende —
 Homward to Rome they shapen hem to wende. 966

This senatour repaireth with victorie
 To Rome ward, saillynge ful roially,
 And mette the ship dryvyng, as seith the storie,
 In which Custance sit ful pitously. 970
 Nothyng knew he what she was, ne why
 She was in swich array; ne she nyl seye
 Of hire estaat, althogh she sholde deye. 973

He bryngeth hire to Rome, and to his wyf
 He yaf hire and hir yonge sone also;
 And with the senatour she ladde hir lyf.
 Thus kan Oure Lady bryngen out of wo 977
 Woful Custance, and many another mo.
 And longe tyme dwelled she in that place,
 In hooly werkes evere, as was hir grace. 980

The senatoures wyf hir aunte was,
But for all that, she knew hire never the moore.
I wol no lenger tarien in this cas,
But to Kyng Alla, which I spake of yoore, 984
That wepeth for his wyf, and siketh soore,
I wol retourne, and lete I wol Custance
Under the senatoures governance. 987

Kyng Alla, which that hadde his mooder slayn,
Upon a day fil in swich repentance
That, if I shortly tellen shal and playn,
To Rome he comth, to receyven his penance, 991
And putte hym in the popes ordinance,
In heigh and logh; and Jesu Crist bisoghte
Foryeve hise wikked werkes that he wroghte. 994

The fame anon thurghout the toun is born,
How Alla kyng shal comen on pilgrymage,
By herbergeours that wenten hym biforn;
For which the senatour, as was usage, 998
Rood hym agayns, and many of his lynage,
As wel to shewen his heighe magnificence,
As to doon any kyng a reverence. 1001

Greet cheere dooth this noble senatour
To Kyng Alla, and he to hym also.
Everich of hem dooth oother greet honour;
And so bifel that in a day or two 1005
This senatour is to Kyng Alla go
To feste; and shortly, if I shal nat lye,
Custances sone wente in his compaignye. 1008

Som men wolde seyn at requeste of Custance
This senatour hath lad this child to feeste.
I may nat tellen every circumstance;
Be as be may, ther was he at the leeste. 1012
But sooth is this, that at his moodres heeste,
Biforn Alla, duryng the metes space,
The child stood, lookyng in the kynges face. 1015

This Alla kyng hath of this child greet wonder,
 And to the senatour he seyde anon,
 'Whos is that faire child that stondeth yonder?'
 'I noot,' quod he, 'by God, and by Seint John. 1019
 A mooder he hath, but fader hath he noon
 That I of woot.' But shortly, in a stounde,
 He tolde Alla how that this child was founde. 1022

'But God woot,' quod this senatour also,
 'So vertuous a lyvere in my lyf
 Ne saugh I nevere as she, ne herde of mo,
 Of worldly wommen, mayde, ne of wyf. 1026
 I dar wel seyn hir hadde levere a knyf
 Thurghout hir brest than ben a womman wikke;
 There is no man koude brynge hire to that prikke.' 1029

Now was this child as lyke unto Custance
 As possible is a creature to be.
 This Alla hath the face in remembrance
 Of Dame Custance, and theron mused he 1033
 If that the childes mooder were aught she
 That is his wyf; and pryvely he sighte,
 And spedde hym fro the table that he myghte. 1036

'Parfay,' thoghte he, 'fantome is in myn heed.
 I oghte deme, of skilful juggement,
 That in the salte see my wyf is deed.'
 And afterward he made his argument: 1040
 'What woot I, if that Crist have hyder ysent
 My wyf by see, as wel as he hire sente
 To my contree fro thennes that she wente?' 1043

And after noon, hoom with the senatour
 Goth Alla, for to seen this wonder chaunce.
 This senatour dooth Alla greet honour,
 And hastify he sente after Custaunce. 1047
 But trusteth weel, hire liste nat to daunce,
 Whan that she wiste wherfore was that sonde;
 Unnethe upon hir feet she myghte stonde. 1050

Whan Alla saugh his wyf, faire he hire grette,
And weep that it was routhe for to see;
For at the firste look he on hire sette,
He knew wel verrailly that it was she. 1054
And she, for sorwe, as dounb stant as a tree —
So was hir herte shet in hir distresse,
Whan she remembred his unkyndenesse. 1057

Twyes she swowned in his owene sighte.
He weep, and hym excuseth pitously.
'Now God,' quod he, 'and alle hise halwes brighte
So wisly on my soule as have mercy, 1061
That of youre harm as giltelees am I
As is Maurice my sone, so lyk youre face;
Elles the feend me fecche out of this place! 1064

Long was the sobbyng and the bitter peyne,
Er that hir woful hertes myghte cesse.
Greet was the pitee for to heere hem pleyne,
Thurgh whiche pleintes gan hir wo encesse. 1068
I pray yow alle my labour to relese;
I may nat telle hir wo until tomorwe,
I am so wery for to speke of sorwe. 1071

But finally, whan that the sothe is wist,
That Alla giltelees was of hir wo,
I trowe an hundred tymes been they kist;
And swich a blisse is ther bitwix hem two 1075
That, save the joye that lasteth everemo,
Ther is noon lyk that any creature
Hath seyn, or shal, whil that the world may dure. 1078

Tho preyde she hir housbonde mekely,
In relief of hir longe, pitous pyne,
That he wolde preye hir fader specially
That, of his magestee, he wolde enclyne 1082
To vouche sauf som day with hym to dyne.
She preyde hym eek he wolde, by no weye,
Unto hir fader no word of hire seye. 1085

Som men wold seyn how that the child Maurice Dooth this message unto this emperour;
 But, as I gesse, Alla was nat so nyce
 To hym that was of so sovereyn honour, 1089
 As he that is of Cristen folk the flour,
 Sente any child; but it is bet to deeme
 He wente hymself; and so it may wel seeme. 1092

This emperour hath graunted gentilly
 To come to dynere, as he hym bisoughte.
 And wel rede I, he looked bisily
 Upon this child, and on his doghter thoghte. 1096
 Alla goth to his in, and as him oghte,
 Arrayed for this feste, in every wise,
 As ferforth as his konnyng may suffice. 1099

The morwe cam, and Alla gan hym dresse,
 And eek his wyf, this emperour to meete.
 And forth they ryde in joye and in gladnesse;
 And whan she saugh hir fader in the strete, 1103
 She lighte doun, and falleth hym to feete;
 'Fader,' quod she, 'yours yonge child, Custance,
 Is now ful clene out of yours remembrance. 1106

'I am yours doghter, Custance,' quod she,
 'That whilom ye han sent unto Surrye.
 It am I, fader, that in the salte see
 Was put allone, and dampned for to dye. 1110
 Now, goode fader, mercy I yow crye!
 Sende me namore unto noon hethenesse,
 But thonketh my lord heere of his kyndenesse.' 1113

Who kan the pitous joye tellen al
 Bitwixe hem thre, syn they been thus ymette?
 But of my tale make an ende I shal;
 The day goth faste, I wol no lenger lette. 1117
 This glade folk to dynere they hem sette;
 In joye and blisse at mete I lete hem dwelle,
 A thousand foold wel moore than I kan telle. 1120

This child Maurice was sithen emperour
Maad by the pope, and lyved cristenly;
To Cristes chirche he dide greet honour.
But I lete all his storie passen by; 1124
Of Custance is my tale specially;
In the olde Romane geestes may men fynde
Maurices lyf; I bere it noght in mynde. 1127

This kyng Alla, whan he his tyme say,
With his Custance, his hooly wyf so sweete,
To Engeland been they come the righte way,
Wher-as they lyve in joye and in quiete. 1131
But litel while it lasteth, I yow heete,
Joye of this world; for tyme wol nat abyde —
Fro day to nyght it changeth as the tyde. 1134

Who lyved evere in swich delit o day
That hym ne moeved outhur conscience,
Or ire, or talent, or som kynnes affray,
Envye, or pride, or passion, or offence? 1138
I ne seye but for this ende this sentence,
That litel while in joye, or in plesance,
Lasteth the blisse of Alla with Custance; 1141

For Deeth, that taketh of heigh and logh his rente,
Whan passed was a yeer, evene as I gesse,
Out of this world this Kyng Alla he hente;
For whom Custance hath ful greet hevynesse — 1145
Now lat us praye to God his soule blesse! —
And Dame Custance, finally to seye,
Toward the toun of Rome goth hir weye. 1148

To Rome is come this hooly creature,
And fyndeth hire freendes ther bothe hoole and sounde.
Now is she scaped al hire aventure;
And whan that she hir fader hath yfounded, 1152
Doun on hir kneës falleth she to grounde;
Wepyng for tendrenesse, in herte blithe,
She heryeth God an hundred thousand sithe. 1155

In vertu and in hooly almus dede
They lyven alle, and nevere asonder wende;
Till deeth departed hem, this lyf they lede.
And fareth now weel, my tale is at an ende. 1159
Now Jesu Crist, that of his myght may sende
Joye after wo, governe us in his grace,
And kepe us alle that been in this place! 1162

Amen

Heere endeth the Tale of the Man of Lawe.

Now by myn fey I shal er p^r 180
 Telle of a funde fowch a tale or too
 That alle pe folk shul lauche i pis place
 Now ellis frere I be shewe thy face
 Quod this funde 2 I be shewe me
 But if I telle talis too or thre
 Of feries er I come to Gidingborne
 That I shal make y^r herte for to moorne
 For wel I wot y^r patience is goon
 Dure oft cpepe pees a p^r a non
 And sepe lat pe woman telle hire tale
 Is fare as folk drouke were of ale
 Soth samc tellyth forth 30e tale a p^r is best
 Al redy fire q^d sche myht at 30e lest
 If I haue spens of pis weepi frere
 310 samc telle forth a I shal here

Here endith pe mologe of the wyues tale of Bathe.

Here lighnyth the 180 of bathe hire tale.

THE WIFE OF BATH

From MS Cambridge Gg. 4.27. One of four pictures of the pilgrims left by the vandals who cut out the rest.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO LIBRARY

[FRAGMENT III (GROUP D)
THE WIFE OF BATH'S PREAMBLE]

The Prologe of the Wyves Tale of Bathe.

'Experience, though noon auctoritee
Were in this world, were right ynogh to me
To speke of wo that is in mariage;
For, lordynges, sith I twelf yeer was of age — 4
Ythonked be God that is eterne on lyve! —
Housbondes at chirche dore I have had fyve,
If I so ofte myghte have wedded bee.
And alle were worthy men in hir degree. 8
But me was toold certeyn, nat longe agoon is,
That sith that Crist ne wente nevere but onis
To weddyng in the Cane of Galilee,
That by thilke ensample taughte he me 12
That I ne sholde wedded be but ones.
Herkne eek, lo! which a sharpe word for the nones
Beside a welle Jesus, god and man,
Spak in repreeve of the Samaritan. 16
"Thou hast yhad fyve housbondes," quod he,
"And that ilke man that now hath thee
Is noght thyn housbonde"; thus seyde he certeyn.
What that he mente therby I kan nat seyn, 20
But that I axe why that the fifthe man
Was noon housbonde to the Samaritan.
How manye myghte she have in mariage?
Yet herde I nevere tellen in myn age 24
Upon this nombre diffinicioun.
Men may devyne and glosen up and doun,
But — wel I woot — expres, withoute lye,
God bad us for to wexe and multiplie. 28
That gentil text kan I wel understonde.

Eek wel I woot he seyde myn housbonde
 Sholde lete fader and mooder and take me;
 But of no nombre mencion made he
 Of bigamye or of octogamye. 32
 Why sholde men speken of it vileynye?
 'Lo, heere! the wise kyng, Daun Salomon,
 I trowe he hadde wyves mo than oon. 36
 Blessed be God that I have wedded fyve! 44
 Welcome the sixte, whan that evere he shall Forsothe I wol nat kepe me chaast in al;
 Whan myn housbonde is fro the world ygon,
 Som cristen man shal wedde me anon; 48
 For thanne thapostle seith that I am free
 To wedde, a Goddes half, where it liketh me.
 'What rekketh me thogh folk seye vileynye
 Of shrewed Lameth and his bigamye?
 I woot wel Abraham was an hooly man
 And Jacob eek, as ferforth as I kan, 56
 And ech of hem hadde wyves mo than two;
 And many another holy man also.
 Whanne saugh ye evere in any manere age
 That hye God defended mariage
 By expres word? I pray you telleth me. 60
 Or where comanded he virginitee?
 I woot as wel as ye, it is no drede,
 Whan thapostel speketh of maydenhede, 64
 He seyde that precept therof hadde he noon.
 Men may conseille a womman to been oon,
 But conseillyng is nat comandement.
 He putte it in oure owene juggement; 68
 For hadde God comanded maydenhede,
 Thanne hadde he dampned weddyng with the dede.
 And certein if ther were no seed ysowe,
 Virginitee, wherof thanne sholde it growe? 72
 Poul dorste nat comanden atte leeste
 A thyng of which his maister yaf noon heeste.
 The dart is set up of virginitee,
 Cacche whoso may, who renneth best lat see! 76
 'But this word is nat taken of every wight,

But ther-as God lust gyve it of his myght.
 I woot wel the apostel was a mayde;
 But nathelees, thogh that he wroot and sayde 80
 He wolde that every wight were swich as he,
 Al nys but conseil to virginitee.
 And for to been a wyf he yaf me leve
 Of indulgence; so it is no repreve 84
 To wedde me, if that my make dye,
 Withouten excepcion of bigamy.
 This is al and som: he heeld virginitee
 Moore profiteth than weddyng in freletee — 92
 Freletee clepe I but-if that he and she Wolde leden al hir lyf in chastitee.
 'I graunte it wel. I have noon envie
 Thogh maydenhede preferre bigamy. 96
 Hem liketh to be clene, body and goost.
 Of myn estaat I nyl nat make no boost;
 For wel ye knowe, a lord in his houshold
 He nath nat every vessel al of gold; 100
 Somme been of tree and doon hir lord servyse.
 God clepeth folk to hym in sondry wyse,
 And everich hath of God a propre yifte —
 Som this, som that, as hym liketh shifte. 104
 'Virginitee is greet perfeccion,
 And continence eek, with devocion;
 But Crist, that of perfeccion is welle,
 Bad nat every wight sholde go selle 108
 All that he hadde and gyve it to the poore,
 And in swich wise folwe hym and his foore.
 He spak to hem that wolde lyve parfitly;
 And, lordynges, by youre leve, that am nat I. 112
 I wol bistowe the flour of myn age
 In the actes and in fruyt of mariage.
 An housbonde I wol have, I nyl nat lette,
 Which shal be bothe my dettour and my thral,
 And have his tribulacion withal 156
 Upon his flesh whil that I am his wyf.
 I have the power durynge al my lyf
 Upon his propre body and noght he.

- Right thus the apostel tolde it unto me, 160
 And bad oure housbondes for to love us weel.
 Al this sentence me liketh every deel.
 Up stirte the Pardoner, and that anon.
 'Now dame,' quod he, 'by God and by Seint John, 164
 Ye been a noble prechour in this cas.
 I was aboute to wedde a wyf; allas!
 What sholde I bye it on my flessch so deere?
 Yet hadde I levere wedde no wyf to yeere.' 168
 'Abyde,' quod she, 'my tale is nat bigonne!
 Nay, thou shalt drynken of another tonne,
 Er that I go, shal savoure wors than ale.
 And whan that I have toold the forth my tale 172
 Of tribulacion that is in mariage —
 Of which I am expert in al myn age;
 This to seyn, myself have been the whippe —
 Than maystow chese wheither thou wolt sippe 176
 Of thilke tonne that I shal abroche.
 Be war of it, er thou to ny approche,
 For I shal tell ensamples mo than ten.
 "Whoso that wol nat be war by othere men, 180
 By hym shul othere men corrected be."
 The same wordes writeth Ptholomee;
 Rede in his Almageste and take it there.'
 'Dame, I wolde praye, if youre wyl it were,' 184
 Seyde this Pardoner, 'as ye bigan,
 Telle forth youre tale; spareth for no man,
 And teche us yonge men of youre praktike.'
 'Gladly, sires, sith it may yow like. 188
 But yet I praye to al this compaignye,
 If that I speke after my fantasye,
 As taketh not agrief of that I seye,
 For myn ententē is but for to pleye. 192
 'Now, sires, now wol I telle forth my tale.
 As evere moote I drynken wyn or ale,
 I shal seye sooth. Of tho housbondes that I hadde,
 As thre of hem were goode and two were badde. 196
 The thre were goode men, and riche, and olde;
 Unnethe myghte they the statut holde

In which that they were bounden unto me.
 Ye woot wel what I meene of this, pardee. 200
 And by my fey, I tolde of it no stoor.
 They had me yeven hir gold and hir tresoor; 204
 Me neded nat do lenger diligence
 To wynne hir love or doon hem reverence.
 They loved me so wel, by God above,
 That I ne tolde no deyntee of hir love. 208
 A wys womman wol sette hire evere in oon
 To gete hire love ther-as she hath noon;
 But sith I hadde hem hoolly in myn hond,
 And sith they hadde me yeven all hir lond, 212
 What sholde I taken heede hem for to plese,
 But it were for my profit and myn ese?
 I sette hem so a-werke, by my fey,
 That many a nyght they songen "weilawey!" 216
 The bacon was nat fet for hem, I trowe,
 That som men han in Essex at Dunmowe.
 I governed hem so wel after my lawe
 That ech of hem was ful blisful and fawe 220
 To brynge me gaye thynges fro the fayre.
 They were ful glad whan I spak to hem faire,
 For God it woot, I chidde hem spitously.
 'Now herkneth hou I baar me proprely, 224
 Ye wise wyves, that kan understonde.
 'Thus shul ye speke and beren hem on honde;
 For half so boldely kan ther no man
 Swere and lyë as a womman kan. 228
 I sey nat this by wyves that been wyse,
 But-if it be whan they hem mysavyse.
 A wys wyf if that she kan hir good,
 Shal beren hym on honde the cow is wood, 232
 And take witnesse of hir owene mayde
 Of hir assent; but herkneth how I sayde:
 "'Sire olde kaynard, is this thyn array?
 Why is my neighebores wyf so gay? 236
 She is honoured over-al ther she gooth;
 I sitte at hoom, I have no thrifty clooth.
 What dostow at my neighebores hous?

Is she so fair? artow so amorous? 240
 What rowne ye with oure mayde? Benedicite!
 Sire olde lecchour, lat thy japes be!
 And if I have a gossib or a freend,
 Withouten gilt, thou chidest as a feend 244
 If that I walke or pleye unto his hous.
 Thou comest hoom as dronken as a mous,
 And prechest on thy bench, with yvel preef!
 Thou seist to me, it is a greet meschief 248
 To wedde a poure womman, for costage;
 And if that she be riche, of heigh parage,
 Thanne seistow that it is a tormentrie
 To soffren hire pride and hire malencolie. 252
 And if that she be fair — thou verray knave! —
 Thou seyst that every holour wol hire have,
 She may no while in chastitee abyde
 That is assailed upon ech a syde. 256
 “Thou seyst som folk desiren us for richesse,
 Somme for oure shape, and somme for oure fairnesse,
 And som for she kan either synge or daunce,
 And som for gentillesse and daliaunce, 260
 Som for hir handes and hir armes smale.
 Thus goth al to the devel, by thy tale.
 Thou seyst men may nat kepe a castel wal,
 It may so longe assailed been over-al. 264
 “And if that she be foul, thou seist that she Coveiteth every man that she may se;
 For as a spaynel she wol on hym lepe,
 Til that she fynde som man hire to chepe; 268
 Ne noon so grey goos gooth ther in the lake
 As, seistow, wol been withoute make;
 And seyst it is an hard thyng for to welde
 A thyng that no man wole his thanks helde. 272
 Thus seistow, lorel, whan thou goost to bedde,
 And that no wys man nedeth for to wedde,
 Ne no man that entendeth unto hevene.
 With wilde thonder dynt and firy leve 276
 Moote thy welked nekke be to-broke!
 “Thow seyst that droppying houses and eek smoke

And chidyng wyves maken men to flee
Out of hir owene houses; a, benedicitee, 280
What eytleth swich an old man for to chide?

“Thow seyst we wyves wol oure vices hide
Til we be fast, and thanne we wol hem shewe.
Wel may that be a proverbe of a shrewe. 284

“Thou seist that oxen, asses, hors, and houndes,
They been assayd at diverse stoundes;
Bacyns, lavours, er that men hem bye;
Spoones and stooles, and al swich housbondrye; 288
And so been pottes, clothes, and array;
But folk of wyves maken noon assay
Til they be wedded. Olde dotard shrewe!
Thanne, seistow, we wol oure vices shewe. 292

“Thou seist also that it displeseth me
But-if that thou wolt preyse my beautee;
And but thou poure alwey upon my face
And clepe me ‘faire dame’ in every place; 296
And but thou make a feeste on thilke day
That I was born and make me fressh and gay;
And but thou do to my norice honour,
And to my chamberere withinne my bour, 300
And to my fadres folk and hise allyes.
Thus seistow, olde bareful of lyes!

“And yet of oure apprentice, Janekyn,
For his crispe heer, shynyng as gold so fyn, 304
And for he squiereth me bothe up and down,
Yet hastow caught a fals suspicioun.
I wol hym noght, thogh thou were deed tomorwe.

“But tel me this. Why hydestow — with sorwe! — 308
The keyes of my cheste away fro me?
It is my good as wel as thyn, pardee.

What! wenestow make an ydiot of oure dame?
Now by that lord that called is Seint Jame, 312
Thou shalt nat bothe, thogh thou were wood,
Be maister of my body and of my good;
That oon thou shalt forgo, maugree thyne eyen.

What nedeth thee of me to enquire or spyen? 316
I trowe thou woldest loke me in thy chiste.

Thou sholdest seye, 'Wyf, go wher thee liste;
 Taak youre disport; I wol nat leve no talys;
 I knowe yow for a trewe wyf, Dame Alys.' 320

We love no man that taketh kepe or charge
 Wher that we goon; we wol ben at our large.

"Of alle men yblessed moot he be,
 The wise astrologien, Daun Ptholome, 324

That seith this proverbe in his Almageste:

'Of alle men his wysdom is the hyeste
 That rekketh nevere who hath the world in honde.'

By this proverbe thou shalt understonde, 328
 Have thou ynogh, what thar thee recche or care
 How myrily that othere folkes fare?

"Thou seyst also that if we make us gay

With clothyng and with precious array,

That it is peril of oure chastitee.

And yet — with sorwe! — thou most enforce thee 340

And seye thise wordes in the apostles name:

'In habit maad with chastitee and shame

Ye wommen shul apparaille yow,' quod he,

'And noght in tressed heer and gay perree, 344

As perles, ne with gold ne clothes riche.'

After thy text ne after thy rubriche

I wol nat wirche as muchel as a gnat.

"Thou seydest this, that I was lyk a cat; 348

For whoso wolde senge a cattes skyn,

Thanne wolde the cat wel dwellen in his in.

And if the cattes skyn be slyk and gay,

She wol nat dwelle in house half a day, 352

But forth she wole, er any day be dawed,

To shewe hir skyn and goon a-caterwawed;

This is to seye, if I be gay, sire shrewe,

I wol renne out my borel for to shewe. 356

"Sire olde fool, what eyleth thee to spyen?

Thogh thou preye Argus with hise hundred eyen

To be my wardecors as he kan best,

In feith, he shal nat kepe me, but me lest; 360

Yet koude I make his berd, so moot I thee!

"Thou seydest eek that ther been thynges thre,

The whiche thynges troublen al this erthe,
And that no wight may endure the ferthe. 364

O leewe sire shrewe, Jesu shorte thy lyf!
Yet prechestow and seyst, an hateful wyf
Yrekened is for oon of thise meschances.
Been ther none othere of thy resemblances 368
That ye may likne youre parables unto,
But-if a sely wyf be oon of tho?

“Thou likenest wommenes love to helle;
To bareyne lond ther water may nat dwelle. 372
Thou liknest it also to wilde fyr;

The moore it brenneth the moore it hath desir
To consumen everythyng that brent wole be.
Thou seyst, right as wormes shendeth a tree, 376
Right so a wyf destroyeth hire housbond;
This knowe they that been to wyves bonde.”

“Lordynges, right thus, as ye have understonde,
Baar I stifly myne olde housbondes on honde 380
That thus they seyden in hir dronkenesse.
And al was fals; but that I took wisesse
On Janekyn and on my nece also.

O lord, the peyne I dide hem and the wo — 384
Ful giltelees, by Goddes sweete pyne! —
For as an hors I koude byte and whyne.

I koude pleyne, thogh I were in the gilt,
Or elles often tyme hadde I been spilt. 388

“Whoso cometh first to mille first grynt”;
I pleynd first, so was oure werre ystynt.
They were ful glad to excusen hem ful blyve
Of thyng of which they nevere agilde hir lyve. 392

“Of wenches wolde I beren hym on honde,
Whan that for syk unnethes myghte he stonde.
Yet tikled it his herte, for that he Wende that I hadde of hym so greet chiertee. 396

I swoor that al my walkynge out by nyghte
Was for tespye wenches that he dighte.
Under that colour hadde I many a myrthe,
For al swich thyng was yeven us in oure byrthe: 400

“Deceite, wepyng, spynnyng, God hath yeve

To wommen kyndely whil that they may lyve."
 And thus of o thyng I avaunte me,
 Atte ende I hadde the bettre in ech degree — 404
 By sleighte, or force, or by som maner thyng,
 As by continueel murmure or grucchyng.
 That made me that evere I wolde hem chide;
 For thogh the pope hadde seten hem biside, 420
 I wolde nat spare hem at hir owene bord;
 For by my trouthe I quitte hem word for word.
 As helpe me verray God omnipotent,
 Though I right now sholde make my testament, 424
 I ne owe hem nat a word that it nys quit.
 I broghte it so aboute by my wit
 That they moste yeve it up, as for the beste,
 Or elles hadde we nevere been in reste; 428
 For thogh he looked as a wood leon,
 Yet sholde he faille of his conclusion.
 'Thanne wolde I seye: "Goode lief, taak keepe
 How mekely looketh Wilkyn,oure sheepe!
 Com neer, my spouse; lat me ba thy cheke. 432
 Ye sholde been al pacient and meke
 And han a sweete spiced conscience,
 Sith ye so preche of Jobes pacience. 436
 Suffreth alwey, syn ye so wel kan preche;
 And but ye do, certein we shal yow teche
 That it is fair to have a wyf in pees.
 Oon of us two moste bowen, doutelees; 440
 And sith a man is moore resonable
 Than womman is, ye moste been suffrable."
 Swiche manere wordes hadde we on honde.
 Now wol I speken of my fourthe housbonde. 452
 'My fourthe housbonde was a revelour;
 This is to seyn, he hadde a paramour;
 And I was yong, and ful of ragerye,
 Stibourne, and strong, and joly as a pye. 456
 Wel koude I daunce to an harpe smale,
 And synge, ywis, as any nyghtyngale,
 Whan I had dronke a draughte of sweete wyn.
 Metellius, the foule cherl, the swyn 460

That with a staf birafte his wyf hire lyf
 For she drank wyn — thogh I hadde been his wyf,
 He sholde nat han daunted me fro drynke.
 And after wyn on Venus moste I thynke. 464

‘But Lord Crist, whan that it remembreth me
 Upon my yowthe and on my jolitee,
 It tikleth me aboute myn herte roote
 Unto this day; it dooth myn herte boote 472
 That I have had my world as in my tyme!
 But Age, alas! that al wole envenyme,
 Hath me biraft my beautee and my pith.
 Lat go! farewell! the devel go therwith! 476
 The flour is goon; ther is namoore to telle;
 The bren, as I best kan, now moste I selle.

‘But yet to be right myrie wol I fonde;
 Now wol I tellen of my fourthe housbonde. 480

‘I seye I hadde in herte greet despit
 That he of any oother had delit.
 But he was quit, by God and by Seint Joce!
 I made hym of the same wode a croce. 484

Nat of my body in no foul manere,
 But certainly I made folk swich cheere
 That in his owene grece I made hym frye
 For angre and for verray jalousye. 488

By God, in erthe I was his purgatorie;
 For which, I hope, his soule be in glorie.
 For God it woot, he sat ful ofte and song,
 Whan that his shoo ful bitterly hym wrong. 492

Ther was no wight save God and he that wiste
 In many wise how soorē I hym twiste.
 He deyde whan I cam fro Jerusalem,
 And lith ygrave under the roode beem, 496

Al is his tombe noght so curys
 As was the sepulcre of hym Daryus,
 Which that Appelles wroghte subtilly.
 It nys but wast to burye hym preciously. 500

Lat hym fare wel, God yeve his soule restel!
 He is now in his grave and in his cheste.

'Now of my fifthe housbonde wol I telle —
 God lete his soule nevere come in helle! 504
 And yet was he to me the mooste shrewe;
 That feele I on my ribbes al by rewe,
 And evere shal unto myn endyng day.
 I trowe I loved hym best for that he
 Was of his love daungerous to me.
 We wommen han, if that I shal nat lye,
 In this matere a queynte fantasye: 516
 Wayte what thyng we may nat lightly have,
 Therafter wol we crie al day and crave;
 Forbede us thyng, and that desiren we;
 Preesse on us faste and thanne wol we fle; 520
 With daunger, oute we al oure chaffare.
 Greet prees at market maketh deere ware,
 And to greet cheepe is holde at litel prys;
 This knoweth every womman that is wys. 524
 'My fifthe housbonde, God his soule blesse!
 Which that I took for love and no richesse,
 He somtyme was a clerk of Oxenford,
 And hadde left scole and wente at hom to bord 528
 With my gossib, dwellynge in oure toun —
 God have hir soule! — hir name was Alisoun.
 She knew myn herte and eek my privetee
 Bet than oure parisshe preest, as moot I thee. 532
 'And so bifel that ones in a Lente —
 So often tymes I to my gossyb wente; 544
 For evere yet I loved to be gay,
 And for to walke in March, Averill, and May Fro hous to hous to heere sondry talys —
 That Jankyn clerk, and my gossyb, Dame Alys, 548
 And I myself into the feeldes wente.
 Myn housbonde was at London al the Lente;
 I hadde the bettre leyser for to pleye,
 And for to se and eek for to be seye 552
 Of lusty folk. What wiste I wher my grace
 Was shapen for to be, or in what place?
 Therfore I made my visitacions
 To vigilies, and to processions, 556

'To prechyng eek, and to thise pilgrimages,
To pleyes of myracles, and to mariages,
And wered upon my gaye scarlet gytes —
Thise wormes, ne thise motthes, ne thise mytes, 560
Upon my peril, frete hem never a deel;
And wostow why? for they were used weel.

'Now wol I tellen forth what happed me.
I seye that in the feeldes walked we 564
Till trewely we hadde swich daliance,
This clerk and I, that of my purveiance
I spak to hym and seyde hym how that he,
If I were wydwe, sholde wedde me. 568
For certainly — I sey for no bobance —
Yet was I nevere withouten purveiance
Of mariage, nof othere thynges eek;
I holde a mouses herte nat worth a leek 572
That hath but oon hole for to sterte to,
And if that faille thanne is al ydo.

'I bar hym on honde he hadde enchanted me —
My dame taughte me that soutiltee — 576
And eek, I seyde, I mette of hym al nyght
He wolde han slayn me as I lay up right,
And al my bed was ful of verray blood;
But yet I hope that he shal do me good, 580
For blood bitokeneth gold, as me was taught.
And al was fals; I dremed of it right naught,
But I folwed ay my dames loore,
As wel of this as of othere thynges moore. 584

'But now, sire, lat me se? What I shal seyn?
A ha! By God, I have my tale ageyn!

'Whan that my fourthe housbonde was on beere,
I weepe algate and made sory cheere, 588
As wyves mooten, for it is usage,
And with my coverchief covered my visage.
But for that I was purveyed of a make,
I wepte but smal, and that I undertake! 592

'To chirche was myn housbonde born a-morwe
With neighebores, that for hym maden sorwe.
And Jankyn,oure clerk, was oon of tho.

As help me God, whan that I saugh hym go 596
 After the beere, me thoughte he hadde a paire
 Of legges and of feet so clene and faire
 That al myn herte I yaf unto his hoold!
 He was, I trowe, a twenty wynter oold; 600
 And I was fourty, if I shal seye sooth.
 But yet I hadde alwey a coltes tooth;
 Gat tothed I was; and that bicam me weel.
 I hadde the prente of Seinte Venus seel. 604
 As help me God, I was a lusty oon,
 And faire, and riche, and yong, and wel bigon!
 For certes, I am al Venerien
 In feelynge, and myn herte is Marcien.
 Venus me yaf my lust, my likerousnesse;
 And Mars yaf me my sturdy hardynesse. 612
 Myn ascendent was Taur, and Mars therinne.
 Allas! allas! that evere love was synne!
 I folwed ay myn inclinacion,
 By vertu of my constellacion; 616
 For God so wys be my savacion,
 I ne loved nevere by no discrecion,
 But evere folwede myn appetit,
 Al were he short, or long, or blak, or whit. 624
 I took no kepe, so that he liked me,
 How poore he was, ne eek of what degree.
 'What sholde I seye? but at the monthes ende
 This joly clerk, Jankyn, that was so hende, 628
 Hath wedded me with greet solempnytee,
 And to hym yaf I al the lond and fee
 That evere was me yeven therbifoore.
 But afterward repented me ful soore; 632
 He nolde suffre nothyng of my list.
 By God, he smoot me ones on the lyst —
 For-that I rente out of his book a leef —
 That of the strook myn ere wax al deef. 636
 'Stibourne I was, as is a leonesse,
 And of my tonge a verray jangleresse;
 And walke I wolde, as I had doon biforn,
 From hous to hous, although he had it sworn; 640

For which he often tymes wolde preche,
 And me of olde Romain geestes teche:
 How he Symplicius Gallus lefte his wyf,
 And hire forsok for terme of al his lyf, 644
 Noght but for open-heveded he hir say,
 Lokynge out at his dore upon a day.
 Another Romain tolde he me by name,
 That for his wyf was at a someres game 648
 Withouten his wityng, he forsook hire eke.
 And thanne wolde he upon his Bible seke
 That ilke proverbe of Ecclesiaste
 Where he comandeth, and forbedeth faste, 652
 Man shal nat suffre his wyf go roule aboute.
 Thanne wolde he seye right thus, withouten doute:
 "Whoso that buyldeth his hous al of salwes,
 "And priketh his blynde hors over the falwes, 656
 "And suffreth his wyf to go seken halwes,
 "Is worthy to been hanged on the galwes."
 But al for noght; I sette noght an hawe
 Of his proverbes nof his olde sawe, 660
 Ne I wolde nat of hym corrected be.
 I hate hym that my vices telleth me;
 And so doo mo, God woot, of us than I.
 This made hym with me wood al outrelly, 664
 I nolde noght forbere hym in no cas.
 'Now wol I seye yow sooth, by Seint Thomas,
 Why that I rente out of his book a leef,
 For which he smoot me so that I was deef. 668
 'He hadde a book that gladly, nyght and day,
 For his desport he wolde rede alway —
 He cleped it Valerie and Theofraste —
 At whiche book he lough alwey ful faste. 672
 And eek ther was somtyme a clerk at Rome,
 A cardinal, that highte Seint Jerome,
 That made a book agayn Jovinian;
 In whiche book eek ther was Tertulan, 676
 Crisippus, Trotula, and Helowys —
 That was abbesse nat fer fro Parys —
 And eek the Parables of Salomon,

Ovides Art, and bookes many on; 680
 And alle thise were bounden in o volume.
 And every nyght and day was his custume,
 Whan he hadde leyser and vacacion
 From oother worldly occupacion, 684
 To reden on this book of wikked wyves.
 He knew of hem mo legendes and lyves
 Than been of goode wyves in the Bible.
 For trusteth wel, it is an impossible 688
 That any clerk wol speke good of wyves —
 But if it be of hooly seintes lyves —
 Ne of noon oother womman never the mo.
 Who peynted the leon? Tel me who. 692
 By God, if wommen hadde writen stories,
 As clerkes han withinne hire oratories,
 They wolde han writen of men moore wikkednesse
 Than all the mark of Adam may redresse! 696
 The children of Mercurie and of Venus
 Been in hir wirkyng ful contrarius;
 Mercurie loveth wysdam and science,
 And Venus loveth ryot and dispence; 700
 And for hire diverse disposicion
 Ech falleth in otheres exaltacion.
 And thus, God woot, Mercurie is desolat
 In Pisces, wher Venus is exaltat; 704
 And Venus falleth ther Mercurie is reysed.
 Therefore no womman of no clerk is preysed.
 The clerk, whan he is oold and may noht do
 Of Venus werkes worth his olde sho, 708
 Thanne sit he doun and writ in his dotage
 That wommen kan nat kepe hir mariage.
 ‘But now to purpos why I tolde thee
 That I was beten for a book, pardee! 712
 Upon a nyght Jankyn, that was oure sire,
 Redde on his book, as he sat by the fire,
 Of Eva first: that for hir wikkednesse
 Was al mankynde broght to wrecchednesse; 716
 For which Jesu Crist hymself was slayn,
 That boghte us with his herte blood agayn.

Lo, heere, expres of womman may ye fynde
That womman was the los of al mankynde. 720

'Tho redde he me how Sampson loste hise heres:
Slepynge, his lemman kitte it with hir sheres;
Thurgh which treson loste he bothe hise eyen.

'Tho redde he me, if that I shal nat lyen, 724
Of Hercules, and of his Dianyre,
That caused hym to sette hymself afyre.

'Nothyng forgat he the penaunce and wo
That Socrates hadde with hise wyves two. 728

'Of Clitermystra for hire lecherye, 737
That falsly made hire housbonde for to dye,
He redde it with ful good devocion.

'He tolde me eek for what occasion 740
Amphiorax at Thebes loste his lyf —

Myn housbonde hadde a legende of his wyf.
'Eriphilem, that for an ouche of gold
Hath prively unto the Grekes told 744
Wher that hir housbonde hidde hym in a place;
For which he hadde at Thebes sory grace.

'Of Lyvia tolde he me, and of Lucye; 748
They bothe made hir housbondes for to dye —
That oon for love, that oother was for hate.

Lyvia hir housbonde upon an even late
Empoysoned hath, for that she was his fo;
Lucia likerous loved hire housbonde so 752

That for he sholde alwey upon hire thynke
She yaf hym swich a manere love drynke
That he was deed er it were by the morwe.
And thus algates housbondes han sorw. 756

'Thanne tolde he me how oon Latumyus
Compleyned unto his felawe Arrius
That in his gardyn growed swich a tree
On which, he seyde, how that hise wyves thre 760
Hanged himself for herte despitus.

"O levee brother," quod this Arrius,
"Yif me a plante of thilke blissed tree,
And in my gardyn planted it shal bee." 764

'Of latter date of wyves hath he red,

That somme han slayn hir housbondes in hir bed,
 And somme han dryve nayles in hir brayn
 Whil that they slepte, and thus they han hem slayn.
 Somme han hem yeve poysoun in hire drynke.

'He spak moore harm than herte may bithynke; 772

And therwithal he knew of mo proverbes
 Than in this world ther growen gras or herbes.

"Bet is," quod he, "thyn habitacioun

Be with a leoun or a foul dragoun 776

Than with a womman usynge for to chyde."

"Bet is," quod he, "hye in the roof abyde

Than with an angry wyf down in the hous.

They been so wikked and contrarious 780

They haten that hir housbondes loveth ay."

He seyde, "A womman cast hir shame away

Whan she cast of hir smok"; and forthermo

"A fair womman, but she be chaast also, 784

Is lyk a gold ryng in a sowes nose."

'Who wolde leeve, or who wolde suppose

The wo that in myn herte was and pyne?

And whan I saugh he wolde nevere fyne 788

To reden on this cursed book al nyght,

Al sodeynly thre leves have I plyght

Out of his book, right as he radde; and eke

I with my fest so took hym on the cheke 792

That in oure fyr he fil bakward adoun.

And he up stirte, as dooth a wood leoun,

And with his fest he smoot me on the heed

That in the floor I lay as I were deed. 796

And whan he saugh how stille that I lay,

He was agast, and wolde han fled his way;

Til atte laste out of my swogh I breyde.

"O hastow slayn me, false thief?" I seyde, 800

"And for my land thus hastow mordred me?

Er I be deed, yet wol I kisse thee!"

'And neer he cam, and kneled faire adoun,

And seyde, "Deere suster Alisoun, 804

As help me God, I shal thee nevere smyte!

That I have doon, it is thyself to wyte.

Foryeve it me, and that I thee biseke!"
 And yet eftsoones I hitte hym on the cheke, 808
 And seyde, "Theef, thus muchel am I wreke!
 Now wol I dye; I may no lenger speke!"
 But atte laste, with muchel care and wo,
 We fille acorded by us-selven two. 812
 He yaf me al the bridel in myn hond,
 To han the governance of hous and lond,
 And of his tonge, and of his hond also;
 And made hym brenne his book anon right tho. 816
 And whan that I hadde geten unto me
 By maistrie al the soveraynetee,
 And that he seyde, "Myn owene, trewe wyf,
 Do as thee lust to terme of al thy lyf; 820
 Keepe thyn honour, and keepe eek myn estaat" —
 After that day, we hadden never debaat.
 God helpe me so, I was to hym as kynde
 As any wyf from Denmark unto Ynde; 824
 And also trewe; and so was he to me.
 I prey to God, that sit in magestee,
 So blesse his soule for his mercy deere!
 Now wol I seye my tale, if ye wol heere.' 828

Biholde the wordes bitwene the Somonour and the Frere.

The Frere lough, whan he hadde herd al this.
 'Now, dame,' quod he, 'so have I joye or blis,
 This is a long preamble of a tale.'
 And whan the Somonour herde the Frere gale, 832
 'Lo,' quod the Somonour, 'Goddess armes two!
 A frere wol entremette him everemo.
 Lo, goode men, a flye, and eek a frere,
 Wol falle in every dysshē and mateere. 836
 What spekestow of preambulacioun?
 What! amble, or trotte, or pees, or go sit doun!
 Thou lettest oure disport in this manere.'
 'Ye woltow so, sire Somonour?' quod the Frere. 840
 'Now, by my feith, I shal, er that I go,

Telle of a somonour swich a tale or two
 That alle the folk shal laughen in this place.'
 'Now elles, Frere, I bishrewe thy face,' 844
 Quod this Somonour; 'and I bishrewe me
 But-if I telle tales two or thre
 Of freres, er I come to Sidingborne,
 That I shal make thyn herte for to morne, 848
 For wel I woot thy pacience is gon.'
 Oure Hooste cride, 'Pees! and that anon!
 And seyde, 'Lat the womman telle hire tale.
 Ye fare as folk that dronken were of ale. 852
 Do, dame, telle forth youre tale and that is best.'
 'Al redy, sire,' quod she, 'right as yow lest,
 If I have licence of this worthy Frere.'
 'Yis, dame,' quod he; 'tel forth, and I wol heere.' 856

Heere endeth the Wyf of Bathe hir Prologe and bigynneth hir Tale.

In tholde dayes of the kyng Arthour,
 Of which that Britons speken greet honour,
 All was this land fulfild of fairye;
 The elf queene with hir joly compaignye 860
 Daunced ful ofte in many a grene mede.
 This was the olde opinion, as I rede —
 I speke of manye hundred yeres ago.
 But now kan no man se none elves mo; 864
 For now the grete charitee and prayeres
 Of lymytours and othere hooly freres,
 That serchen every lond and every streem
 As thikke as motes in the sonne beem, 868
 Blessynge halles, chambres, kichenes, boures,
 Citees, burghes, castels, hye toures,
 Thropes, bernes, shipnes, dayeryes —
 This maketh that ther been no fairyes; 872
 For ther-as wont to walken was an elf,
 Ther walketh now the lymytour hymself
 In undermeles and in morwenynges,
 And seyth his matyns and his hooly thynges, 876

As he gooth in his lymytacioun.

Wommen may go sauflly up and down.

In every bussh, or under every tree,

Ther is noon oother incubus but he,

880

And he ne wol doon hem but dishonour.

And so bifel it that this kyng Arthour

Hadde in his hous a lusty bachelor,

That on a day cam ridynge fro ryver;

884

And happed that, allone as he was born,

He saugh a mayde walkynge hym biforn;

Of which mayde anon, maugree hir heed,

By verray force birafte hire maydenhed.

888

For which oppression was swich clamour

And swich pursute unto the kyng Arthour

That dampned was this knyght for to be deed

By cours of lawe, and sholde han lost his heed —

892

Paraventure swich was the statut tho —

But that the queene, and othere ladyes mo,

So longe preyeden the kyng of grace

Til he his lyf hym graunted in the place,

896

And yaf hym to the queene, al at hir wille,

To chese wheither she wolde hym save or spille.

The queene thanketh the kyng with al hir myght;

And after this, thus spak she to the knyght,

900

Whan that she saugh hir tyme upon a day:

‘Thou standest yet,’ quod she, ‘in swich array

That of thy lyf yet hastow no suretee.

I grante thee lyf if thou kanst tellen me

904

What thyng is it that wommen moost desiren.

Be war, and keepe thy nekke boon from iren.

And if thou kanst nat tellen it anon,

Yet shal I yeve thee leve for to gon

908

A twelfmonth and a day, to seche and leere

An answee suffisant in this mateere;

And suretee wol I han, er that thou pace,

Thy body for to yelden in this place.’

912

Wo was this knyght and sorwefully he siketh,

But what! he may nat do al as hym liketh;

And at the laste he chees hym for to wende,

And come agayn right at the yeres ende 916
With swich answeere as God wolde hym purveye;
And taketh his leve and wendeth forth his weye.

He seketh every hous and every place
Where-as he hopeth for to fynde grace, 920
To lerne what thyng wommen loven moost;
But he ne koude arryven in no coost
Wher-as he myghte fynde in this mateere
Two creatures accordyng in feere. 924

Somme seyde wommen loven best richesse,
Somme seyde honour, somme seyde jolynesse,
Somme riche array, somme seyden lust abedde
And ofte tyme to be wydwe and wedde. 928

Somme seyde that oure hertes been moost esed
Whan that we been yflatered and yplesed.

He gooth ful ny the sothe, I wol nat lye;
A man shal wynne us best with flaterye; 932
And with attendance and with bisynesse
Been we ylymed, bothe moore and lesse.

And somme seyen that we loven best
For to be free and do right as us lest, 936
And that no man repreve us of oure vice,
But seye that we be wise and nothyng nyce;
For trewely ther is noon of us alle,
If any wight wol clawe us on the galle, 940
That we nel kike for he seith us sooth.

Assay, and he shal fynde it that so dooth;
For be we never so vicious withinne,
We wol been holden wise and clene of synne. 944

And somme seyn that greet delit han we
For to been holden stable, and eke secree,
And in o purpos stedefastly to dwelle,
And nat biwreye thyng that men us telle. 948

But that tale is nat worth a rake-stele;
Pardee, we wommen konne no thyng hele —
Witnessse on Myda, wol ye heere the tale.

Ovyde, amonges othere thynges smale, 952
Seyde Myda hadde, under his longe heres,
Growynge upon his heed, two asses eres;

The whiche vice he hydde as he best myghte,
 Ful subtilly, from every mannes sighte, 956
 That save his wyf, ther wiste of it namo.
 He loved hire moost and trustede hire also;
 He preyede hire that to no creature
 She sholde tellen of his disfigure. 960

She swoor him nay, for al this world to wynne,
 She nolde do that vileynye or synne
 To make hir housbonde han so foul a name;
 She nolde nat telle it for hir owene shame. 964
 But nathelees, hir thoughte that she dyde,
 That she so longe sholde a conseil hyde;
 Hir thoughte it swal so soore aboute hir herte
 That nedely som word hire moste asterolde. 968

And sith she dorste telle it to no man,
 Doun to a mareys faste by she ran —
 Til she came there, her herte was a-fyre —
 And as a bitore bombleth in the myre, 972
 She leyde hir mouth unto the water doun,
 'Biwreye me nat, thou water with thy soun!
 Quod she; 'to thee I telle it and namo.

Myn housbonde hath longe asses erys two! 976
 Now is myn herte all hool; now is it oute;
 I myghte no lenger kepe it, out of doute.'
 Heere may ye se, thogh we a tyme abyde,
 Yet out it moot; we kan no conseil hyde. 980
 The remenant of the tale if ye wol heere,
 Redeth Ovyde, and ther ye may it leere.

This knyght of which my tale is specially,
 Whan that he saugh he myghte nat come therby — 984
 This is to seye, what wommen love moost —
 Withinne his brest ful sorweful was the goost.
 But hoom he gooth, he myghte nat sojourne;
 The day was come that homward moste he tourne. 988
 And in his wey it happed hym to ryde,

In al this care, under a forest syde,
 Wher-as he saugh upon a daunce go
 Of ladyes foure and twenty and yet mo; 992
 Toward the whiche daunce he drow ful yerne,

In hope that som wysdom sholde he lerne.
 But certainly, er he came fully there,
 Vanysshed was this daunce, he nyste where. 996
 No creature saugh he that bar lyf,
 Save on the grene he saugh sittynge a wyf —
 A fouler wight ther may no man devyse.
 Agayn the knyght this olde wyf gan ryse, 1000
 And seyde, 'Sire knyght, heer forth ne lith no wey.
 Tel me what that ye seken, by youre fey.
 Paraventure it may the bettre be;
 Thise olde folk kan muchel thyng,' quod she. 1004
 'My leeve mooder,' quod this knyght, 'certeyn,
 I nam but deed but-if that I kan seyn
 What thyng it is that wommen moost desire.
 Koude ye me wisse, I wolde wel quite youre hire.' 1008
 'Plight me thy trouthe, heere in myn hand,' quod she,
 'The nexte thyng that I requere thee,
 Thou shalt it do, if it lye in thy myght;
 And I wol telle it yow er it be nyght.' 1012
 'Have heer my trouthe,' quod the knyght, 'I grante.'
 'Thanne,' quod she, 'I dar me wel avante
 Thy lyf is sauf; for I wol stonde therby,
 Upon my lyf, the queene wol seye as I. 1016
 Lat se which is the proudeste of hem alle
 That wereth on a coverchief or a calle
 That dar seye "nay" of that I shal thee teche!
 Lat us go forth, withouten lenger speche.' 1020
 Tho rowned she a pistel in his ere,
 And bad hym to be glad and have no fere.
 Whan they be comen to the court, this knyght
 Seyde he had holde his day as he hadde hight, 1024
 And redy was his answeere, as he sayde.
 Ful many a noble wyf and many a mayde
 And many a wydwe, for that they been wise —
 The queene herself sittynge as justise — 1028
 Assembled been, his answeere for to heere;
 And afterward this knyght was bode appeere.
 To every wight comanded was silence,
 And that the knyght sholde telle in audience 1032

What thyng that worldly wommen loven best.
 This knyght ne stood nat stille as doth a best,
 But to his question anon answerde,
 With manly voys, that al the court it herde:

1036

‘My lige lady, generally,’ quod he,
 ‘Wommen desiren to have sovereynetee
 As wel over hir housbond as hir love,
 And for to been in maistrie hym above.

1040

This is youre mooste desir, thogh ye me kille;
 Dooth as yow list, I am heer at youre wille.’

In al the court ne was ther wyf, ne mayde,
 Ne wydwe, that contraried that he sayde,
 But seyden he was worthy han his lyf.

1044

And with that word, up stirte the olde wyf
 Which that the knyght saugh sittynge in the grene.

‘Mercy,’ quod she, ‘my sovereyn lady queene!

1048

Er that youre court departe, do me right.

I taughte this answer unto the knyght;

For which he plighte me his trouthe there,

The firste thyng that I wolde hym requere,

1052

He wolde it do, if it lay in his myght.

Bifore the court thanne preye I thee, sir knyght,’

Quod she, ‘that thou me take unto thy wyf;

For wel thou woost that I have kept thy lyf.

1056

If I sey fals, sey “nay,” upon thy fey.’

This knyght answerde, ‘Allas, and weylawey!

I woot right wel that swich was my biheste.

For Goddes love, as chees a newe requeste;

1060

Taak al my good and lat my body go.’

‘Nay, thanne,’ quod she, ‘I shrewe us bothe two!

For thogh that I be foul, and oold, and poore,

I nolde for al the metal, ne for oore

1064

That under erthe is grave or lith above,

But-if thy wyf I were, and eek thy love.’

‘My love?’ quod he, ‘nay, my dampnacion!

Allas, that any of my nacion

1068

Sholde evere so foule disparaged be!’

But al for noght; thende is this, that he

Constreyned was, he nedes moste hire wedde;

And taketh his olde wyf and gooth to bedde.

1072

Now wolden som men seye, paraventure,

That for my negligence I do no cure

To tellen yow the joye and al tharray

That at the feeste was that ilke day.

1076

To which thyng shortly answeren I shal.

I seye ther nas no joye ne feeste at al.

Ther nas but hevynesse and muche sorwe;

For prively he wedded hire on a morwe,

1080

And al day after hidde hym as an owle,

So wo was hym, his wyf looked so foule.

Greet was the wo the knyght hadde in his thoght

Whan he was with his wyf a-bedde ybrought;

1084

He walweth, and he turneth to and fro.

His olde wyf lay smylunge everemo,

And seyde, 'O deere housbonde, benedicitee!

Fareth every knyght thus with his wyf as ye?

1088

Is this the lawe of kyng Arthures hous?

Is every knyght of his so dangerous?

I am youre owene lovë, and youre wyf;

I am she which that saved hath youre lyf;

1092

And certes, yet ne dide I yow nevere unright.

Why fare ye thus with me this firste nyght?

Ye faren lyk a man had lost his wit.

What is my gilt? for Goddes love tel it,

1096

And it shal been amended, if I may.'

'Amended?' quod this knyght, 'allas! nay, nay!

It wol nat been amended nevere mo!

Thou art so loothly, and so oold also,

1100

And therto comen of so lough a kynde,

That litel wonder is thogh I walwe and wynde.

So wolde God myn herte wolde breste!

'Is this,' quod she, 'the cause of youre unreste?'

1104

'Ye, certainly,' quod he, 'no wonder is.'

'Now sire,' quod she, 'I koude amende al this,

If that me liste, er it were dayes thre,

So wel ye myghte bere yow unto me.

1108

'But for ye speken of swich gentillesse

As is descended out of old richesse,

- That therfore sholden ye be gentilmen — Swich arrogancē is nat worth an hen. 11112
 Looke who that is moost vertuous alway,
 Pryvee and apert, and moost entendeth ay
 To do the gentil dedes that he kan,
 Taak hym for the grettest gentilman. 11116
 Crist wole we clayme of hym oure gentillesse,
 Nat of oure eldres for hire old richesse;
 For thogh they yeve us al hir heritage,
 For which we clayme to been of heigh parage, 11120
 Yet may they nat biquethe for nothyng
 To noon of us hir vertuous lyvyng,
 That made hem gentilmen ycalled be,
 And bad us folwen hem in swich degree. 11124
 ‘Wel kan the wise poete of Florence
 That highte Dant speken in this sentence.
 Lo, in swich maner rym is Dantes tale:
 “Ful selde up riseth by his branches smale 11128
 Prowesse of man; for God, of his goodnesse,
 Wole that of hym we clayme oure gentillesse;
 For of oure eldres may we no thyng clayme
 But temporel thyng that man may hurte and mayme.” 11132
 ‘Eek every wight woot this as wel as I:
 If gentillesse were planted natureelly
 Unto a certeyn lynage doun the lyne,
 Pryvee nor apert thanne wolde they nevere fyne 11136
 To doon of gentillesse the faire office;
 They myghte do no vileynye or vice.
 ‘Taak fyr and ber it in the derkeste hous
 Bitwix this and the mount of Kaukasous, 11140
 And lat men shette the dores and go thenne,
 Yet wole the fyr as faire lye and brenne
 As twenty thousand men myghte it biholde.
 His office natureel ay wol it holde, 11144
 Up peril of my lyf, til that it dye.
 ‘Heere may ye se wel how that genterye
 Is nat annexed to possession,
 Sith folk ne doon hir operacion 11148
 Alwey, as dooth the fyr, lo, in his kynde.

For God it woot, men may wel often fynde
 A lordes sone do shame and vileynye.
 And he that wole han pris of his gentrye, 1152
 For he was boren of a gentil hous
 And hadde hise eldres noble and vertuous,
 And nel hymselfen do no gentil dedis
 Ne folwen his gentil auncestre that deed is, 1156
 He nys nat gentil, be he duc or erl;
 For vileyns synful dedes make a cherl.
 For gentillesse nys but renomee
 Of thyne auncestres for hire heigh bountee, 1160
 Which is a strange thyng to thy persone —
 Thy gentillesse cometh fro God allone.
 Thanne comth oure verray gentillesse of grace;
 It was no thyng biquethe us with oure place. 1164
 ‘Thenketh hou noble, as seith Valerius,
 Was thilke Tullius Hostillius,
 That out of poverté roos to heigh noblesse.
 Reedeth Senek, and redeth eek Boece. 1168
 Ther shul ye seen expresse that no drede is
 That he is gentil that dooth gentil dedis.
 And therfore, leeve housbonde, I thus conclude:
 Al were it that myne auncestres weren rude, 1172
 Yet may the hye God — and so hope I —
 Grante me grace to lyven vertuously.
 Thanne am I gentil whan that I bigynne
 To lyven vertuously and weyve synne. 1176
 ‘And theras ye of poverté me repreeve,
 The hye God on whom that we bileeve
 In wilful poverté chees to lyve his lyf.
 And certes every man, mayden or wyf, 1180
 May understonde that Jesus, hevene kyng,
 Ne wolde nat chesen vicious lyvyng.
 “Glad poverté is an honeste thyng certeyn.”
 This wole Senec and othere clerkes seyn. 1184
 Whoso that halt hym payd of his poverté,
 I holde hym riche, al hadde he nat a sherte.
 He that coveiteth is a pouere wight;
 For he wolde han that is nat in his myght. 1188

But he that noght hath, ne coveiteth have,
Is riche, although ye holde hym but a knave.

‘Verray poverte, it syngeth proprely.

Juvenal seith of poverte myrily,

1192

“The poure man, whan he goth by the weye
Bifore the theves, he may synge and pleye.”

Poverté is hateful good, and as I gesse,

A ful greet bryngere out of bisynesse;

1196

A greet amendere eek of sapience

To hym that taketh it in pacience.

Poverté is this, although it seme alenge:

Possession that no wight wol chalenge.

1200

Poverté ful ofte, whan a man is lowe,

Maketh his God and eek hymself to knowe.

Poverté a spectacle is, as thynketh me,

Thurgh which he may hise verray freendes see.

1204

And therfore, sire, syn that I noght yow greve,

Of my poverté namoore ye me repreve.

‘Now, sire, of elde ye repreve me.

And certes, sire, thogh noon auctoritee

1208

Were in no book, ye gentils of honour

Seyn that men sholde an oold wight doon favour,

And clepe hym fader, for youre gentillesse.

And auctours shal I fynden as I gesse.

1212

‘Now ther ye seye that I am foul and old,

Than drede you noght to been a cokewold.

For filthe and eeldē, al so moot I thee,

Been grete wardeyns upon chastitee.

1216

But nathelees, syn I knowe youre delit,

I shal fulfille youre worldly appetit.

‘Chese now,’ quod she, ‘oon of thise thynges tweye:

To han me foul and old til that I deye,

1220

And be to yow a trewe, humble wyf,

And nevere yow displese in al my lyf;

Or elles ye wol han me yong and fair,

And take youre aventure of the repair

1224

That shal be to youre hous bycause of me,

Or in som oother place, may wel be.

Now chese yourselven wheither that yow liketh.’

This knyght avyseth hym, and sore siketh. 1228
 But atte laste, he seyde in this manere:
 'My lady and my love, and wyf so deere,
 I put me in youre wise governance.
 Cheseth youreself which may be moost plesance 1232
 And moost honour to yow and me also.
 I do no fors the wheither of the two;
 For as yow liketh it suffiseth me.'
 'Thanne have I gete of yow maistrie,' quod she, 1236
 'Syn I may chese and governe as me lest.'
 'Ye, certes, wyf,' quod he, 'I holde it best.'
 'Kys me'! quod she; 'we be no lenger wrothe;
 For by my trouthe, I wol be to yow bothe — 1240
 This is to seyn, ye, bothe fair and good.
 I prey to God that I moote sterven wood
 But I to yow be al so good and trewe
 As evere was wyf syn that the world was newe; 1244
 And but I be tomorn as fair to seene
 As any lady, emperice or queene,
 That is bitwixe the est and eke the west,
 Dooth with my lyf and deth right as yow lest. 1248
 Cast up the curtyng; looke how that it is!
 And whan the knyght saugh verrailly al this,
 That she so fair was, and so yong therto,
 For joye he hente hire in hise armes two, 1252
 His herte bathed in a bath of blisse.
 A thousand tyme a-rewe he gan hire kisse;
 And she obeyed hym in everythyng
 That myghte doon hym plesance or likyng. 1256
 And thus they lyve unto hir lyves ende
 In parfit joye. And Jesu Crist us sende
 Housbondes meeke, yonge, fressh a-bedde,
 And grace toverbyde hem that we wedde! 1260
 And eek, I praye, Jesu shorte hir lyves
 That nat wol be governed by hir wyves;
 And olde and angry nygardes of dispence,
 God sende hem soone verray pestilence! 1264

Heere endeth the Wyves Tale of Bathe.

The prologe of the Freres Tale.

This worthy lymytour, this noble Frere,
 He made alwey a maner louryng chiere
 Upon the Somonour, but for honestee
 No vileyns word as yet to hym spak he. 1268
 But atte laste he seyde unto the Wyf,
 'Dame,' quod he, 'God yeve yow right good lyf!
 Ye han heer touched, al so moot I thee,
 In scole matere greet difficultee. 1272
 Ye han seyde muche thyng right wel, I seye;
 But, dame, heere as we ryde by the weye,
 Us nedeth nat to speken but of game,
 And lete auctoritees, on Goddes name, 1276
 To prechyng and to scolē of clergie.
 And if it lyke to this compaignye,
 I wol yow of a somonour telle a game.
Pardee, ye may wel knowe by the name 1280
 That of a somonour may no good be sayd.
 I praye that noon of you be yvele apayd —
 A somonour is a rennere up and doun
 With mandementz for fornicacioun, 1284
 And is ybet at every townes ende.'
 Oure Hoost tho spak: 'A, sire, ye sholde be hende
 And curteys, as a man of youre estat.
 In compaignye we wol have no debaat. 1288
 Telleth youre tale, and lat the Somonour be.'
 'Nay,' quod the Somonour, 'lat hym seye to me
 What-so hym list. Whan it comth to my lot,
 By God, I shal hym quiten every grot. 1292
 I shal hym tellen which a greet honour
 It is to be a flaterynge lymytour;
 And of many another manere cryme,
 Which nedeth nat rehercen for this tyme; 1296
 And his office I shal hym telle, ywis.'
 Oure Hoost answerde, 'Pees, namoore of this!'
 And after this he seyde unto the Frere,
 'Tel forth youre tale, leeve maister deere.' 1300

Heere bigynneth the Freres Tale.

Whilom ther was dwellynge in my contree
 An erchedekene, a man of heigh degree,
 That boldely dide execucioun
 In punysshynge of fornicacioun, 1304
 Of wicchecraft, and eek of bawderye,
 Of diffamacioun, and avowtrye,
 Of chirche reves, and of testamentz,
 Of contractes, and eek lakke of sacramentz, 1308
 Of usure, and of symonye also;
 But, certes, lecchours dide he grettest wo;
 They sholde syngen, if that they were hent;
 And smale tytheres weren foule yshent, 1312
 If any persone wolde upon hem pleyne.
 Ther myghte asterte hym no pecunyal peyne.
 For smale tithes and for smal offrynge
 He made the peple pitously to synge; 1316
 For er the bisshope caughte hem with his hook,
 They weren in the erchedeknes book:
 And thanne hadde he thurgh his jurisdiccion
 Power to doon on hem correccion. 1320
 He hadde a somonour redy to his hond.
 A slyer boye was noon in Engelond;
 For subtilly he hadde his espiaille,
 That taughte hym wher hym myghte availle. 1324
 He koude spare of lecchours oon or two,
 To techen hym to foure and twenty mo.
 For thogh this somonour wood was as an hare,
 To telle his harlotrye I wol nat spare, 1328
 For we been out of his correccion;
 They han of us no jurisdiccion,
 Ne nevere shullen, terme of al hir lyves.
 'Peter! so been wommen of the styves,' 1332
 Quod the Somonour, 'yput out of my cure.'
 'Pees, with myschance, and with mysaventure!'
 Thus seyde oure Hoost; 'and lat hym telle his tale
 Now telleth forth, thogh that the somonour gale. 1336
 Ne spareth nat, myn owene maister deere!'

This false thief, this somonour — quod the Frere —
Hadde alwey bawdes redy to his hond
As any hawk to lure in Engelond, 1340
That tolde hym al the secree that they knewe;
For hire acqueyntance was nat come of newe,
They weren hise approwours prively.
He took hymself a greet profit therby; 1344
His maister knew nat alwey what he wan.
Withouten mandement a lewed man
He koude somne on payne of Cristes curs.
And they were glade for to fille his purs 1348
And make hym grete feestes atte nale.
And right as Judas hadde purses smale
And was a thief, right swich a thief was he;
His maister hadde but half his duëtee. 1352
He was, if I shal yeven hym his laude,
A thief, and eek a somnour, and a baude.
He hadde eek wenches at his retenue,
That wheither that sir Robert, or sir Huwe, 1356
Or Jakke, or Rauf, or whoso that it were
That lay by hem, they tolde it in his ere.
Thus was the wenche and he of oon assent;
And he wolde fecche a feyned mandement, 1360
And somne hem to the chapitre, bothe two,
And pile the man and lete the wenche go.
Thanne wolde he seye, 'Freend, I shal for thy sake
Do striken hire out of oure lettres blake. 1364
Thee thar namoore, as in this cas, travaille;
I am thy freend ther I thee may availle.'
Certeyn, he knew of briberyes mo
Than possible is to telle in yeres two; 1368
For in this world nys dogge for the bowe
That kan an hurt deer from an hool yknowe
Bet than this somnour knew a sly lecchour,
Or an avowtier, or a paramour. 1372
And for that was the fruyt of al his rente,
Therefore on it he sette al his entente.
And so bifel that ones on a day
This somnour evere waityng on his pray, 1376

Rood for to somne an old wydwe, a ribibe —
 Feynyng a cause, for he wolde brybe —
 And happed that he saugh bifore hym ryde
 A gay yeman, under a forest syde. 1380
 A bowe he bar and arwes brighte and kene;
 He hadde upon a courtepy of grene;
 An hat upon his heed, with frenges blake.
 'Sire,' quod this somnour, 'hayl, and wel atake!' 1384
 'Welcome,' quod he, 'and every good felawe!
 Wher rydestow under this grene-wode shawe?'
 Seyde this yeman. 'Wiltow fer today?'
 This somnour hym answerde, and seyde, 'Nay. 1388
 Heere faste by,' quod he, 'is myn entente,
 To ryden for to reysen up a rente
 That longeth to my lordes duëtee.'
 'Artow thanne a bailly?' 'Ye,' quod he. 1392
 He dorste nat, for verray filthe and shame,
 Seye that he was a somonour, for the name.
 'Depardieux,' quod this yeman, 'deere broother;
 Thou art a bailly, and I am another. 1396
 I am unknowen, as in this contree;
 Of thyn aqueyntance I wolde praye thee,
 And eek of bretherhede if that yow leste.
 I have gold and silver in my cheste; 1400
 If that thee happe to comen in oure shire,
 Al shal be thyn, right as thou wolt desire.'
 'Grant mercy,' quod this somonour, 'by my feith!
 Everych in ootheres hand his trouthe leith, 1404
 For to be sworn bretheren til they deye.
 In daliance they ryden forth hir weye.
 This somonour, that was as ful of jangles
 As ful of venym been thise waryangles, 1408
 And evere enqueryng upon everythyng,
 'Brother,' quod he, 'where is now youre dwellyng,
 Another day if that I sholde yow seche?'
 This yeman hym answerde in softe speche; 1412
 'Brother,' quod he, 'fer in the north contree,
 Where-as I hope somtyme I shal thee see.
 Er we departe, I shal thee so wel wisse

That of myn hous ne shaltow nevere mysse.'

1416

'Now brother,' quod this somonour, 'I yow preye,
Teche me, whil that we ryden by the weye —

Syn that ye been a baillif as am I —

Som subtiltee, and tel me feithfully

1420

In myn office how I may moost wyne;

And spareth nat for conscience ne synne,

But as my brother tel me how do ye.'

'Now by my trouthe, brother deere,' seyde he,

1424

'As I shal tellen thee a feithful tale.

My wages been ful streitē and ful smale.

My lord is hard to me, and daungerous;

And myn officē is ful laborous;

1428

And therfore by extorcions I lyve.

Forsothe, I take all that men wol me yeve.

Algate, by sleyghtē or by violence,

Fro yeer to yeer I wyne al my dispenche.

1432

I kan no bettre telle, feithfully.'

'Now certes,' quod this somonour, 'so fare I;

I spare nat to taken, God it woot,

But-if it be to hevye or to hoot.

1436

What I may gete in conseil prively,

No maner conscience of that have I.

Nere myn extorcioun, I myghte nat lyven.

Nor of swiche japes wol I nat be shryven;

1440

Stomak ne conscience ne knowe I noon;

I shrewe thise shrifte-fadres everychoon.

Wel be we met, by God and by Seint Jame!

But leewe brother, tel me thanne thy name,'

1444

Quod this somonour, 'in this meene while.'

This yeman gan a litel for to smyle.

'Brother,' quod he, 'wiltow that I thee telle?

I am a feend; my dwellyng is in helle.

1448

And keere I ryde aboute my purchasyng,

To wite wher men wolde me yeven anythyng.

My purchas is theeffect of al my rente.

Looke how thou rydest for the same entente —

1452

To wyne good, thou rekkest nevere how;

Right so fare I, for ryde I wolde right now

- Unto the worldes ende for a preye.
 'Al' quod this somonour, 'benedicite, what sey ye? 1456
 I wende ye were a yeman, trewely;
 Ye han a mannes shape as wel as I.
 Han ye a figure thanne determinat
 In helle, ther ye been in youre estat?' 1460
 'Nay, certainly,' quod he; 'ther have we noon;
 But whan us liketh we kan take us oon,
 Or elles make yow seme we been shape.
 Somtyme lyk a man, or lyk an ape, 1464
 Or lyk an angel, kan I ryde or go.
 It is no wonder thyng thogh it be so;
 A lowsy jogelour kan deceyve thee,
 And pardee, yet kan I moore craft than he.' 1468
 'Why,' quod the somonour, 'ryde ye thanne or goon
 In sondry shape, and nat alwey in oon?'
 'For we,' quod he, 'wol us swiche formes make
 As moost able is oure preyes for to take.' 1472
 'What maketh yow to han al this labour?'
 'Ful many a cause, leeve sire somonour,' Seyde this feend. 'But alle thyng hath tyme;
 The day is short, and it is passed pryme, 1476
 And yet ne wan I nothyng in this day.
 I wol entende to wynnen if I may,
 And nat entende oure wittes to declare;
 For brother myn, thy wit is al to bare 1480
 To understonde, althogh I tolde hem thee.
 But for thou axest why labouren we —
 For somtyme we been Goddes instrumentz
 And meenes, to doon hise comandementz, 1484
 Whan that hym list upon his creatures,
 In divers art and in diverse figures.
 Withouten hym we have no myght, certayn,
 If that hym list to stonden ther agayn. 1488
 And somtyme, at oure prayere, han we leve
 Oonly the body and nat the soule greve;
 Witnesse on Job, whom that we diden wo.
 And somtyme han we myght of bothe two — 1492
 This is to seyn, of soule and body eke.

- And somtyme be we suffred for to seke
 Upon a man and doon his soule unreste
 And nat his body. And al is for the beste. 1496
 Whan he withstandeth oure temptacioun,
 It is a cause of his savacioun;
 Al be it that it was nat oure entente
 He sholde be sauf, but that we wolde hym hente. 1500
 And somtyme be we servant unto man;
 As to the ercebisshope, Seint Dunstan,
 And to the apostles servant eek was I.
 'Yet tel me,' quod the somonour, 'feithfully; 1504
 Make ye yow newe bodies thus alway
 Of elementz?' The feend answerde, 'Nay.
 Somtyme we feyne; and somtyme we aryse
 With dede bodyes in ful sondry wyse, 1508
 And speke as renably and faire and wel
 As to the Phitonissa dide Samuel;
 And yet wol som men seye it was nat he.
 I do no fors of youre dyvynytee; 1512
 But o thyng warne I thee, I wol nat jape:
 Thou wolt algates wite how we been shape?
 Thou shalt hereafterwardes, my brother deere,
 Come there thee nedeth nat of me to leere; 1516
 For thou shalt, by thyn owene experience,
 Konne in a chayer rede of this sentence
 Bet than Virgile while he was on lyve,
 Or Dant also. Now lat us ryde blyve, 1520
 For I wole holde compaignye with thee
 Til it be so that thou forsake me.'
 'Nay,' quod this somonour, 'that shal nat bityde.
 I am a yeman, knowen is ful wyde; 1524
 My trouthe wol I holde, as in this cas;
 For though thou were the devel Sathanas,
 My trouthe wol I holde to my brother
 As I am sworn — and ech of us til oother — 1528
 For to be trewe brother in this cas.
 And bothe we goon abouten oure purchas.
 Taak thou thy part, what that men wol thee yeve,
 And I shal myn; thus may we bothe lyve. 1532

- And if that any of us have moore than oother,
 Lat hym be trewe and parte it with his brother.
 'I graunte,' quod the devel, 'by my fey!'
 And with that word, they ryden forth hir way. 1536
 And right at the entryng of the townes ende.
 To which this somonour shoope hym for to wende,
 They saugh a cart that charged was with hey,
 Which that a cartere droof forth in his way. 1540
 Deepe was the wey; for which the carte stood.
 The cartere smoot, and cryde as he were wood,
 'Hayt, Brok! hayt, Scot! what spare ye for the stones?
 The feend,' quod he, 'yow fecche, body and bones! 1544
 As ferforthly as evere were ye foled,
 So muche wo as I have with yow tholed,
 The devel have al, bothe hors and cart and hey!'
 This somonour seyde, 'Heere shal we have a pley!' 1548
 And neer the feend he drough, as noght ne were,
 Ful prively, and rowned in his ere:
 'Herkne, my brother! herkne, by thy feith!
 Herestow nat how that the cartere seith? 1552
 Hent it anon, for he hath yeve it thee —
 Bothe hey and cart, and eek hise caples thre.'
 'Nay,' quod the devel; 'God woot, never a deel.
 It is nat his entente, trust thou me weel. 1556
 Axe hym thyself, if thou nat trowest me;
 Or elles stynt a while, and thou shalt see.'
 This cartere thakketh his hors upon the croupe,
 And they bigonne drawn and to stoupe. 1560
 'Heyt now!' quod he, 'ther Jesu Crist yow blesse,
 And al his handwerk, bothe moore and lesse!
 That was wel twight, myn owene lyard boy!
 I pray to God, save thee and Seint Loy! 1564
 Now is my cart out of the slow, pardee.'
 'Lo, brother,' quod the feend, 'what tolde I thee?
 Heere may ye se, myn owene deere brother,
 The carl spak oon thing, but he thoghte another. 1568
 Lat us go forth abouten oure viage;
 Heere wynne I nothyng upon cariage.'
 Whan that they coomen somewhat out of townne,

This somonour to his brother gan to rowne:
 'Brother,' quod he, 'heere woneth an old rebekke,
 That hadde almoost as lief to lese hire nekke
 As for to yeve a peny of hir good.

1572

I wole han twelf pens, though that she be wood,
 Or I wol sompne hire unto oure office;
 And yet, God woot, of hire knowe I no vice.
 But for thou kanst nat as in this contree
 Wynne thy cost, taak heer ensample of me.'

1576

This somonour clappeth at the wydwes gate.
 'Com out,' quod he, 'thou olde virytrate!
 I trowe thou hast som frere or preest with thee.'

1580

'Who clappeth? seyde this wyf, 'benedicite!
 God save you, sire; what is youre sweete wille?'

1584

'I have,' quod he, 'of somonce a bille.
 Up payne of cursyng, looke that thou be Tomorn bifore the erchedeknes knee,
 Tanswere to the court of certeyn thynges.'

1588

'Now, Lord,' quod she, 'Crist Jesu, kyng of kynges,
 So wisly helpe me, as I ne may.
 I have been syk, and that ful many a day.

1592

I may nat go so fer,' quod she, 'ne ryde,
 But I be deed, so priketh it in my syde.
 May I nat axe a libel, sire somonour,

And answeere there by my procuratour
 To swich thyng as men wole opposen me?'

1596

'Yis,' quod this somonour; 'pay anon — lat se —
 Twelf pens to me, and I wol thee acquite.
 I shal no profit han therby but lite;

1600

My maister hath the profit and nat I.
 Com of, and lat me ryden hastily;
 Yif me twelf pens; I may no lenger tarye.'

'Twelf pens!' quod she, 'Now, lady Seinte Marie
 So wisly help me out of care and synne,
 This wyde world thogh that I sholde wyne,

1604

Ne have I nat twelf pens withinne myn hoold.
 Ye knowen wel that I am poure and oold;
 Kithe youre almesse on me, poure wrecche.'

1608

'Nay thanne'; quod he, 'the foule feend me fecche

- If I thexcuse, though thou shul be spilt!
 'Allas!' quod she; 'God woot, I have no gilt.' 1612
 'Pay me,' quod he, 'or by the sweete Seinte Anne,
 As I wol bere away thy newe panne
 For dette which that thou owest me of old.
 Whan that thou madest thyn housbonde cokewold, 1616
 I payde at hoom for thy correccioun.'
 'Thou lixt!' quod she; 'by my savacioun,
 Ne was I nevere er now, wydwe ne wyf,
 Somoned unto youre court in al my lyf; 1620
 Ne nevere I nas but of my body trewe.
 Unto the devel, blak and rough of hewe,
 Yeve I thy body and my panne also!'
 And whan the devel herde hire cursen so, 1624
 Upon hir knees, he seyde in this manere:
 'Now, Mabely, myn owene moder deere,
 Is this youre wyl in ernest that ye seye?'
 'The devel,' quod she, 'so fecche hym er he deye, 1628
 And panne and al, but he wol hym repente!'
 'Nay, olde stot, that is nat myn entente,'
 Quod this somonour, 'for to repente me
 For anythyng that I have had of thee. 1632
 I wolde I hadde thy smok and every clooth.'
 'Now, brother,' quod the devel, 'be nat wrooth.
 Thy body and this panne been myne by right;
 Thou shalt with me to helle yet tonyght, 1636
 Where thou shalt knowen of oure privetee
 Moore than a maister of dyvynytee.'
 And with that word this foule feend hym hente;
 Body and soule he with the devel wente 1640
 Where-as that somonours han hir heritage.
 And God, that makede after his ymage
 Mankynde, save and gyde us alle and some,
 And leve this somonours goode men bicomel 1644
 'Lordynges, I koude han toold yow,' quod this Frere,
 'Hadde I had leyser, for this Somnour heere,
 After the text of Crist, and Poul, and John,
 And of oure othere doctours many oon, 1648

Swiche peynes that youre herte myghte agryse;
 Al be it so no tonge may it devyse,
 Thogh that I myghte a thousand wynter telle
 The peynes of thilke cursed hous of helle. 1652
 But for to kepe us fro that cursed place
 Waketh, and preyeth Jesu for his grace
 So kepe us fro the temptour, Sathanas.
 Herketh this word! beth war, as in this cas: 1656
 The leoun sit in his awayt alway
 To sle the innocent if that he may.
 Disposeth ay youre hertes to withstonde
 The feend, that yow wolde make thral and bonde. 1660
 He may nat tempte yow over youre myght;
 For Crist wol be youre champion and knyght.
 And prayeth that thise somonours hem repente
 Of hir mysdedes, er that the feend hem hente! 1664

Heere endeth the Freres Tale.

The prologe of the Somonours Tale.

This Somonour in his styropes hye stood;
 Upon this Frere his herte was so wood
 That lyk an aspen leef he quook for ire.
 'Lordynges,' quod he, 'but o thyng I desire: 1668
 I yow biseke that of youre curteisye,
 Syn ye han herd this false Frere lye,
 As suffereth me I may my tale telle.
 This Frere bosteth that he knoweth helle, 1672
 And God it woot that it is litel wonder —
 Freres and feendes been but lyte asonder.'

Heere bigynneth the Somonour his Tale.

Lordynges, ther is in Yorkshire, as I gesse,
 A mersshy contree called Holdernesse,
 In which ther wente a lymytour aboute,
 To preche, and eek to begge, it is no doute. 1712
 And so bifel that on a day this frere

Hadde preched at a chirche in his manere,
 And specially, aboven everythyng,
 Excited he the peple in his prechyng 1716
 To trentals, and to yeve for Goddes sake
 Wherwith men myghte hooly houses make,
 Ther-as divine servyce is honoured,
 Nat ther-as it is wasted and devoured; 1720
 Ne ther it nedeth nat for to be yeve,
 As to possessioners that mowen lyve,
 Thanked be God, in wele and habundaunce.
 'Trentals,' seyde he, 'deliveren fro penaunce 1724
 Hir freendes soules, as wel olde as yonge;
 Ye, whan that they been hastily ysonge,
 Nat for to holde a preest joly and gay —
 He syngeth nat but o masse in a day. 1728
 Delivereth out,' quod he, 'anon the soules!
 Ful hard it is with flesshook or with oules
 To been yclawed, or to brenne or bake.
 Now spede yow hastily, for Cristes sake!' 1732
 And whan this frere had seyde al his entente,
 With qui cum patre forth his wey he wente.
 Whan folk in chirche had yeve him what hem lest,
 He went his wey — no lenger wolde he reste — 1736
 With scrippe and tipped staf, ytukked hye.
 In every hous he gan to poure and pry;e
 And beggeth mele, and chese, or elles corn.
 His felawe hadde a staf, tipped with horn, 1740
 A peyre of tables al of yvory,
 And a poyntel polysshed fetisly;
 And wroote the names, alwey as he stood,
 Of alle folk that yaf hym any good, 1744
 Ascaunces that he wolde for hem prey.
 'Yif us a busshel whete, malt, or reye;
 A Goddes kechyl, or a trype of chese;
 Or elles what yow lyst, we may nat cheese; 1748
 A Goddes halfpeny or a masse peny;
 Or yif us of youre brawn, if ye have eny;
 A dagon of youre blanket, leeve dame —
 Oure suster deere, lo, heere I write youre name! — 1752

Bacon, or beef, or swich thyng as ye fynde.'

A sturdy harlot wente ay hem bihynde,
That was hir hostes man, and bar a sak;
And what men yaf hem, leyde it on his bak.

1756

And whan that he was out at dore anon,
He planed away the names everichon
That he biforn had writen in his tables.

He served hem with nyfles and with fables.

1760

'Nay ther thou lixt, thou Somonour!' quod the Frere.

'Pees,' quod oure Hoost, 'for Cristes mooder deere!

Tel forth thy tale, and spare it nat at al.'

'So thryve I,' quod this Somonour, 'so I shal.'

1764

So longe he wente, hous by hous, til he

Cam til an hous ther he was wont to be Refreshed moore than in an hundred placis.

Syk lay the goode man whos that the place is;

1768

Bedrede upon a couche lowe he lay.

'Deus bic!' quod he: 'O Thomas, freend, good day!'

Seyde this frere, curteisly and softe.

'Thomas,' quod he, 'God yelde yow, ful ofte

1772

Have I upon this bench faren ful weel;

Heere have I eten many a myrie meel.'

And fro the bench he droof away the cat,

And leyde adoun his potente, and his hat,

1776

And eek his scrippe, and sette hym softe adoun.

His felawe was go walked into toun

Forth with his knave into that hostelrye

Where-as he shoope hym thilke nyght to lye.

1780

'O deere maister,' quod this sike man,

'How han ye fare, sith that March bigan?

I saugh yow noght this fourtenyght or moore.'

'God woot,' quod he, 'laboured I have ful soore;

1784

And specially for thy savacion

Have I seyde many a precious orison;

And for oure othere freendes, God hem blesse!

I have today been at youre chirche at messe,

1788

And seyde a sermon — after my symple wit —

Nat al after the text of Hooly Writ;

For it is hard to yow, as I suppose,

- And therfore wol I teche yow al the glose. 1792
 Glosynge is a glorious thyng, certeyn,
 For lettre sleeth, so as thise clerkes seyn.
 There have I taught hem to be charitable,
 And spende hir good ther it is resonable. 1796
 And there I saugh oure dame; a, where is she?'
 'Yond in the yerd, I trowe that she be,' Seyde this man; 'and she wol come anon.'
 'Ey, maister, welcome be ye, by Seint John!' 1800
 Seyde this wyf; 'how fare ye, hertely?'
 The frere ariseth up ful curteisly,
 And hire embraceth in his armes narwe,
 And kiste hire sweete, and chirteth as a sparwe 1804
 With his lyppes. 'Dame,' quod he, 'right weel;
 As he that is youre servant every deel.
 Thanked be God, that yow yaf soule and lyf,
 Yet saugh I nat this day so fair a wyf 1808
 In al the chirche, God so save me!'
 'Ye; God amende defautes, sire,' quod she.
 'Algates, welcome be ye, by my fey.'
 'Graunt mercy, dame; this have I founde alwey. 1812
 But of youre grete goodnesse, by youre leve,
 I wolde prey yow that ye nat yow greve,
 I wole with Thomas speke a litel throwe.
 Thise curatz been ful negligent and slowe 1816
 To grope tendrely a conscience
 In shrift; in prechyng is my diligence,
 And studie in Petres wordes and in Poules.
 I walke, and fissue Cristen mennes soules; 1820
 To yelden Jesu Crist his propre rente,
 To sprede his word is set al myn entente.'
 'Now, by youre leve, o deere sire,' quod she,
 'Chideth him weel, for Seinte Trinitee. 1824
 He is as angry as a pissemyre,
 Though that he have al that he kan desire;
 Though I him wrye a-nyght and make hym warm,
 And on hym leye my leg outhur myn arm, 1828
 He groneth lyk oure boor lith in oure sty.
 Oother desport ryght noon of hym have I;

I may nat plesse hym in no maner cas.'

'O Thomas, Je vous dy! Thomas! Thomas! 1832
This maketh the feend. This moste ben amended.

Ire is a thyng that hye God defended.

And therof wol I speke a word or two.'

'Now maister,' quod the wyf, 'er that I go, 1836
What wol ye dyne? I wol go ther-aboutte.'

'Now dame,' quod he, 'Je vous dy sanz doute,
Have I nat of a capon but the lyvere;

And of youre softe breed nat but a shyvere; 1840

And after that a rosted pigges heed —

But that I nolde no beest for me were deed;

Thanne hadde I with yow hoonly suffisaunce.

I am a man of litel sustenaunce; 1844

My spirit hath his fostryng in the Bible.

The body is ay so redy and penyble

To wake that my stomak is destroyed —

I prey yow, dame, ye be nat anoyed, 1848

Though I so freendly yow my conseil shewe;

By God, I wolde nat telle it but a fewe.'

.
The rest of the tale of the Summoner is omitted because of its vulgarity.

[FRAGMENT IV (GROUP E)]

THE CLERK'S HEAD-LINK]

Heere folweth the Prologe of the Clerkes Tale of Oxenford.

'Sire Clerk of Oxenford,' oure Hooste sayde,
'Ye ryde as coy and stille as dooth a mayde
Were newe spoused, sittynge at the bord.
This day ne herde I of youre tonge a word. 4
I trowe ye studie aboute som sophyme;
But Salomon seith everythyng hath tyme;
For Goddes sake, as beth of bettre cheere!
It is no tyme for to studien heere. 8
Telle us som myrie tale, by youre fey!
For what man that is entred in a pley,
He nedes moot unto the pley assente.
But precheth nat, as freres doon in Lente, 12
To make us for oure olde synnes wepe;
Ne that thy tale make us nat to slepe.
Telle us som murie thyng of adventures.
Your termes, youre colours, and youre figures — 16
Keepe hem in stoor til so be that ye endite
Heigh style, as whan that men to kynges write.
Speketh so pleyn at this tyme, we yow preye, 19
That we may understonde what ye seye.'
This worthy clerk benignely answerde.
'Hooste,' quod he, 'I am under youre yerde;
Ye han of us as now the governance,
And therfore wol I do yow obeisance 24
As fer as reson axeth hardily.
I wol yow telle a tale which that I
Lerned at Padwe of a worthy clerk,

As preved by his wordes and his werk. 28
 He is now deed and nayled in his cheste.
 I prey to God so yeve his soule reste!
 Fraunceys Petrak, the lauriat poete,
 Highte this clerk, whos rethorik sweete 32
 Enlumyned al Ytaille of poetrie,
 As Lynyan dide of philosophie
 Or lawe or oother art particuler.
 But deeth, that wol nat suffre us dwellen heer 36
 But as it were a twynklyng of an eye,
 Hem bothe hath slayn; and alle shul we dye.
 But forth to tellen of this worthy man
 That taughte me this tale, as I bigan, 40
 I seye that first with heigh stile he enditeth,
 Er he the body of his tale writeth,
 A prohemye in the which discryveth he Pemonde, and of Saluces the contree, 44
 And speketh of Apennyn, the hilles hye
 That been the boundes of West Lumbardye,
 And of Mount Vesulus in special,
 Where-as the Poo out of a welle smal 48
 Taketh his firste spryngyng and his sours;
 That estward ay encresseth in his cours
 To Emele ward, to Ferrare, and Venyse —
 The which a long thyng were to devyse. 52
 And trewely, as to my juggement,
 Me thynketh it a thyng impertinent,
 Save that he wole convoyen his mateere;
 But this his tale, which that ye may heere.

Heere bigynneth the Tale of the Clerk of Oxenford.

Ther is at the west syde of Ytaille,
 Doun at the roote of Vesulus the colde,
 A lusty playne habundant of vitaille,
 Where many a tour and toun thou mayst biholde, 60
 That founded were in tyme of fadres olde,
 And many another delitable sighte;
 And Saluces this noble contree highte. 63

A markys whilom lord was of that lond, 64
 As were hise worthy eldres hym bifore;
 And obeisant and redy to his hond
 Were alle hise liges, bothe lasse and moore. 67
 Thus in delit he lyveth, and hath doon yooore,
 Biloved and drad thurgh favour of Fortune
 Bothe of hise lordes and of his commune. 70

Therwith he was, to speke as of lynage, 71
 The gentilleste yborn of Lumbardye;
 A fair persone, and strong, and yong of age,
 And ful of honour, and of curteisye; 74
 Discreet ynogh his contree for to gye,
 Save that in somme thynges that he was to blame;
 And Walter was this yonge lordes name. 77

I blame hym thus, that he considereth noght
 In tyme comynge what hym myghte bityde,
 But in his lust present was al his thoght,
 As for to hauke and hunte on every syde. 81
 Wel ny alle othere cures leet he slyde;
 And eek he nolde — and that was worst of alle —
 Wedde no wyf, for noght that may bifalle. 84

Oonly that point his peple bar so soore 85
 That flokmeele on a day they to hym wente,
 And oon of hem that wisest was of loore —
 Or elles that the lord best wolde assente 88
 That he sholde telle hym what his peple mente,
 Or elles koude he shewe wel swich mateere —
 He to the markys seyde as ye shul heere. 91

‘O noble markys, youre humanitee
 Asseureth us to yeve us hardinesse,
 As ofte as tyme is of necessitee,
 That we to yow mowe telle oure hevynesse. 95
 Accepteth, lord, now for youre gentillesse,
 That we with pitous herte unto yow pleyne,
 And lat youre eres nat my voys desdeyne. 98

'Al have I nocht to doone in this mateere
Moore than another man hath in this place,
Yet forasmuche as ye, my lord so deere,
Han alwey shewed me favour and grace,
I dar the better aske of yow a space
Of audience to shewenoure requeste;
And ye, my lord, to doon right as yow leste.

99

102

105

'For certes, lord, so wel us liketh yow
And al youre werk, and evere han doon, that we Ne koude nat us-self devysen how
We myghte lyven in moore felicittee,
Save o thyng, lord, if youre wille be,
That for to been a wedded man yow leste;
Thanne were youre peple in sovereyn hertes reste.

106

109

112

'Boweth youre nekke under that blisful yok
Of soveraynetee, nocht of servyse,
Which that men clepeth spousaille or wedlok,
And thenketh, lord, among youre thoghtes wyse
How thatoure dayes passe in sondry wyse;
For thogh we slepe or wake or rome or ryde,
Ay fleeth the tyme; it nyl no man abyde.

113

116

119

'And thogh youre grene youthe floure as yit,
In crepeth age alwey, as stille as stoon;
And deeth manaceth every age, and smyt
In ech estaat, for ther escapeth noon.
And al so certein as we knowe echoon
That we shul deye, as uncerteyn we alle
Been of that day whan deeth shal on us falle.

123

126

'Accepteth thanne of us the trewe entente,
That nevere yet refuseden thyn heeste,
And we wol, lord, if that ye wole assente,
Chese yow a wyf, in short tyme atte leeste,
Born of the gentilleste and of the meeste
Of al this land; so that it oghte seme
Honour to God and yow, as we kan deeme.

127

130

133

'Delivere us out of al this bisy drede
And taak a wyf, for hye Goddes sake; 134

For if it so bifelle — as God forbede! —
That thurgh youre deeth youre lyne sholde slake 137

And that a straunge successour sholde take
Your heritage, O wo were us alyve!
Wherefore we pray you hastily to wyve.' 140

Hir meeke preyere and hir pitous cheere
Made the markys herte han pitee. 141

'Ye wol,' quod he, 'myn owene peple deere,
To that I nevere erst thoughte streyne me. 144

I me rejoysed of my liberte,
That seelde tyme is founde in mariage.
Ther I was free, I moot been in servage. 147

'But nathelees, I se youre trewe entente 148

And truste upon youre wit, and have doon ay.
Wherefore of my free wyl I wole assente
To wedde me as soone as evere I may. 151

But ther-as ye han profred me this day
To chese me a wyf, I yow relese
That choys, and prey yow of that profre cesse. 154

'For God it woot, that children ofte been 155

Unlyk hir worthy eldres hem bifore.
Bountee comth al of God, nat of the streen
Of which they been engendred and ybore. 158

I truste in Goddes bontee, and therfore
My mariage and myn estaat and reste
I hym bitake; he may doon as hym leste. 161

'Lat me allone in chesyng of my wyf;
That charge upon my bak I wole endure.
But I yow preye, and charge upon youre lyf,
What wyf that I take, ye me assure 165

To worshipe hire, whil that hir lyf may dure,
In word and werk, bothe heere and everyweere,
As she an emperoures doghter weere. 168

THE CLERKES TALE

'And forthermoore, this shal ye swere, that ye
 Agayn my choys shul neither grucche ne stryve;
 For sith I shal forgoon my libertee
 At youre requeste, as evere moot I thryve,
 Ther-as myn herte is set ther wol I wyve.
 And but ye wole assente in this manere,
 I prey yow speketh namoore of this matere.'

With hertely wyl they sworn and assenten
 To al this thyng; ther seyde no wight nay,
 Bisekynge hym of grace, er that they wenten,
 That he wolde graunten hem a certein day
 Of his spousaille, as soone as evere he may.
 For yet alwey the peple somewhat dredde
 Lest that the markys no wyf wolde wedde.

He graunten hem a day swich as hym leste,
 On which he wolde be wedded sikerly;
 And seyde he dide al this at hir requeste.
 And they, with humble entente, buxomly,
 Knelynge up on hir knees ful reverently,
 Hym thonken alle; and thus they han an ende
 Of hire entente, and hoom agayn they wende.

And heer-upon he to hise officeres
 Comaundeth for the feste to purveye;
 And to hise privee knyghtes and squieres
 Swich charge yaf as hym liste on hem leye;
 And they to his comandement obeye,
 And ech of hem dooth al his diligence
 To doon unto the feeste reverence.

Explicit prima pars. Incipit secunda pars.

Noght fer fro thilke paleys honourable,
 Ther-as this markys shoope his mariage,
 There stood a throope, of site delitable,
 In which that poure folk of that village
 Hadden hir beestes and hir herbergage,
 And of hire labour tooke hir sustenance,
 After that the erthe yaf hem habundance.

Amonges this poure folk ther dwelte a man 204
Which that was holden pourest of hem alle;
But hye God somtyme senden kan
His grace into a litel oxe stalle; 207
Janicula men of that throope hym calle.
A doghter hadde he, fair ynogh to sighte;
And Grisildis this yonge mayden highte. 210

But for to speke of vertuous bountee, 211
Thanne was she oon the faireste under sonne;
For pourelliche yfostred up was she,
No likerous lust was thurgh hire herte yronne; 214
Wel offer of the welle than of the tonne
She drank; and for she wolde vertu plese,
She knew wel labour, but noon ydel ese. 217

But thogh this mayde tendre were of age, 218
Yet in the brest of hire virginitee
Ther was enclosed rype and sad corage;
And in greet reverence and charitee 221
Hir olde, poure fader fostred shee.
A fewe sheepe, spynnyng on feeld, she kepte;
She wolde noght been ydel til she slepte. 224

And whan she homward cam, she wolde brynge 225
Wortes, or othere herbes, tymes ofte,
The whiche she shredde and seeth for hir lyvyng;
And made hir bed ful harde, and nothyng softe. 228
And ay she kepte hir fadres lyf on lofte
With everich obeisaunce and diligence
That child may doon to fadres reverence. 231

Upon Grisilde, this poure creature, 232
Ful ofte sithe this markys caste his eye,
As he on huntyng rood, paraventure;
And whan it fil that he myghte hire espye, 235
He noght with wantowne looking of folye
Hise eyen caste on hire, but in sad wyse
Upon hir chiere he gan hym ofte avyse, 238

Commendynge in his herte hir wommanhede,
And eek hir vertu, passynge any wight
Of so yong age, as wel in chiere as dede;
For thogh the peple hadde no greet insight 242
In vertu, he considered ful right
Hir bountee, and disposed that he wolde
Wedde hire oonly, if evere he wedde sholde. 245

The day of weddyng cam, but no wight kan 246
Telle what womman that it sholde be;
For which mervelle wondred many a man,
And seyden, whan that they were in privetee: 249
'Wol nat oure lord yet leve his vanytee?
Wol he nat wedde? allas, allas, the while!
Why wole he thus hymself and us bigile?' 252

But nathelees this markys hath doon make 253
Of gemmes set in gold and in asure
Brooches and rynges for Grisildis sake;
And of hir clothyng took he the mesure 256
By a mayde lyk to hire stature;
And eek of othere ornementes alle
That unto swich a weddyng sholde falle. 259

The time of undren of the same day 260
Approcheth that this weddyng sholde be;
And al the paleys put was in array,
Bothe halle and chambres, ech in his degree; 263
Houses of office stuffed with plentee,
Ther maystow seen, of deyntevous vitaille
That may be founde as fer as last Ytaille. 266

This roial markys, richely arrayed, 267
Lordes and ladyes in his compaignye —
The whiche that to the feeste weren yprayed —
And of his retenue the bachelrye, 270
With many a soun of sondry melodye,
Unto the village of the which I tolde,
In this array the righte wey han holde. 273

Grisilde — of this, God woot, ful innocent,
 That for hire shapen was al this array — 274
 To fecchen water at a welle is went,
 And comth hoom, as soone as ever she may; 277
 For wel she hadde herd seyde that thilke day
 The markys sholde wedde; and if she myghte,
 She wolde fayn han seyn som of that sighte. 280

She thoghte, 'I wole with othere maydens stonde,
 That been my felawes, in oure dore, and se
 The markysesse; and therefore wol I fonde
 To doon at hoom, as soone as it may be, 284
 The labour which that longeth unto me;
 And thanne I may at leyser hire biholde,
 If she this wey unto the castel holde.' 287

And as she wolde over hir thresshold gon,
 The markys cam, and gan hire for to calle. 288
 And she set down hir water pot anon,
 Beside the thresshold, in an oxes stalle; 291
 And down upon hir kneis she gan to falle,
 And with sad contenance kneleth stille,
 Til she had herd what was the lordes will. 294

This thoughtful markys spak unto this mayde
 Ful sobrelly, and seyde in this manere: 295
 'Where is youre fader, O Grisildis?' he sayde.
 And she with reverence, in humble cheere, 298
 Answerde, 'Lord, he is al redy heere.'
 And in she gooth, withouten lenger lette,
 And to the markys she hir fader fette. 301

He by the hand thanne took this olde man,
 And seyde thus, whan he hym hadde asyde: 302
 'Janicula, I neither may ne kan
 Lenger the plesance of myn herte hyde. 305
 If that thou vouche sauf, what-so bityde,
 Thy doghter wol I take, er that I wende,
 As for my wyf unto hir lyves ende. 308

THREE SCENES FROM THE GRISELDA STORY

From a cassone, or dower chest, painted by Fr. Pesellino. Now in the Accademia Carrara, Bergamo, Italy. At the left are shown the Marquis and his train leaving the palace. Near the fountain in the center the Marquis sees Griselda, with her water jar. At the extreme right the ladies have stripped Griselda of her old clothing and are about to clothe her in the wedding garments provided by Walter.

THE CLERKES TALE

333

'Thou lovest me, I woot it wel certeyn,
And art my feithful lige man ybore;
And all that liketh me, I dar wel seyn,
It liketh thee; and specially therfore
Tel me that poynt that I have seyde bifore —
If that thou wolt unto that purpos drawe
To take me as for thy sone-in-lawe.'

309

312

315

This sodeyn cas this man astonyed so
That reed he wax; abayst, and al quakyng
He stood; unnethes seyde he wordes mo,
But oonly thus, 'Lord,' quod he, 'my willynge
Is as ye wole; ne ayeynes youre likyng
I wol no thyng. Ye be my lord so deere;
Right as yow lust, governeth this mateere.'

316

319

322

'Yet wol I,' quod this markys softly,
'That in thy chambre I and thou and she
Have a collacion; and wostow why?
For I wol axe if it hire wille be
To be my wyf, and reule hire after me.
And al this shal be doon in thy presence;
I wol noght speke out of thyn audience.'

326

329

And in the chambre whil they were aboute
Hir tretys, which-as ye shal after heere,
The peple cam unto the hous withoute,
And wondred hem in how honeste manere,
And tentify, she kepte hir fader deere.
But outrely Grisildis wondre myghte,
For nevere erst ne saugh she swich a sighte.

330

333

336

No wonder is thogh that she were astoned
To seen so greet a gest come in that place;
She nevere was to swiche gestes woned,
For which she looked with ful pale face.
But shortly forth this tale for to chace,
Thise' arn the wordes that the markys seyde
To this benigne, verray, feithful mayde.

340

343

'Grisilde,' he seyde 'ye shal wel understonde 344
It liketh to youre fader and to me
That I yow wedde; and eek it may so stonde,
As I suppose ye wol that it so be. 347
But thise demandes axe I first,' quod he,
'That sith it shal be doon in hastif wyse,
Wol ye assente, or elles yow avyse? 350

'I seye this: be ye redy with good herte 351
To al my lust, and that I frely may,
As me best thynketh, do yow laughe or smerte,
And nevere ye to grucche it, nyght ne day? 354
And eek whan I sey "ye," ne sey nat "nay,"
Neither by word ne frownyng contenance?
Swere this, and heere I swere yow alliance.' 357

Wondrynge upon this word, quakyng for drede, 358
She seyde, 'Lord, undigne and unworthy
Am I to thilke honour that ye me beede;
But as ye wole youreself, right so wol I; 361
And heere I swere that nevere willyngly,
In werk ne thoght, I nyl yow disobeye,
For to be deed — though me were looth to deye.' 364

'This is ynogh, Grisilde myn,' quod he. 365
And forth he gooth, with a ful sobre cheere,
Out at the dore; and after that cam she.
And to the peple he seyde in this manere: 368
'This is my wyf,' quod he, 'that standeth heere.
Honoureth hire and loveth hire, I preye,
Whoso me loveth. Ther is namoore to seye.' 371

And for that nothyng of hir olde geere 372
She sholde brynge into his hous, he bad
That wommen sholde dispoillen hire right there;
Of which thise ladyes were nat right glad 375
To handle hir clothes, wherinne she was clad.
But nathelees, this mayde bright of hewe,
Fro foot to heed, they clothed han al newe. 378

THE CLERKES TALE

	335
Hir heris han they kembd, that lay untressed
Ful rudely, and with hir fyngres smale	379
A corone on hire heed they han ydressed,
And sette hire ful of nowches, grete and smale.	382
Of hire array what sholde I make a tale?
Unnethe the peple hire knew, for hire fairnesse,
Whan she translated was in swich richesse.	385
This markys hath hire spoused with a ryng	386
Brought for the same cause; and thanne hire sette
Upon an hors, snow whit and wel amblyng;
And to his paleys, er he lenger lette,	389
With joyful peple that hire ladde and mette,
Convoyed hire. And thus the day they spende
In revel til the sonne gan descende.	392
And shortly forth this tale for to chace,	393
I seye that to this newe markysesse
God hath swich favour sent hire of his grace
That it ne semed nat by liklynesse	396
That she was born and fed in rudenesse,
As in a cote, or in an oxe stalle,
But norissed in an emperoures halle.	399
To every wight she woxen is so deere	400
And worshipful that folk ther she was bore,
And from hire birthe knewe hire yeer by yeere,
Unnethe trowed they — but dorste han swore —	403
That to Janicle, of which I spak bifore,
She doghter were; for as by conjecture,
Hem thoughte she was another creature.	406
For though that evere vertuous was she,	407
She was encressed in swich excellence
Of thewes goode, yset in heigh bountee,
And so discreet and fair of eloquence,	410
So benigne, and so digne of reverence,
And koude so the peples herte embrace,
That ech hire lovede that looked on hir face.	413

Noght oonly of Saluces in the toun 414
 Publiced was the beautee of hir name,
 But eek biside, in many a regioun,
 If oon seide wel, another seyde the same. 417
 So spradde of hire heighe bountee the name
 That men and wommen, as wel yonge as olde,
 Goon to Saluce upon hire to bihold. 420

Thus Walter — lowely? nay, but roially — 421
 Wedded with fortunat honestetee,
 In Goddes pees lyveth ful esily
 At hoorn; and outward, grace ynogh had he; 424
 And for he saugh that under lowe degree
 Was vertu hid, the peple hym heelde
 A prudent man; and that is seyn ful seelde. 427

Nat oonly this Grisildis, thurgh hir wit,
 Koude al the feet of wyfly humblesse,
 But eek whan that the cas required it,
 The commune profit koude she redresse. 431
 Ther nas discord, rancour, ne hevynesse
 In al that land that she ne koude apese,
 And wisely brynge hem alle in reste and ese. 434

Though that hire housbonde absent were anon, 435
 If gentilmen, or othere of hire contree,
 Were wrothe, she wolde bryngen hem aton;
 So wise and rype wordes hadde she, 438
 And juggementz of so greet equitee,
 That she from hevene sent was, as men wende,
 Peple to save and every wrong tamende. 441

Nat longe tyme after that this Grisild 442
 Was wedded, she a doghter hath ybore,
 Al had hire levere have born a knave child.
 Glad was this markys and the folk therfore; 445
 For though a mayde child coome al bifore,
 She may unto a knave child atteyne,
 By liklihede, syn she nys nat bareyne. 448

Explicit secunda pars. Incipit tercia pars.

THE CLERKES TALE

Ther fil, as it bifalleth tymes mo,	337
Whan that this child had souked but a throwe,	449
This markys in his herte longeth so
To tempte his wyf, hir sadnesse for to knowe,	452
That he ne myghte out of his herte throwe
This merveillous desir his wyf tassaye;
Nedelees, God woot, he thoghte hire for taffraye.	455
He hadde assayed hire ynogh bifore,	456
And foond hire evere good. What neded it
Hire for to tempte, and alwey moore and moore?
Though som men preise it for a subtil wit,	459
But as for me I seye that yvele it sit
To assaye a wyf whan that it is no nede,
And putten hire in angwyssh and in drede.	462
For which this markys wroghte in this manere:	463
He cam allone, a-nyght ther-as she lay,
With stierne face, and with ful trouble cheere,
And seyde thus, 'Grisilde,' quod he, 'that day	466
That I yow took out of youre pouere array
And putte yow in estaat of heigh noblesse —
Ye have nat that forgeten, as I gesse?	469
'I seye, Grisilde, this present dignitee	470
In which that I have put yow, as I trowe, Maketh yow nat foryetful for to be
That I yow took in poure estaat ful lowe,	473
For any wele ye moot youreselfen knowe? —
Taak heede of every word that I yow seye;
Ther is no wight that hereth it but we tweye.	476
Ye woot youreself wel how that ye cam heere	477
Into this hous, it is nat longe ago;
And though to me that ye be lief and deere,
Unto my gentils ye be nothyng so.	480
They seyn, to hem it is greet shame and wo
For to be subgetz and been in servage
To thee, that born art of a smal village.	483

'And namely sith thy doghter was ybore, 484
Thise wordes han they spoken, doutelees.
But I desire, as I have doon bifore,
To lyve my lyf with hem in reste and pees. 487
I may nat in this caas be recchelees;
I moot doon with thy doghter for the beste —
Nat as I wolde, but as my peple leste. 490

And yet, God woot, this is ful looth to me;
But nathelees, withoute youre wityng
I wol nat doon; but this wol I,' quod he,
'That ye to me assente, as in this thyng. 494
Shewe now youre pacience in youre werkyng,
That ye me highte and swore in youre village
That day that maketh was oure mariage.' 497

Whan she had herd al this, she noght ameved, 498
Neither in word, or chiere, or countenance,
For as it semed, she was nat agreved.
She seyde, 'Lord, al lyth in youre plesance; 501
My child and I, with hertely obeisance,
Been youre al; and ye mowe save and spille
Your owene thyng; werketh after youre wille. 504

'Ther may nothyng, God so my soule save, 505
Liken to yow that may displese me;
Ne I ne desire nothyng for to have,
Ne drede for to leese, save oonly thee. 508
This wyl is in myn herte, and ay shal be;
No lengthe of tyme, or deeth, may this deface,
Ne chaunge my corage to another place.' 511

Glad was this markys of hire answeyng, 512
But yet he feyned as he were nat so;
Al drery was his cheere and his lookyng
Whan that he sholde out of the chambre go. 515
Soone after this, a furlong wey or two,
He prively hath toold al his entente,
Unto a man, and to his wyf hym sente. 518

THE CLERKES TALE

339

A maner sergeant was this privee man,
The which that feithful ofte he founden hadde
In thynges grete; and eek swich folk wel kan
Doon execucion on thynges badde.

519

The lord knew wel that he hym loved and dradde;
And whan this sergeant wiste the lordes wille,
Into the chambre he stalked hym ful stille.

522

525

'Madame,' he seyde, 'ye moote foryeve it me
Though I do thyng to which I am constreyned.
Ye been so wys that ful wel knowe ye
That lordes heestes mowe nat been yfeyned;
They mowe wel been biwailled and compleyned,
But men moote nede unto hire lust obeye;
And so wol I, ther is namoore to seye.

526

529

532

'This child I am comanded for to take —'
And spak namoore; but out the child he hente, Despitously, and gan a cheere make
As though he wolde han slayn it er he wente.
Grisildis moot al suffren and consente,
And as a lamb she sitteth meke and stille,
And leet this cruel sergeant doon his wille.

533

536

539

Suspecious was the diffame of this man;
Suspect his face; suspect his word also;
Suspect the tyme in which he this bigan.
Allas, hir doghter that she loved so!
She wende he wolde han slawen it right tho.
But nathelees, she neither weepe ne syked,
Consentyng hire to that the markys lyked.

543

546

But atte laste, to speken she bigan,
And mekely she to the sergeant preyde,
So as he was a worthy gentilman,
That she moste kisse hire child, er that it deyde.
And in hir barm this litel child she leyde,
With ful sad face, and gan the child to kisse;
And lulled it, and after gan it blisse.

547

550

553

And thus she seyde, in hire benigne voys: 554
‘Fareweel my child! I shal thee nevere see;
But sith I thee have marked with the croys
Of thilke Fader — blessed moote he be! — 557
That for us deyde upon a croys of tree,
Thy soule, litel child, I hym bitake,
For this nyght shaltow dyen for my sake.’ 560

I trowe that to a norice in this cas 561
It had been hard this reuthe for to se.
Wel myghthe a mooder, thanne, han cryd ‘allas!’
But nathelees, so sad stidefast was she 564
That she endured al adversitee,
And to the sergeant mekely she sayde,
‘Have heer agayn youre litel yonge mayde. 567

‘Gooth now,’ quod she, ‘and dooth my lordes heeste; 568
And o thyng wol I prey yow of youre grace,
That, but my lord forbad yow, atte leeste,
Burieth this litel body in som place 571
That beestes ne no briddes it to-race.’
But he no word wol to that purpos seye,
But took the child and wente upon his weye. 574

This sergeant cam unto his lord ageyn,
And of Grisildis wordes and hire cheere
He tolde hym, point for point, in short and pleyn;
And hym presenteth with his doghter deere. 578
Somwhat this lord hath routhe in his manere,
But nathelees his purpos heeld he stille —
As lordes doon whan they wol han hir wille — 581

And bad his sergeant that he pryvely 582
Sholde this child ful softe wynde and wrappe,
With alle circumstances, tendrely,
And carie it in a cofre or in a lappe; 585
But upon peyne his heed of for to swappe,
That no man sholde knowe of his entente,
Ne whenne he cam, ne whider that he wente. 588

THE CLERKES TALE

341

But at Boloigne to his suster deere,
That thilke tyme of Pavik was countesse,
He sholde it take, and shewe hire this mateere,
Bisekyng hire to doon hire bisynesse
This child to fostre in alle gentillesse;
And whos child that it was, he bad hym hyde
From every wight, for oght that may bityde.

589

592

595

The sergeant gooth, and hath fulfild this thyng,
But to this markys now retourne we;
For now gooth he ful faste ymaginyng
If by his wyves cheere he myghte se,
Or by hire word aperceyve, that she
Were chaunged; but he nevere hire koude fynde
But evere in oon ylike sad and kynde.

596

599

602

As glad, as humble, as bisy in servyse,
And eek in love, as she was wont to be,
Was she to hym in every maner wyse;
Ne of hir doghter noght a word spak she.
Noon accident for noon adversitee
Was seyn in hire, ne nevere hir doghter name
Ne nempned she, in ernest nor in game.

603

606

609

Explicit tercia pars. Sequitur pars quarta.

In this estaat ther passed been foure yeer
Er she with childe was; but as God wolde,
A knave child she bar by this Walter,
Ful gracious and fair for to biholde.
And whan that folk it to his fader tolde,
Nat oonly he, but al his contree merye,
Was for this child, and God they thanke and herye.

613

616

Whan it was two yeer old and fro the brest
Departed of his norice, on a day
This markys caughte yet another lest
To tempte his wyf yet ofter if he may.
O, nedeless was she tempted in assay!
But wedded men ne knowe no mesure
Whan that they fynde a pacient creature!

617

620

623

'Wyf,' quod this markys, 'ye han herd er this
My peple sikly berth oure mariage;
And namely, sith my sone yboren is,
Now is it worse than evere in al oure age; 627
The murmure sleeth myn herte and my corage,
For to myne eres comth the voys so smerte
That it wel ny destroyed hath myn herte. 630

'Now sey they thus: "Whan Walter is agon,
Thanne shal the blood of Janicle succede,
And been oure lord, for oother have we noon."
Swiche wordes seith my peple, out of drede. 634
Wel oughte I of swich murmur taken heede;
For certainly I drede swich sentence,
Though they nat pleyen speke in myn audience. 637

'I wolde lyve in pees, if that I myghte. 638
Wherfore I am disposed outrely,
As I his suster servede by nyghte,
Right so thenke I to serve hym pryvely. 641
This warne I yow that ye nat sodeynly
Out of youreself for no wo sholde outreye.
Beth pacient; and therof I yow preye!' 644

'I have,' quod she, 'seyd thus, and evere shal: 645
I wol nothyng, ne nyl nothyng, certayn,
But as yow list. Naught greveth me at al
Though that my doughter and my sone be slayn 648
At youre comandement; this is to sayn,
I have noght had no part of children tweyne
But first siknesse and after wo and payne. 651

'Ye been oure lord; dooth with youre owene thyng Right as yow list. Axeth no reed at me;
For as I lefte at hoom al my clothyng,
Whan I first cam to yow, right so,' quod she, 655
'Lefte I my wyl and al my libertee,
And took youre clothyng. Wherfore I yow preye,
Dooth youre plesance; I wol youre lust obeye. 658

'And certes if I hadde prescience
Youre wyl to knowe, er ye youre lust me tolde,
I wolde it doon withouten necligence;
But now I woot youre lust, and what ye wolde,
Al youre plesance ferme and stable I holde;
For wiste I that my deeth wolde do yow ese,
Right gladly wolde I dyen yow to plesé —

659

662

665

'Deth may noght make no comparisoun
Unto youre love.' And whan this markys say
The constance of his wyf, he caste adoun
Hise eyen two, and wondreth that she may
In pacience suffre al this array.
And forth he goth with drery contenance,
But to his herte it was ful greet plesance.

666

669

672

This ugly sergeant, in the same wyse
That he hire doghter caughte, right so he —
Or worse, if men worse kan devyse —
Hath hent hire sone that ful was of beautee.
And evere in oon so pacient was she
That she no chiere maade of hevynesse,
But kiste hir sone, and after gan it blesse;

673

676

679

Save this: She preyde hym that if he myghte,
Hir litel sone he wolde in erthe grave,
His tendre lymes, delicaat to sighte,
Fro foweles and fro beestes for to save.
But she noon answeere of hym myghte have;
He wente his wey as hym nothyng ne roghte;
But to Boloigne he tendrely it broghte.

680

683

686

This markys wondred, evere lenger the moore,
Upon hir pacience; and if that he
Ne hadde soothly knowen ther bifoore
That parfitly hir children loved she,
He wolde have wend that of som subtiltee,
And of malice, or for cruell corage,
That she hadde suffred this with sad visage,

687

690

693

But wel he knew that, next hymself certayn,
 She loved hir children best in every wyse.
 But now of wommen wolde I axen fayn
 If thise assayes myghte nat suffise. 697
 What koude a sturdy housbonde moore devyse
 To preeve hire wyfhod or hir stedefastnesse,
 And he continuyng evere in sturdinesse? 700

But ther been folk of swich condicion 701
 That whan they have a certain purpos take,
 They kan nat stynte of hire entencion,
 But right as they were bounden to that stake, 704
 They wol nat of that firste purpos slake.
 Right so this markys fulliche hath purposed
 To tempte his wyf as he was first disposed. 707

He waiteth if by word or contenance 708
 That she to hym was changed of corage;
 But nevere koude he fynde variance.
 She was ay oon in herte and in visage; 711
 And ay the forther that she was in age,
 The moore trewe, if that it were possible,
 She was to hym in love, and moore penyble. 714

For which it semed thus, that of hem two 715
 Ther nas but o wyl; for as Walter leste,
 The same lust was hire plesance also.
 And God be thanked, al fil for the beste! 718
 She shewed wel for no worldly unreste
 A wyf as of hirself nothing ne sholde
 Wille in effect but as hir housbonde wolde. 721

The sclaunder of Walter ofte and wyde spradde, 722
 That of a crueel herte he wikkedly —
 For he a poure womman wedded hadde —
 Hath mordred bothe his children prively. 725
 Swich murmure was among hem comunly.
 No wonder is, for to the peples ere Ther cam no word but that they mordred were. 728

THE CLERKES TALE 345

For which where-as his peple ther bifore 729
 Hadde loved hym wel, the sclandre of his diffame
 Made hem that they hym hatede therfore.
 To been a mordrere is an hateful name; 732
 But nathelees, for ernest ne for game,
 He of his crueel purpos nolde stente;
 To tempte his wyf was set al his entente. 735

Whan that his doghter twelf yeer was of age,
 He to the court of Rome, in subtil wyse
 Enformed of his wyl, sente his message,
 Comaundyng hem swiche bulles to devyse 739
 As to his crueel purpos may suffyse —
 How that the pope, as for his peples reste,
 Bad hym to wedde another if hym leste. 742

I seye he bad they sholde countrefete 743
 The popes bulles, makynge mencion
 That he hath leve his firste wyf to lete,
 As by the popes dispensacion, 746
 To stynte rancour and dissencion
 Bitwixe his peple and hym; thus seyde the bulle,
 The which they han publiced atte fulle. 749

The rude peple, as it no wonder is, 750
 Wenden ful wel that it hadde be right so.
 But whan thise tidynges cam to Grisildis,
 I deeme that hire herte was ful wo; 753
 But she, ylike sad for everemo,
 Disposed was — this humble creature —
 The adversitee of Fortune al tendure, 756

Abidyng evere his lust and his plesance 757
 To whom that she was yeven, herte and al,
 As to hire verray worldly suffisance.
 But shortly if this storie I tellen shal, 760
 This markys writen hath in special
 A lettre, in which he sheweth his entente,
 And secreely he to Boloigne it sente. 763

To the erl of Pavyk, which that hadde tho 764
 Wedded his suster, preyde he specially
 To bryngen hoom agayn hise children two,
 In honorable estaat, al openly. 767
 But o thyng he hym preyde outrelly —
 That he to no wight, though men wolde enquere,
 Sholde nat telle whos children that they were, 770
 But seye the mayden sholde ywedded be 771
 Unto the markys of Saluce anon.
 And as this erl was preyed so dide he;
 For at day set he on his wey is goon 774
 Toward Saluce, and lordes many oon
 In riche array, this mayden for to gyde,
 Hir yonge brother ridyng hire bisyde. 777

Arrayed was toward hir mariage
 This fresshe mayde ful of gemmes cleere;
 Hir brother, which that seven yeer was of age,
 Arrayed eek ful fressh in his manere. 781
 And thus in greet noblesse and with glad cheere,
 Toward Saluces shapyng hir journey
 Fro day to day, they ryden in hir wey. 784

Explicit quarta pars. Sequitur pars quinta.

Among al this, after his wikke usage, 785
 This markys — yet his wyf to tempte moore
 To the outtreste preeve of hir corage,
 Fully to han experience and loore 788
 If that she were as stidefast as bifoore —
 He on a day, in open audience,
 Ful boistously hath seyde hire this sentence: 791
 ‘Certes, Grisilde, I hadde ynogh plesance 792
 To han yow to my wyf for youre goodnesse,
 As for youre trouthe and for youre obeisance,
 Noght for youre lynage ne for youre richesse, 795
 But now knowe I in verray soothfastnesse
 That in greet lordshipe, if I wel avyse,
 Ther is greet servitude, in sondry wyse. 798

THE CLERKES TALE

347

'I may nat doon as every plowman may.

799

My peple me constreyneth for to take

Another wyf; and crien day by day;

And eek the pope, rancour for to slake,

802

Consenteth it, that dar I undertake.

And troweliche, thus muche I wol yow seye —

My newe wyf is comynge by the weye.

805

'Be strong of herte, and voyde anon hir place.

806

And thilke dower that ye broghten me,

Taak it agayn; I graunte it of my grace.

Retourneth to youre fadres hous,' quod he.

809

'No man may alwey han prosperitee.

With evene herte I rede yow tendure

This strook of fortune or of aventure.'

812

And she answerde agayn in pacience.

813

'My lord,' quod she 'I woot, and wiste alway,

How that bitwixen youre magnificence

And my poverte no wight kan ne may 816

Maken comparison, it is no nay.

I ne heeld me nevere digne in no manere

To be youre wyf — no, ne youre chamberere.

819

'And in this hous, ther ye me lady maade —

820

The heighe God take I for my wisesse,

And also wysly he my soule glaade! —

I nevere heeld me lady, ne maistresse,

823

But humble servant to youre worthynesse;

And evere shal, whil that my lyf may dure,

Aboven every worldly creature.

826

'That ye so longe, of youre benignitee,

827

Han holden me in honour and nobleye —

Where-as I was noght worthy for to bee —

That thonke I God, and yow, to whom I preyed

830

Foryelde it yow; ther is namore to seye.

Unto my fader gladly wol I wende,

And with hym dwelle unto my lyves ende.

833

'Ther I was fostred of a child ful smal, 834
Til I be deed my lyf ther wol I lede,
A wydwe clene in body, herte, and al;
For sith I yaf to yow my maydenhede, 837
And am youre trewe wyf, it is no drede —
God shilde swich a lordes wyf to take Another man to housbonde or to make! 840

'And of youre newe wyf God of his grace 841
So graunte yow wele and prosperitee,
For I wol gladly yelden hire my place,
In which that I was blisful wont to bee; 844
For sith it liketh yow, my lord,' quod shee,
'That whilom weren al myn hertes reste,
That I shal goon, I wol goon whan yow leste. 847

'But ther-as ye me profre swich dowaire 848
As I first broghte, it is wel in my mynde
It were my wrecched clothes, nothyng faire;
The whiche to me were hard now for to fynde. 851
O goode God, how gentil and how kynde
Ye semed by youre speche and youre visage
The day that maked was oure mariage! 854

'But sooth is seyð — algate I fynde it trewe, 855
For in effect it preeved is on me —
Love is noght oold as whan that it is newe.
But certes, lord, for noon adversitee — 858
To dyen in the cas — it shal nat bee
That evere in word or werk I shal repente
That I yow yaf myn herte in hool entente. 861

'My lord, ye woot that in my fadres place 862
Ye dide me streepe out of my poure weede,
And richely me cladden, of youre grace;
To yow broghte I noght elles, out of drede, 865
But feith, and nakednesse, and maydenhede;
And heere agayn your clothyng I restoore
And eek your weddyng ryng for everemore. 868

'The remenant of youre jueles redy be
In-with youre chambre, dar I saufly sayn.
Naked out of my fadres hous,' quod she,
'I cam, and naked moot I turne agayn.
Al youre plesance wol I folwen fayn;
But yet I hope it be nat youre entente
That I smoklees out of youre paleys wente.

869

872

875

'Ye koude nat doon so dishoneste a thyng,
That thilke wombe in which youre children leye
Sholde biforn the peple in my walkyng
Be seyn al bare; wherfore I yow preye,
Lat me nat lyk a worm go by the weye.
Remembre yow, myn owene lord so deere,
I was youre wyf, though I unworthy weere.

876

879

882

'Wherfore, in gerdon of my maydenhede,
Which that I broghte and noght agayn I bere,
As voucheth sauf to yeve me to my meede
But swich a smok as I was wont to were,
That I therwith may wrye the wombe of here
That was youre wyf. And heer take I my leeve
Of yow, myn owene lord, lest I yow greve.'

883

886

889

'The smok,' quod he, 'that thou hast on thy bak,
Lat it be stille, and bere it forth with thee.'
But wel unnethes thilke word he spak,
But wente his wey, for routhe and for pitee.
Biforn the folk hirselves strepeth she,
And in hir smok, with heed and foot al bare,
Toward hir fader hous forth is she fare.

890

893

896

The folk hire folwe, wepynge in hir weye;
And fortune ay they cursen, as they goon.
But she fro wepyng kepte hire eyen dreye,
Ne in this tyme word ne spak she noon.
Hir fader, that this tidynge herde anon,
Curseth the day and tyme that nature
Shoope hym to been a lyves creature.

900

903

- For out of doute this olde poure man 904
 Was evere in suspect of hir mariage;
 For evere he demed, sith that it bigan,
 That whan the lord fulfild hadde his corage, 907
 Hym wolde thynke it were a disparage
 To his estaat so lowe for talighte,
 And voyden hire as soone as ever he myghte. 910
- Agayns his doghter hastiliche goth he, 911
 For he by noyse of folk knew hire comynge;
 And with hire olde coote, as it myghte be,
 He covered hire, ful sorwefully wepyng; 914
 But on hire body myghte she it nat brynge,
 For rude was the clooth and moore of age
 By dayes fele than at hire mariage. 917
- Thus with hire fader for a certeyn space 918
 Dwelleth this flour of wyfly pacience,
 That neither by hire wordes ne hire face,
 Biforn the folk, ne eek in hire absence, 921
 Ne shewed she that hire was doon offence;
 Ne of hire heighe estaat no remembrance
 Ne hadde she, as by hire contenance. 924
- No wonder is; for in hire grete estaat 925
 Hire goost was evere in pley n humylitee:
 No tendre mouth, noon herte delicaat,
 No pompe, no semblant of roialtee, 928
 But ful of pacient benyngnytee,
 Discreet and pridelees, ay honourable,
 And to hire housbonde evere meke and stable. 931
- Men speke of Job, and moost for his humblesse, 932
 As clerkes whan hem list konne wel endite —
 Namely of men — but as in soothfastnesse,
 Though clerkes preise wommen but a lite, 935
 Ther kan no man in humblesse hym acquite
 As womman kan, ne kan been half so trewe
 As wommen been, but it be falle of newe. 938

Explicit quinta pars. Sequitur pars sexta.

THE CLERKES TALE

351

Fro Boloigne is this erl of Pavyk come, 939
Of which the fame up sprang to moore and lesse.
And in the peples eres, alle and some,
Was kouth eek that a newe markysesse 942
He with hym broghte, in swich pompe and richesse
That nevere was ther seyn with mannes eye
So noble array in al West Lumbardye. 945

The markys, which that shoope and knew al this, 946
Er that this erl was come, sente his message
For thilke sely, poure Grisildis;
And she with humble herte and glad visage, 949
Nat with no swollen thoght in hire corage,
Cam at his heste, and on hire knees hire sette,
And reverently and wisely she hym grette. 952

'Grisilde,' quod he, 'my wyl is outrely 953
This mayden that shal wedded been to me
Received be tomorwe as roially
As it possible is in myn hous to be, 956
And eek that every wight in his degree
Have his estaat in sitting and servyse
And heigh plesance as I kan best devyse. 959

'I have no wommen suffisant, certayn, 960
The chambres for tarraye in ordinance
After my lust, and therfore wolde I fayn
That thyn were al swich manere governance. 963
Thou knowest eek of old al my plesance;
Thogh thyn array be badde and yvel biseye,
Do thou thy devoir, at the leeste weye.' 966

'Nat oonly, lord, that I am glad,' quod she, 967
'To doon youre lust, but I desire also
Yow for to serve and plese in my degree,
Withouten feynting, and shal everemo; 970
Ne nevere, for no wele ne no wo,
Ne shal the goost withinne myn herte stente
To love yow best with al my trewe entente.' 973

And with that word, she gan the hous to dighte, 974
 And tables for to sette, and beddes make;
 And peyned hire to doon al that she myghte;
 Preyngne the chambres, for Goddes sake, 977
 To hasten hem, and faste swepe and shake.
 And she, the mooste servysable of alle,
 Hath every chambre arrayed and his halle. 980

Abouten undren gan this erl alighte, 981
 That with him broghte thise noble children tweye;
 For which the peple ran to seen the sighte
 Of hire array, so richely biseye. 984
 And thanne at erst amonges hem they seye
 That Walter was no fool, thogh that hym leste
 To chaunge his wyf, for it was for the beste 987

For she is fairer, as they deemen alle, 988
 Than is Grisilde, and moore tendre of age;
 And fairer fruyt bitwene hem sholde falle,
 And moore plesant for hire heigh lynage. 991
 Hir brother eek so faire was of visage
 That hem to seen the peple hath caught plesance,
 Commendynge now the markys governance. 994

'O stormy peple! unsad, and evere untrewel
 Ay undiscreet and chaungynge as a vane;
 Delitynge evere in rumbul that is newe,
 For lyk the moone ay wexe ye and wane; 998
 Ay ful of clappyng, deere ynogh a jane!
 Youre doom is fals; youre constance yvele preeveth;
 A ful greet fool is he that on yow leeveth.' 1001

Thus seyden sadde folk in that citee 1002
 Whan that the peple gazed up and doun
 For they were glad right for the noveltee
 To han a newe lady of hir toun. 1005
 Namore of this make I now mencion,
 But to Grisilde agayn wol I me dresse,
 And telle hir constance and hir bisynesse. 1008

- Ful bisy was Grisilde in everythyng 1009
That to the feeste was apertinent.
Right noght was she abayst of hire clothyng,
Thogh it were rude and somdeel eek to-rent; 1012
But with glad cheere to the yate is went,
With oother folk, to greete the markysesse,
And after that dooth forth hire bisynesse. 1015
- With so glad chiere hise gestes she receyveth, 1016
And konnyngly, everich in his degree,
That no defaute no man aperceyveth,
But ay they wondren what she myghte bee 1019
That in so poure array was for to see,
And koude swich honour and reverence;
And worthily they preisen hire prudence. 1022
- In al this meenewhile she ne stente 1023
This mayde and eek hir brother to commende,
With al hir herte, in ful benyngne entente,
So wel that no man koude hir pris amende. 1026
But atte laste whan that thise lordes wende
To sitten down to mete, he gan to calle
Grisilde, as she was bisy in his halle. 1029
- ‘Grisilde,’ quod he — as it were in his pley — 1030
‘How liketh thee my wyf and hire beautee?’
‘Right wel,’ quod she, ‘my lord; for in good fey
A fairer saugh I nevere noon than she. 1033
I prey to God yeve hire prosperitee;
And so hope I that he wol to yow sende
Plesance ynogh unto youre lyves ende. 1036
- ‘O thyng biseke I yow, and warne also, 1037
That ye ne prikke with no tormentynge
This tendre mayden, as ye han doon mo;
For she is fostred in hire norissynge 1040
Moore tendrely, and to my supposynge
She koude nat adversitee endure
As koude a poure fostred creature.’ 1043

And whan this Walter saugh hire pacience, 1044
Hir glade chiere and no malice at al —
And he so ofte had doon to hire offence,
And she ay sad and constant as a wal, 1047
Continuyng evere hire innocence overal —
This sturdy markys gan his herte dresse
To rewen upon hire wyfly stedfastnesse. 1050

‘This is ynogh, Grisilde myn,’ quod he. 1051
‘Be now namoore agast ne yvele apayed.
I have thy feith and thy benyngnytee,
As wel as evere womman was, assayed; 1054
In greet estaat, and povreliche arrayed,
Now knowe I, goode wyf, thy stedfastnesse.’
And hire in armes took, and gan hire kesse. 1057

And she, for wonder, took of it no keepe; 1058
She herde nat what thyng he to hire seyde.
She ferde as she had stert out of a sleepe,
Til she out of hire mazednesse abreyde. 1061
‘Grisilde,’ quod he, ‘by God, that for us deyde, Thou art my wyf; ne noon oother I have,
Ne nevere hadde, as God my soule save! 1064

‘This is thy doghter, which thou hast supposed
To be my wyf; that oother, feithfully,
Shal be myn heir, as I have ay purposed.
Thou bare hym in thy body trewely. 1068
At Boloigne have I kept hem prively.
Taak hem agayn; for now maystow nat seye
That thou hast lorn noon of thy children tweye. 1071

‘And folk that ootherweys han seyde of me, 1072
I warne hem wel that I have doon this deede
For no malice, ne for no crueltee,
But for tassaye in thee thy wommanheede, 1075
And nat to sleen my children — God forbeede! —
But for to kepe hem pryvely and stille
Til I thy purpos knewe and al thy wille.’ 1078

THE CLERKES TALE

355

Whan she this herde, aswowne doun she falleth
For pitous joye; and after hire swownynge
She bothe hire yonge children unto hire calleth,
And in hire armes, pitously wepynge,
Embraceth hem; and tendrely kissynge,
Ful lyk a mooder, with hire salte teeres
She bathed bothe hire visage and hire heeres.

1079

1082

1085

O, which a pitous thyng it was to se
Hir swownyng, and hire humble voys to heere!
'Graunt mercy, lord! that thanke I yow,' quod she,
'That ye han saved me my children deere.
Now rekke I nevere to been deed right heere.
Sith I stonde in youre love and in youre grace,
No fors of deeth, ne whan my spirit pace.

1086

1089

1092

'O tendre, O deere, O yonge children myne,
Youre woful mooder wende stedfastly
That crueel houndes or som foul vermyne
Hadde eten yow; but God, of his mercy,
And youre benyngne fader tendrely
Hath doon yow kept.' And in that same stounde
Al sodeynly she swapte adoun to grounde.

1093

1096

1099

And in hire swough so sadly holdeth she
Hire children two, whan she gan hem tembrace,
That with greet sleighte and greet difficultee
The children from hire arm they gonne arace.
O many a teere on many a pitous face
Doun ran of hem that stooden hire bisyde;
Unnethe abouten hire myghte they abyde.

1100

1103

1106

Walter hire gladeth and hire sorwe slaketh.
She riseth up abaysed from hire trance;
And every wight hire joye and feeste maketh
Til she hath caught agayn hire contenance.
Walter hire dooth so feithfully plesance
That it was deyntee for to seen the cheere
Bitwixe hem two, now they been met yfeere.

1110

1113

Thise ladyes, whan that they hir tyme say, 1114
 Han taken hire and into chambre gon;
 And strepen hire out of hire rude array,
 And in a clooth of gold that brighte shoon, 1117
 With a coroune of many a riche stoon
 Upon hire heed, they into halle hire broghte;
 And ther she was honured as hire oghte. 1120

Thus hath this pitous day a blisful ende, 1121
 For every man and womman dooth his myght
 This day in murthe and revel to dispende,
 Til on the welkne shoon the sterres lyght; 1124
 For moore solempne in every mannes syght
 This feste was, and gretter of costage,
 Than was the revel of hire mariage. 1127

Ful many a yeer in heigh prosperitee 1128
 Lyven thise two in concord and in reste;
 And richely his doghter maryed he
 Unto a lord, oon of the worthieste 1131
 Of al Ytaille; and thanne in pees and reste
 His wyves fader in his court he kepeth,
 Til that the soule out of his body crepeth. 1134

His sone succedeth in his heritage 1135
 In reste and pees, after his fader day;
 And fortunat was eek in mariage,
 Al putte he nat his wyf in greet assay. 1138
 This world is nat so strong, it is no nay,
 As it hath been of olde tymes yoore.
 And herkneth what this auctour seith therfoore: 1141

'This storie is seyde, nat for that wyves sholde
 'Folwen Grisilde, as in humylitee;
 'For it were inportable, though they wolde;
 'But for that every wight, in his degree, 1145
 'Sholde be constant in adversitee,
 'As was Grisilde.' Therfore Petrak writeth
 This storie, which with heigh stile he enditeth. 1148

'For sith a womman was so pacient
 'Unto a mortal man, wel moore us oghte
 'Receyven al in gree that God us sent;
 'For greet skile is he preeve that he wroghte, 1152
 'But "he ne tempteth no man that he boghte,"
 'As seith Seint Jame, if ye his pistel rede;
 'He preeveth folk al day, it is no drede, 1155
 'And suffreth us, as for oure excercise, 1156
 'With sharpe scourges of adversitee
 'Ful ofte to be bete in sondry wise;
 'Nat for to know oure wyl — for certes he, 1159
 'Er we were born, knew oure freletee.
 'And for oure beste is al his governance;
 'Lat us thanne lyve in vertuous suffrance.' 1162

But o word, lordynges, herkneth er I go: 1163
 It were ful hard to fynde nowadayes
 In al a toun Grisildis thre or two;
 For if that they were put to swiche assayes, 1166
 The gold of hem hath now so badde alayes
 With bras that, thogh the coyne be fair at eye,
 It wolde rather breste atwo than plye. 1169

For which heere, for the Wyves love of Bathe — 1170
 Whos lyf and al hire secte God mayntene
 In heigh maistrie, and elles were it scathe! —
 I wol with lusty herte, fressh and grene, 1173
 Seyn yow a song, to glade yow, I wene,
 And lat us stynte of earnestful matere;
 Herkneth my song, that seith in this manere: 1176

● Lenvoy de Chaucer

Grisilde is deed; and eek hire pacience;
 And bothe atones buried in Ytaille!
 For which I crie in open audience, 1179
 No wedded man so hardy be tassaille
 His wyves pacience in hope to fynde
 Grisildis, for in certein he shal faille. 1182

O noble wyves, ful of heigh prudence,
 Lat noon humylitee youre tonge naille;
 Ne lat no clerk have cause or diligence 1185
 To write of yow a storie of swich mervaille
 As of Grisildis, pacient and kynde,
 Lest Chichivache yow swelwe in hire entraille! 1188

Folweth Ekko! that holdeth no silence,
 But evere answereth at the countretaille.
 Beth nat bidaffed for youre innocence, 1191
 But sharply taak on yow the governaille.
 Emprinteth wel this lesson in youre mynde,
 For commune profit sith it may availle. 1194

Ye archiwyves, stondeth at defense!
 Syn ye be strong as is a greet camaille,
 Ne suffreth nat that men yow doon offense. 1197
 And sklendre wyves, fieble as in bataille,
 Beth egre as is a tygre yond in Ynde!
 Ay clappeth as a mille, I yow consaille; 1200

Ne dreed hem nat; doth hem no reverence;
 For though thyn housbonde armed be in maille,
 The arwes of thy crabbed eloquence 1203
 Shal perce his brest and eek his aventaille.
 In jalousie I rede eek thou hym bynde,
 And thou shalt make hym couche as doth a quaille. 1206

If thou be fair, ther folk been in presence
 Shewe thou thy visage and thyn apparaille;
 If thou be foul, be fre of thy dispence — 1209
 To gete thee freendes ay do thy travaille.
 Be ay of chiere as light as leef on lynde,
 And lat hym care, and wepe, and wryng, and waille! 1212

Bihoold the murye wordes of the Hoost.

This worthy clerk whan ended was his tale, 1213*
 Oure Hooste seyde, and swoor, 'By Goddes bones,
 'Me were levere than a barel ale,
 My wyf at hoom had herd this legende ones! 4

This is a gentil tale for the nones,
As to my purpos, wiste ye my wille;
But thyng that wol nat be, lat it be stille.' 1219*

Heere endeth the Tale of the Clerk of Oxenford.

The prologe of the Marchantes Tale.

'Wepying and waylyng, care and oother sorwe,
I knowe ynogh, on even and a-morwe,'
Quod the Marchant, 'and so doon othere mo
That wedded been. I trowe that it be so; 1216
For wel I woot it fareth so with me.
I have a wyf, the worste that may be;
For thogh the feend to hire ycoupled were,
She wolde hym overmacche, I dar wel swere. 1220
What sholde I yow reherce in special
Hir hye malice? She is a shrewe at al.
Ther is a long and large difference
Bitwix Grisildis grete pacience 1224
And of my wyf the passyng crueltee.
Were I unbounden, al so moot I thee,
I wolde nevere eft comen in the snare.
We wedded men lyve in sorwe and care. 1228
Assaye whoso wole, and he shal fynde
I seye sooth, by Seint Thomas of Ynde —
As for the moore part, I sey nat alle;
God shilde that it sholde so bifalle. 1232
'A, good sire Hoost, I have ywedded bee
Thise monthes two, and moore nat, pardee;
And yet, I trowe, he that al his lyve
Wyflee hath been, though that men wolde him ryve 1236
Unto the herte, ne koude in no manere
Tellen so muchel sorwe as I, now, heere,
Koude tellen of my wyves cursednesse.'
'Now,' quod our Hooste, 'Marchant, so God yow blesse! 1240
Syn ye so muchel knowen of that art,
Ful hertely I pray yow, telle us part.'
'Gladly,' quod he, 'but of myn owene soore,
For soory herte I telle may namoore. 1244

[The Merchant's End-Link.]

[In form, setting, and content the Merchant's Tale is so thoroughly an Italian novella that one is constantly surprised that the source has never been discovered; but one remembers that no Breton lay has been found as the source of the Franklin's Tale.

Some editors think that the tale, with the exception of the pear-tree episode — ancient versions of which are told in many lands — was Chaucer's own invention. Certainly it was he who gave it its really significant features. The satire on woman is derived almost entirely from the sources upon which he had already drawn so largely in the Prologue of the Wife of Bath. Furthermore this material is used with entirely Chaucerian originality, not to point an attack but to characterize the actors in the story and supply the setting for the plot.

None of the Canterbury Tales is more immoral than many of the most widely read novels of today, but it is true that some of Chaucer's most brilliantly written tales are marred by a vulgarity which he himself recognized would cause many a reader of his own time to "turne over the leef." This is one of them.]

'Ey Goddes mercy!' seyde oure Hooste tho;
'Now swich a wyf I pray God kepe me fro!	2420
Lo, whiche sleightes and subtiltees
In wommen been; for ay as bisy as bees
Been they us sely men for to deceyve,
And from a soothē evere wol they weyve —	2424
By this Marchauntes tale it preveth weel.
But doutelees, as trewe as any steel
I have a wyf, though that she poure be;
But of hir tonge a labbyng shrewe is she;	2428
And yet she hath an heepe of vices mo.
Therof no fors; lat alle swiche thynges go!
But wyte ye what? In conseil be it seyde,
Me reweth soore I am unto hire teyde;	2432
For and I sholde rekenen every vice
Which that she hath, ywis I were to nyce;
And cause why. It sholde reported be,
And toold to hire of somme of this meynee —	2436
Of whom it nedeth nat for to declare,
Syn wommen konnen outen swich chaffare.
And eek my wit suffiseth nat therto
To tellen al; wherfore my tale is do.'	2440

[FRAGMENT V (GROUP F)]

THE SQUIRE'S HEAD-LINK]

'Squier, come neer, if it youre wille be,
And sey somewhat of love; for certes ye Konnen theron as muche as any man.'
'Nay, sire,' quod he; 'but I wol seye as I kan 4
With hertly wyl; for I wol nat rebelle
Agayn youre lust. A tale wol I telle.
Have me excused if I speke amys;
My wyl is good, and lo, my tale is this: 8

Heere bigynneth the Squieres Tale.

At Sarray, in the land of Tartarye,
Ther dwelte a kyng that werreyed Russye,
Thurgh which ther dyde many a doughty man.
This noble kyng was cleped Cambyuskan;
Which in his tyme was of so greet renoun
That ther was nowher, in no regioun,
So excellent a lord in alle thyng.
Hym lakked noght that longeth to a kyng; 16
And of the secte of which that he was born,
He kepte his lay, to which that he was sworn.
And therto he was hardy, wys, and riche;
And pitous, and just, alwey yliche; 20
Sooth of his word, benigne and honourable;
Of his corage as any centre stable;
Yong, fressh, and strong, in armes desirous
As any bacheler of al his hous. 24
A fair persone he was, and fortunat;
And kepte alwey so wel roial estat
That ther was nowher swich another man.
This noble kyng, this Tartre Cambyuskan, 28

Hadde two sones on Elpheta his wyf;
 Of whiche the eldeste highte Algarsyf,
 That oother sone was cleped Cambalo. 32
 A doghter hadde this worthy kyng also
 That yongest was, and highte Canacee.
 But for to telle yow al hir beautee,
 It lyth nat in my tonge, nyn my konnyng;
 I dar nat undertake so heigh a thyng. 36
 Myn Englissh eek is insufficient;
 It moste been a rethor excellent
 That koude hise colours longynge for that art
 If he sholde hire discryven every part; 40
 I am noon swich, I moot speke as I kan.
 And so bifel that whan this Cambyuskan
 Hath twenty wynter born his diademe,
 As he was wont fro yeer to yeer, I deme, 44
 He leet the feeste of his nativitee
 Doon cryen thurghout Sarray his citee.
 The last Idus of March, after the yeer,
 Phebus the sonne ful joly was and cleer, 48
 For he was neigh his exaltacion,
 In Martes face, and in his mansion
 In Aries, the colerik hootte signe.
 Ful lusty was the weder and benigne; 52
 For which the fowles agayn the sonne sheene —
 What for the seson and the yonge grene —
 Ful loude songen hire affecciouns.
 Hem semed han geten hem protecciouns 56
 Agayn the swerd of wynter keene and coold.
 This Cambyuskan of which I have yow toold
 In roial vestiment sit on his deys,
 With diademe, ful heighe in his paleys; 60
 And halt his feeste so solempne and so ryche
 That in this world ne was ther noon it lyche;
 Of which if I shal tellen al tharray,
 Thanne wolde it occupie a someres day. 64
 And eek it nedeth nat for to devyse
 At every cours the ordre of hire servyse.
 I wol nat tellen of hir strange sewes,

Ne of hir swannes, nor of hire heronsewes. — 68

Eek in that lond, as tellen knyghtes olde,
Ther is som mete that is ful deynte holde
That in this lond men recche of it but smal. —
Ther nys no man that may reporten al. 72

I wol nat taryen yow, for it is pryme;
And for it is no fruyt, but los of tyme,
Unto my firste I wole have my recours. 76

And so bifel that after the thridde cours,
Whil that this kyng sit thus in his nobleye,
Herknyngge hise mynstrales hir thynges pleye
Biforn hym at the bord deliciously,
In at the halle dore al sodeynly 80

Ther cam a knyght upon a steede of bras;
And in his hand a brood mirour of glas;
Upon his thombe he hadde of gold a ryng,
And by his syde a naked swerd hangyng; 84
And up he rideth to the heighe bord.

In al the halle ne was ther spoken a word
For merveille of this knyght. Hym to biholde,
Ful bisily ther wayten yonge and olde. 88

This strange knyght that cam thus sodeynly,
Al armed, save his heed, ful richely,
Saleweth kyng, and queene, and lordes alle,
By ordre, as they seten in the halle, 92
With so heigh reverence and obeisance,

As wel in spechē as in contenance,
That Gawayn, with his olde curteisye,
Though he were comen ayeyn out of Fairye, 96
Ne koude hym nat amende with a word.

And after this, biforn the heighe bord,
He with a manly voys seith his message
After the forme used in his langage, 100
Withouten vice of silable or of lettre.

And for his tale sholde seme the better,
Accordant to hise wordes was his cheere,
As techeth art of speche hem that it leere. 104
Al be that I kan nat sowne his stile,
Ne kan nat clymben over so heigh a style,

Yet seye I this: as to commune entente,
 Thus muche amounteth al that evere he mente, 108
 If it so be that I have it in mynde.

He seyde: 'The kyng of Arabe and of Inde —
 My lige lord — on this solempne day
 Saleweth yow as he best kan and may, 112

And sendeth yow in honour of youre heeste,
 By me, that am al redy at youre heeste,
 This steede of bras, that esily and weel
 Kan in the space of o day natureel — 116

This is to seyn, in foure and twenty houres —
 Wher-so yow lyst, in droghte or elles shoures,
 Beren youre body into every place
 To which youre herte wilneth for to pace, 120

Withouten wem of yow, thurgh foul or fair;
 Or if yow lyst to fleen as hye in the air
 As dooth an egle whan that hym list to soore,
 This same steede shal bere yow, evere moore 124

Withouten harm, til ye be ther yow leste,
 Though that ye slepen on his bak or reste;
 And turne ayeyn with writhyng of a pyn.
 He that it wroghte koude ful many a gyn. 128

He wayted many a constellacion
 Er he had doon this operacion;
 And knew ful many a seel and many a bond.

'This mirrour eek that I have in myn hond
 Hath swich a myght that men may in it see Whan ther shal fallen any adversitee
 Unto youre regne, or to youreself also,
 And openly who is youre freend or foo. 136

And over al this, if any lady bright
 Hath set hire herte in any maner wight,
 If he be fals she shal his treson see,
 His newe love, and al his subtiltee, 140

So openly that ther shal nothyng hyde.
 Wherefore, ageyn this lusty someres tyde,
 This mirour and this ryng that ye may see
 He hath sent unto my lady Canacee, 144
 Your excellente doghter that is heere.

'The vertu of the ryng, if ye wol heere,
Is this: that if hire lust it for to were
Upon hir thombe, or in hir purs it bere, 148
Ther is no fowel that fleeth under the hevene
That she ne shal wel understonde his stevene,
And knowe his menyng openly and pleyn,
And answer hym in his langage ageyn; 152
And every gras that groweth upon roote
She shal eek knowe, and whom it wol do boote,
Al be hise woundes never so depe and wyde.

'This naked swerd that hangeth by my syde 156
Swich vertu hath that what man so ye smyte,
Thurghout his armure it wole hym kerve and byte,
Were it as thikke as is a branched ook;
And what man that is wounded with a strook, 160
Shal never be hool til that yow list, of grace,
To stroke hym with the plat in thilke place
Ther he is hurt; this is as muche to seyn,
Ye moote with the platte swerd ageyn 164
Strike hym in the wounde and it wol close.
This is a verray sooth, withouten glose;
It failleth nat whils it is in youre hoold.'

And whan this knyght hath thus his tale toold, 168
He rideth out of halle and doun he lighte.
His steede, which that shoon as sonne brighte,
Stant in the courte stille as any stoon.
This knyght is to his chambre lad anoon, 172
And is unarmed and unto mete yset.

The presentes been ful roially yfet —
This is to seyn, the swerd and the mirour —
And born anon into the heighe tour 176
With certeine officers ordeyned therfore;
And unto Canacee this ryng was bore
Solempnely, ther she sit at the table.
But sikerly, withouten any fable, 180
The hors of bras that may nat be remewed,
It stant as it were to the ground yglewed.
Ther may no man out of the place it dryve
For noon engyn of wyndas ne polyve; 184

And cause why, for they kan nat the craft.
 And therfore in the place they han it laft
 Til that the knyght hath taught hem the manere
 To voyden hym, as ye shal after heere. 188

Greet was the prees that swarmeth to and fro
 To gauren on this hors that stondeth so;
 For it so heigh was, and so brood and long,
 So wel proporcioned for to been strong, 192

Right as it were a steede of Lumbardye;
 Therwith so horsly and so quyk of eye
 As it a gentil Poilleys courser were;
 For certes, fro his tayl unto his ere, 196

Nature ne art ne koude hym nat amende
 In no degree, as al the peple wende.
 But everemoore hir mooste wonder was
 How that it koude go, and was of bras. 200

It was a fairye, as al the peple semed.
 Diverse folk diversely they demed;
 As many heddes as manye wittes ther been.
 They murmureden as dooth a swarm of been, 204

And maden skiles after hir fantasies,
 Rehersynge of thise olde poetries;
 And seyde that it was lyk the Pegasee —
 The hors that hadde wynges for to flee — 208

Or elles it was the Grekes hors Synon,
 That broghte Troie to destruccion,
 As men may in thise olde geestes rede.

‘Myn herte,’ quod oon, ‘is everemoore in drede. 212
 I trowe som men of armes been therinne
 That shapen hem this citee for to wyne.
 It were right good that al swich thyng were knowe.’

Another rownded to his felawe lowe 216
 And seyde, ‘He lyeth; it is rather lyk
 An apparence ymaad by som magyk,
 As jogelours pleyen at thise feestes grete.’

Of sondry doutes thus they jangle and trete, 220
 As lewed peple demeth comunly.
 Of thynges that been maad moore subtilly
 Than they kan in hir lewednesse comprehende

They demen gladly to the badder ende.

224

And somme of hem wondred on the mirour,
That born was up into the hye tour,
Hou men myghte in it swiche thynges se.

Another answerde and seyde it myghte wel be Naturelly, by composicions

228

Of anglis and of slye reflexions;

And seyden that in Rome was swich oon.

They speken of Alocen, and Vitulon,

232

And Aristotle, that writen in hir lyves

Of queynte mirours and of prospectives,

As knowen they that han hir bookes herd.

And oother folk han wondred on the swerd

236

That wolde percen thurghout everythyng;

And fille in speche of Thelophus the kyng,

And of Achilles with his queynte spere —

For he koude with it bothe heele and dere,

240

Right in swich wise as men may with the swerd

Of which right now ye han youreselven herd.

They speken of sondry hardyng of metal;

And speke of medicynes therwithal,

244

And how and whanne it sholde yharded be;

Which is unknowe, algates unto me.

Tho speeke they of Canaceës ryng;

And seyden alle that swich a wonder thyng

248

Of craft of rynges herde they nevere noon,

Save that he Moyses and kyng Salomon

Hadden a name of konnyng in swich art.

Thus seyn the peple, and drawen hem apart.

252

But nathelees, somme seiden that it was

Wonder to maken of fern asshen glas,

And yet nys glas nat lyk asshen of fern.

But for they han yknowen it so fern,

256

Therefore cesseth hir janglyng and hir wonder.

As soore wondren somme on cause of thonder,

On ebbe, on flood, on gossomer, and on myst,

And on alle thyng til that the cause is wyst.

260

Thus jangle they, and demen, and devyse,

Til that the kyng gan fro the bord aryse.

Phebus hath laft the angle meridional,
 And yet ascendynge was the beest roial, 264
 The gentil Leon, with his Aldrian,
 Whan that this Tartre kyng, this Cambyuskan,
 Roos fro his bord, ther that he sat ful hye.
 Toform hym gooth the loude mynstralcy, 268
 Til he cam to his chambre of parementz,
 Ther-as they sownen diverse instrumentz
 That it is lyk an hevene for to heere.
 Now dauncen lusty Venus children deere, 272
 For in the Fyssh hir lady sat ful hye
 And looketh on hem with a freendly eye.
 This noble kyng is set up in his trone.
 This strange knyght is fet to hym ful soone, 276
 And on the daunce he gooth with Canacee.
 Heere is the revel and the jolitee
 That is nat able a dul man to devyse;
 He moste han knowen love and his servyse 280
 And been a feestlych man as fressh as May
 That sholde yow devysen swich array.
 Who koude telle yow the forme of daunces
 So unkouth and so fresshe contenaunces, 284
 Swich subtil lookyng and dissymulynges
 For drede of jalouse mennes aperceyvynge?
 No man but Launcelet; and he is deed!
 Therfore I passe of al this lustiheed. 288
 I sey namoore; but in this jolynesse
 I lete hem til men to the soper dresse.
 The styward bit the spices for to hye
 And eek the wyn; in al this melodye 292
 The usshers and the squiers been ygoon;
 The spices and the wyn is come anon.
 They ete and drynke. And whan this hadde an ende,
 Unto the temple, as reson was, they wende. 296
 The service doon, they soupen al by day.
 What nedeth me rehernen hire array?
 Ech man woot wel that a kynges feeste
 Hath plentee to the mooste and to the leeste, 300
 And deyntees mo than been in my knowyng.

At after-soper gooth this noble kyng
To seen this hors of bras, with al the route
Of lordes and of ladyes hym aboute.

304

Swich wondryng was ther on this hors of bras
That syn the grete sege of Troie was,
Ther-as men wondreden on an hors also,
Ne was ther swich a wondryng as was tho.
But fynally the kyng axeth this knyght
The vertu of this courser, and the myght,
And preyde hym to telle his governaunce.

308

This hors anoon bigan to trippe and daunce
Whan that this knyght leyde hand upon his reyne
And seyde, 'Sire ther is namoore to seyne
But whan yow list to ryden anywhere,
Ye mooten trille a pyn stant in his ere,
Which I shal yow telle bitwix us two;
Ye moote nempne hym to what place also,
Or to what contree that yow list to ryde,
And whan ye come ther-as yow list abyde,
Bidde hym descende, and trille another pyn —
For therin lith theeffect of al the gyn —
And he wol doun descende, and doon youre wille.
And in that place he wol stonde stille;
Though al the world the contrarie hadde yswore,
He shal nat thennes been ydrawe nor ybore.

312

316

320

324

Or if yow list to bidde hym thennes goon,
Trille this pyn and he wol vanysshe anoon
Out of the sighte of every maner wight,
And come agayn, be it by day or nyght,
Whan that yow list to clepen hym ageyn
In swich a gyse as I shal to yow seyn
Bitwixe yow and me, and that ful soone.
Ride whan yow list; ther is namoore to doone.'

328

332

Enformed whan the kyng was of that knyght,
And hath conceyved in his wit aright
The manere and the forme of al this thyng,
Thus glad and blithe this noble doughty kyng
Repeireth to his revel as biforn.

336

The brydel is unto the tour yborn

340

And kept among hise jueles leeve and deere;
 The hors vanysshed, I noot in what manere,
 Out of hir sighte — ye gete namoore of me.
 But thus I lete in lust and jolitee 344
 This Cambyuskan hise lordes festeiyng
 Til wel ny the day bigan to sprynge.

Explicit prima pars. Sequitur pars secunda.

The norice of digestioun — the sleep —
 Gan on hem wynke and bad hem taken keep 348
 That muchel drynke and labour wolde han reste;
 And with a galpyng mouth hem alle he keste
 And seyde it was tyme to lye adoun,
 For blood was in his domynacioun. 352
 'Cherisseth blood, Natures freend,' quod he.
 They thanken hym, galpyng, by two, by thre;
 And every wight gan drawe hym to his reste,
 As sleepe hem bad; they tooke it for the beste. 356
 Hire dremes shul nat been ytoold for me;
 Ful were hire heddes of fumositee,
 That causeth dreem of which ther nys no charge.
 They slepen til that it was pryme large — 360
 The mooste part, but it were Canacee.
 She was ful mesurable; as wommen be.
 For of hir fader hadde she take leve
 To goon to reste soone after it was eve. 364
 Hir liste nat appalled for to be,
 Ne on the morwe unfeestlich for to se;
 And slepte hire firste sleepe, and thanne awook;
 For swich a joye she in hir herte took 368
 Bothe of hir queynte ryng and hire mirour
 That twenty tyme she changed hir colour.
 And in hire sleepe, right for impression
 Of hire mirour, she hadde avision. 372
 Wherefore er that the sonne gan up glyde
 She cleped on hir maistresse hire bisyde,
 And seyde that hire liste for to ryse.
 Thise olde wommen that been gladly wyse 376

As hire maistressë answerde hire anon,
And seyde, 'Madame, whider wil ye goon
Thus erly, for the folk been alle on reste?'

'I wol,' quod she, 'arise — for me leste
No tenger for to slepe — and walke aboute.' 380

Hire maistresse clepeth wommen, a greet route;
And up they rysen wel a ten or twelve.

Up riseth fresshe Canacee herselfe, 384

As rody and bright as dooth the yonge sonne,
That in the Ram is foure degrees up ronne —
Noon hyer was he whan she redy was —

And forth she walketh esily a pas, 388

Arrayed, after the lusty seson soote,
Lightly for to pleye and walke on foote;
Nat but with fyve or sixe of hir meynee;
And in a trench, forth in the park, gooth she.

392

The vapour which that fro the erthe glood

Made the sonne to seme rody and brood,

But natheles it was so fair a sighte

That it made alle hire hertes for to lighte, 396

What for the seson and the morwenynge,

And for the foweles that she herde synge;

For right anon she wiste what they mente

Right by hir song, and knew al hire entente. 400

The knotte why that every tale is toold,

If it be taried til that lust be coold

Of hem that han it after herkned yooore,

The savour passeth — ever lenger the moore — 404

For fulsomnesse of his prolixitee.

And by the same reson, thynketh me,

I sholde to the knotte condescende,

And maken of hir walkyng soone an ende. 408

Amydde a tree, for drye as whit as chalk,

As Canacee was pleyyng in hir walk,

Ther sat a faucon over hire heed ful hye

That with a pitous voys so gan to crye

412

That all the wode resounded of hire cry.

Ybeten hath she herself so pitously

With bothe hir wynges til the rede blood

Ran endelong the tree ther-as she stood. 416
 And evere in oon she cryde alwey and shrighthe,
 And with hir beek hirselves so she prighte
 That ther nys tygre, ne noon so crueel beest
 That dwelleth outhur in wode or in forest, 420
 That nolde han wept, if that she wepe koude,
 For sorwe of hire, she shrighthe alwey so loude.
 For ther nas nevere no man yet on lyve —
 If that I koude a faucon wel discryve — 424
 That herde of swich another of fairnesse,
 As wel of plumage as of gentillesse
 Of shape, and al that myghte yrekened be.
 A faucon peregryn thanne semed she 428
 Of fremde land; and everemoore as she stood,
 She swowneth now and now for lakke of blood,
 Til wel neigh is she fallen fro the tree.
 This faire kynges doghter, Canacee — 432
 That on hir fynger baar the queynte ryng
 Thurgh which she understood wel everythyng
 That any fowel may in his leden seyn
 And koude answeren hym in his ledene ageyn — 436
 Hath understonde what this faucon seyde;
 And wel neigh, for the routhe, almoost she deyde.
 And to the tree she gooth ful hastily;
 And on this faukon looketh pitously; 440
 And heeld hir lappe abrood, for wel she wiste
 The faukon moste fallen fro the twiste
 Whan that it swowned next, for lakke of blood.
 A longe while to wayten hire she stood, 444
 Til atte laste she spak in this manere
 Unto the hauk, as ye shal after heere:
 'What is the cause — if it be for to telle —
 That ye be in this furial pyne of helle?' 448
 Quod Canacee unto the hauk above.
 'Is this for sorwe of deeth? or los of love?
 For, as I trowe, thise been causes two
 That causeth moost a gentil herte wo. 452
 Of oother harm it nedeth nat to speke,
 For ye youreself upon yourself yow wreke;

Which proveth wel that outhur love or drede
 Moot been encheson of youre cruel dede. 456
 Syn that I see noon outhur wight yow chace,
 For love of God, as dooth youreselven grace!
 Or what may been youre helpe? for west nor est
 Ne saugh I nevere er now no bryd ne beast 460
 That ferde with hymself so pitously.
 Ye sle me with youre sorwe, verrailly,
 I have of yow so greet compassioun.
 For Goddes love, com fro the tree adoun; 464
 And as I am a kynges doghter trewe,
 If that I verrailly the cause knewe
 Of youre disese, if it lay in my myght
 I wolde amenden it er that it were nyght, 468
 As wisly helpe me the grete God of kynde.
 And herbes shal I right ynowe yfynde
 To heele with youre hurtes hastily.'

Tho shrighthe this faucon yet moore pitously 472
 Than ever she dide; and fil to grounde anon,
 And lith aswowne deed and lyk a stoon,
 Til Canacee hath in hire lappe hire take Unto the tyme she gan of swough awake. 476

And after that she of hir swough gan breyde,
 Right in hir haukes ledene thus she seyde:
 'That pitee renneth soone in gentil herte,
 Feelynge his similitude in peynes smerte, 480
 Is preved al day, as men may it see,
 As wel by werk as by auctoritee;
 For gentil herte kitheth gentillesse.
 I se wel that ye han of my distresse 484
 Compassion, my faire Canacee,
 Of verray, wommanly benignytee
 That Nature in youre principles hath yset.
 But for noon hope for to fare the bet, 488
 But for to obeye unto youre herte free,
 And for to maken othere be war by me —
 As by the whelpe chasted is the leon —
 Right for that cause and that conclusion, 492
 Whil that I have a leyser and a space,

Myn harm I wol confessen er I pace.'

And evere whil that oon hir sorwe tolde,
That oother weepe as she to water wolde; 496

Til that the faucon bad hire to be stille,
And with a syk, right thus she seyde hir wille:

'That I was bred — allas, that harde day! —
And fostred in a roche of marbul gray 500

So tendrely that no thyng eyled me!

I nyste nat what was adversitee,
Til I koude flee ful hye under the sky.

'Tho dwelte a tercelet me faste by, 504
That semed welle of alle gentillesse.

Al were he ful of treson and falsnesse,
It was so wrapped under humble cheere,
And under hewe of trouthe in swich manere, 508

Under plesance, and under bisy peyne,
That I ne koude han wend he koude feyne,
So depe in greyn he dyed his colours.

Right as a serpent hit hym under floures 512
Til he may seen his tyme for to byte,

Right so this god of love, this ypocryte,
Dooth so hise cerymonyes and obeisances,
And kepeth in semblant alle hise observances 516

That sowneth into gentillesse of love.

As in a tounge is al the faire above
And under is the corps swich as ye woot,
Swich was this ypocrite bothe coold and hoot. 520

And in this wise he served his entente,
That, save the feend, noon wiste what he mente;

Til he so longe hadde wopen and compleyned,
And many a yeer his service to me feyned, 524

Til that myn herte, to pitous and to nyce,
Al innocent of his corouned malice —

For ferd of his deeth, as thoughte me —
Upon hise othes and his seuretee, 528

Graunted hym love upon this condicioun,
That everemoore myn honour and renoun

Were saved, bothe privee and apert;
This is to seyn, that, after his desert, 532

I yaf hym al myn hertē and my thoght —
 God woot and he that ootherwise noght! —
 And took his herte in chaunge for myn for ay.
 But sooth is seyde goon sithen many a day,
 "A trewe wight and a thief thenken nat oon." 536

And whan he saugh the thyng so fer ygoon
 That I hadde graunted hym fully my love,
 In swich a gyse as I have seyde above, 540
 And yeven hym my trewe herte as free
 As he swoor that he yaf his herte to me,
 Anon this tigre, ful of doublenesse,
 Fil on hise knees, with so devout humblesse, 544
 With so heigh reverence, and — as by his cheere —
 So lyk a gentil love of manere,

So ravysshed as it semed for the joye,
 That nevere Jason, ne Parys of Troye — 548

Jason? — certes, ne noon oother man
 Syn Lameth was, that alderfirst bigan
 To loven two, as writen folk biforn,
 Ne nevere syn the firste man was born — 552

Ne koude man, by twenty thousand part,
 Countrefete the sophymes of his art,
 Ne were worthy unbokelen his galoche
 Ther doublenesse or feynyng sholde approche, 556
 Ne so koude thanke a wight as he dide me.

His manere was an hevene for to see
 Til any womman, were she never so wys,
 So peynted he and kembde at point devys 560
 As wel hise wordes as his contenance.

'And I so loved hym for his obeisance,
 And for the trouthe I demed in his herte,
 That if so were that anythyng hym smerte, 564
 Al were it never so lite, and I it wiste,
 Me thoughte I felte deeth myn herte twist.

'And shortly, so ferforth this thyng is went
 That my wyl was his willes instrument; 568
 This is to seyn, my wyl obeyed his wyl
 In alle thyng as fer as reson fil,
 Kepyng the boundes of my worshipe evere.

- Ne nevere hadde I thyng so lief, ne levere, 572
 As hym, God woot; ne nevere shal namo.
 'This lasteth lenger than a yeer or two
 That I supposed of hym noght but good.
 But finally, thus atte laste it stood, 576
 That Fortune wolde that he moste twynne
 Out of that place which that I was inne.
 Wher me was wo that is no question!
 I kan nat make of it discripsion; 580
 For o thyng dare I tellen boldly,
 I knowe what is the peyne of deeth therby;
 Swich harme I felte for he ne myghte bileve.
 So on a day of me he took his leve, 584
 So sorwefully eek that I wende verrailly
 That he had felt as muchē harm as I,
 Whan that I herde hym speke and saugh his hewe.
 But natheles I thoughte he was so trewe 588
 And eek that he repaire sholde ageyn
 Withinne a litel while, sooth to seyn;
 And reson wolde eek that he moste go
 For his honour, as ofte it happeth so, 592
 That I made vertu of necessitee
 And took it wel, syn that it moste be.
 As I best myghte, I hidde fro hym my sorwe,
 And took hym by the hond, Seint John to borwe, 596
 And seyde hym thus: "Lo, I am youre al!
 Beth swich as I to yow have been and shall!"
 'What he answerde it nedeth noght reherce.
 Who kan sey bet than he? who kan do werse? 600
 Whan he hath al seyde, thanne hath he doon.
 "Therefore bihoveth hire a ful long spoon
 That shal ete with a feend," thus herde I seye.
 'So atte laste, he moste forth his weye; 604
 And forth he fleeth til he cam ther hym leste.
 Whan it cam hym to purpos for to reste,
 I trowe he hadde thilke text in mynde
 That "alle thyng repeiryng to his kynde 608
 Gladeth hymself"; thus seyn men, as I gesse.
 'Men loven of propre kynde newefangelnesse,

As briddes doon that men in cages fede;
For though thou nyght and day take of hem hede, 612

And strawe hir cage faire and softe as silk,
And yeve hem sugre, hony, breed, and milk,
Yet right anon as that his dore is uppe,
He with his feet wol spurne adoun his cuppe, 616
And to the wode he wole, and wormes ete;
So newefangel been they of hire mete,
And loven novelrie, of propre kynde,
No gentillesse of blood ne may hem bynde. 620

‘So ferde this tercelet, allas the day!

Though he were gentil born, and fressh and gay,
And goodlich for to seen, humble and free,
He saugh upon a tyme a kyte flee, 624
And sodeynly he loved this kyte so
That al his love is clene fro me ago;
And hath his trouthe falsed in this wyse.
Thus hath the kyte my love in hire servyse, 628
And I am lorn withouten remedie.’

And with that word this faucon gan to crie,
And swowned eft in Canacees barm.

Greet was the sorwe for the haukes harm 632
That Canacee and alle hir wommen made.

They nyste hou they myghte the faucon glade;
But Canacee hom bereth hire in hir lappe, 636
And softly in plastres gan hire wrappe

Ther-as she with hire beek hadde hurt hirselve.
Now kan nat Canacee but herbes delve
Out of the ground, and make saves newe 640
Of herbes precieuse and fyne of hewe,

To heelen with this hawk. Fro day to nyght
She dooth hire bisynesse and hire fulle myght;
And by hire beddes heed she made a mewe, 644
And covered it with veluëttes blewe,

In signe of trouthe that is in wommen sene,
And al withoute the mewe is peynted grene;
In which were peynted alle thise false fowles —
As beth thise tidyves, tercelettes, and owles; 648

Right for despit, were peynted hem bisyde

Pyes, on hem for to crie and chyde.

Thus lete I Canacee hir hauk kepyng;
I wol namoore as now speke of hir ryng, 652

Til it come eft to purpos for to seyn
How that this faucon gat hire love ageyn —
Repentant, as the storie telleth us —
By mediacion of Cambalus, 656

The kynges sone of which that I yow tolde.
But hennesforth I wol my proces holde
To speken of adventures and of batailles,
That nevere yet was herd so grete mervailles. 660

First wol I telle yow of Cambyuskan,
That in his tyme many a citee wan;
And after wol I speke of Algarsif —
How that he wan Theodera to his wif, 664

For whom ful ofte in greet peril he was,
Ne hadde he be holpen by the steede of bras;
And after wol I speke of Cambalo,
That faught in lystes with the bretheren two 668
For Canacee er that he myghte hire wynne.
And ther I lefte I wol ayeyn bigynne.

Explicit secunda pars. Incipit pars tercia.

Appollo whirleth up his chaar so hye
Til that the god Mercurius hous, the slye 672
[The tale is incomplete.]

Heere folwen the wordes of the Frankelyn to the Squier, and the wordes of the Hoost to the Frankelyn.

'In feith, Squier, thow hast thee wel yquit
And gentilly; I preise wel thy wit,'
Quod the Frankeleyn, 'considerynge thy yowthe.
So feelyngly thou spekest, sire, I allowe the. 676
As to my doom, ther is noon that is heere,
Of eloquence that shal be thy peere,
If that thou lyve. God yeve thee good chaunce,

THE PROLOGE OF THE FRANKELEYN 379

And in vertu sende thee continuaunce! 680
 For of thy spechē I have greet deyntee.
 I have a sone, and by the Trinitee,
 I hadde levere than twenty pound worth lond,
 Though it right now were fallen in myn hond, 684
 He were a man of swich discrecion
 As that ye been. Fy on possession,
 But-if a man be vertuous withal!
 I have my sone snybbed and yet shal, 688
 For he to vertu listneth nat entende;
 But for to pleye at dees and to despende
 And lese al that he hath is his usage;
 And he hath levere talken with a page 692
 Than to comune with any gentil wight
 There he myghte lerne gentillesse aright.'
 'Straw for youre gentillesse!' quod our Hoost;
 'What, Frankeleyn! pardee, sire, wel thou woost 696
 That ech of yow moot tellen atte leste
 A tale or two, or breken his biheste.'
 'That knowe I wel, sire,' quod the Frankeleyn;
 'I prey yow haveth me nat in desdeyn, 700
 Though to this man I speke a word or two.'
 'Telle on thy tale, withouten wordes mo!'
 'Gladly, sire Hoost,' quod he, 'I wole obeye
 Unto your wyl; now herkneth what I seye. 704
 I wol yow nat contrarien in no wyse
 As fer as that my wittes wol suffyse.
 I prey to God that it may plesen yow;
 Thanne woot I wel that it is good ynow.' 708
Explicit.

The Prologe of the Frankeleyns Tale.

Thise olde gentil Britons in hir dayes
 Of diverse aventures maden layes,
 Rymeyed in hir firste Briton tonge;
 Whiche layes with hir instrumentz they songe, 712
 Or elles reddeden hem, for hir plesance;
 And oon of hem have I in remembrance,

Which I shal seyn with good wyl as I kan.

But sires, bycause I am a burel man, 716
 At my bigynnyng first I yow biseche,
 Have me excused of my rude speche.
 I lerned nevere rethorik certeyn;
 Thyng that I speke it moot be bare and pleyn; 720
 I sleep nevere on the Mount of Pernaso,
 Ne lerned Marcus Tullius Scithero;
 Colours ne knowe I none, withouten drede,
 But swiche colours as growen in the mede, 724
 Or elles swichē as men dye or peynte;
 Colours of rethoryke been to queynte;
 My spirit feeleth noght of swich mateere.
 But if yow list, my tale shul ye heere. 728

Heere bigynneth the Frankeleyns Tale.

In Armorik, that called is Britayne,
 Ther was a knyght that loved and dide his payne
 To serve a lady in his beste wise;
 And many a labour, many a greet emprise, 732
 He for his lady wroghte er she were wonne;
 For she was oon the faireste under sonne,
 And eek therto comen of so heigh kynrede
 That wel unnethes dorste this knyght, for drede, 736
 Telle hire his wo, his peyne, and his distresse.
 But atte laste she, for his worthynesse,
 And namely for his meke obeysance,
 Hath swich a pitee caught of his penance 740
 That pryvely she fil of his accord
 To take hym for hir housbonde and hir lord —
 Of swich lordshipe as men han over hir wyves.
 And for to lede the moore in blisse hir lyves, 744
 Of his free wyl he swoor hire as a knyght
 That nevere in al his lyf he, day ne nyght,
 Ne sholde upon hym take no maistrie
 Agayn hir wyl, ne kithe hire jalousie, 748
 But hire obeye and folwe hir wyl in al,
 As any love to his lady shal;

Save that the name of soveraynetee,
That wolde he have, for shame of his degree. 752

She thanked hym, and with ful greet humblesse
She seyde, 'Sire, sith of youre gentillesse
Ye profre me to have so large a reyne —
Ne wolde nevere God bitwixe us tweyne 756
As in my gilt were outhur werre or stryf —
Sire, I wol be youre humble, trewe wyf.
Have heer my trouthe til that myn herte breste.'
Thus been they bothe in quiete and in reste. 760

For o thyng, sires, saufly dar I seye,
That freendes everych oother moot obeye
If they wol longe holden compaignye.
Love wol nat been constreyned by maistrye; 764
Whan maistrie comth, the god of love anon
Beteth hise wynges, and farewell! he is gon.
Love is a thyng as any spirit free.

Wommen, of kynde, desiren libertee, 768
And nat to been constreyned as a thral;
And so doon men, if I sooth seyen shal.
Looke who that is moost pacient in love,
He is at his advantage al above. 772

Pacience is an heigh vertu certeyn,
For it venquysseth, as thise clerkes seyn,
Thynges that rigour sholde nevere atteyne.
For every word men may nat chide or pleyne. 776

Lerneth to suffre or elles, so moot I goon,
Ye shul it lerne, wher-so ye wole or noon;
For in this world, certein, ther no wight is
That he ne dooth or seith somtyme amys. 780

Ire, siknesse, or constellation,
Wyn, wo, or chaungynge of complexion,
Causeth ful ofte to doon amys or speken.
On every wrong a man may nat be wreken; 784

After the tyme moste be temperance
To every wight that kan on governance.
And therefore hath this wise, worthy knyght,
To lyve in ese, suffrance hire bihight; 788
And she to hym ful wisly gan to swere

That nevere sholde ther be defaute in here. .

Heere may men seen an humble wys accord;
Thus hath she take hir servant and hir lord — 792
Servant in love and lord in mariage.

Thanne was he bothe in lordshipe and servage.
Servage? nay; but in lordshipe above,
Sith he hath bothe his lady and his love — 796
His lady, certes, and his wyf also,

The which that lawe of love acordeth to.
And whan he was in this prosperitee,
Hoom with his wyf he gooth to his contree, 800
Nat fer fro Pedmark, ther his dwellyng was,
Where-as he lyveth in blisse and in solas.

Who koude telle, but he hadde wedded be,
The joye, the ese, and the prosperitee 804

That is bitwixe an housbonde and his wyf?
A yeer and moore lasted this blisful lyf,
Til that the knyght, of which I speke of thus,
That of Kayrrud was cleped Arveragus, 808

Shoope hym to goon and dwelle a yeer or tweyne
In Engelond — that cleped was eek Briteyne —
To seke in armes worshipe and honour;
For al his lust he sette in swich labour; 812
And dwelled there two yeer — the book seith thus.

Now wol I stynten of this Arveragus,
And speken I wole of Dorigene his wyf,
That loveth hire housbonde as hire hertes lyf. 816

For his absence wepeth she and siketh,
As doon thise noble wyves whan hem liketh.
She moorneth, waketh, wayleth, fasteth, pleyneeth;
Desir of his presence hire so distreyneth 820

That al this wyde world she sette at noght.
Hire freendes, whiche that knewe hir hevyn thoght,
Conforten hire in al that ever they may.

They prechen hire; they telle hire nyght and day 824
That causelees she sleeth herself, alas!

And every confort possible in this cas
They doon to hire, with all hire bisynesse —
Al for to make hire leve hire hevynesse. 828

By proces, as ye knowen everichoon,
 Men may so longe graven in a stoon
 Til som figure therinne emprented be.
 So longe han they confortid hire, til she Receyved hath, by hope and by reson,
 The emprenting of hire consolacion;
 Thurgh which hir grete sorwe gan aswage;
 She may nat alwey duren in swich rage.

832

836

And eek Arveragus, in al this care,
 Hath sent hire lettres hoom of his welfare,
 And that he wol come hastily agayn;
 Or elles hadde this sorwe hir herte slayn.

840

Hire freendes sawe hir sorwe gan to slake,
 And preyde hire on knees, for Goddes sake,
 To come and romen hire in compaignye,
 Away to dryve hire derke fantasye.
 And finally she graunted that requeste;
 For wel she saugh that it was for the beste.

844

Now stood hire castel faste by the see;
 And often with hire freendes walketh shee,
 Hire to disporte, upon the bank an heigh;
 Where-as she many a shipe and barge seigh
 Seillynge hir cours where-as hem liste go.
 But thanne was that a parcel of hire wo,
 For to himself ful ofte 'Allas!' seith she,
 'Is ther no shipe, of so manye as I se,
 Wol bryngen hom my lord? Thanne were myn herte
 Al warisshed of hise bittre peynes smerte.'

848

852

856

Another tyme ther wolde she sitte and thynke,
 And caste hir eyen downward fro the brynke;
 But whan she saugh the grisly rokkes blake,
 For verray feere so wolde hir herte quake
 That on hire feet she myghte hire noght sustene.
 Thanne wolde she sitte adoun upon the grene,
 And pitously into the see biholde,
 And seyn right thus, with sorweful sikes colde:
 'Eterne God, that thurgh thy purveiaunce
 Ledest the world by certein governaunce,
 In ydel, as men seyn, ye nothyng make.

860

864

But, Lord, thise grisly, feendly rokkes blake, 868
 That semen rather a foul confusion
 Of werk than any fair creacion
 Of swich a parfit wys God and a stable —
 Why han ye wroght this werk unresonable? 872
 For by this werk, south, north, ne west, ne eest
 Ther nys yfostred man, ne bryd, ne beest;
 It dooth no good, to my wit, but anoyeth.
 Se ye nat, Lord, how mankynde it destroyeth? 876
 An hundred thousand bodyes of mankynde
 Han rokkes slayn, al be they nat in mynde;
 Which mankynde is so fair part of thy werk
 That thou it madest lyk to thyn owene merk. 880
 ‘Thanne semed it ye hadde a greet chiertee
 Toward mankynde; but how thanne may it bee
 That ye swiche meenes make it to destroyen —
 Whiche meenes do no good but evere anoyen. 884
 I woot wel clerkes wol seyn as hem leste
 By argumentz, that al is for the beste
 Though I kan the causes nat yknowe.
 But thilke God that made wynd to blowe 888
 As kepe my lord! This my conclusion.
 To clerkes lete I al this disputison;
 But wolde God that alle thise rokkes blake
 Were sonken into helle for his sake! 892
 Thise rokkes sleen myn herte, for the feere.’
 Thus wolde she seyn, with many a pitous teere.
 Hire freendes sawe that it was no disport
 To romen by the see, but discomfort; 896
 And shopen for to pleyen somwher elles.’
 They leden hire by ryveres and by welles,
 And eek in othere places delitables.
 They dauncen, and they pleyen at ches and tables. 900
 So on a day, right in the morwe tyde,
 Unto a gardyn that was ther bisyde,
 In which that they hadde maad hir ordinance
 Of vitaille and of oother purveiance, 904
 They goon and pleye hem al the longe day.
 And this was in the sixte morwe of May —

Which May hadde peynted with his softe shoures
This gardyn ful of leves and of floures. 908

And craft of mannes hand so curiously
Arrayed hadde this gardyn trewely
That nevere was ther gardyn of swich prys,
But if it were the verray paradys. 912

The odour of floures and the fresshe sighte
Wolde han maked any herte lighte
That evere was born, but-if to greet siknesse,
Or to greet sorwe, helde it in distresse, 916
So ful it was of beautee with plesance.

At after-dyner gonne they to daunce
And synge also, save Dorigen allone;
Which made alwey hir compleint and hir moone, 920
For she ne saugh hym on the daunce go
That was hir housbonde and hir love also.
But nathelees she moste a tyme abyde,
And with good hope lete hir sorwe slyde. 924

Upon this daunce, amonges othere men,
Daunced a squier biforen Dorigen,
That fressher was and jolyer of array,
As to my doom, than is the monthe of May. 928

He syngeth, daunceth, passyng any man
That is, or was, sith that the world bigan.
Therwith he was, if men sholde hym discryve,
Oon of the beste farynge man on lyve — 932

Yong, strong, right vertuuous, and riche and wys,
And wel biloved, and holden in greet prys.
And shortly if the sothe I tellen shal,
Unwityng of this Dorigen at al, 936

This lusty squier, servant to Venus,
Which that ycleped was Aurelius,
Hadde loved hire best of any creature
Two yeer and moore, as was his aventure, 940

But nevere dorste he tellen hire his grevance.
Withouten coppe he drank al his penance.
He was despayred; nothyng dorste he seye,
Save in his songes somewhat wolde he wreye 944
His wo, as in a general compleynyng.

He seyde he lovede, and was biloved nothyng.
 Of swich matere made he manye layes,
 Songes, compleintes, roundels, virelayes, 948
 How that he dorste nat his sorwe telle,
 But langwissheth as a furye dooth in helle.
 And dye he moste, he seyde, as dide Ekko
 For Narcisus, that dorste nat telle hir wo. 952
 In oother manere than ye heere me seye
 Ne dorste he nat to hire his wo biwreye,
 Save that paraventure somtyme at daunces,
 Ther yonge folk kepen hir observaunces, 956
 It may wel be he looked on hir face
 In swich a wise as man that asketh grace.
 But nothyng wiste she of his entente.
 Natheles it happed, er they thennes wente, 960
 Bycause that he was hire neighebour,
 And was a man of worshipe and honour,
 And hadde yknowen hym of tyme yooore,
 They fille in spechē; and forth, moore and moore, 964
 Unto this purpos drough Aurelius.
 And whan he saugh his tyme, he seyde thus:
 'Madame,' quod he 'by God, that this world made,
 So that I wiste it myghte youre herte glade, 968
 I wolde that day that youre Arveragus
 Wente over the see that I, Aurelius,
 Hadde went ther nevere I sholde have come agayn.
 For wel I woot my servyce is in vayn; 972
 My gerdon is but brestyng of myn herte.
 Madame, reweth upon my peynes smerte,
 For with a word ye may me sleen or save.
 Heere at youre feet God wolde that I were grave! 976
 I ne have as now no leyser moore to seye;
 Have mercy, sweete, or ye wol do me deye.'
 She gan to looke upon Aurelius:
 'Is this youre wyl?' quod she, 'and sey ye thus? 980
 Nevere erst,' quod she, 'ne wiste I what ye mente.
 But now, Aurelie, I knowe youre entente,
 By thilke God that yaf me soule and lyf,
 Ne shal I nevere been untrewē wyf, 984

- In word ne werk, as fer as I have wit;
 I wol been his to whom that I am knyht.
 Taak this for fynal answer, as of me.'
- But after that, in pley thus seyde she: 988
 'Aurelie,' quod she, 'by heighe God above,
 Yet wolde I graunte yow to been youre love,
 Syn I yow se so pitously complayne,
 Look what day that endelong Britayne 992
 Ye remoeve alle the rokkes, stoon by stoon,
 That they ne lette ship ne boot to goon.
 I seye, whan ye han maad the coost so clene
 Of rokkes that ther nys no stoon ysene, 996
 Thanne wol I love yow best of any man.
 Have heer my trouthe in al that evere I kan, 998
 For wel I woot that it shal never bityde. 1001
 Lat swiche folies out of youre herte slyde!
 What deyntee sholde a man han in his lyf
 For to go love another mannes wyf,
 That hath hir body whan-so that hym liketh?' 1005
 Aurelius ful ofte soore siketh: 1006
 'Is ther noon oother grace in yow?' quod he. 999
 'No, by that Lord,' quod she, 'that maked me!' 1000
 Wo was Aurelie whan that he this herde, 1007
 And with a sorweful herte he thus answerde: 1008
 'Madame,' quod he, 'this were an impossible!
 Thanne moot I dye of sodeyn deth horrible.'
 And with that word, he turned hym anon.
 Tho coome hir othere freendes many oon, 1012
 And in the aleyes romeden up and down;
 And nothyng wiste of this conclusioun.
 But sodeynly bigonne revel newe,
 Til that the brighte sonne loste his hewe, 1016
 For thorisonte hath reft the sonne his lyght —
 This is as muche to seye as it was nyght! —
 And hoom they goon, in joye and in solas,
 Save oonly wrecche Aurelius, allas! 1020
 He to his hous is goon with sorweful herte.
 He seeth he may nat fro his deeth asterte;
 Hym semed that he felte his herte colde.

Up to the hevene hise handes he gan holde, 1024
And on hise knowes bare he sette hym doun,
And in his ravyng seyde his orisoun.

For verray wo out of his wit he breyde;
He nyste what he spak, but thus he seyde 1028
With pitous herte; his pleynt hath he bigonne
Unto the goddes, and first unto the sonne.

He seyde: 'Appollo, god, and governour
Of every plaunte, herbe, tree, and flour, 1032
That yevest, after thy declinacion,

To ech of hem his tyme and his seson
As thyn herberwe chaungeth lowe or heighe —
Lord Phebus, cast thy merciable eighe 1036

On wrecche Aurelie, which am but lorn!
Lo, lord, my lady hath my deeth y-sworn Withoute gilt, but thy benignytee
Upon my dedly herte have som pitee. 1040

For wel I woot, lord Phebus, if yow lest,
Ye may me helpen — save my lady — best.
Now voucheth sauf that I may yow devyse
How that I may been holpen, and in what wyse. 1044

'Youre blisful suster, Lucina the sheene,
That of the see is chief goddesse and queene —
Though Neptunus have deitee in the see,
Yet emperisse aboven hym is she — 1048

Ye knowen wel, lord, that right as hir desir
Is to be quyked and lightned of youre fir;
For which she folweth yow ful bisily —
Right so the see desireth naturelly 1052

To folwen hire, as she that is goddesse
Bothe in the see and ryveres moore and lesse.
Wherfore, lord Phebus, this is my requeste;
Do this miracle or do myn herte breste — 1056

That now next at this opposicion,
Which in the signe shal be of the Leon,
As preieth hire so greet a flood to brynge
That fyve fadme at the leeste it oversprynge 1060
The hyeste rokke in Armorik Briteyne;
And lat this flood endure yeres tweyne.

- Thanne, certes, to my lady may I seye,
"Holdeth youre heste, the rokkes been awaye." 1064
 'Lord Phebus, dooth this miracle for me.
Preye hire she go no faster cours than ye;
I seye, preyeth your suster that she go
No faster cours than ye thise yeres two. 1068
Thanne shal she been evene atte fulle alway,
And spryng flood laste bothe nyght and day.
And but she vouche sauf in swich manere
To graunte me my sovereyn lady deere, 1072
Prey hire to synken every rok adoun
Into hir owene dirke regioun,
Under the ground ther Pluto dwelleth inne,
Or nevere mo shal I my lady wyne. 1076
Thy temple in Delphos wol I barefoot seke.
Lord Phebus, se the teeris on my cheke,
And of my peyne have som compassioun!
And with that word, in swowne he fil adoun, 1080
And longe tyme he lay forth in a traunce.
 His brother, which that knew of his penaunce,
Up caughte hym, and to bedde he hath hym broght.
Dispeyred in this torment and this thoght, 1084
Lete I this woful creäture lye;
Chese he, for me, wheither he wol lyve or dye.
 Arveragus, with heele and greet honour,
As he that was of chivalrie the flour, 1088
Is comen hoom, and othere worthy men.
O, blisful artow now, thou Dorigen!
That hast thy lusty housbonde in thyne armes,
The fresshe knyght, the worthy man of armes, 1092
That loveth thee as his owene hertes lyf.
Nothyng list hym to been ymaginatyf
If any wight had spoke, whil he was oute,
To hire of love. He hadde of it no doute; 1096
He noght entendeth to no swich mateere,
But daunceth, justeth, maketh hire good cheere.
And thus in joye and blisse I lete hem dwelle,
And of the sike Aurelius I wol yow telle. 1100
 In langour, and in torment furyus,

Two yeer and moore lay wrecche Aurelyus
 Er any foot he myghte on erthe gon;
 Ne confort in this tyme hadde he noon, 1104
 Save of his brother, which that was a clerk.
 He knew of al this wo and al this werk;
 For to noon oother creäture, certeyn,
 Of this matere he dorste no word seyn. 1108
 Under his brest he baar it moore secree
 Than evere dide Pamphilus for Galathee.
 His brest was hool, withoute for to sene,
 But in his herte ay was the arwe kene. 1112
 And wel ye knowe that of a sursanure
 In surgerye is perilous the cure,
 But men myghte touche the arwe or come therby.
 His brother weepe and wayled pryvely, 1116
 Til atte laste hym fil in remembrance
 That whiles he was at Orliens in France —
 As yonge clerkes that been lykerous
 To reden artes that been curious 1120
 Seken in every halke and every herne
 Particuler sciences for to lerne —
 He hym remembred that upon a day
 At Orliens in studie a book he say 1124
 Of magyk natureel, which his felawe —
 That was that tyme a bachelor of lawe,
 Al were he ther to lerne another craft —
 Hadde prively upon his desk ylaft; 1128
 Which book spak muchel of the operacions
 Touchynge the eighte and twenty mansions
 That longen to the moone, and swich folye
 As in oure dayes is nat worth a flye — 1132
 For Hooly Chirches feith in oure bileve
 Ne suffreth noon illusion us to greve.
 And whan this book was in his remembraunce,
 Anon for joye his herte gan to daunce; 1136
 And to hymself he seyde pryvely:
 ‘My brother shal be warisshed hastily;
 For I am siker that ther be sciences
 By whiche men make diverse apperences, 1140

Swiche as thise subtile tregetoures pleye;
 For ofte at feestes have I wel herd seye
 That tregetours withinne an halle large
 Have maad come in a water and a barge,
 And in the halle rowen up and down. 1144

Somtyme hath semed come a grym leoun;
 And somtyme floures sprynge as in a mede;
 Somtyme a vyne, and grapes white and rede;
 Somtyme a castel al of lym and stoon;
 And whan hym lyked voyded it anoon —
 Thus semed it to every mannes sighte. 1148

'Now thanne conclude I thus: that if I myghte 1152
 At Orliens som oold felawe yfynde
 That hadde this moones mansions in mynde,
 Or oother magyk natureel above,
 He sholde wel make my brother han his love. 1156
 For with an apparence a clerk may make
 To mannes sighte that alle the rokkes blake
 Of Britaigne weren yvoyded everichon
 And shippes by the brynke comen and gon, 1160
 And in swich forme enduren a wowke or two.
 Thanne were my brother warissshed of his wo;
 Thanne moste she nedes holden hire biheste,
 Or elles he shal shame hire atte leeste.' 1164

What sholde I make a lenger tale of this?
 Unto his brotheres bed he comen is,
 And swich confort he yaf hym for to gon
 To Orliens that he up stirte anon 1168
 And on his wey forthward thanne is he fare
 In hope for to been lissed of his care.

Whan they were come almoost to that citee,
 But-if it were a two furlong or thre, 1172
 A yong clerk romynge by hymself they mette,
 Which that in Latyn thriftily hem grette,
 And after that he seyde a wonder thyng.
 'I knowe,' quod he, 'the cause of youre comyng.' 1176
 And er they ferther any foote wente,
 He tolde hem al that was in hire entente.

This Briton clerk hym asked of felawes

The whiche that he had knowe in olde dawes. 1180
 And he answerde hym that they dede were;
 For which he weep ful ofte many a teere.

Doun of his hors Aurelius lighte anon,
 And with this mágicien forth is he gon 1184
 Hoom to his hous; and made hem wel at ese.
 Hem lakked no vitaille that myghte hem plese.
 So wel arrayed hous as ther was oon
 Aurelius in his lyf saugh nevere noon. 1188

He shewed hym er he wente to sopeer
 Forestes, parkes ful of wilde deer.
 Ther saugh he hertes with hir hornes hye —
 The gretteste that evere were seyn with eye — 1192
 He saugh of hem an hondred slayn with houndes,
 And somme with arwes blede of bittre woundes.

He saugh, whan voyded were thise wilde deer,
 This fauconers upon a fair ryver, 1196
 That with hir haukes han the heron slayn.

Tho saugh he knyghtes justyng in a playn.
 And after this he dide hym swich plesaunce
 That he hym shewed his lady on a daunce, 1200
 On which hymself he daunced, as hym thoughte.

And whan this maister that this magyk wroughte
 Saugh it was tyme, he clapte hise handes two,
 And farewell! al oure revel was ago. 1204

And yet remoeved they nevere out of the hous
 Whil they saugh al this sighte merveillous,
 But in his studie, ther-as hise bookes be,
 They seten stille, and no wight but they thre. 1208

To hym this maister called his squier,
 And seyde hym thus, 'Is redy oure soper?
 Almost an houre it is, I undertake,
 Sith I yow bad oure soper for to make, 1212
 Whan that thise worthy men wenten with me
 Into my studie, ther-as my bookes be.'

'Sire,' quod this squier, 'whan it liketh yow,
 It is al redy; though ye wol right now.' 1216
 'Go we thanne soupe,' quod he, 'as for the beste;
 This amorous folk somtyme moote han hir reste.'

- At after-soper fille they in tretee
What somme sholde this maistres gerdon be 1220
To remoeven alle the rokkes of Britayne
And eek from Gerounde to the mouth of Sayne.
He made it straunge, and swoor, so God hym save,
Lasse than a thousand pound he wolde nat have; 1224
Ne gladly for that somme he wolde nat goon.
Aurelius, with blisful herte anoon,
Answerde thus: 'Fy on a thousand pound!
This wyde world, which that men seye is round, 1228
I wolde it yeve, if I were lord of it.
This bargayn is ful dryve, for we been knyht.
Ye shal be payed trewely, by my trouthe;
But looketh now for no necligence or slourthe 1232
Ye tarie us heere no lenger than tomorwe.'
'Nay,' quod this clerk, 'have heer my feith to borwe'
To bedde is goon Aurelius whan hym leste,
And wel ny al that nyght he hadde his reste. 1236
What for his labour and his hope of blisse,
His woful herte of penaunce hadde a lisse.
Upon the morwe, whan that it was day,
To Britaigne tooke they the righte way — 1240
Aurelius and this mágicien bisyde —
And been descended ther they wolde abyde.
And this was, as thise bookes me remembre,
The colde, frosty seson of Decembre. 1244
Phebus wex old and hewed lyk laton,
That in his hoothe declynacion
Shoon as the burned gold with stremes brighte;
But now in Capricorn adoun he lighte, 1248
Where-as he shoon ful pale, I dar wel seyn.
The bittre frostes with the sleet and reyn
Destroyed hath the grene in every yerd.
Janus sit by the fyr with double berd,
And drynketh of his bugle horn the wyn;
Biforn hym stant brawn of the tusked swyn,
And 'Nowell!' crieth every lusty man.
Aurelius in al that evere he kan 1256
Dooth to his maister chiere and reverence,

And preyeth hym to doon his diligence
 To bryngen hym out of his peynes smerte,
 Or with a swerd that he wolde slitte his herte. 1260

This subtil clerk swich routhe had of this man
 That nyght and day he spedde hym that he kan
 To wayten a tyme of his conclusion;
 This is to seye, to maken illusion 1264

By swich an apparence, or jogelrye —
 I ne kan no termes of astrologye —
 That she and every wight sholde wene and seye
 That of Britaigne the rokkes were aweye, 1268
 Or ellis they were sonken under grounde.
 So, atte laste, he hath his tyme yfounde
 To maken hise japes and his wrecchednesse
 Of swich a supersticious cursednesse. 1272

Hise tables Tolletanes forth he brought,
 Ful wel corrected; ne ther lakked nought
 Neither his collect ne hise expans yeeris,
 Ne hise rootes, ne hise othere geeris — 1276

As been his centris, and hise argumentz,
 And hise proporcioneles convenientz
 For hise equacions in every thyng —
 And by his eighte speere in his wirkyng 1280
 He knew ful wel how fer Alnath was shove
 Fro the heed of thilke fixe Aries above,
 That in the nynte speere considered is;
 Ful subtilly he hadde kalkuled al this. 1284

Whan he hadde founde his firste mansion,
 He knew the remenant by proporcion;
 And knew the arisyng of his moone weel,
 And in whos face, and terme, and everydeel; 1288

And knew ful weel the moones mansion
 Acordaunt to his operacion;
 And knew also hise othere observances
 For swiche illusions and swiche meschances 1292

As hethen folk useden in thilke dayes.
 For which no lenger maked he delays;
 But thurgh his magik for a wyke or tweye
 It semed that alle the rokkes were aweye. 1296

Aurelius, which that yet despeired is
 Wher he shal han his love or fare amys,
 Awaiteth nyght and day on this myracle;
 And whan he knew that ther was noon obstacle 1300
 That voyded were thise rokkes everychon,
 Doun to hise maistres feet he fil anon,
 And seyde, 'I, woful wrecche Aurelius,
 Thanke yow, lord, and lady myn Venus, 1304
 That me han holpen fro my cares colde.'
 And to the temple his wey forth hath he holde,
 Where-as he knew he sholde his lady see.
 And whan he saugh his tyme, anon right hee, 1308
 With dredful herte and with ful humble cheere, Salewed hath his sovereyn lady deere.
 'My righte lady,' quod this woful man,
 'Whom I moost drede, and love as I best kan, 1312
 And lothest were of al this world displese;
 Nere it that I for yow have swich disese
 That I moste dyen heere at youre foot anon,
 Noght wolde I telle how me is wo bigon; 1316
 But certes, outhere moste I dye or pleyne.
 Ye sle me, giltelees, for verray peyne.
 But of my deeth thogh that ye have no routhe,
 Avyseth yow er that ye breke youre trouthe. 1320
 Repenteth yow, for thilke God above,
 Er ye me sleen bycause that I yow love;
 For, madame, wel ye woot what ye han hight.
 Nat that I chalange anythyng of right 1324
 Of yow, my sovereyn lady, but youre grace;
 But in a gardyn yond, at swich a place,
 Ye woot right wel what ye bihighten me;
 And in myn hand youre trouthe pligheten ye 1328
 To love me best. God woot, ye seyde so,
 Al be that I unworthy be therto.
 Madame, I speke it for the honour of yow,
 Moore than to save myn hertes lyf right now. 1332
 I have do so as ye comanded me;
 And if ye vouche sauf, ye may go see.
 Dooth as yow list; have youre biheste in mynde;

- For, quyk or deed, right there ye shal me fynde. 1336
In yow lith al to do me lyve or deye;
But wel I woot the rokkes been awaye.'
- He taketh his leve; and she astonied stood;
In al hir face nas a drope of blood. 1340
She wende nevere han come in swich a trappe.
'Allas,' quod she, 'that evere this sholde happe!
For wende I nevere by possibilittee
That swich a monstre or merveille myghte be; 1344
It is agayns the proces of Nature.'
- And hoom she goth a sorweful creature;
For verray feere unnethe may she go.
She wepeth, wailleth, al a day or two, 1348
And swowneth that it routhe was to see.
But why it was to no wight tolde shee,
For out of towne was goon Arveragus.
But to hirself she spak and seyde thus, 1352
With face pale and with ful sorweful cheere,
In hire compleynt, as ye shal after heere:
'Allas!' quod she; 'on thee, Fortune, I pleyne,
That unwar wrapped hast me in thy cheyne; 1356
For which tescape woot I no socour
Save oonly deeth or elles dishonour.
Oon of thise two bihoveth me to chese;
But nathelees, yet have I levere to lese 1360
My lif than of my body have a shame,
Or knowe myselfen fals, or lese my name.
And with my deth I may be quyt, ywis.
Hath ther nat many a noble wyf er this, 1364
And many a mayde, yslayn hirself, alas!
Rather than with hir body doon trespas?
'Yis, certes; lo, thise stories beren witnesse.
Whan thritty tirauntz ful of cursednesse 1368
Hadde slayn Phidon in Atthenes at feste,
They comanded hise doghtres for tareste
And bryngen hem biforn hem in despit,
Al naked, to fulfille hir foul delit; 1372
And in hir fadres blood they made hem daunce
Upon the pavement, God yeve hem myschaunce!

For which thise woful maydens, ful of drede,
Rather than they wolde lese hir maydenhede, 1376
They prively been stirt into a welle.

And dreynte hemselven, as the bookes telle.

'They of Mecene leete enquire and seke
Of Lacedomye fifty maydens eke, 1380

On whiche they wolden doon hir lecherye.

But was ther noon of al that compaignye

That she nas slayn, and with a good entente

Chees rather for to dye than assente 1384

To been oppressed of hir maydenhede.

Why sholde I, thanne, to dye been in drede?

'Lo eek the tiraunt Aristoclides,
That loved a mayden heet Stymphalides. 1388

Whan that hir fader slayn was on a nyght,

Unto Dianes temple goth she right,

And hente the ymage in hir handes two;

Fro which ymage wolde she nevere go — 1392

No wight ne myghte hir handes of it arace —

Til she was slayn right in the selve place.

'Now sith that maydens hadden swich despit
To been defouled with mannes foul delit, 1396

Wel oghte a wyf rather herselven slee

Than be defouled, as it thynketh me.

'What shal I seyn of Hasdrubales wyf,
That at Cartage birafte himself hir lyf? 1400

For whan she saugh that Romayns wan the toun,

She took hir children alle and skipte adoun

Into the fyr, and chees rather to dye

Than any Romayn dide hire vileynye. 1404

'Hath nat Lucesse yslayn herself — alas! —

At Rome, whan that she oppressed was

Of Tarquyn, for hire thoughte it was a shame

To lyven whan she hadde lost hir name? 1408

'The sevene maydens of Melesie also

Han slayn hemself for verray drede and wo

Rather than folk of Gawle hem sholde oppresse.

Mo than a thousand stories, as I gesse, 1412

Koude I now telle as touchynge this mateere.

- 'Whan Habradate was slayn, his wyf so deere Hirselves slow and leet hir blood to glyde
 In Habradates woundes depe and wyde, 1416
 And seyde, "My body at the leeste way Ther shal no wight defoulen if I may."
 'What sholde I mo ensamples heerof sayn?
 Sith that so manye han hemselven slayn 1420
 Wel rather than they wolde defouled be,
 I wol conclude that it is bet for me
 To sleen myself than been defouled thus.
 I wol be trewe unto Arveragus 1424
 Or rather sleen myself in som manere,
 As dide Demociones doghter deere Bycause that she wolde nat defouled be.
 O Cedasus, it is ful greet pitee 1428
 To reden how thy doghtren deyde — alas! —
 That slowe himself for swich a manere cas.
 'As greet a pitee was it, or wel moore,
 The Theban mayden that for Nichanore 1432
 Hirselves slow, right for swich manere wo.
 'Another Theban mayden dide right so
 For oon of Macidonye hadde hire oppressed;
 She with hire deeth hir maydenhede redressed. 1436
 'What shal I seye of Nicerates wyf,
 That for swich cas birafte himself hir lyf?
 'How trewe eek was to Alcebiades
 His love, that rather for to dyen chees 1440
 Than for to suffre his body unburyed be.
 'Lo, which a wyf was Alceste!' quod she.
 'What seith Omer of goode Penalopee?
 Al Grece knoweth of hire chastitee. 1444
 'Pardee, of Laodomya is writen thus,
 That whan at Troie was slayn Protheselaus,
 No lenger wolde she lyve after his day.
 'The same of noble Porcia telle I may; 1448
 Withoute Brutus koude she nat lyve,
 To whom she hadde al hool hir herte yeve.
 'The parfit wyfhod of Arthemesie
 Honored is thurgh al the Barbarie. 1452

'O Teuta queene, thy wyfly chastitee
To alle wyves may a mirour bee.

'The same thyng I seye of Bilyea,
Of Rodogone, and eek Valeria.'

1456

Thus pleyned Dorigene a day or tweye,
Purposynge evere that she wolde deye.
But nathelees, upon the thridde nyght,
Hoom cam Arveragus, this worthy knyght,
And asked hire why that she weepe so soore.
And she gan wepen, ever lenger the moore.

1460

'Allas,' quod she, 'that evere I was born!
Thus have I seyde,' quod she; 'thus have I sworn.'
And toold hym al, as ye han herd bifore;
It nedeth nat reherce it yow namoore.

1464

This housbonde, with glad chiere, in freendly wyse,
Answerde and seyde as I shal yow devyse.

1468

'Is ther oght elles, Dorigen, but this?'

'Nay, nay,' quod she, 'God helpe me so as wys!
This is to muche, and it were Goddes wille!'

'Ye, wyf,' quod he; 'lat slepen that is stille.
It may be wel, paraventure, yet today.

1472

Ye shul youre trouthe holden, by my fay;

For God so wisly have mercy upon me,

I hadde wel levere ystiked for to be,

1476

For verray love which that I to yow have,

But-if ye sholde youre trouthe kepe and save.

"Trouthe is the hyeste thyng that man may kepe."

1480

But with that word he brast anon to wepe,

And seyde, 'I yow forbede, up peyne of deeth,

That nevere whil thee lasteth lyf ne breeth,

To no wight telle thou of this aventure.

As I may best, I wol my wo endure,

1484

Ne make no contenance of hevynesse,

That folk of yow may demen harm or gesse.'

And forth he cleped a squier and a mayde.

'Gooth forth anon with Dorigen,' he sayde,

1488

'And bryngeth hire to swich a place anon.'

They take hir leve and on hir wey they gon,

But they ne wiste why she thider wente;

He nolde no wight tellen his entente. 1492

Paraventure an heepe of yow, ywis,
Wol holden hym a lewed man in this,
That he wol putte his wyf in jupartie.
Herkneth the tale er ye upon hire crie; 1496

She may have bettre fortune than yow semeth;
And whan that ye han herd the tale, demeth.

This squier, which that highte Aurelius,
On Dorigen that was so amorus, 1500

Of aventure happed hire to meete
Amydde the toun, right in the quykkest strete,
As she was bown to goon the wey forth right
Toward the gardyn ther-as she had hight. 1504

And he was to the gardyn ward also;
For wel he spyed whan she wolde go
Out of hir hous to any maner place.
But thus they mette, of aventure or grace. 1508

And he saleweth hire with glad entente,
And asked of hire whiderward she wente.
And she answerdē, half as she were mad,
'Unto the gardyn, as myn housbonde bad, 1512
My trouthe for to holde, allas, allas!'

Aurelius gan wondren on this cas,
And in his herte hadde greet compassion
Of hire, and of hire lamentacion; 1516

And of Arveragus the worthy knyght,
That bad hire holden al that she had hight —
So looth hym was his wyf sholde breke hir trouthe.
And in his herte he caughte of this greet routhe, 1520

Considerynge the beste on every syde,
That fro his lust yet were hym levere abyde
Than doon so heigh a cherlyssh wrecchednesse
Agayns franchise and alle gentillesse; 1524

For which, in fewe wordes seyde he thus:
'Madame, seyeth to youre lord Arveragus
That sith I se his grete gentillesse
To yow — and eek I se wel youre distresse — 1528

That him were levere han shame — and that were routhe —
Than ye to me sholde breke thus youre trouthe, have wel levere evere to suffre wo

Than I departe the love bitwix yow two. 1532
I yow relese, madame, into youre hond,
Quyt, every surement and every bond
That ye han maad to me as heer biforn
Sith thilke tyme which that ye were born. 1536
My trouthe I plighte, I shal yow never repreve
Of no biheste. And heere I take my leve
As of the treweste and the beste wyf
That evere yet I knew in al my lyf. 1540

But every wyf be war of hire biheeste;
On Dorigene remembreth atte leeste!
Thus kan a squier doon a gentil dede
As wel as kan a knyght, withouten drede.' 1544

She thonketh hym upon hir knees al bare,
And hoom unto hir housbonde is she fare;
And tolde hym al, as ye han herd me sayd.
And be ye siker he was so weel apayd 1548
That it were impossible me to wryte.

What sholde I lenger of this cas endyte?
Arveragus and Dorigene his wyf
In sovereyn blisse leden forth hir lyf; 1552
Nevere eft ne was ther angre hem bitwene;
He cheriseth hire as though she were a queene,
And she was to hym trewe for everemoore —
Of thise folk ye gete of me namoore. 1556

Aurelius, that his cost hath al forlorn,
Curseth the tyme that evere he was born.
'Allas,' quod he, 'allas, that I bihighte
Of pured gold a thousand pound of wighte 1560
Unto this philosopre! How shal I do?
I se namoore but that I am fordo.
Myn heritage moot I nedes selle
And been a beggere. Heere may I nat dwelle 1564
And shamen al my kynrede in this place,
But I of hym may gete better grace.
But nathelees I wole of hym assaye
At certeyn dayes yeer by yeer to paye, 1568
And thanke hym of his grete curteisye;

My trouthe wol I kepe, I wol nat lye.'

With herte soor he gooth unto his cofre,
And broghte gold unto this philosophre — 1572

The value of fyve hundred pound, I gesse;
And hym bisecheth, of his gentillesse,
To graunte hym dayes of the remenaunt;
And seyde, 'Maister, I dar wel make avaunt, 1576
I failled nevere of my trouthe as yit.

For sikerly my dette shal be quyt
Towardes yow, howevere that I fare —
To goon a-begged in my kirtle bare. 1580

But wolde ye vouche sauf, upon seuretee,
Two yeer or thre for to respiten me,
Thanne were I wel; for elles moot I selle
Myn heritage; ther is namoore to telle.' 1584

This philosophre sobrelly answerde
And seyde thus, whan he thise wordes herde:
'Have I nat holden covenant unto thee?'

'Yes, certes; wel and trewely,' quod he. 1588

'Hastow nat had thy lady as thee liketh?'

'No, no!' quod he; and sorwefully he siketh.

'What was the cause? tel me if thou kan.'

Aurelius his tale anon bigan,
And tolde hym al, as ye han herd bifoore.
It nedeth nat to yow reherce it moore. 1592

He seide Arveragus, of gentillesse,
Hadde levere dye in sorwe and in distresse
Than that his wyf were of hir trouthe fals. 1596

The sorwe of Dorigen he tolde hym als,
How looth hire was to been a wikked wyf,
And that she levere had lost that day hir lyf; 1600

And that hir trouthe she swoor thurgh innocence,
She nevere erst hadde herd speke of apparence.
'That made me han of hire so greet pitee,

And right as frely as he sente hire me 1604
As frely sente I hire to hym ageyn.

This al and som; ther is namoore to seyn.'

This philosophre answerde: 'Leeve brother,
Everich of yow dide gentilly til oother. 1608

Thou art a squier, and he is a knyght;
But God forbede, for his blisful myght,
But-if a clerk koude doon a gentil dede
As wel as any of yow, it is no drede.

1612

‘Sire, I releesse thee thy thousand pound
As thou right now were copen out of the ground
Ne nevere er now ne haddest knowen me;
For, sire, I wol nat taken a peny of thee
For al my craft, ne noght for my travaille.
Thou hast ypayed wel for my vitaille;
It is ynogh; and farewel, have good day!’
And took his hors and forth he goth his way.

1616

1620

Lordynges, this question thanne wolde I aske now:
Which was the mooste fre, as thynketh yow?
Now telleth me, er that ye ferther wende.
I kan namoore; my tale is at an ende.

1624

Heere is ended the Frankeleyns Tale.

[FRAGMENT VI (GROUP C)]

THE PHYSICIAN'S TALE]

Heere folweth the Phisiciens Tale.

[The Physician's Tale, of the death of the Roman maiden, Virginia, is omitted here. After it follow:]

The wordes of the Hooste to the Phisicien and the Pardoner.

Oure Hooste gan to swere as he were wood;
'Harrow!' quod he 'by nayles and by blood, 288
This was a fals cherl and a fals justise!
As shameful deeth as herte may devyse
Come to thise juges and hire advocatz!
Algate this sely mayde is slayn, allas! 292
Allas, to deere boughte she beautee!
Wherefore I seye al day, as men may see,
That yiftes of Fortune and of Nature
Been cause of deeth to many a creature. 296
Of bothe yiftes that I speke of now
Men han ful ofte moore for harm than prow. 300
'But trewely, myn owene maister deere,
This is a pitous tale for to heere.
But nathelees, passe over; is no fors.
I pray to God, so save thy gentil cors, 304
And eek thyne urynals and thy jurdones,
Thyn ypocras and eek thy galiones,
And every boyste ful of thy letuarie;
God blesse hem, and Oure Lady Seinte Marie! 308
So moot I theen, thou art a propre man,
And lyk a prelat, by Seint Ronyan!
Seyde I nat wel? I kan nat speke in terme,
But wel I woot thou doost myn herte to erme, 312

That I almoost have caught a cardynacle.
 By corpus bones, but I have triacle,
 Or elles a draughte of moyste and corny ale,
 Or but I heere anon a myrie tale, 316
 Myn herte is lost for pitee of this mayde.
 'Thou beel amy, thou Pardoner,' he sayde,
 'Telle us som myrthe or japes right anon.'
 'It shal be doon,' quod he, 'by Seint Ronyon! 320
 But first,' quod he, 'heere at this ale stake
 I wol bothe drynke, and eten of a cake.'
 And right anon the gentils gonne to crye:
 'Nay! lat hym telle us of no ribaudye. 324
 Telle us som moral thyng that we may leere
 Som wit, and thanne wol we gladly heere.'
 'I graunte, ywis," quod he, 'but I moot thynke
 Upon som honeste thyng while that I drynke.' 328

Heere folweth the Prologe of the Pardoners Tale.

Radix malorum est Cupiditas. Ad Thimotheum .6°.

'Lordynges,' quod he, 'in chirches whan I preche,
 I peyne me to han an hauteyn speche,
 And rynge it out as round as gooth a belle,
 For I kan al by rote that I telle. 332
 My theme is' alwey oon and evere was,
 "Radix malorum est Cupiditas."
 First I pronounce whennes that I come,
 And thanne my bulles shewe I, alle and some. 336
 Oure lige lordes seel on my patente,
 That shewe I first, my body to warente,
 That no man be so boold, ne preest ne clerk,
 Me to destourbe of Cristes hooly werk; 340
 And after that thanne telle I forth my tales.
 Bulles of popes, and of cardynales,
 Of patriarkes, and bishoppes I shewe;
 And in Latyn I speke a wordes fewe, 344
 To saffron with my predicacion,
 And for to stire hem to devocion.

Thanne shewe I forth my longe cristal stones,
 Ycrammed ful of cloutes and of bones — 348
 Relikes been they, as wenen they echoon.
 Thanne have I in laton a sholder boon
 Which that was of an hooly Jewes sheep.
 'Goode men,' I seye, 'taak of my wordes keep: 352
 If that this boon be wasshe in any welle,
 If cow or calf or sheepe or oxe swelle
 That any worm hath ete or worm ystonge,
 Taak water of that welle and wassh his tonge, 356
 And it is hool anon; and forthermoor,
 Of pokkes and of scabbe and every soor
 Shal every sheepe be hool that of this welle
 Drynketh a draughte. Taak kepe eek what I telle: 360
 If that the goode man that the beestes oweth
 Wol every wyke, er that the cok hym croweth,
 Fastynge, drinken of this welle a draughte,
 As thilke hooly Jew oure eldres taughte, 364
 His beestes and his stoor shal multiplie.
 And, sires, also it heeleth jalousie;
 For though a man be falle in jalous rage,
 Lat maken with this water his potage, 368
 And nevere shal he moore his wyf mystriste,
 Though he the soothe of hir defaute wiste —
 Al had she taken preestes two or thre.
 Heere is a miteyn eek that ye may se. 372
 He that his hand wol putte in this mitayn,
 He shal have multipliynge of his grayn,
 Whan he hath sowen, be it whete or otes,
 So that he offre pens — or elles grotes. 376
 Goode men and wommen, o thyng warne I yow!
 If any wight be in this chirche now
 That hath doon synnē horrible, that he
 Dar nat, for shame of it, yshryven be, 380
 Or any womman, be she yong or old,
 That hath ymaked hir housbonde cokewold,
 Swich folk shal have no power ne no grace
 To offren to my relikes in this place. 384
 And whoso fyndeth hym out of swich fame,

They wol come up and offre, on Goddes name,
 And I assoille hem by the auctoritee
 Which that by bulle ygraunted was to me.' 388

By this gaude have I wonne, yeer by yeer,
 An hundred mark, sith I was pardoner.
 I stonde lyk a clerk in my pulpet,
 And whan the lewed peple is doun yset, 392
 I preche so as ye han herd bifoore,
 And telle an hundred false japes moore.

Thanne peyne I me to strecche forth the nekke,
 And est and west upon the peple I bekke, 396
 As dooth a dowve sittynge on a berne.

Myne handes and my tonge goon so yerne
 That it is joye to se my bisynesse.
 Of avarice and of swich cursednesse 400

Is al my prechyng, for to make hem free
 To yeven hir pens, and namely unto me.
 For myn entente is nat but for to wynne,
 And nothyng for correccion of synne; 404

I rekke nevere, whan they been beryed,
 Though that hir soules goon a-blakeberyed.

For certes, many a predicacion
 Comth ofte tyme of yvel entencion: 408

Som for plesance of folk and flaterye,
 To been avaunced by ypocrisye;
 And som for veyne glorie; and som for hate —
 For whan I dar noon oother weyes debate, 412

Thanne wol I styngge hym with my tonge smerte
 In prechyng, so that he shal nat asterte
 To been defamed falsly, if that he Hath trespassed to my bretheren or to me. 416

For though I telle noght his propre name,
 Men shal wel knowe that it is the same,
 By signes and by othere circumstances.

Thus quyte I folk that doon us displesances; 420
 Thus spitte I out my venym under hewe
 Of hoolynesse, to semen hooly and trewe.

But shortly, myn entente I wol devyse:
 I preche of nothyng but for coveityse. 424

Therfore my theme is yet, and evere was,
'Radix malorum est Cupiditas.'

Thus kan I preche agayn that same vice
 Which that I use, and that is avarice. 428

But though myself be gilty in that synne,
 Yet kan I maken oother folk to twynne
 From avarice and soore to repente.
 But that is nat my principal entente; 432
 I preche nothyng but for coveitise —
 Of this mateere it oghte ynogh suffice.

Thanne telle I hem ensamples many oon
 Of olde stories longe tyme agoon; 436
 For lewed peple loven tales olde —

Swiche thynges kan they wel reporte and holde.
 What! trowe ye that whiles I may preche.
 And wynne gold and silver for I teche, 440
 That I wol lyve in poverte wilfully?

Nay, nay! I thoghte it nevere trewely.
 For I wol preche and begge in sondry landes;
 I wol nat do no labour with myne handes, 444
 Ne make baskettes and lyve therby,
 Bycause I wol nat beggen ydelly.

I wol noon of the apostles countrefete;
 I wol have moneie, wolle, chese, and whete, 448
 Al were it yeven of the pouereste page,
 Or of the pouereste wydwe in a village,
 Al sholde hir children sterve for famyne.
 Nay, I wol drynke licour of the vyne, 452
 And have a joly wenche in every toun.

But herkneth, lordynges, in conclusioun:
 Youre likyng is that I shal telle a tale;
 Now have I dronke a draughte of corny ale, 456
 By God, I hope I shal yow telle a thyng

That shal by reson been at youre likyng;
 For though myself be a ful vicious man,
 A moral tale yet I yow telle kan, 460
 Which I am wont to preche, for to wynne.
 Now hoold youre pees! my tale I wol bigynne.

Heere bigynneth the Pardoners Tale.

In Flaundres whilom was a compaignye
 Of yonge folk that haunteden folye — 464
 As riot, hasard, stywes, and tavernes,
 Where-as with harpes, lutes, and gyternes
 They daunce and pleyen at dees bothe day and nyght,
 And eten also and drynken over hir myght; 468
 Thurgh which they doon the devel sacrificise
 Withinne that develes temple, in cursed wise,
 By superfluytee abhomynable.
 Hir othes been so grete and so dampnable 472
 That it is grisly for to heere hem swere.
 Oure blissed Lordes body they to-tere —
 Hem thoughte that Jewes rente hym noght ynough —
 And ech of hem at otheres synne lough. 476
 And right anon thanne comen tombesteres
 Fetys and smale, and yonge frutesteres,
 Syngeres with harpes, baudes, wafereres —
 Whiche been the verray develes officeres 480
 To kyndle and blowe the fyr of lecherye,
 That is annexed unto glotonye.
 The hooly writ take I to my witnesse
 That luxurie is in wyn and dronkenesse. 484
 Lo, how that dronken Looth, unkyndely,
 Lay by hise doghtres two, unwityngly;
 So dronke he was he nyste what he wroghte.
 Herodes — whoso wel the Stories soghte — 488
 Whan he of wyn was repleet at his feeste,
 Right at his owene table he yaf his heeste
 To sleen the Baptist John, ful giltelees.
 Senec seith a good word doutelees. 492
 He seith he kan no difference fynde
 Bitwix a man that is out of his mynde
 And a man which that is dronkelewe,
 But that woodnesse, fallen in a shrewe, 496
 Persevereth lenger than dooth dronkenesse.
 O glotonye, ful of cursednesse!
 O cause first of oure confusion!

O original of oure dampnacion 500
 Til Crist hadde boght us with his blood agayn:
 Lo, how deere, shortly for to sayn,
 Aboght was thilke cursed vileynye!
 Corrupt was al this world for glotonye: 504
 Adam oure fader and his wyf also Fro Paradys to labour and to wo
 Were dryven for that vice, it is no drede; 507
 For whil that Adam fasted, as I rede,
 He was in Paradys; and whan that he
 Eet of the fruyt deffended on the tree,
 Anon he was out cast to wo and peyne.
 O glotonye, on thee wel oghte us pleyne! 512
 O, wiste a man how manye maladyes
 Folwen of excesse and of glotonyes,
 He wolde been the moore mesurable
 Of his diete, sittinge at his table. 516
 Allas! the shorte throte, the tendre mouth,
 Maketh that est and west and north and south,
 In erthe, in eir, in water, men to swynke
 To gete a gloton deyntee mete and drynke. 520
 Of this matiere, O Paul, wel kanstow trete.
 'Mete unto wombe, and wombe eek unto mete,
 Shal God destroyen bothe,' as Paulus seith.
 Allas! a foul thyng is it, by my feith, 524
 To seye this word, and fouler is the dede
 Whan man so drynketh of the white and rede. 526
 The apostel wepyng seith ful pitously: 529
 'Ther walken manye, of whiche yow toold have I —
 I seye it now wepyng with pitous voys —
 They been enemys of Cristes croys, 532
 Of whiche the ende is deeth; wombe is hir god.'
 O wombe! O bely! O stynkyng cod, 534
 How greet labour and cost is thee to fynde! 537
 Thise cookes, how they stampe, and streyne, and grynde,
 And turnen substaunce into accident,
 To fulfillen al thy likerous talent! 540
 Out of the harde bones knokke they
 The mary, for they caste noght away

That may go thurgh the golet softe and swoote.
Of spicerie, of leef, and bark, and roote 544
Shal been his sauce ymaked, by delit
To make hym yet a newer appetit.
But certes, he that haunteth swiche delices
Is deed, whil that he lyveth in tho vices. 548
A lecherous thyng is wyn, and dronkenesse
Is ful of stryvyng and of wrecchednesse.
O dronke man, disfigured is thy face,
Sour is thy breath, foul artow to embrace, 552
And thurgh thy dronke nose semeth the soun
As though thou seydest ay, 'Sampsoun, Sampsoun';
And yet, God woot, Sampsoun drank nevere no wyn.
Thou fallest as it were a styked swyn; 556
Thy tonge is lost, and al thyn honeste cure;
For dronkenesse is verray sepulture
Of mannes wit and his discrecion.
In whom that drynke hath dominacion, 560
He kan no conseil kepe, it is no drede.
Now kepe yow fro the white and fro the rede,
And namely fro the white wyn of Lepe,
That is to selle in Fysshstrete or in Chepe. 564
This wyn of Spaigne crepeth subtilly
In othere wynes growynge faste by,
Of which ther ryseth swich fumositee
That whan a man hath dronken draughtes thre, 568
And weneth that he be at hoom in Chepe,
He is in Spaigne, right at the toun of Lepe —
Nat at the Rochele, ne at Burdeux toun;
And thanne wol he seye, 'Sampsoun, Sampsoun.' 572
But herkneth, lordes, o word, I yow preye:
That alle the sovereyn actes, dar I seye,
Of victories in the Olde Testament,
Thurgh verray God, that is omnipotent, 576
Were doon in abstinence and in preyere;
Looketh the Bible and ther ye may it leere.
Looke Attilla, the grete conquerour,
Deyde in his sleepe, with shame and dishonour, 580
Bledynge ay at his nose in dronkenesse.

A capitayn sholde lyve in sobrenesse.

And over al this, avyseth yow right wel
 What was comaunded unto Lamuel — 584
 Nat Samuel, but Lamuel, seye I;
 Redeth the Bible and fynde it expresly —
 Of wyn-yevyng to hem that han justise.
 Namooore of this, for it may wel suffice. 588

And now that I have spoken of glotonye,
 Now wol I yow deffenden hasardrye.

Hasard is verray mooder of lesynges,
 And of deceite and cursed forswerynges, 592
 Blasphemying of Crist, manslaughter, and wast also
 Of catel and of tyme; and forthermo,
 It is repreeve and contrarie of honour
 For to ben holde a commune hasardour. 596
 And ever the hyer he is of estaat,
 The moorë is he holden desolaat.
 If that a pryncë useth hasardrye,
 In alle governance and policye 600
 He is, as by commune opinion,
 Yholde the lasse in reputacion.

Stilbon, that was a wys embassadour,
 Was sent to Corynthe in ful greet honour 604
 Fro Lacidomye, to maken hire alliaunce.
 And whan he cam, hym happede par chaunce
 That alle the gretteste that were of that lond
 Pleyynge atte hasard he hem fond; 608
 For which, as soonë as it myghte be,
 He stal hym hoom agayn to his contree,
 And seyde: 'Ther wol I nat lese my name,
 Ne I wol nat take on me so greet defame 612
 Yow for to allie unto none hasardours;
 Sendeth othere wise embassadours;
 For by my trouthe, me were levere dye
 Than I yow sholde to hasardours allye; 616
 For ye that been so glorious in honours
 Shul nat allyen yow with hasardours,
 As by my wyl, ne as by my tretee.'
 This wise philosophre, thus seyde hee. 620

Looke eek that to the kyng Demetrius
 The kyng of Parthes, as the book seith us,
 Sente him a paire of dees of gold in scorn
 For he hadde used hasard ther-biforn; 624
 For which he heeld his glorie or his renoun
 At no value or reputacioun.
 Lordes may fynden oother maner pley
 Honeste ynough to dryve the day away. 628
 Now wol I speke of othes false and grete
 A word or two, as olde bookes trete.
 Gret sweryng is a thyng abhominable,
 And fals sweryng is yet moore reprevable. 632
 The heighe God forbad sweryng at al —
 Witnesse on Mathew; but in special
 Of sweryng seith the hooly Jeremye,
 'Thou shalt seye sooth thyne othes, and nat lye, 636
 And swere in doom, and eek in rightwisnesse.'
 But ydel sweryng is a cursednesse.
 Bihoold and se that in the firste table
 Of heighe Goddes heestes honorable 640
 Hou that the seconde heeste of hym is this:
 'Take nat my name in ydel or amys.'
 Lo, rather he forbedeth swich sweryng
 Than homycide or any cursed thyng. 644
 I seye that as by ordre thus it stondeth.
 This knowen, that hise heestes understondeth,
 How that the seconde heeste of God is that.
 And forther-over, I wol thee telle al plat 648
 That vengeance shal nat parten from his hous
 That of hise othes is to outrageous: —
 'By Goddes precious herte,' and 'By His nayles,'
 And 'By the blood of Crist that is in Hayles, 652
 Sevene is my chaunce and thyn is cynk and treye!'
 'By Goddes armes, if thou falsly pleye,
 This daggere shal thurghout thyn herte go!' —
 This fruyt cometh of the bicched bones two: 656
 Forsweryng, ire, falsnesse, homycide.
 Now for the love of Crist, that for us dyde,
 Lete youre othes, bothe grete and smale!

But sires, now wol I telle forth my tale. 660
Thise riotours thre of whiche I telle,
Longe erst er prime rong of any belle,
Were set hem in a taverne for to drynke.
And as they sat, they herde a belle clynke 664
Biform a cors was caried to his grave.
That oon of hem gan callen to his knave;
'Go bet,' quod he, 'and axe redily
What cors is this that passeth heer forby; 668
And looke that thou reporte his name weel.'
'Sire,' quod this boy, 'it nedeth nevera~~de~~del;
It was me toold er ye cam heer two houres.
He was, pardee, an old felawe of youres; 672
And sodeynly he was yslayn tonyght,
Fordronke, as he sat on his bench upright.
Ther cam a privee thief men clepeth deeth,
That in this ctree al the peple sleeth, 676
And with his spere he smoot his herte atwo,
And wente his wey, withouten wordes mo.
He hath a thousand slayn this pestilence.
And, maister, er ye come in his presence, 680
Me thynketh that it were necessarie
For to be war of swich an adversarie.
Beth redy for to meete hym everemoore!
Thus taughte me my dame; I sey namoore.' 684
'By Seinte Marie,' seyde this taverner,
'The child seith sooth; for he hath slayn this yeer,
Henne over a mile, withinne a greet village,
Bothe man and womman, child, and hyne, and page; 688
I trowe his habitacion be there.
To been avysed greet wysdom it were,
Er that he dide a man a dishonour.'
'Ye, Goddes armes!' quod this riotour, 692
Is it swich peril with hym for to meete?
I shal hym seke by wey and eek by strete,
I make avow to Goddes digne bones!
Herkneth, felawes! we thre been al ones. 696
Lat ech of us holde up his hand til oother,
And ech of us bicomen otheres brother;

And we wol sleen this false traytour deeth.
He shal be slayn which that so many sleeth,
By Goddes dignitee, er it be nyght!

Togidres han thise thre hir trouthes plight
To lyve and dyen, ech of hem for oother,
As though he were his owene yboren brother.
And up they stirte, al dronken in this rage;
And forth they goon towardses that village
Of which the taverner hadde spoke biforn.

And many a grisly ooth thanne han they sworn,
And Cristes blessed body they to-rente —
Deeth shal be deed if that they may hym hente!

Whan they han goon nat fully half a mile,
Right as they wolde han troden over a stile,
An oold man and a poure with hem mette.
This olde man ful mekely hem grette,
And seyde thus: 'Now, lordes, God yow see!'

The proudeste of thise riotours three
Answerde agayn: 'What! carl, with sory grace!
Why artow al forwrapped save thy face?
Why lyvestow so longe in so greet age?'

This olde man gan looke in his visage,
And seyde thus: 'For I ne kan nat fynde
A man, though that I walked into Ynde,
Neither in citee, nor in no village,
That wolde chaunge his youthe for myn age;
And therfore moot I han myn age stille
As longe tyme as it is Goddes wille.

'Ne Deeth, allas, ne wol nat han my lyf!
Thus walke I, lyk a resteleees kaityf,
And on the ground, which is my moodres gate,
I knokke with my staf bothe erly and late.
And seye, "Leeve mooder, leet me in!

Lo, how I vanysshe, flessh, and blood, and skyn!
Allas! whan shul my bones been at reste?
Mooder, with yow wolde I chaunge my cheste,
That in my chambre longe tyme hath be,
Ye, for an heyre clowt to wrappe me."

But yet to me she wol nat do that grace;

For which ful pale and welked is my face.

'But, sires, to yow it is no curteisye

To speken to an old man vileynye,

740

But he trespassse in word or elles in dede.

In Hooly Writ ye may yourself wel rede:

"Agayns an oold man, hoor upon his heed,

Ye sholde arise"; wherfore I yeve yow reed,

744

Ne dooth unto an oold man noon harm now,

Namoore than that ye wolde men did to yow

In agē, if that ye so longe abyde.

And God be with yow, where ye go or ryde!

748

I moote go thider as I have to go.'

'Nay, olde cherl, by God thou shalt nat so!'

Seyde this oother hasardour anon;

'Thou partest nat so lightly, by Seint John!

752

Thou spak right now of thilke traytour Deeth,

That in this contree alle oure freendes sleeth.

Have heer my trouthe, as thou art his espye!

Telle where he is, or thou shalt it abyde,

756

By God and by the hooly sacrement!

For soothly, thou art oon of his assent

To sleen us yonge folk, thou false theef!'

'Now, sires,' quod he, 'if that ye be so leef

760

To fynde Deeth, turne up this croked wey;

For in that grove I lafte hym, by my fey,

Under a tree; and there he wole abyde;

Noght for youre boost he wole him no thyng hyde.

764

Se ye that ook? Right there ye shal hym fynde.

God save yow that boghte agayn mankynde,

And yow amende!' thus seyde this olde man.

And everich of these riotoures ran 768

Til he cam to that tree, and ther they founde

Of floryns fyne of gold ycoyned rounde

Wel ny an eighte busshels, as hem thoughte.

No lenger thannē after Deeth they soughte,

772

But ech of hem so glad was of that sighte,

For that the floryns been so faire and brighte,

That doun they sette hem by this precious hoord.

The worste of hem, he spak the firste word.

776

‘Bretheren,’ quod he, ‘taak keep what I seye;
My wit is greet, though that I bourde and pleye.
This tresor hath Fortune unto us yeven,
In myrthe and joliftee oure lyf to lyven; 780
And lightly as it comth so wol we spende.
Ey, Goddes precious dignitee! who wende
Today that we sholde han so fair a grace?
But myghte this gold be caried fro this place 784
Hoom to myn hous, or elles unto youres —
For wel ye woot that al this gold is oures —
Thanne were we in heigh felicitee.
But trewely, by daye it may nat bee; 788
Men wolde seyn that we were theves stronge,
And for oure owene tresor doon us honge.
This tresor moste ycaried be by nyghte
As wisely and as slyly as it myghte. 792
Wherfore I rede that cut among us alle
Be drawe, and lat se wher the cut wol falle;
And he that hath the cut with herte blithe
Shal renne to the towne, and that ful swithe, 796
And brynge us breed and wyn ful prively;
And two of us shul kepen subtilly
This tresor wel; and if he wol nat tarie,
Whan it is nyght we wol this tresor carie, 800
By oon assent, where-as us thynketh best.’
That oon of hem the cut broghte in his fest,
And bad hem drawe, and looke where it wol falle.
And it fil on the yongeste of hem alle, 804
And forth toward the toun he wente anon.
And al so soonē as that he was gon,
That oon of hem spak thus unto that oother:
‘Thow knowest wel thou art my sworn brother; 808
Thy profit wol I telle thee anon.
Thou woost wel that oure felawe is agon;
And heere is gold, and that ful greet plentee,
That shal departed been among us thre; 812
But nathelees if I kan shape it so
That it departed were among us two,
Hadde I nat doon a freendes torn to thee?’

That oother answerde: 'I noot hou that may be; 816
 He woot how that the gold is with us tweye.
 What shal we doon? what shal we to hym seye?'
 'Shal it be conseil?' seyde the firste shrewe,
 'And I shal tellen in a wordes fewe 820
 What we shal doon and bryngen it wel about?'
 'I graunte,' quod that oother, 'out of doute,
 That, by my trouthe, I shal thee nat biwreye.'
 'Now,' quod the firste, 'thou woost wel we be tweye; 824
 And two of us shul strenger be than oon.
 Look-whan that he is set, that right anoon
 Arys as though thou woldest with hym pleye,
 And I shal ryve hym thurgh the sydes tweye 828
 Whil that thou strogelest with hym as in game;
 And with thy daggere looke thou do the same.
 And thanne shal al this gold departed be,
 My deere freend, bitwixen me and thee. 832
 Thanne may we bothe oure lustes all fulfille,
 And pleye at dees right at oure owene wille.'
 And thus acorded been thise shrewes tweye
 To sleen the thridde, as ye han herd me seye. 836
 This yongeste, which that wente unto the toun,
 Ful ofte in herte he rolleth up and doun
 The beautee of thise floryns newe and brighte.
 'O Lord,' quod he, 'if so were that I myghte 840
 Have al this tresor to myself allone,
 Ther is no man that lyveth under the trone
 Of God that sholde lyve so murye as I!
 And atte laste the feend oure enemy 844
 Putte in his thought that he sholde poyson beye,
 With which he myghte sleen hise felawes tweye;
 For-why the feend foond hym in swich lyvyng
 That he hadde leve hym to sorwe brynge; 848
 For this was outrelly his fulle entente
 To sleen hem bothe and nevere to repente.
 And forth he gooth — no lenger wolde he tarie —
 Into the toun unto a apothecarie, 852
 And preydē hym that he hym wolde selle
 Som poyson, that he myghte hise rattes quelle;

And eek ther was a polcat in his hawe
That, as he seyde, hise capons hadde yslawe; 856
And fayn he wolde wreke hym, if he myghte,
On vermyn that destroyed hym by nyghte.

The pothecarie answerde: 'And thou shalt have
A thyng that, al so God my soule save, 860
In al this world ther is no creature
That eten or dronken hath of this confiture
Noght but the montance of a corn of whete
That he ne shal his lif anon forlete — 864
Ye, sterve he shal, and that in lasse while
Than thou wolt goon a-paas nat but a mile,
This poyson is so strong and violent.'

This cursed man hath in his hond yhent 868
This poyson in a box, and sith he ran
Into the nexte strete unto a man
And borwed of hym large botels thre.
And in the two his poyson poured he; 872
The thridde he kepte clene for his owene drynke,
For al the nyght he shoope hym for to swynke
In carynge of the gold out of that place.
And whan this riotour — with sory grace! — 876
Hadde filled with wyn hise grete botels thre,
To hise felawes agayn repaireth he.

What nedeth it to sermone of it moore?
For right as they hadde cast his deeth bifoore, 880
Right so they han hym slayn, and that anon.

And whan that this was doon, thus spak that oon
'Now lat us sitte and drynke, and make us merie,
And afterward we wol his body berie.' 884

And with that word it happed hym par cas
To take the botel ther the poyson was,
And drank, and yaf his felawe drynke also;
For which anon they storven bothe two. 888

But certes, I suppose that Avycen
Wroot nevere in no canon ne in no fen
Mo wonder signes of empoisonyng
Than hadde thise wrecches two er hir endyng. 892

Thus ended been thise homycides two,

And eek the false empoysonere also.

O cursed synne, of alle cursednesse!
O traytours homycide! O wikkednesse! 896

O glotonye, luxurie, and hasardrye!
Thou blasphemour of Crist with vileynye
And othes grete, of usage and of pride!
Allas, mankyndē! how may it bitide 900

That to thy creâtour, which that the wroghte,
And with his precious herte-blood thee boghte,
Thou art so fals and so unkynde, alas?
Now, goode men, God foryeve yow youre trespass! 904

And ware yow fro the synne of avarice!
Myn hooly pardon may yow alle warice,
So that ye offre nobles, or sterlynges,
Or elles silver broches, spoones, rynges. 908

Boweth youre heed under this hooly bulle.
Com up, ye wyves; offreth of youre woile!
Youre names I entre heer in my rolle anon;
In-to the blisse of hevene shul ye gon. 912

I yow assoille by myn heigh power —
Yow that wol offre — as clene and eek as cleer
As ye were born.

And lo, sires, thus I preche.
And Jesu Crist, that is oure soules leche, 916
So graunte yow his pardon to receyve,
For that is best; I wol yow nat deceyve.

But, sires, o word forgat I in my tale:
I have relikes and pardon in my male 920
As faire as any man in Engeland,
Whiche were me yeven by the popes hond.
If any of yow wole, of devocion,
Offren, and han myn absolucion, 924

Com forth anon, and kneleth heere adoun,
And mekely receyveth my pardoun;
Or elles taketh pardon as ye wende,
Al newe and fressh at every miles ende, 928
So that ye offren alwey newe and newe
Nobles or pens whiche that be goode and trewe.

It is an honour to everich that is heer
 That ye mowe have a suffisant pardoneer 932
 Tassoille yow, in contree as ye ryde,
 For adventures whiche that may bityde.

Paraventure ther may fallen oon or two
 Doun of his hors and breke his nekke atwo. 936

Looke which a seuretee is it to yow alle
 That I am in youre felaweshipe yfalle,
 That may assoille yow, bothe moore and lasse,
 Whan that the soule shal fro the body passe. 940
 I rede that oure hoost heere shal bigynne,
 For he is moost enveloped in synne.

Com forth, sire hoost, and offre first anon,
 And thou shalt kisse my relikes everychon — 944
 Ye, for a grote. Unbokele anon thy purs!

‘Nay, nay,’ quod he ‘thanne have I Cristes curs!
 Lat be’; quod he, ‘it shal nat be, so theech.
 Thou woldest make me kisse thyn olde breech, 948
 And swere it were a relyk of a seint.’

This Pardoner answerde nat a word;
 So wrooth he was, no word ne wolde he seye. 956

‘Now,’ quod oure Hoost, ‘I wol no lenger pleye
 With thee, ne with noon oother angry man.’

But right anon the worthy Knyght bigan, 960
 Whan that he saugh that al the peple lough:
 ‘Namooore of this, for it is right ynough!

Sire Pardoner, be glad and myrie of cheere,
 And ye, sir Hoost, that been to me so deere, 964
 I prey yow that ye kisse the Pardoner;
 And, Pardoner, I prey thee drawe thee neer,
 And as we diden, lat us laughe and pleye.’

Anon they kiste, and ryden forth hir weye. 968

Heere is ended the Pardoners Tale

[FRAGMENT VII (GROUP B²)
THE SHIPMAN'S TALE]

Heere bigynneth the Shipmannes Tale.

[The plot of the Shipman's Tale is similar to that of the first novel of the eighth day of Boccaccio's Decamerone. It involves the swindling of a rich merchant by a monk, through an intrigue of the monk with the merchant's wife.]

Bihoold the murie wordes of the Hoost to the Shipman and to the lady Prioressse.

'Wel seyde, by corpus dominus!' quod our Hoost;
'Now longe moote thou saille by the cost,
Sire gentil maister, gentil maryneer!
God yeve this monk a thousand last quade yeer! 1628
A ha, felawes! beth ware of swiche a jape!
The monk putte in the mannes hood an ape,
And in his wyves eek, by Seint Austyn.
Draweth no monkes moore unto youre in! 1632
But now passe over, and lat us seke aboute
Who shal now telle first of al this route
Another tale.' And with that word, he sayde,
As curteisly as it had ben a mayde: 1636
'My lady Prioressse, by youre leve,
So that I wiste I sholde yow nat greve,
I wolde demen that ye tellen sholde
A tale next, if so were that ye wolde. 1640
Now wol ye vouche sauf, my lady deere?'
'Gladly,' quod she; and seyde as ye shal heere.

Explicit.

The prologe of the Prioresses Tale.

Domine dominus noster.

O Lord oure Lord, thy name how merveillous
Is in this large world ysprad! — quod she —
For noght oonly thy laude precious

THE PROLOGE OF THE PRIORESSE 423

Parfourned is by men of dignitee, 1646
 But by the mouth of children thy bountee
 Parfourned is; for on the brest soukyng
 Somtyme shewen they thyn heriyng. 1649

Wherfore in laude, as I best kan or may,
 Of thee and of the whyte Lylve Flour
 Which that the bar and is a mayde alway,
 To telle a storie I wol do my labour — 1653
 Nat that I may encreessen hir honour;
 For she herself is honour and the roote
 Of bountee, next hir sone, and soules boote. 1656

O mooder Mayde! O mayde Mooder fre!
 O Bussh unbrent, brennyng in Moyses sighte,
 That ravysedest down fro the Deitee,
 Thurgh thyn humblesse, the Goost that in thalighte; 1660
 Of whos vertu, whan he thyn herte lighte,
 Conceyved was the Fadres sapience —
 Helpe me to telle it in thy reverence! 1663

Lady, thy bountee, thy magnificence,
 Thy vertu, and thy grete humylitee,
 Ther may no tonge expresse in no science;
 For somtyme, Lady, er men praye to thee, 1667
 Thou goost biforn, of thy benyngnytee,
 And getest us the lyght, thurgh thy preyere,
 To gyden us unto thy sone so deere. 1670

My konnyng is so wayk, O blisful Queene,
 For to declare thy grete worthynesse
 That I ne may the weichte nat susteene;
 But as a child of twelf monthe oold or lesse, 1674
 That kan unnethē any word expresse,
 Right so fare I; and therfore I yow preye,
 Gydeth my song that I shal of yow seye. 1677

Explicit.

Heere bigynneth the Prioresses Tale.

- Ther was in Asye in a greet citee
 Amonges Cristene folk, a Jewerye, Sustened by a lord of that contree 1680
 For foule usure and lucre of vileynye,
 Hateful to Crist and to his compaignye;
 And thurgh the strete men myghte ride or wende,
 For it was free and open at eyther ende. 1684
- A litel scole of Cristen folk ther stood Doun at the ferther ende, in which ther were Children an heepe, ycomen of Cristen blood,
 That lerned in that scole yeer by yeer 1688
 Swich manere doctrine as men used there;
 This is to seyn, to synge and to rede,
 As smale children doon in hire childhede. 1691
- Among thise children was a wydwe sone,
 A litel clergeon, seven yeer of age,
 That day by day to scole was his wone;
 And eek also, where-as he saugh thymage 1695
 Of Cristes mooder, he hadde in usage,
 As hym was taught, to knele adoun and seye
 His Ave Marie, as he goth by the weye. 1698
- Thus hath this wydwe hir litel sone ytaught
 Oure blisful Lady, Cristes mooder deere
 To worshipec ay; and he forgate it naught,
 For sely child wol alday soone leere. 1702
 But ay whan I remembre on this mateere,
 Seint Nicholas stant evere in my presence,
 For he so yong to Crist dide reverence. 1705
- This litel child his litel book lernynge,
 As he sat in the scole at his prymer,
 He Alma Redemptoris herde synge,
 As children lerned hire antiphoner. 1709
 And as he dorste, he drough hym ner and ner,
 And herkned ay the wordes and the noote,
 Til he the firste vers koude al by rote. 1712

Noght wiste he what this Latyn was to seye,
 For he so yong and tendre was of age;
 But on a day his felawe gan he preye
 Texpounden hym this song in his langage 1716
 Or telle hym why this song was in usage.
 This preyde he hym to construe and declare
 Ful often tyme upon hise knowes bare. 1719

His felawe, which that elder was than he,
 Answerde hym thus: 'This song, I have herd seye,
 Was maked of oure blisful Lady free,
 Hire to salue, and eek hire for to preye 1723
 To been oure help and socour whan we deye.
 I kan namoore expounde in this mateere;
 I lerne song, I kan but smal grammeere.' 1726

'And is this song maked in reverence
 Of Cristes mooder?' seyde this innocent.
 'Now certes I wol do my diligence
 To konne it al er Cristemasse is went; 1730
 Though that I for my prymer shal be shent,
 And shal be beten thries in an houre,
 I wol it konne Oure Lady for to honoure.' 1733

His felawe taughte hym homward prively,
 Fro day to day, til he koude it by rote;
 And thanne he song it wel and boldely
 Fro word to word, acordynge with the note. 1737
 Twies a day it passed thurgh his throte,
 To scole ward and homward whan he wente —
 On Cristes mooder set was his entente. 1740

As I have seyde, thurghout the Juërie
 This litel child, as he cam to and fro,
 Ful murily than wolde he synge and crie
O alma Redemptoris everemo. 1744
 The swetnesse hath his herte perced so
 Of Cristes mooder that, to hire to preye,
 He kan nat stynte of syngyng by the weye. 1747

Oure firste foo, the serpent Sathanas,
 That hath in Juës herte his waspes nest,
 Up swal, and seide: 'O Hebrayk peple, allas!
 Is this to yow a thyng that is honest,
 That swich a boy shal walken as hym lest
 In youre despit, and synge of swich sentence
 Which is agayn oure lawes reverence?' 1751
 1754

Fro thennes forth the Juës han conspired
 This innocent out of this world to chace.
 An homycide therto han they hyred,
 That in an aleye hadde a privee place. 1758
 And as the child gan forby for to pace,
 This cursed Jew hym hente and heeld hym faste,
 And kitte his throte, and in a pit hym caste. 1761

O martir sowded to virginitee!
 Now maystow syngen, folwyng evere in oon,
 The white Lamb celestial — quod she —
 Of which the grete evaungelist, Seint John, 1772
 In Pathmos wroot, which seith that they that goon
 Biforn this Lamb and synge a song al newe,
 That nevere fleshly wommen they ne knewe. 1775

This poure wydwe awaiteth al that nyght
 After hir litel child, but he cam noght;
 For which, as soone as it was dayes lyght,
 With face pale of drede and bisy thoght, 1779
 She hath at scole and elleswhere hym soght,
 Til finally she gan so fer espie
 That he last seyn was in the Juërie. 1782

With moodres pitee in hir brest enclosed,
 She gooth, as she were half out of hir mynde,
 To every place where she hath supposed
 By liklihede hir litel child to fynde; 1786
 And evere on Cristes mooder meeke and kynde
 She cride; and atte laste thus she wroghte,
 Among the cursed Juës she hym soghte. 1789

She frayneth and she preyeth pitously
 To every Jew that dwelte in thilke place
 To telle hire if hir child wente oght forby.
 They seyde 'nay'; but Jesu, of his grace,
 Yaf in hir thoght, inwith a litel space,
 That in that place after hir sone she cryde
 Where he was casten in a pit bisyde.

1793

1796

O grete God, that parfournest thy laude
 By mouth of innocentz, lo, heere thy myght!
 This gemme of chastite, this emeraude,
 And eek of martirdom the ruby bright,
 Ther he with throte ykorven lay upright,
 He Alma Redemptoris gan to synge
 So loude that al the place gan to ryng.

1800

1803

The Cristene folk that thurgh the strete wente
 In coomen for to wondre upon this thyng,
 And hastily they for the provost sente.
 He cam anon withouten taryng,
 And herieth Crist that is of hevene kyng,
 And eek his mooder, honour of mankynde;
 And after that the Jewes leet he bynde.

1807

1810

This child with pitous lamentacion
 Up-taken was, syngynge his song alway;
 And with honour of greet procession
 They carien hym unto the nexte abbay.
 His mooder swownynge by his beere lay;
 Unnethe myghte the peple that was there
 This newe Rachel brynge fro his beere.

1814

1817

With torment and with shameful deeth echon,
 This provost dooth the Jewes for to sterve
 That of this mordre wiste, and that anon;
 He nolde no swich cursednesse observe.
 'Yvele shal he have that yvele wol deserve!'
 Therefore with wilde hors he dide hem drawe,
 And after that he heng hem by the lawe.

1821

1824

Upon this beere ay lith this innocent
 Biforn the chief auter, whil masse laste;
 And after that the abbot with his covent
 Han sped hem for to burien hym ful faste. 1828
 And whan they hooly water on hym caste,
 Yet spak this child, whan spreynd was hooly water,
 And song O alma Redemptoris mater. 1831

This abbot, which that was an hooly man,
 As monkes been — or elles oghte be —
 This yonge child to conjure he bigan,
 And seyde, 'O deere child, I halsen thee, 1835
 In vertu of the Hooly Trinitee:
 Tel me what is thy cause for to synge,
 Sith that thy throte is kut, to my semynge.' 1838

'My throte is kut unto my nekke boon,'
 Seyde this child, 'and as by wey of kynde,
 I sholde have dyed, ye, longe tyme agon,
 But Jesu Crist, as ye in bookes fynde, 1842
 Wil that his glorie laste and be in mynde;
 And for the worship of his Mooder deere
 Yet may I synge O alma loude and cleere. 1845

'This welle of mercy, Cristes mooder sweete,
 I loved alwey, as after my konnynge,
 And whan that I my lyf sholde forlete,
 To me she cam, and bad me for to synge 1849
 This anthephen verrailly in my deyynge,
 As ye han herd; and whan that I hadde songe,
 Me thoughte she leyde a greyn upon my tonge. 1852

'Wherefore I synge; and synge I moot, certeyn,
 In honour of that blisful Mayden free,
 Til fro my tonge of-taken is the greyn.
 And afterward thus seyde she to me: 1856
 "My litel child, now wol I fecche thee,
 Whan that the greyn is fro thy tonge ytake.
 Be nat agast; I wol thee nat forsake.'" 1859

This hooly monk — this abbot, hym meene I —
 His tonge out caughte, and took away the greyn;
 And he yaf up the goost ful softly.
 And whan this abbot hadde this wonder seyn, 1863
 Hise salte teeris triked down as reyn,
 And gruf he fil, al plat upon the grounde;
 And stille he lay, as he had leyn ybounde. 1866

The covent eek lay on the pavement,
 Wepyng, and heryen Cristes mooder deere.
 And after that they ryse and forth been went,
 And tooken away this martir from his beere, 1870
 And in a temple of marbul stones cleere
 Enclosen they his litel body sweete.
 Ther he is now, God leve us for to meete! 1873

O yonge Hugh of Lyncoln — slayn also
 With cursed Jewes, as it is notable,
 For it is but a litel while ago —
 Preye eek for us, we synful folk unstable, 1877
 That, of his mercy, God so merciable
 On us his grete mercy multiplie
 For reverence of his mooder, Marie! Amen 1880

Heere is ended the Prioresses Tale.

Bihoold the murye wordes of the Hoost to Chaucer.

Whan seyde was al this miracle, every man
 As sobre was that wonder was to se,
 Til that oure Hooste jopen tho bigan;
 And thanne at erst he looked upon me, 1884
 And seyde thus: 'What man artow?' quod he.
 'Thou lookest as thou woldest fynde an hare,
 For evere upon the ground I se thee stare. 1887

'Approche neer, and looke up murily.
 Now war yow, sires, and lat this man have place!
 He in the waast is shape as wel as I;
 This were a popet in an arm tenbrace 1891

For any womman smal and fair of face.
 He semeth elvyssh by his contenance,
 For unto no wight dooth he daliance. 1894

'Sey now somewhat, syn oother folk han sayd.
 Telle us a tale of myrthe, and that anon!'
 'Hooste,' quod I, 'ne beth nat yvele apayd,
 For oother tale certes kan I noon 1898
 But of a rym I lerned longe agoon.'
 'Ye, that is good,' quod he. 'Now shul we heere
 Som deyntee thyng, me thynketh by his cheere.' 1901

Heere bigynneth Chaucers Tale of Thopas.

[The First Fit.]

Listeth, lordes, in good entent.
 And I wol telle verrayment
 Of myrthe and of solas — 1904
 Al of a knyght was fair and gent
 In bataille and in tourneyment;
 His name was Sire Thopas. 1907

Yborn he was in fer contree,
 In Flaundres, al biyonde the see,
 At Poperyng, in the place. 1910
 His fader was a man ful free,
 And lord he was of that contree,
 As it was Goddes grace. 1913

Sire Thopas wax a doghty swayn;
 Whit was his face as payndemayn,
 Hise lippes rede as rose; 1916
 His rode is lyk scarlet in grayn,
 And I yow telle in good certayn
 He hadde a semely nose. 1910

His heer, his berd, was lyk saffroun,
 That to his girdel raughte adoun;
 Hise shoos of cordewane; 1922

Of Brugges were his hosen broun;

His robe was of syklatoun

That coste many a jane.

1925

He koude hunte at wilde deer,

And ride an haukyng for river

With grey goshawk on honde;

1928

Therto he was a good archeer;

Of wrastlyng was ther noon his peer

Ther any ram shal stonde.

1931

Ful many a mayde, bright in bour,

They moorne for hym paramour,

Whan hem were bet to slepe;

1934

But he was chaast and no lechour,

And sweete as is the brembul flour

That bereth the rede hepe.

1937

And so bifel upon a day,

For sothe, as I yow telle may,

Sire Thopas wolde out ride.

1940

He worth upon his steede gray,

And in his hand a launcegay,

A long swerd by his side.

1943

He priketh thurgh a fair forest,

Therinne is many a wilde best —

Ye, bothe bukke and hare.

1946

And as he priketh north and est,

I telle it yow, hym hadde almest

Bitidde a sory care.

1949

Ther spryngen herbes grete and smale:

The lycorys, and cetewale,

And many a clowe gylofre,

1952

And notemuge to putte in ale,

Wheither it be moyste or stale,

Or for to leye in cofre.

1955

The briddes synge, it is no nay,
 The sparhawk and the papejay,
 That joye it was to heere; 1958
 The thrustelcok made eek hir lay;
 The wodedowve upon a spray,
 She sang ful loude and cleere. 1961

Sire Thopas fil in love longynge
 Al whan he herde the thrustel synge,
 And pryked as he were wood. 1964
 His faire steede in his prikyng
 So swatte that men myghte him wrynge,
 His sydes were al blood. 1967

Sire Thopas eek so wery was
 For prikyng on the softe gras —
 So fiers was his corage — 1970
 That doun he leyde him in that plas
 To make his steede som solas,
 And yaf hym good forage. 1973

‘O Seinte Marie, benedicite!
 What eyleth this love at me,
 To bynde me so soore? 1976
 Me dremed al this nyght, pardee,
 An elf queene shal my lemman be
 And slepe under my goore. 1979

‘An elf queene wol I love, ywis;
 For in this world no womman is Worthy to be my make, 1982
 In towne.
 Alle othere wommen I forsake,
 And to an elf queene I me take,
 By dale and eek by downe.’ 1986

Into his sadel he clamb anon,
 And priketh over stile and stoon,
 An elf queene for tespye, 1989

Til he so longe hadde riden and goon

That he foond in a pryve woon

The contree of Fairye

so wilde —

1992

For in that contree was ther noon

[That to him durste ryde or goon,]

Neither wyf ne childe —

1996

Til that ther cam a greet geaunt —

His name was sire Olifaunt,

A perilous man of dede.

1999

He seyde, 'Child, by Termagaunt!

But-if thou prike out of myn haunt,

Anon I sle thy steede

with mace!

2002

Heere is the queene of Fairye,

With harpe, and pipe, and symphonye,

Dwellynge in this place.'

2006

The child seyde, 'Al so moote I thee,

Tomorwe wol I meete with thee

Whan I have myn armoure;

2009

And yet I hope, par ma fay!

That thou shalt with this launcegay

Abyen it ful sowre.

2012

Thy mawe

Shal I percen if I may

Er it be fully pryme of day;

For heere thow shalt be slawe.'

2016

Sire Thopas drow abak ful faste;

This geant at hym stones caste

Out of a fel staf slynge,

2019

But faire escapeth sire Thopas;

And al it was thurgh Goddes gras,

And thurgh his fair berynge.

2022

Yet listeth, lordes, to my tale;

Murier than the nightyngale,

I wol yow rowne

2025

How sir Thopas with sydes smale,
 Prikyng over hill and dale,
 Is comen agayn to towne. 2028

His murie men comanded he
 To make hym bothe game and glee,
 For nedes moste he fighte 2031
 With a geaunt with hevedes three
 For paramour and jolitee
 Of oon that shoon ful brighte. 2034

'Do come,' he seyde, 'my mynstrales,
 And geestours for to tellen tales,
 Anon in myn armynge, 2037
 Of romances that been roiales,
 Of popes, and of cardinales,
 And eek of love-likynge.' 2040

They fette hym first sweete wyn,
 And mede eek in a mazelyn,
 And roial spicerye, 2043
 And gyngebreed that was ful fyn,
 And lycorys, and eek comyn,
 With sugre, that is so trye. 2046

He dide next his white leere,
 Of clooth of lake fyn and cleere,
 A breech and eek a sherte; 2049
 And next his sherte an aketon;
 And over that an haubergeon,
 For Percyng of his herte; 2052

And over that a fyn hawberk,
 Was al ywroght of Jewes werk —
 Ful strong it was of plate; 2055
 And over that his cote-armour
 As whit as is a lilye flour,
 In which he wol debate. 2058

His sheeld was al of gold so reed;
And therinne was a bores heed,
 A charbocle bisyde; 2061
And there he swoor on ale and breed
How that the geaunt shal be deed,
 Bityde what bityde! 2064

Hise jambeux were of quyrboilly;
His swerdes shethe of yvory;
 His helm of laton bright; 2067
His sadel was of rewel boon;
His brydel as the sonne shoon —
 Or as the moone light. 2070

His spere it was of fyn ciprees,
That bodeth werre and no thyng pees,
 The heed ful sharpe ygrounde. 2073
His steede was al dappull gray;
It gooth an ambil in the way
 Ful softly and rounde 2076
 In londe.
Loo, lordes myne, heere is a fit.
If ye wol any moore of it,
 To telle it wol I fonde. 2080

[The Second Fit.]

Now holde youre mouth, par charitee,
Bothe knyght and lady free,
 And herkneth to my spelle! 2083
Of batailles and of chivalry,
And of ladyes love-drury
 Anon I wol yow telle. 2086

Men speken of romances of prys —
Of Horn Child, and of Ypotys,
 Of Beves, and of Sir Gy, 2089
Of Sir Lybeux, and Pleyndamour,
But Sir Thopas, he bereth the flour
 Of roial chivalry. 2092

His goode steede al he bistrood,
 And forth upon his wey he glood
 As sparcle out of the bronde. 2095
 Upon his creest he bar a tour,
 And therinne stiked a lilie flour —
 God shilde his cors fro shonde! 2098

And for he was a knyght auntrous,
 He nolde slepen in noon hous,
 But ligen in his hoode. 2101
 His brighte helm was his wonger,
 And by hym baiteth his dextrer
 Of herbes fyne and goode. 2104

Hymself drank water of the well,
 As dide the knyght sire Percyvell
 So worly under wede,
 Til on a day — 2108

Heere the Hoost stynteth Chaucer of his Tale of Thopas.

‘Na moore of this, for Goddes dignitee!’
 Quod oure Hooste, ‘for thou makest me
 So wery of thy verray lewednesse
 That, also wisly God my soule blesse, 2112
 Min eres aken of thy drasty speche.
 Now swich a rym the devel I biteche!
 This may wel be rym dogerel,’ quod he.
 ‘Why so?’ quod I; ‘why wiltow lette me 2116
 Moore of my tale than another man,
 Syn that it is the beste tale I kan?’ 2118
 ‘Thou doost noght elles but despendest tyme. 2121
 Sire; at o word, thou shalt no lenger ryme.
 Lat se wher thou kanst tellen aught in geeste,
 Or telle in prose somewhat, at the leeste, 2124
 In which ther be som murthe or som doctryne.’
 ‘Gladly,’ quod I, ‘by Goddes sweete pyne!
 I wol yow telle a litel thyng in prose

That oghte liken yow, as I suppose, 2128
 Or elles, certes, ye been to daungerous.
 It is a moral tale vertuuous,
 Al be it told somtyme in sondry wyse
 Of sondry folk, as I shal yow devyse — 2132
 As thus: ye woot that every Evaungelist
 That telleth us the peyne of Jesu Crist
 Ne seith nat alle thyng as his felawe dooth;
 But nathelees hir sentence is al sooth; 2136
 And alle acorden as in hire sentence,
 Al be ther in hir tellyng difference;
 For somme of hem seyn moore, and somme seyn lesse,
 Whan they his pitous passioun expresse — 2140
 I meene of Mark, Mathew, Luc, and John —
 But doutelees hir sentence is all oon.
 Therefore, lordynges alle, I yow biseche,
 If that yow thynke I varie as in my speche — 2144
 As thus: though that I telle somewhat moore
 Of proverbes than ye han herd bifoore
 Comprehended in this litel tretys heere,
 To enforce with theeffect of my mateere, 2148
 And though I nat the same wordes seye
 As ye han herd — yet to yow alle I preye,
 Blameth me nat; for as in my sentence
 Shul ye nowher fynden difference 2152
 Fro the sentence of this tretys lyte
 After the which this murye tale I write;
 And therfore herkneth what that I shal seye,
 And lat me tellen al my tale, I preye. 2156

Heere bigynneth Chaucers Tale of Melibee.

A yong man called Melibeus, myghty and riche, bigat upon his wyf, that called was Prudence, a doghter which that called was Sophie.

[2158] Upon a day bifel that he for his desport is went into the feeldes, hym to pleye. [2159] His wyf and eek his doghter hath he left inwith his hous, of which the dores weren fast yshette.

[2160] Thre of hise olde foes han it espyed, and setten laddres to the walles of his hous, and by wyndowes been entred, [2161] and betten his wyf, and wounded his doghter with fyve mortal woundes in fyve sondry places, [2162] this is to seyn, in hir feet, in hire handes, in hir erys, in hir nose, and in hire mouth — and leften hire for deed, and wenten away.

[2163] Whan Melibeus retourned was into his hous and saugh al this meschief, he, lyk a mad man, rentynge his clothes, gan to wepe and crie.

[2164] Prudence, his wyf, as ferforth as she dorste, bisoghte hym of his wepyng for to stynte; [2165] but nat for-thy he gan to crie and wepen evere lenger the moore.

[2166] This noble wyf Prudence remembred hire upon the sentence of Ovide, in his book that cleped is The Remedie of Love, where-as he seith: [2167] 'He is a fool that destourbeth the mooder to wepen in the deeth of hire child, til she have wept hir fille, as for a certain tyme. [2168] And thanne shal man doon his diligence with amyable wordes hire to reconforte, and preyen hire of hir wepyng for to stynte.' [2169] For which reson this noble wyf Prudence suffred hir housbonde for to wepe and crie as for a certain space; [2170] and whan she saugh hir tyme, she seyde hym in this wise: 'Allas, my lord, quod she why make ye youreself for to be lyk a fool? [2171] For sothe it aperteneth nat to a wys man to maken swiche a sorwe. [2172] Youre doghter, with the grace of God, shal warisshe and escape. [2173] And al were it so that she right now were deed, ye ne oughte nat, as for hir deeth, youreself to destroye. [2174] Senek seith: "The wise man shal nat take to greet discomfort for the deeth of his children, [2175] but certes, he sholde suffren it in pacience as wel as he abideth the deeth of his owene propre persone."'

[The discussion between Melibeus and his wife concerning the proper course of action for him to pursue towards his enemies continues for fifty pages more in the editions of the Chaucer Society. Our ancestors were very fond of such discussions, involving as they did much proverbial wisdom, but the modern reader will hardly be interested in more than this specimen.]

The murye wordes of the Hoost to the Monk.

- Whan ended was my tale of Melibee 3079
 And of Prudence and hire benignytee,
 Oure Hooste seyde, 'As I am feithful man,
 And by that precious corpus Madrian,
 I hadde levere than a barel ale
 That Goodelief, my wyf, hadde herd this tale, 3084
 For she nys no thyng of swich pacience
 As was this Melibeus' wyf Prudence.
 By Goddes bones, whan I bete my knaves,
 She bryngeth me forth the grete clobbed staves, 3088
 And crieth, "Slee the dogges everichoon,
 And brek hem, bothe bak and every boon!"
 And if that any neighebore of myne
 Wol nat in chirche to my wyf enclyne, 3092
 Or be so hardy to hire to trespase,
 Whan she comth home, she rampeth in my face,
 And crieth, "False coward, wreke thy wyf!
 By corpus bones, I wol have thy knyf, 3096
 And thou shalt have my distaf and go spynne!"
 Fro day to nyght right thus she wol bigynne.
 "Allas," she seith, "that evere that I was shape
 To wedden a milksope or a coward ape, 3100
 That wol been overlad with every wight!
 Thou darst nat stonden by thy wyves right!"
 This is my lif but-if that I wol fighte.
 And out at dore anon I moot me dighte, 3104
 Or elles I am but lost, but-if that I
 Be lik a wilde leon fool-hardy.
 I woot wel, she wol do me slee som day
 Som neighebore and thanne go my way; 3108
 For I am perilous with knyf in honde —
 Al be it that I dar hire nat withstonde;
 For she is byg in armes, by my feith!
 That shal he fynde that hire mysdooth or seith. 3112
 But lat us passe away fro this mateere.
 My lord the Monk,' quod he, 'be myrie of cheere,
 For ye shul telle a tale trewely.

Loo, Rouchestre stant heer faste by! 3116
 Ryde forth, myn owene lord; brek nat oure game —
 But by my trouthe, I knowe nat youre name.
 Wher shal I calle yow my lord Daun John,
 Or Daun Thomas, or elles Daun Albou? 3120
 Of what hous be ye, by youre fader kyn?
 I vowe to God, thou hast a ful fair skyn!
 It is a gentil pasture ther thow goost;
 Thou art nat lyk a penant or a goost. 3124
 Upon my feith, thou art som officer,
 Som worthy sexteyn, or som celerer;
 For by my fader soule, as to my doom,
 Thou art a maister whan thou art at hoom; 3128
 No poure cloysterer, ne no novys,
 But a governour wily and wys;
 And therwithal, of brawnes and of bones
 A wel-farynge persone for the nones. 3132
 I pray to God, yeve hym confusioun
 That first thee broghte unto religioun.

.
 But be nat wrooth, my lord, for that I pleye;
 "Ful ofte in game a sooth," I have herd seye.

This worthy Monk took al in pacience,
 And seyde, 'I wol doon al my diligence, 3156
 As fer as sowneth into honestee,
 To telle yow a tale, or two, or three.
 And if yow list to herkne hyderward,
 I wol yow seyn the lyf of Seint Edward; 3160
 Or ellis, first, tragedies wol I telle,
 Of whiche I have an hundred in my celle.

Tragedie is to seyn a certeyn storie,
 As olde bookes maken us memorie, 3164
 Of hym that stood in greet prosperitee
 And is yfallen out of heigh degree
 Into myserie and endeth wrecchedly.
 And they ben versified communely 3168
 Of six feet, which men clepen exametron.
 In prose eek been endited many oon,
 And eek in meetre in many a sondry wyse.

Lo, this declaryng oghte ynogh suffise. 3172

Now herkneth, if yow liketh for to heere.

But first I yow biseeke in this mateere,
Though I by ordre telle nat thise thynges,
Be it of popes, emperours, or kynges, 3176

After hir ages, as men writen fynde,
But tellen hem som bifore and som bihynde,
As it now comth unto my remembraunce,
Have me excused of min ignoraunce. 3180

Heere bigynneth the Monkes Tale De Casibus
Virorum Illustrium.

I wol biwaille, in manere of tragèdie,
The harm of hem that stode in heigh degree
And fillen so that ther nas no remèdie
To brynge hem out of hir adversitee; 3184
For, certein, whan that Fortune list to flee,
Ther may no man the cours of hire withholde.
Lat no man truste on blynd prosperitee;
Be war of thise ensamples trewe and olde. 3188

[Lucifer]

At Lucifer, though he an angel were
And nat a man, at hym wol I bigynne,
For though Fortune may noon angel dere,
From heigh degree yet fel he for his synne 3192
Doun into helle, where he yet is inne.
O Lucifer, brightest of angels alle,
Now artow Sathanas, that mayst nat twynne
Out of misèrie, in which that thou art falle! 3196

[The monk relates a series of seventeen tragedies ranging in length from seven lines to seventy-seven. The reader will perhaps be satisfied with the first and the last of them.]

[Cresus]

This riche Cresus, whilom kyng of Lyde —
Of which Cresus Cirus soore hym dradde —
Yet was he caught amyddes al his pryde,
And to be brent men to the fyr hym ladde; 3920

But swich a reyn doun fro the welkne shadde
 That slow the fyr and made hym to escape.
 But to be war no grace yet he hadde,
 Til Fortune on the galwes made hym gape. 3924

Whanne he escaped was, he kan nat stente
 For to bigynne a newe werre agayn.
 He wende wel — for that Fortune hym sente
 Swich hap that he escaped thurgh the rayn — 3928
 That of hise foos he myghte nat be slayn;
 And eek a swevene upon a nyght he mette,
 Of which he was so proud, and eek so fayn,
 That in vengeance he al his herte sette. 3932

Upon a tree he was, as that hym thoughte,
 Ther Juppiter hym wessh, bothe bak and syde;
 And Phebus eek a fair towaille hym broughte,
 To dryen hym with; and therfore wax his pryde. 3936
 And to his doghter, that stood hym bisyde —
 Which that he knew in heigh science habounde —
 He bad hire telle hym what it signyfyde,
 And she his dreem bigan right thus expounde: 3940

‘The tree,’ quod she, ‘the galwes is to meene;
 And Juppiter bitokneth snow and reyn;
 And Phebus with his towaille so clene,
 Tho been the sonne bemes for to seyn. 3944
 Thou shalt anhangd be, fader, certeyn;
 Reyn shal thee wasshe, and sonne shal thee drye.’
 Thus warned hym, ful plat and eek ful pleyn,
 His doghter, which that called was Phanye. 3948

An-hanged was Cresus, the proude kyng;
 His roial trone myghte hym nat availle.
 Tragèdiës noon oother maner thyng
 Ne kan in syngyng crie ne biwaille 3952
 But that Fortunē alwey wole assaille
 With unwar strook the regnes that been proude;
 For whan men trusteth hire, thanne wol she faille,
 And covere hire brighte face with a clowde. 3956

The prologe of the Nonnes Preestes Tale.

Hool! quod the Knyght, 'good sire, namoore of this.
 That ye han seyde is right ynough, ywis,
 And muchel moore; for litel hevynesse
 Is right ynough to muche folk, I gesse. 3960
 I seye for me, it is a greet disese,
 Where-as men han been in greet welthe and ese,
 To heeren of hire sodeyn fal, alas!
 And the contrarie is joye and greet solas; 3964
 As whan a man hath ben in poure estaat,
 And clymbeth up, and wexeth fortunat,
 And there abideth in prosperitee —
 Swich thyng is gladsom, as it thynketh me, 3968
 And of swich thyng were goodly for to telle.'
 'Ye,' quod oure Hooste, 'by Seint Poules belle,
 Ye seye right sooth. This Monk he clappeth lowde.
 He spak how Fortune "covered with a clowde" — 3972
 I noot nevere what; and also of a tragèdie
 Right now ye herde; and, pardee, no remèdie
 It is for to biwaille ne compleyne
 That that is doon; and als it is a peyne, 3976
 As ye han seyde, to heere of hevynesse.
 'Sire Monk, namoore of this, so God yow blesse!
 Your tale anoyeth all this compaignye.
 Swich talkyng is nat worth a boterflye; 3980
 For therinne is ther no desport ne game.
 Wherefore, sire Monk, or Daun Piers, by youre name,
 I pray yow hertely, telle us somewhat elles;
 For sikerly nere clynkyng of youre belles, 3984
 That on youre bridel hange on every syde,
 By hevene Kyng that for us alle dyde,
 I sholde er this han fallen doun for sleepe,
 Although the slough had never been so deepe. 3988
 Thanne hadde your talē al be toold in veyn;
 For certainly, as that thise clerkes seyn,
 Where-as a man may have noon audience,
 Noght helpeth it to tellen his sentence. 3992
 And wel I woot the substance is in me,

If any thyng shal wel reported be.

Sir, sey somewhat of huntyng, I yow preye.'

'Nay,' quod this Monk, 'I have no lust to pleye; 3996
Now lat another telle, as I have toold.'

Thanne spak oure hoost with rude speche and boold,
And seyde unto the Nonnes Preest anon:

'Com neer, thou preest; com hyder, thou sir John! 4000

Telle us swich thyng as may oure hertes glade.

Be blithe, though thou ryde upon a jade.

What thogh thyn hors be bothe foule and lene,

If he wol serve thee, rekke nat a bene. 4004

Looke that thyn herte be murie everemo.'

'Yis, sir,' quod he; 'yis, Hoost, so moot I go;

But I be myrie, ywis, I wol be blamed.'

And right anon his tale he hath attamed; 4008

And thus he seyde unto us everichon,

This sweete preest, this goodly man, sir John.

Heere bigynneth the Nonnes Preestes Tale of the Cok and Hen, Chauntecleer and Pertelote.

A poure wydwe somdel stape in age
Was whilom dwellyng in a narwe cotage 4012

Beside a grove, stondynge in a dale.

This wydwe of which I telle yow my tale,

Syn thilke day that she was last a wyf,

In pacience ladde a ful symple lyf, 4016

For litel was hir catel and hir rente.

By housbondrie of swich as God hire sente

She foond himself and eek hire doghtren two.

Thre large sowes hadde she, and namo, 4020

Three keen, and eek a sheep that highte Malle.

Ful sooty was hir bour and eek hire halle,

In which she eet ful many a sklendre meel.

Of poynaunt sauce hir neded never a deel; 4024

No deyntee morsel passed thurgh hir throte;

Hir diete was accordant to hir cote.

Repleccion ne made hire nevere sik;

Attempree diete was al hir phisik, 4028

A FARMYARD AND COTTAGE INTERIOR
From the Très Riches Heures of Jehan duc de Berri.

And exercise, and hertes suffisaunce.

The goute lette hire nothyng for to daunce,
Napoplexie shente nat hir heed.

No wyn ne drank she, neither whit ne reed;

4032

Hir bord was served moost with whit and blak —

Milk and broun breed, in which she foond no lak —

Seynd bacon, and somtyme an ey or tweye;

For she was, as it were, a maner deye.

4036

A yeerd she hadde, enclosed al aboute

With stikkes, and a drye dych withoute,

In which she hadde a cok heet Chauntecleer.

In al the land of crowyng nas his peer:

4040

His voys was murier than the murie organ

On messedayes that in the chirche gon;

Wel sikerer was his crowyng in his logge

Than is a klokke or an abbey orlogge.

4044

By nature he crew eche ascencioun

Of the equynoxial in thilke toun;

For whan degrees fiftene weren ascended,

Thanne crew he that it myghte nat been amended.

4048

His coomb was redder than the fyn coral,

And batailled as it were a castel wal;

His byle was blak, and as the jeet it shoon;

Lyk asure were hise legges and his toon;

4052

Hise nayles whiter than the lylie flour;

And lyk the burned gold was his colour.

This gentil cok hadde in his governaunce

Sevene hennes for to doon al his plesaunce,

4056

Whiche were hise sustres and his paramours,

And wonder lyk to hym as of colours;

Of whiche the faireste-hewed on hir throte

Was cleped faire damoysele Pertelote.

4060

Curteys she was, discreet, and debonaire,

And compaignable, and bar hyrself so faire,

Syn thilke day that she was seven nyght oold,

That trewely she hath the herte in hoold

4064

Of Chauntecleer, loken in every lith.

He loved hire so that wel was hym therwith.

But swiche a joye was it to here hem synge,

- Whan that the brighte sonne bigan to sprynge, 4068
 In sweete accord, 'My lief is faren in londe';
 For thilke tyme, as I have understonde,
 Beestes and briddes koude speke and synge.
 And so bifel that in the dawenyng — 4072
 As Chauntecleer among hise wyves alle
 Sat on his perche that was in the halle,
 And next hym sat this faire Pertelote —
 This Chauntecleer gan gronen in his throte 4076
 As man that in his dreem is drecched soore.
 And whan that Pertelote thus herde hym roore,
 She was agast, and seyde, 'O herte deere,
 What eyleth yow to grone in this manere? 4080
 Ye been a verray sleper! fy! for shame!'
 And he answerde and seyde thus, 'Madame,
 I pray yow that ye take it nat agrief.
 By God, me thoughte I was in swich meschief, 4084
 Right now, that yet myn herte is soore afright.
 'Now God,' quod he, 'my swevene recche aright,
 And kepe my body out of foul prisoun!
 Me mette how that I romed up and doun 4088
 Withinne our yeerd, wheer-as I saugh a beest,
 Was lyk an hound, and wolde han maad areest
 Upon my body, and han had me deed.
 His colour was bitwixe yellow and reed, 4092
 And tipped was his tayl and bothe hise eeris
 With blak, unlyk the remenant of hise heeris;
 His snowte smal, with glowynge eyen tweye.
 Yet of his look, for feere, almoost I deye. 4096
 This caused me my gronyng doutelees.'
 'Avoy!' quod she, 'fy on yow, hertelees!
 Allas!' quod she, 'for, by that God above,
 Now han ye lost myn herte and al my love! 4100
 I kan nat love a coward, by my feith;
 For certes, what-so any womman seith,
 We alle desiren, if it myghte bee,
 To han housbondes hardy, wise, and free, 4104
 And secree, and no nygard, ne no fool,
 Ne hym that is agast of every tool,

Ne noon avaintour, by that God above!
 How dorste ye seyn, for shame, unto youre love, 4108
 That anythyng myghte make yow aferd?
 Have ye no mannes herte, and han a berd?
 Allas! and konne ye been agast of swevenys?
 Nothyng, God woot, but vanitee in swevene is. 4112
 Swevenes engendren of repleccions,
 And ofte of fume and of compleccions,
 Whan humours been to habundant in a wight.
 Certes, this dreem which ye han met tonyght 4116
 Cometh of the greete superfluytee
 Of youre rede colera, pardee,
 Which causeth folk to dreden in hir dremes
 Of arwes, and of fyre with rede lemes, 4120
 Of grete beestes that they wol hem byte,
 Of contekes and of whelpes grete and lyte --
 Right as the humour of malencolie
 Causeth ful many a man in sleepe to crie 4124
 For feere of blake beres, or boles blake,
 Or elles blake develes wole hem take.
 Of othere humours koude I telle also
 That werken many a man in sleepe ful wo, 4128
 But I wol passe as lightly as I kan.
 'Lo, Caton, which that was so wys a man,
 Seyde he nat thus — "Ne do no fors of dremes"?'
 'Now, sire,' quod she, 'whan ye flee fro the bemes, 4132
 For Goddes love, as taak som laxatyf!
 Up peril of my soule, and of my lyf,
 I conseilte yow the beste, I wol nat lye,
 That bothe of colere and of malencolye 4136
 Ye purge yow; and for ye shal nat tarie,
 Though in this toun is noon apothecarie,
 I shal myself to herbes techen yow
 That shul been for youre hele and for youre prow. 4140
 And in oure yeerd tho herbes shal I fynde
 The whiche han of hire propretee by kynde
 To purge yow bynethe and eek above.
 Foryet nat this, for Goddes owene love — 4144
 Ye been ful coleryk of compleccion.

Ware the sonne in his ascencion
 Ne fynde yow nat repleet of humours hooete.
 And if it do, I dar wel leye a grote 4148
 That ye shul have a fevere terciane,
 Or an agu that may be youre bane.
 A day or two ye shul have digestyves
 Of wormes, er ye take youre laxatyves 4152
 Of lawriol, centaure, and fumetere,
 Or elles of ellebor that groweth there,
 Of katapucē, or of gaitrys beryis
 Of herbe yve growyng in oure yeerd, ther mery is. 4156
 Pekke hem up right as they growe, and ete hem yn!
 Be myrie, housbonde, for youre fader kyn;
 Dredeth no dreem. I kan sey yow namoore.
 'Madame,' quod he, 'graunt mercy of youre loore! 4160
 But nathelees, as touchyng Daun Catoun,
 That hath of wysdom swich a greet renoun,
 Though that he bad no dremes for to drede,
 By God, men may in olde bookes rede 4164
 Of many a man moore of auctorite
 Than evere Caton was, so moot I thee,
 That al the revers seyn of this sentence,
 And han wel founden by experience 4168
 That dremes been significacions
 As wel of joye as of tribulacions
 That folk enduren in this lif present.
 Ther nedeth make of this noon argument; 4172
 The verray preeve sheweth it in dede.
 'Oon of the gretteste auctours that men rede
 Seith thus — that whilom two felawes wente
 On pilgrimage in a ful good entente, 4176
 And happed so they coomen in a toun
 Wher-as ther was swich congregacioun
 Of peple and eek so streit of herbergage
 That they ne founde as muche as o cotage 4180
 In which they bothe myghte logged bee.
 Wherfore they mosten of necessitee,
 As for that nyght, departen compaignye.
 And ech of hem gooth to his hostelrye, 4184

And took his loggyng as it wolde falle.
That oon of hem was logged in a stalle,
Fer in a yeerd, with oxen of the plough;
That oother man was logged wel ynough, 4188
As was his aventure or his fortune,
That us governeth alle as in commune.

‘And so bifel that longe er it were day,
This man mette in his bed, ther-as he lay, 4192
How that his felawe gan upon hym calle
And seyde, “Allas! for in an oxes stalle
This nyght I shal be mordred ther I lye.
Now helpe me, deere brother, or I dye! 4196
In alle haste com to me!” he sayde.

‘This man out of his sleepe for feere abrayde;
But whan that he was wakened of his sleepe,
He turned hym and took of it no keepe; 4200
Hym thoughte his dreem nas but a vanitee.
Thus twies in his slepyng dremed hee;
And atte thridde tyme yet his felawe
Cam, as hym thoughte, and seide, “I am now slawe: 4204
Bihoold my bloody woundes depe and wyde!
Arys up erly in the morwe tyde,
And at the west gate of the toun,” quod he,
“A carte ful of donge ther shaltow se, 4208
In which my body is hid ful prively.
Do thilke carte arresten boldely.
My gold caused my mordre, sooth to sayn.”
And tolde hym every point how he was slayn, 4212
With a ful pitous face, pale of hewe.

‘And truste wel, his dreem he foond ful trewe;
For on the morwe, as soone as it was day,
To his felawes in he took the way, 4216
And whan that he cam to this oxes stalle,
After his felawe he bigan to calle.
The hostiler answerede hym anon,
And seyde, “Sire, your felawe is agon; 4220
As soone as day he wente out of the toun.”

‘This man gan fallen in suspicioun,
Remembrynge on hise dremes that he mette,

And forth he gooth — no lenger wolde he lette — 4224
 Unto the west gate of the toun, and fond
 A dong carte, as it were to donge lond,
 That was arrayed in that same wise
 As ye han herd the dede man devyse. 4228
 And with an hardy herte he gan to crye
 Vengeance and justice of this felonye.
 "My felawe mordred is this same nyght,
 And in this carte heere he lith gapyng upright! 4232
 I crye out on the ministres," quod he,
 "That sholden kepe and reulen this citee.
 Harrow! allas! heere lith my felawe slayn."
 'What sholde I moore unto this tale sayn? 4236
 The peple out-sterre, and caste the cart to grounde,
 And in the myddel of the dong they founde
 The dede man, that mordred was al newe.
 'O blisful God, that art so just and trewe,
 Lo, howe that thou biwreyest mordre alway! 4241
 "Mordre wol out," that se we day by day.
 Mordre is so wlatson and abhomynable
 To God, that is so just and resonable, 4244
 That he ne wol nat suffre it heled be,
 Though it abyde a yeer or two or thre.
 "Mordre wol out," this my conclusioun!
 'And right anon ministres of that toun 4248
 Han hent the carter and so soore hym pyned,
 And eek the hostiler so soore engnyed,
 That they biknewe hire wikkednesse anon,
 And were an-hanged by the nekke bon. 4252
 'Heere may men seen that dremes been to drede.
 And certes in the same book I rede,
 Right in the nexte chapitre after this —
 I gabbe nat, so have I joye or blis! — 4256
 Two men that wolde han passed over see
 For certeyn cause into a fer contree,
 If that the wynd ne hadde been contrarie,
 That made hem in a citee for to tarie, 4260
 That stood ful myrie upon an haven syde —
 But on a day, agayn the even tyde,

The wynd gan chaunge and blew right as hem leste.
Jolif and glad, they wente unto hir reste,
And casten hem ful erly for to saille.

4264

‘But to that o man fil a greet mervaille.

That oon of hem, in slepyng as he lay,
Hym mette a wonder dreem agayn the day.
Him thoughte a man stood by his beddes syde
And hym comanded that he sholde abyde,
And seyde hym thus, “If thou tomorwe wende,
Thow shalt be dreynt; my tale is at an ende.”

4268

4272

‘He wook and tolde his felawe what he mette,
And preydē hym his viagē to lette;
As for that day he preyde hym to byde.

‘His felawe, that lay by his beddes syde,
Gan for to laughe, and scorned him ful faste.
“No dreem,” quod he, “may so myn herte agaste
That I wol lette for to do my thynges.

4276

I sette nat a straw by thy dremynges;
For swevenes been but vanytees and japes.
Men dreme al day of owles or of apes,
And of many a maze therewithal;

4280

Men dreme of thyng that nevere was ne shal.
But sith I see that thou wolt heere abyde,
And thus forslewthen wilfully thy tyde,
God woot, it reweth me; and have good day!”

4284

‘And thus he took his leve, and wente his way.
But er that he hadde half his cours yseyled —
Noot I nat why, ne what myschaunce it eyled! —

4288

But, casuelly, the shippes botme rente,
And shipe and man under the water wente,
In sighte of othere shippes it bisyde,
That with hem seyled at the same tyde.

4292

And therfore, faire Pertelote so deere,
By swiche ensamples olde yet maistow leere
That no man sholde been to recchelees
Of dremes; for I seye thee doutelees
That many a dreem ful soore is for to drede.

4296

‘Lo, in the lyf of Seint Kenelm I rede,
That was Kenulphus sone, the noble kyng

Of Mercenrike, how Kenelm mette a thyng!
 A lite er he was mordred, on a day,
 His mordre in his avysion he say. 4304
 His norice hym expowned every deel
 His swevene, and bad hym for to kepe hym weel
 For traision; but he nas but seven yeer oold,
 And therfore litel tale hath he toold 4308
 Of any dreem, so hooly was his herte.
 By God! I hadde levere than my sherte
 That ye hadde rad his legende as have I.
 'Dame Pertelote, I sey yow trewely, 4312
 Macrobeus, that writ the avision
 In Affrike of the worthy Cipion, Affermeth dremes, and seith that they been Warnynge of thynges that men after seen. 4316
 'And forthermoore, I pray yow, looketh wel
 In the Olde Testament, of Daniel,
 If he heeld dremes any vanitee.
 'Reed eek of Joseph, and ther shul ye see 4320
 Wher dremes be somtyme — I sey nat alle —
 Warnynge of thynges that shul after falle.
 'Looke of Egipte the kyng Daun Pharao,
 His baker and his butiller also — 4324
 Wher they ne felte noon effect in dremes.
 Whoso wol seken actes of sondry remes
 May rede of dremes many a wonder thyng.
 'Lo, Cresus, which that was of Lyde kyng, 4328
 Mette he nat that he sat upon a tree —
 Which signified he sholde anhangd bee?
 'Lo, heere Adromacha, Ectores wyf —
 That day that Ector sholde lese his lyf, 4332
 She dremed on the same nyght biforn
 How that the lyf of Ector sholde be lorne
 If thilke day he wente into bataille.
 She warned hym, but it myghte nat availle; 4336
 He wente for to fighte natheles.
 But he was slayn anon of Achilles.
 'But thilke tale is al to longe to telle,
 And eek it is ny day; I may nat dwelle. 4340

Shortly I seye, as for conclusion,
That I shal han of this avision
Adversitee. And I seye forthermoor
That I ne telle of laxatyves no stoor, 4344
For they been venymes, I woot it weel.
I hem diffye; I love hem never a deel!

‘Now let us speke of myrthe, and stynte al this.
Madame Pertelote, so have I blis, 4348
Of o thyng God hath sent me large grace!
For whan I se the beautee of youre face,
Ye been so scarlet reed aboute youre eyen,
It maketh al my drede for to dyen, 4352
For, al so siker as In principio,
Mulier est hominis confusio. —

Madame, the sentence of this Latyn is,
“Womman is mannes joye and al his blis;” 4356
For whan I feele a-nyght your softe syde
(Al be it that I may nat on yow ryde,
For that oure perche is maad so narwe, allas!)
I am so ful of joye and of solas 4360
That I diffye bothe swevene and dreem.’

And with that word, he fly down fro the beam —
For it was day — and eke hise hennes alle;
And with a chuk he gan hem for to calle, 4364
For he hadde founde a corn, lay in the yerd.
Real he was; he was namoore aferd.
He looketh as it were a grym leoun,
And on hise toos he rometh up and down;
Hym deigned nat to sette his foot to grounde;
He chukketh whan he hath a corn yfounde, 4372
And to hym rennen thanne hise wyves alle.
Thus roial, as a prince is in an halle,
Leve I this Chauntecleer in his pasture,
And after wol I telle his aventure. 4376

Whan that the monthe in which the world bigan,
That highte March, whan God first maked man,
Was compleet, and ypassed were also,
Syn March bigan, thritty dayes and two, 4380
Bifel that Chauntecleer in al his pryde;

Hise sevene wyves walkynge by his syde,
 Caste up hise eyen to the brighte sonne,
 That in the signe of Taurus hadde yronne 4384
 Twenty degrees and oon and somewhat moore;
 And knew by kynde and by noon oother loore
 That it was pryme; and crew with blisful stevene.
 'The sonne,' he seyde, 'is clomben up on hevene 4388
 Fourty degrees and oon and moore, ywis.
 Madame Pertelote, my worldes blis,
 Herkneþ this blisful briddes how they synge!
 And se the fresshe floures how they sprynge! 4392
 Ful is myn herte of revel and solas.'

But sodeynly hym fil a sorweful cas;
 For evere the latter ende of joye is wo.
 God woot that worldly joye is soone ago; 4396
 And if a rethor koude faire endite,
 He in a cronycle sauflly myghte it write
 As for a sovereyn notabilitee.

Now every wys man lat him herkne me: 4400
 This storie is al so trewe, I undertake,
 As is the book of Launcelot de Lake,
 That wommen holde in ful greet reverence.
 Now wol I come agayn to my sentence. 4404

A colfox, ful of sly iniquitee,
 That in the grove hadde wonned yeres three,
 By heigh ymaginacion forn-cast,
 The same nyght thurghout the hegges brast 4408
 Into the yerd, ther Chauntecleer the faire
 Was wont, and eek hise wyves, to repaire;
 And in a bed of wortes stille he lay
 Til it was passed undren of the day, 4412
 Waitynge his tyme on Chauntecleer to falle,
 As gladly doon thise homycides alle
 That in await liggyn to mordre men.

O false mordroure lurkyng in thy den! 4416
 O newe Scariot! newe Genylon!
 False dissymulour, O Greek Synon,
 That broghtest Troye al outrelly to sorwe!
 O Chauntecleer, acursed be that morwe 4420

That thou into that yerd flaugh fro the bemes!
 Thou were ful wel ywarned by thy dremes
 That thilke day was perilous to thee.

But what that God forwoot moot nedes bee, 4424
 After the opinion of certein clerkis;

Witnesse on hym that any parfit clerk is
 That in scole is greet altercacion
 In this mateere and greet disputison, 4428

And hath been of an hundred thousand men;
 But I ne kan nat bulte it to the bren,
 As kan the hooly doctour Augustyn,
 Or Boece, or the Bisshope Bradwardyn: 4432

Wheither that Goddes worthy forwityng
 Streyneth me nedely to doon a thyng —
 'Nedely' clepe I 'symple necessitee' —
 Or elles, if free choys be graunted me 4436

To do that same thyng or do it noght,
 Though God forwoot it er that it was wrought;
 Or if his wityng streyneth never a deel
 But by 'necessitee condicioneel.' 4440

I wil nat han to do of swich mateere;
 My tale is of a cok, as ye may heere,
 That took his conseil of his wyf — with sorwe! —
 To walken in the yerd upon that morwe 4444
 That he hadde met that dreem that I of tolde.

Wommennes conseils been ful ofte colde;
 Wommannes conseil broghte us first to wo,
 And made Adam fro Paradys to go, 4448
 Ther-as he was ful myrie and wel at ese.

But for I noot to whom it myght displese
 If I conseil of wommen wolde blame,
 Passe over, for I seye it in my game. 4452

Rede auctours, where they trete of swich mateere,
 And what they seyn of wommen ye may heere.
 Thise been the cokkes wordes, and nat myne;
 I kan noon harm of no womman divyne. 4456

Faire in the soond, to bathe hire myrily,
 Lith Pertelote, and alle hire sustres by,
 Agayn the sonne; and Chauntecleer so free

Soong murier than the mermayde in the see — 4460
 For Physiologus seith sikerly
 How that they syngen wel and myrily.

And so bifel that as he cast his eye
 Among the wortes on a boterflye, 4464
 He was war of this fox, that lay ful lowe.
 Nothyng ne liste hym thanne for to crowe,
 But cride anon 'cok-cok!' and up he sterte,
 As man that was affrayed in his herte. 4468
 For natureelly a beest desireth flee
 Fro his contrarie, if he may it see,
 Though he never erst hadde seyn it with his eye.

This Chauntecleer, whan he gan hym espye, 4472
 He wolde han fled, but that the fox anon
 Seyde, 'Gentil sire, allas! wher wol ye gon?
 Be ye affrayed of me, that am youre freend?
 Now certes I were worse than a feend, 4476
 If I to yow wolde harm or vileynye.

I am nat come your conseil for tespye;
 But trewely the cause of my comynge
 Was oonly for to herkne how that ye synge. 4480
 For trewely ye have as myrie a stevene
 As any aungel hath that is in hevene,
 Therwith ye han in musyk moore feelynge
 Than hadde Boece or any that kan synge. 4484

My lord youre fader — God his soule blesse! —
 And eek youre mooder, of hire gentillesse,
 Han in myn hous ybeen, to my greet ese.
 And certes, sire, ful fayn wolde I yow plese. 4488
 But for men speke of syngyng, I wol seye,
 So moote I brouke wel myne eyen tweye,
 Save yow, I herde nevere man so synge
 As dide youre fader in the morwenynge. 4492
 Certes, it was of herte, al that he song.

And for to make his voys the moore strong,
 He wolde so payne hym that with bothe hise eyen
 He moste wynke; so loude he wolde cryen, 4496
 And stonden on his tiptoon therwithal,
 And strecche forth his nekke long and smal.

And eek he was of swich discrecion
That ther nas no man in no region
That hym in song or wisdom myghte passe. 4500

I have wel rad in Daun Burnel the Asse,
Among hise vers, how that ther was a cok,
For that a preestes sone yaf hym a knok 4504
Upon his leg, whil he was yong and nyce,
He made hym for to lese his benefice.

But certeyn, ther nys no comparison
Bitwixe the wisdom and discrecion 4508
Of youre fader and of his subtiltee.
Now syngeth, sire; for seinte Charitee,
Lat se konne ye youre fader countrefete!

This Chauntecleer hise wynges gan to bete, 4512
As man that koude his trayson nat espie,
So was he ravysshed with his flaterie.

Allas! ye lordes, many a fals flatour
Is in youre courtes, and many a losengeour, 4516
That plesen yow wel moore, by my feith,
Than he that soothfastnesse unto yow seith.
Redeth Ecclesiaste of flaterye;
Beth war, ye lordes, of hir trecherye. 4520

This Chauntecleer stood hye upon his toos,
Strecchyng his nekke, and heeld hise eyen cloos,
And gan to crowe loude for the nones.
And Daun Russell the fox stirte up atones, 4524
And by the gargat hente Chauntecleer,
And on his bak toward the wode hym beer,
For yet ne was ther no man that hym sewed.

O destinee, that mayst nat been eschewed! 4528
Allas, that Chauntecleer fleigh fro the bemes!
Allas, his wyf ne roghte nat of dremes!
And on a Friday fil al this meschaunce.

O Venus, that art goddesse of plesaunce, 4532
Syn that thy servant was this Chauntecleer,
And in thy servyce dide al his poweer,
Moore for delit than world to multiplye,
Why woltestow suffre hym on thy day to dye? 4536

O Gaufred, deere maister soverayn,

That whan thy worthy kyng, Richard, was slayn
 With shot, compleynedest his deeth so soere,
 Why ne hadde I now thy sentence and thy loore, 4540
 The Friday for to chide as diden ye?

For on a Friday soothly slayn was he.
 Thanne wolde I shewe yow how that I koude pleyne
 For Chauntecleres drede and for his peyne. 4544

Certes, swich cry ne lamentacion
 Was nevere of ladyes maad whan Ylion
 Was wonne and Pirrus with his streite swerd,
 Whan he hadde hent kyng Priam by the berd 4548

And slayn hym — as seith us Eneydos —
 As maden alle the hennes in the clos,
 Whan they had seyn of Chauntecleer the sighte.
 But sodeynly dame Pertelote shrighthe 4552

Ful louder than dide Hasdrubales wyf
 Whan that hir housbonde hadde lost his lyf
 And that the Romainys hadde brend Cartage.
 She was so ful of torment and of rage 4556

That wilfully into the fyr she sterte
 And brende hirselven with a stedefast herte.

O woful hennes, right so criden ye
 As, whan that Nero brende the citee 4560
 Of Rome, cryden senatoures wyves

For that hir husbondes losten alle hir lyves —
 Withouten gilt this Nero hath hem slayn.
 Now wole I turne to my tale agayn. 4564

This sely wydwe and eek hir doghtres two Herden thise hennes crie and maken wo;
 And out at dores stirten they anon,
 And syen the fox toward the grove gon, 4568

And bar upon his bak the cok away;
 And cryden 'Out! harrow!' and 'Weylaway!'
 'Ha, ha, the fox!' and after hym they ran,
 And eek with staves many another man. 4572

Ran Colle oure dogge, and Talbot, and Gerland,
 And Malkyn, with a dystaf in hir hand;
 Ran cow and calf and eek the verray hogges.
 So fered for the berkyng of the dogges 4576

And shoutyng of the men and wommen eke,
 They-ronne so hem thoughte hir herte breke.
 They yolleden as feendes doon in helle;
 The dokes cryden as men wolde hem quelle; 4580
 The gees for feere flowen over the trees;
 Out of the hyve cam the swarm of bees.
 So hydous was the noyse, a! benedicitee!
 Certes, he Jakke Straw and his meynee 4584
 Ne made nevere shoutes half so shille,
 Whan that they wolden any Flemyng kille,
 As thilke day was maad upon the fox.
 Of bras they broghten bemes and of box, 4588
 Of horn, of boon, in whiche they blewe and powped;
 And therwithal they skriked and they howped;
 It semed as that hevene sholde falle.

Now, goode men, I pray yow herkneth alle. 4592
 Lo, how Fortune turneth sodeynly

The hope, and pryde eek, of hir enemy!
 This cok, that lay upon the foxes bak,
 In al his drede unto the fox he spak, 4596
 And seyde, 'Sire, if that I were as ye,
 Yet wolde I seyn, as wys God helpe me,
 "Turneth agayn, ye proude cherles alle!
 A verray pestilence upon yow falle! 4600

Now am I come unto the wodes syde,
 Maugree youre heed, the cok shal heere abyde;
 I wol hym ete, in feith, and that anon."

The fox answerde, 'In feith, it shal be don.' 4604
 And as he spak that word, al sodeynly
 This cok brak from his mouth delyverly,
 And heighe upon a tree he fleigh anon.

And whan the fox saugh that the cok was gon, 4608
 'Allas,' quod he, 'O Chauntecleer, alas!
 I have to yow,' quod he, 'ydoon trespas,
 Inasmuche as I maked yow aferd
 Whan I yow hente and broght out of this yerd. 4612
 But, sire, I dide it of no wikke entente.
 Com down, and I shal telle yow what I mente.
 I shal seye sooth to yow, God help me so!'

'Nay, thanne,' quod he, 'I shrewe us bothe two — 4616
And first I shrewe myself, bothe blood and bones —
If thou bigyle me any ofter than ones.

Thou shalt namoore thurgh thy flaterye
Do me to synge and wynke with myn eye; 4620
For he that wynketh whan he sholde see,
Al wilfully, God lat him nevere thee!'

'Nay,' quod the fox, 'but God yeve hym meschaunce
That is so undiscreet of governaunce 4624
That jangleth whan he sholde holde his pees.'

Lo, swich it is for to be recchelees
And necligent, and truste on flaterye.

But ye that holden this tale a folye, 4628
As of a fox, or of a cok and hen,
Taketh the moralite, goode men.
For Seint Paul seith that al that writen is,
To oure doctrine it is ywrite, ywis. 4632

Taketh the fruyt and lat the chaf be stille.

Now, goode God, if that it be thy wille,
As seith my lord, so make us alle goode men,
And brynge us to his heighe blisse, Amen!

Heere is ended the Nonnes Preestes Tale.

[FRAGMENT VIII (GROUP G)]

THE SECOND NUN'S TALE]

[The Second Nun's Tale, nicely suited though it is to a nun, seems to have been written long before the Canterbury Tales were planned, for in the prologue of The Legend of Goode Women the Lyf of Seint Cecile is mentioned among the writings of Chaucer's youth. As it is a pretty close translation from the Latin, it is here omitted.]

The prologe of the Chanons Yemannes Tale.

Whan toold was al the lyf of seinte Cecile,
Er we hadde riden fully fyve mile,
At Boghton under Blee us gan atake
A man that clothed was in clothes blake, 557
And undernethe he wered a surpys.
His hakeney, which that was al pomely grys,
So swatte that it wonder was to see;
It semed as he had priked miles three. 561
The hors eek that his yeman rood upon
So swatte that unnethe myghte it gon. 563
A male tweyfoold upon his croper lay; 566
It semed that he caried lite array;
Al light for somer rood this worthy man.
And in myn herte to wondren I bigan 569
What that he was, til that I understood
How that his cloke was sowed to his hood;
For which, whan I hadde longe avysed me,
I demed hym som chanon for to be. 573
His hat heeng at his bak down by a laas,
For he hadde riden moore than trot or paas;
He hadde ay priked lik as he were wood.
A clote leef he hadde under his hood 577
For swoot, and for to kepe his heed from heete.
But it was joye for to seen hym swete:

- His forheed dropped as a stillatorie
 Were ful of plantayne and of paritorie. 581
 And whan that he was come, he gan to crye, 582
 'God save,' quod he, 'this joly compaignye!
 Faste have I priked' quod he, 'for youre sake,
 Bycause that I wolde yow atake, 585
 To riden in som myrie compaignye.'
 His yeman eek was ful of curteisye,
 And seyde, 'Sires, now in the morwe tyde,
 Out of youre hostellerie I saugh you ryde, 589
 And warned heer my lord and my soverayn,
 Which to ryden with yow is ful fayn
 For his desport; he loveth daliance.'
 'Freend, for thy warnyng God yeve thee good chance!' 593
 Thanne seyde oure Hoost; 'for certein it wolde seme
 Thy lord were wys; and so I may wel deme.
 He is ful jocunde also, dar I leye.
 Can he oght telle a myrie tale or tweye, 597
 With which he glade may this compaignye?'
 'Who, sire? my lord? Ye, ye, withouten lye.
 He kan of murthe and eek of jolitee
 Nat but ynough. Also, sire, trusteth me, 601
 And ye hym knewe as wel as do I,
 Ye wolde wondre how wel and craftily
 He koude werke, and that in sondry wise.
 He hath take on hym many a greet emprise 605
 Which were ful hard for any that is heere
 To brynge aboute, but they of hym it leere.
 As hoomely as he rit amonges yow,
 If ye hym knewe it wolde be for youre prow. 609
 Ye wolde nat forgoon his aqueyntaunce
 For muchel good, I dar leye in balaunce
 Al that I have in my possessioun.
 He is a man of heigh discrecioun; 613
 I warne yow wel he is a passyng man.'
 'Wel,' quod oure Hoost, 'I pray thee tel me than,
 Is he a clerk, or noon? Telle what he is.'
 'Nay, he is gretter than a clerk, ywis,' 617
 Seyde this Yeman; 'and in wordes fewe,

Hoost, of his craft somewhat I wol yow shewe

‘I seye my lord kan swich subtilitee —

But al his craft ye may nat wite for me, 621

And somewhat helpe I yet to his wirkyng —

That al this ground on which we been ridyng

Til that we come to Caunterbury toun

He koude al clene turne it up-so-down, 625

And pave it al of silver and of gold.’

And whan this Yeman hadde this tale ytold,

Unto oure Hoost, he seyde, ‘Benedicitee!

This thyng is wonder merveillous to me — 629

Syn that thy lord is of so heigh prudence

Bycause of which men sholde hym reverence —

That of his worshipe rekketh he so lite.

His overslope nys nat worth a myte 633

As in effect to hym, so moot I go;

It is al baudy and to-tore also.

Why is thy lord so sluttissh, I the preye,

And is of power bettre clooth to beye, 637

If that his dede accorde with thy speche?

Telle me that, and that I thee biseche.’

‘Why,’ quod this Yeman, ‘wherto axe ye me?

God help me so, for he shal nevere thee. 641

But I wol nat avowe that I seye;

And therfore keepe it secree, I yow preye.

He is to wys, in feith, as I bileeve.

That that is overdoon, it wol nat preeve

Aright; as clerkes seyn, it is a vice;

Wherfore in that I holde hym lewed and nyce.

For whan a man hath over greet a wit,

Ful oft hym happeth to mysusen it. 649

So dooth my lord, and that me greveth soore;

God it amende! I kan sey yow namoore.’

‘Therof no fors, good Yeman,’ quod oure Hoost.

‘Syn of the konnyng of thy lord thow woost, 653

Telle how he dooth, I pray thee hertely,

Syn that he is so crafty and so sly.

Where dwelle ye? if it to telle be.’

‘In the suburbes of a toun,’ quod he, 657

'Lurkyng in hernes and in lanes blynde,
 Where-as thise robbours and thise theves, by kynde,
 Holden hir pryvee, fereful residence;
 As they that dar nat shewen hir presence, 661
 So faren we, if I shal seye the sothe.'

'Now,' quod oure Hooste, 'lat me talke to the — Why artow so discoloured of thy face?'

'Peter!' quod he; 'God yeve it harde grace! 665

I am so used in the fyr to blowe
 That it hath chaunged my colour, I trowe.
 I am nat wont in no mirour to prie,
 But swynke soore and lerne multiplie. 669

We blondren evere and pouren in the fir;
 And for al that, we faille of oure desir;
 For evere we lakke of oure conclusion.
 To muchel folk we doon illusion, 673

And borwe gold — be it a pound or two,
 Or ten, or twelve, or manye sommes mo —
 And make hem wenen at the leeste weye
 That of a pound we koude make tweye. 677

Yet is it fals. But ay we han good hope
 It for to doon; and after it we grope.
 But that science is so fer us biforn
 We mowen nat, although we hadden sworn, 681

It overtake; it slit away so faste
 It wole us maken beggers atte laste.'

Whil this Yeman was thus in his talkyng,
 This Chanon drough hym neer and herde al thyng 685
 Which this Yeman spak; for suspencion
 Of mennes speche evere hadde this Chanon.

For Caton seith that he that giltly is Demeth alle thyng be spoke of hym, ywis. 689

That was the cause he gan so ny hym drawe 690
 To his Yeman, to herknen al his sawe.

And thus he seyde unto his Yeman tho:
 'Hoold thou thy pees, and spek no wordes mo; 693

For if thou do, thou shalt it deere abyel
 Thou sclaudrest me heere in this campaignye,
 And eek discoverest that thou sholdest hyde.'

THE CHANONS YEMANNES TALE 465

'Ye,' quod our Hoost; 'telle, on what so bityde!
Of al his thretyng rekke nat a myte.' 697

'In feith,' quod he, 'namoore I do, but lyte.'
And whan this Chanon saugh it wolde nat be,
But his Yeman wolde telle his pryvetee, 701
He fledde away for verray sorwe and shame.

'A,' quod the Yeman, 'heere shal arise game!
Al that I kan anon now wol I telle,
Syn he is goon — the foule feend hym quelle! 705
For nevere heerafter wol I with hym meete,
For peny ne for pound, I yow biheete.

He that me broghte first unto that game,
Er that he dye, sorwe have he and shame! 709
For it is ernest to me, by my feith;
That feele I wel, what that any man seith.
And yet for al my smert and al my grief,
For al my sorwe, labour, and meschief, 713
I koude nevere leve it, in no wise.

Now wolde God my wit myghte suffise
To tellen al that longeth to that art!
And nathelees, yow wol I tellen part. 717
Syn that my lord is goon, I wol nat spare;
Swich thyng as that I knowe I wol declare.

Heere endeth the prologe of the Chanons Yemannes Tale.

Heere bigynneth the Chanons Yeman his Tale.

With this Chanon I dwelt have seven yeer,
And of his science am I never the neer.
Al that I haddē I have lost therby;
And God woot, so hath many mo than I.
Ther I was wont to be right fressh and gay
Of clothyng, and of oother good array, 725
Now may I were an hose upon myn heed;
And wher my colour was bothe fressh and reed,
Now is it wan and of a leden hewe.
Whoso it useth, soore shal he rewe. 729
And of my swynk yet blered is myn eye;
Lo, which advantage is to multiplie!

That slidyng science hath me maad so bare
That I have no good, wher-that-ever I fare, 733
And yet I am endetted so therby
Of gold that I have borwed trewely
That whil I lyve I shal it quite nevere.

Lat every man be war by me forevere. 737
What maner man that casteth hym therto,
If he continue, I holde his thrift ydo;
For so helpe me God, therby shal he nat wyne,
But empte his purs, and make hise wittes thynne. 741
And whan he, thurgh his madnesse and folye,
Hath lost his owene good thurgh jupartye,
Thanne he exciteth oother folk therto, 744
To lesen hir good, as he hym self hath do.
For unto shrewes joye it is and ese
To have hir felawes in peyne and disese.
Thus was I ones lerned of a clerk —

Of that no charge; I wol speke of oure werk. 749
Whan we been there as we shul excercise
Oure elvysshe craft, we semen wonder wise,
Oure termes been so clergial and so queynte;
I blowe the fir til that myn herte feynte. 753

What sholde I tellen eche proporcion
Of thynges whiche that we werche upon —
As on fyve or sixe ounces, may wel be,
Of silver, or som oother quantitee — 757
And bisye me to telle yow the names
Of orpyment, brent bones, iren squames,
That into poudre grounden been ful smal;
And in an erthen pot how put is al, 761
And salt yput in, and also papeer,
Biform thise poudres that I speke of heer;
And wel ycovered with a lampe of glas;
And muchel oother thyng which that ther was; 765
And of the pot and glasses enlutyng,
That of the eyr myghte passe out nothyng;
And of the esy fir, and smart also,
Which that was maad; and of the care and wo 769
That we hadden in oure matires sublymyng,

And in amalgamyng and calcenyng
 Of quyksilver, yclept mercurie crude?
 For alle our sleightes, we kan nat conclude. 773
 Oure orpyment, and sublymed mercurie,
 Oure grounden litarge eek on the porfurie,
 And ech of thise of ounces a certeyn —
 Noght helpeth us; oure labour is in veyn; 777
 Ne eek oure spirites ascencioun,
 Ne oure matires that lyen al fix adoun,
 Mowe in oure werkyng nothyng us availle,
 For lost is al oure labour and travaille; 781
 And al the cost — a twenty devel way! —
 Is lost also, which we upon it lay.

Ther is also ful many another thyng
 That is unto oure craft apertenying, 785
 Though I by ordre hem nat reherce kan,
 Bycause that I am a lewed man,
 Yet wol I telle hem as they come to mynde,
 Thogh I ne kan nat sette hem in hir kynde: 789
 As boole armonyak, verdegrees, boras;
 And sondry vessels maad of erthe and glas —
 Oure uryngals, and our descensories,
 Violes, crosletz, and sublymatories, 793
 Cucurbites, and alambikes eek,
 And othere swiche, deere ynough a leek!
 Nat nedeth it for to reherce hem alle;
 Watres rubifyng, and boles galle, 797
 Arsenyk, sal armonyak, and brymstoon;
 And herbes koude I telle eek many oon,
 As egremoyne, valerian, and lunarie,
 And othere swiche, if that me liste tarie; 801
 Oure lampes brennyng bothe nyght and day,
 To brynge aboute oure purpos, if we may;
 Oure fourneys eek of calcinacion
 And of watres albificacion; 805
 Unslekke lym, chalk, and gleyre of an ey,
 Poudres diverse, assches, donge, pisse, and cley;
 Cered pottes, sal-peter, vitriole;
 And diverse fires maad of wode and cole; 809

Sal-tartre, alkaly, and sal preparat;
 And combust matires and coagulat;
 Cley maad with hors and mannes heer; and oille
 Of tartre, alum glas, berme, wort, and argoille, 813
 Resalgar; and oure matires enbibyng;
 And eek of oure matires encorporyng;
 And of oure silver citrinacion;
 Oure cementyng and fermentacion; 817
 Oure yngottes, testes, and many mo.

I wol yow telle, as was me taught also,
 The foure spirites and the bodies sevene,
 By ordre as ofte I herde my lord hem nevene. 821

The firste spirit quyksilver called is;
 The seconde orpyment; the thridde, ywis,
 Sal armonyak; and the ferthe brymstoon.
 The bodyes sevene eek, lo, hem heere anoon: 825
 Sol gold is; and Luna, silver, we threpe;
 Mars, iren; Mercurie quyksilver we clepe;
 Saturnus, leed; and Juppiter is tyn;
 And Venus, coper, by my fader kyn. 829

This cursed craft whoso wole excercise,
 He shal no good han that hym may suffice;
 For al the good he spendeth therabout
 He lese shal, therof have I no doute. 833

Who that listeth outen his folie,
 Lat hym come forth and lerne multiplie.
 And every man that oght hath in his cofre,
 Lat hym appiere and wexe a philosophre. 837

Ascaunses that craft is so light to leere?
 Nay, nay, God woot, al be he monk or frere,
 Preest, or chanon, or any oother wyght,
 Though he sitte at his book bothe day and nyght, 841

In lernyng of this eluysshe, nyce loore,
 Al is in veyn; and parde muchel moore.
 To lerne a lewed man this subtiltee —
 Fy! spek nat therof, for it wol nat bee. 845

And konne he letterure, or konne he noon,
 As in effect, he shal fynde it al oon;
 For bothe two, by my savacion,

THE CHANONS YEMANNES TALE 469

Concluden in multiplicacion 849

Ylike wel, whan they han al ydo;
This is to seyn, they faillen bothe two.

Yet forgat I to maken rehersaille
Of watres corosif, and of lymaille, 853

And of bodies mollificacion,
And also of hire induracion.
Oilles, ablucions, and metal fusible —
To tellen al wolde passen any Bible 857

That owher is; wherfore, as for the beste,
Of alle thise names now wol I me reste;
For as I trowe, I have yow toold ynowe
To reyse a feend, al looke he never so rowe. 861

A, nay! lat be! the Philosophres Stoon,
Elixer clept, we sechen faste echoon;
For hadde we hym, thanne were it siker ynow.
But unto God of hevene I make avow, 865

For al oure craft, whan we han al ydo,
With al oure sleighte, he wol nat come us to.
He hath ymaad us spenden muchel good;
For sorwe of which almoost we wexen wood, 869

But that good hope crepeth in oure herte,
Supposynge evere, though we sore smerte,
To be releved by hym afterward.
Swich supposyng and hope is sharpe and hard; 873

I warne yow wel, it is to seken evere;
That futur temps hath maad men to dissevere,
In trust therof, from al that evere they hadde.
Yet of that art they kan nat wexen'sadde; 877

For unto hem it is a bitter-sweete,
So semeth it; for nadde they but a sheete
Which that they myghte wrappe hem inne at nyght
And a brat to walken inne by daylyght, 881

They wolde hem selle and spenden on the craft;
They kan nat stynte til nothyng be laft.
And everemoore, where that evere they goon,
Men may hem knowe by smel of brymstoon. 885

For al the world, they stynken as a goot;
Hir savour is so rammyssh and so hoot

That, though a man a mile from hem be,
 The savour wole infecte hym, truste me. 889
 And thus by smel and by threedbare array,
 If that men liste, this folk they knowe may.
 And if a man wole aske hem pryvely
 Why they been clothed so unthriftily, 893
 They right anon wol rownen in his ere
 And seyn that if that they espied were,
 Men wolde hem slee bycause of hir science.
 Lo, thus this folk bitrayen. innocence! 897
 Passe over this! I go my tale unto.
 Er that the pot be on the fir ydo
 Of metals with a certeyn quantitee,
 My lord hem tempreth, and no man but he — 901
 Now he is goon, I dare seyn boldely —
 For as men seyn, he kan doon craftily;
 Algate, I woot wel he hath swich a name;
 And yet ful oft he renneth in a blame. 905
 And wite ye how? ful ofte it happeth so,
 The pot tobreketh, and farewel, al is go!
 Thise metals been of so greet violence
 Oure walles mowe nat make hem resistance, 909
 But-if they weren wroght of lym and stoon,
 They percen so, and thurgh the wal they goon.
 And somme of hem synken into the ground;
 Thus han we lost by tymes many a pound. 913
 And somme are scatered al the floor aboute;
 Somme lepe into the roof — withouten doute,
 Though that the feend noght in oure sighte hym shewe,
 I trowe he with us be, that ilke shrewe! 917
 In helle, where that he lord is and sire,
 Nis ther moore wo, ne moore rancour, ne ire.
 Whan that oure pot is broke, as I have sayd,
 Every man chit and halt hym yvele apayd. 921
 Somme seyde it was along on the fir makyng;
 Somme seyde nay, it was on the blowyng.
 Thanne was I fered, for that was myn office.
 'Straw!' quod the thridde; 'ye been lewed and nyce; 925
 It was nat tempred as it oghte be.'

- 'Nay,' quod the fourthe, 'stynt and herkne me:
 Bycause our fir ne was nat maad of beech,
 That is the cause, and oother noon, so theech!' 929
 I kan nat telle wheron it was along,
 But wel I woot greet strif us is among.
 'What!' quod my lord, 'ther is namoore to doone.
 Of thise perils I wol be war eftsoone. 933
 I am right siker that the pot was crased.
 Be as be may, be ye nothyng amased;
 As usage is, lat swepe the floor as swithe.
 Plukke up youre hertes, and beeth glad and blithe!' 937
 The mullok on an heepe sweped was;
 And on the floor ycast a canevas;
 And al this mullok in a syve ythrowe,
 And sifted, and ypiked many a throwe. 941
 'Pardee!' quod oon, 'somwhat of oure metal
 Yet is ther heere, though that we han nat al.
 Although this thyng myshapped have as now,
 Another tyme it may be wel ynow. 945
 Us moste putte oure good in aventure.
 A marchant, pardee, may nat ay endure,
 Trusteth me wel, in his prosperitee;
 Somtyme his good is drenched in the see, 949
 And somtyme comth it sauf unto the londe.'
 'Pees!' quod my lord; 'the nexte tyme I shal fonde
 To bryngen oure craft al in another plite;
 And but I do, sires, lat me han the wite. 953
 Ther was defaute in somewhat, wel I woot.'
 Another seyde the fir was over hoot.
 And be it hoot or coold, I dar seye this —
 That we concluden everemoore amys. 957
 We faille of that which that we wolden have,
 And in oure madnesse everemoore we rave.
 And whan we been togidres everichoon,
 Every man semeth a Salomon. 961
 But al thyng which that shineth as the gold
 Nis nat gold as that I have herd it told;
 Ne every appul that is fair to eye
 Ne is nat good, what-so men clappe or crye. 965

Right so, lo! fareth it amonges us.
 He that semeth the wiseste, by Jesus,
 Is moost fool whan it cometh to the preef;
 And he that semeth trewest is a theef. 969
 That shul ye knowe er that I fro yow wende,
 By that I of my tale have maad an ende.

Explicit prima pars. Et sequitur pars secunda.

Ther was a chanon of religioun
 Amonges us wolde infecte al a toun, 973
 Thogh it as greet were as was Nynnyvee,
 Rome, Alisaundre, Troye, and othere three.
 His sleightes and his infinit falsnesse
 Ther koude no man writen, as I gesse, 977
 Though that he lyve myghte a thousand yeer.
 In al this world of falshede nas his peer;
 For in hise termes so he wolde hym wynde,
 And speke hise wordes in so sly a kynde, 981
 Whanne he commune shal with any wight,
 That he wol make hym doten anon right,
 But it a feend be, as hymselfen is.
 Ful many a man hath he bigiled er this; 985
 And wole, if that he lyve may a while.
 And yet men ride and goon ful many a mile
 Hym for to seke and have his aqueyntaunce,
 Noght knowynge of his false governaunce. 989
 And if yow list to yeve me audience,
 I wol it telle heere in youre presence.
 But worshipful chanons religious,
 Ne demeth nat that I desclaundre youre hous, 993
 Although that my tale of a chanoun bee.
 Of every ordre som shrewe is, pardee;
 And God forbede that al a compaignye
 Sholde rewe o singuleer mannes folye. 997
 To sclaundre yow is nothyng myn entente,
 But to correcten that is mys I mente.
 This tale was nat oonly toold for yow,
 But eek for othere mo. Ye woot wel how 1001

- That among Cristes apostles twelve
 Ther nas no traytour but Judas hymselfe.
 Thanne why sholde al the remenant have a blame,
 That giltlees were? By yow I seye the same — 1005
 Save oonly this, if ye wol herkne me:
 If any Judas in youre covent be,
 Remoeveth hym bitymes, I yow rede,
 If shame or los may causen any drede; 1009
 And beeth no thyng displeased, I yow preye,
 But in this cas herketh what I shal seye.
 In London was a preest annueleer,
 That therinne hadde dwelled many a yeer; 1013
 Which was so plesaunt and so servysable
 Unto the wyf where-as he was at table
 That she wolde suffre hym nothyng for to paye
 For bord ne clothyng, wente he never so gaye; 1017
 And spendyng silver hadde he right ynow.
 Therof no fors; I wol procede as now,
 And telle forth my tale of the chanon
 That broghte this preest to confusion. 1021
 This false chanon cam upon a day
 Unto this preestes chambre, wher he lay,
 Bisechyng hym to lene hym a certeyn
 Of gold, and he wolde quite it hym ageyn. 1025
 'Leene me a marc,' quod he, 'but dayes three,
 And at my day I wol it quiten thee.
 And if so be that thow me fynde fals,
 Another day do hange me by the hals!' 1029
 This preest hym took a marc, and that as swithe.
 And this chanoun hym thanked ofte sithe,
 And took his leve, and wente forth his weye;
 And at the thridde day broghte his moneye, 1033
 And to the preest he took his gold agayn;
 Wherof this preest was wonder glad and fayn.
 'Certes,' quod he, 'nothyng anoyeth me
 To lene a man a noble, or two or thre, 1037
 Or what thyng were in my possession,
 Whan he so trewe is of condicion
 That in no wise he breke wole his day;

- To swich a man I kan never seye nay.' 1041
 'What,' quod this chanoun, 'sholde I be untrewed?
 Nay, that were thyng yfallen al of newe.
 Trouthe is a thyng that I wol evere kepe
 Into that day in which that I shal crepe 1045
 Into my grave, or ellis God forbede!
 Bileveth this as siker as the Crede.
 God thanke I — and in good tyme be it sayd —
 That ther was nevere man yet yvele apayd 1049
 For gold ne silver that he to me lente;
 Ne nevere falshede in myn herte I mente.
 And sire,' quod he, 'now of my pryvetee,
 Syn ye so goodlich han been unto me, 1053
 And kithed to me so greet gentillesse,
 Somwhat to quyte with youre kyndenesse
 I wol yow shewe, if that yow list to leere.
 I wol yow teche pleynly the manere 1057
 How I kan werken in philosophie.
 Taketh good heede; ye shul wel seen at eye
 That I wol doon a maistrie er I go.' 1060
 'Ye,' quod the preest; 'ye, sire, and wol ye so?
 Marie, therof I pray yow hertely.'
 'At youre comandement, sire, trewely,'
 Quod the chanon, 'and ellis God forbeede.'
 Loo, how this theef koude his service beede! 1065
 Ful sooth it is that swich profred servyse
 Stynketh, as witnessen thise olde wyse;
 And that ful soone I wol it verifie
 In this chanon, roote of alle trecherie, 1069
 That everemoore delit hath and gladnesse —
 Swiche feendly thoughtes in his herte impresse —
 How Cristes peple he may to meschief brynge.
 God kepe us from his false dissymulynge! 1073
 Noght wiste this preest with whom that he delte,
 Ne of his harm comynge he no thyng felte.
 O sely preest! O sely innocent,
 With coveitise anon thou shalt be blent! 1077
 O gracelees, ful blynd is thy conceite;
 Nothyng ne artow war of the deceite

Which that this fox yshapen hath for thee.
 Hise wily wrenches thou ne mayst nat flee. 1081
 Wherefore, to go to the conclusion,
 That refereth to thy confusion,
 Unhappy man, anon I wol me hye
 To tellen thyn unwit and hie folye, 1085
 And eek the falsnesse of that oother wrecche,
 As ferforth as my konnyng may strecche.

This chanon was my lord, ye wolden weene?
 Sire Hoost, in feith, and by the hevenes queene, 1089
 It was another chanon, and nat hee,
 That kan an hundred foold moore subtiltee.
 He hath bitrayed folkes many tyme;
 Of his falshede it dulleth me to ryme. 1093
 Evere whan that I speke of his falshede,
 For shame of hym my chekes wexen rede —
 Algates they bigynnen for to glowe,
 For reednesse have I noon, right wel I knowe, 1097
 In my visage; for fumes diverse
 Of metals, whiche ye han herd me reherce,
 Consumed and wasted han my reednesse.
 Now taak heede of this chanons cursednesse! 1101

'Sire,' quod he to the preest, 'lat youre man gon
 For quyksilver, that we hadde it anon,
 And lat hym bryngen ounces two or three;
 And whan he comth, as faste shal ye see 1105
 A wonder thyng, which ye saugh nevere er this.'

'Sire,' quod the preest, 'it shal be doon ywis.'
 He bad his servant fecchen hym this thyng;
 And he al redy was at his biddying, 1109
 And wente hym forth, and cam anon agayn
 With this quyksilver, soothly for to sayn,
 And toke thise ounces thre to the chanoun.
 And he hem leyde faire and wel adoun, 1113
 And bad the servant coles for to brynge,
 That he anon myghte go to his werkynge.

The coles right anon weren yfet;
 And this chanon took out a crosselet 1117
 Of his bosom, and shewed it to the preest.

- 'This instrument,' quod he, 'which that thou seest,
 Taake in thyn hand, and put thyself therinne
 Of this quyksilver an ounce and heer bigynne, 1121
 In the name of Crist, to wexe a filosofre!
 Ther been ful fewe to whiche I wolde profre
 To shewen hem thus muche of my science.
 For ye shul seen heer by experience 1125
 That this quyksilver wol I mortifye
 Right in youre sighte anon, I wol nat lye,
 And maken as good silver and as fyn
 As ther is any in youre purse or myn, 1129
 Or elleswhere, and make it malliable,
 And elles holdeth me fals and unable Amonges folk forevere to appeere.
 I have a poudre heer that coste me deere 1133
 Shal make al good, for it is cause of al
 My konnyng which I to yow shewen shal.
 Voyde youre man, and lat hym be ther-oute;
 And shette the dore, whils we been aboute 1137
 Oure pryvetee, that no man us espie,
 Whils that we werke in this philosophie.'
 Al as he bad, fulfilled was in dede.
 This ilke servant anon right out-yede, 1141
 And his maister shette the dore anon,
 And to hire labour spedily they gon.
 This preest at this cursed chanons bidding
 Upon the fir anon sette this thyng, 1145
 And blew the fir, and bisyed hym ful faste.
 And this chanon into the crosselet caste
 A poudre, noot I wherof that it was Ymaad — outhur of chalk, outhur of glas, 1149
 Or somewhat elles was nat worth a flye —
 To blynde with the preest, and bad hym hye
 The coles for to couchen al above
 The crosselet. 'For in tokenyng I thee love,' 1153
 Quod this chanon, 'thyne owene handes two Shul werchen al thyng which shal heer be do.'
 'Graunt mercy,' quod the preest, and was ful glad;
 And couched coles, as that the chanon bad. 1157

And while he bisy was, this feendly wrecche —
 This false chanoun, the foule feend hym fecche! —
 Out of his bosom he took a bechen cole,
 In which ful subtilly was maad an hole, 1161
 And therinne put was of silver lemaille
 An ounce, and stopped was, withouten faille,
 The hole with wex, to kepe the lemaille in.
 And understondeth that this false gyn 1165
 Was nat maad ther, but it was maad bifore;
 And othere thynges I shal tellen moore
 Herafterward, whiche that he with hym broghte.
 Er he cam there, hym to bigile he thoghte; 1169
 And so he dide er that they wente atwynne;
 Til he had terved hym he koude nat blynne.
 It dulleth me, whan that I of hym speke;
 On his falshede fayn wolde I me wreke, 1173
 If I wiste how; but he is heere and there,
 He is so variaunt that he abit nowhere.

But taketh heede now, sires, for Goddes love!
 He took this cole of which I spak above, 1177
 And in his hand he baar it pryvely,
 And whils the preest couchede bisily
 The coles, as I tolde yow er this,
 This chanon seyde, 'Freend, ye doon amys; 1181
 This is nat couched as it oghte be.
 But soone I shal amenden it,' quod he.
 'Now lat me medle therwith but a while,
 For of yow have I pitee, by Seint Gile. 1185
 Ye been right hoot. I se wel how ye swete.
 Have heer a clooth, and wipe away the wete.'
 And whiles that the preest wiped his face,
 This chanon took his cole — with harde grace! — 1189
 And leyde it above, upon the myddeward
 Of the crosselet, and blew wel afterward,
 Til that the coles gonne faste brenne.
 'Now yeve us drynke!' quod the chanon thenne; 1193
 'As swithe al shal be wel, I undertake.
 Sitte we down, and lat us myrie make.'
 And whan that this chanones bechen cole

- Was brent, al the lemaille out of the hole 1197
 Into the crosselet fil anon adoun;
 And so it moste nedes, by resoun,
 Syn it so evene aboven it couched was.
 But therof wiste the preest nothyng, alas! 1201
 He demed alle the coles yliche good;
 For of that sleighte he nothyng understood.
 And whan this alkamystre saugh his tyme,
 'Ris up,' quod he, 'sire preest, and stonde by me; 1205
 And, for I woot wel ingot have I noon,
 Gooth walketh forth and brynge us a chalk stoon;
 For I wol make oon of the same shap
 That is an ingot, if I may han hap. 1209
 And bryngeth eek with yow a bolle or a panne
 Ful of water, and ye shul se wel thanne
 How that oure bisynesse shal thryve and preeve.
 And yet for ye shul han no mysbileeve 1213
 Ne wrong conceite of me in youre absence,
 I ne wol nat been out of youre presence,
 But go with yow and come with yow ageyn.'
- The chambre dore, shortly for to seyn, 1217
 They opened and shette, and wente hir weye;
 And forth with hem they carieden the keye;
 And coome agayn withouten any delay.
 What sholde I tarien al the longe day? 1221
 He took the chalk and shoope it in the wise
 Of an ingot, as I shal yow devyse.
- I seye he took out of his owene sleeve
 A teyne of silver — yvele moot he cheeve! — 1225
 Which that was nat but an ounce of weighte.
 And taaketh heede now of his cursed sleighte!
- He shoope his ingot in lengthe and eek in breede
 Of this teyne, withouten any drede, 1229
 So slyly that the preest it nat espide;
 And in his sleve agayn he gan it hide,
 And fro the fir he took up his mateere
 And in thyngot putte it, with myrie cheere, 1233
 And in the water vessel he it caste,
 Whan that hym luste, and bad the preest as faste:

'What that heer is, put in thin hand and grope.
Thow fynde shalt ther silver as I hope.'

1237

He putte his hand in and took up a teyne

1240

Of silver fyn. And glad in every veyne
Was this preest, whan he saugh it was so.

'Goddess blessyng, and his moodres also,

And alle halwes, have ye sire chanon,'

Seyde this preest, 'and I hir malison!

1245

But and ye vouchesauf to techen me

This noble craft and this subtiltee,

I wol be youre in al that evere I may!'

Quod the chanon, 'Yet wol I make assay
The seconde tyme, that ye may taken heede

1249

And been expert of this, and in youre neede

Another day assaye in myn absence

This disciplyne and this crafty science.

1253

Lat take another ounce,' quod he tho,

'Of quyksilver, withouten wordes mo,

And do therwith as ye han doon er this

With that oother, which that now silver is.'

1257

This preest hym bisieth in al that he kan

To doon as this chanon, this cursed man,

Comanded hym; and faste he blew the fir,

For to come to theeffect of his desir.

1261

And this chanon right in the meene while

Al redy was the preest eft to bigile.

And for a contenance in his hand he bar

An holwe stikke — taak kepe and be war! —

1265

In the ende of which an ounce, and namoore,

Of silver lemaille put was as bifore

In his cole, and stopped with wex weel,

For to kepe in his lemaille every deel.

1269

And whil this preest was in his bisynesse,

This chanon with his stikke gan hym dresse

To hym anon, and his poudre caste in,

As he dide er — the devel out of his skyn

1273

Hym terve, I pray to God, for his falshede!

For he was evere fals in thoght and dede.

And with this stikke above the crosselet,

That was ordeyned with that false jet, 1277
 He stired the coles til relente gan

The wex agayn the fir, as every man,
 But it a fool be, woot wel it moot nede,
 And al that in the stikke was out-yede 1281
 And in the crosselet hastily it fel.

Now, goode sires, what wol ye bet than wel?
 Whan that this preest thus was bigiled ageyn,
 Supposynge noght but treuthe, sooth to seyn, 1285
 He was so glad that I ne kan nat expresse
 In no manere his myrthe and his gladnesse.

And to the chanon he profred eftsoone
 Body and good. 'Ye,' quod the chanon soone, 1289
 'Though poure I be, crafty thou shalt me fynde;
 I warne thee yet is ther moore bihynde.

'Is ther any copper herinne?' seyde he.

'Ye,' quod the preest, 'sire, I trowe wel ther be.' 1293

'Elles go bye us som, and that as swithe.

Now, goode sire, go forth thy wey and hy thel'

He wente his wey, and with the copper cam.
 And this chanon it in hise handes nam, 1297
 And of that copper weyed out but an ounce.

Al to symple is my tonge to pronounce,
 As ministre of my wit, the doublenesse
 Of this chanon, roote of alle cursednesse. 1301

He semed freendly to hem that knewe hym noght,
 But he was feendly bothe in herte and thoght.

It weerieth me to telle of his falsnesse;
 And nathelees yet wol I it expresse 1305

To thentente that men may be war therby,
 And for noon oother cause trewely.

He putte the ounce of copper in the crosselet,
 And on the fir as swithe he hath it set, 1309

And caste in poudre; and made the preest to blowe,
 And in his werkyng for to stoupe lowe,
 As he dide er. And al nas but a jape.

Right as hym liste, the preest he made his ape. 1313

And afterward in the ingot he it caste,
 And in the panne putte it at the laste

Of the water. In he putte his owene hand;
 And in his sleve, as ye biforehand 1317
 Herde me telle, hadde a silver teyne.

He slyly tooke it out, this cursed heyne,
 Unwityng this preest of his false craft,
 And in the pannes botme he hath it laft; 1321
 And in the water rombled to and fro,
 And wonder pryvely took up also

The coper teyne, noght knowynge this preest,
 And hidde it, and hym hente by the breest, 1325
 And to hym spak, and thus seyde in his game,
 'Stoupeth adoun! by God ye be to blame!
 Helpeth me now as I dide yow whil-er!
 Putte in youre hand, and looketh what is theer.' 1329

This preest took up this silver teyne anon;
 And thanne seyde the chanon, 'Lat us gon
 With thise thre teynes whiche that we han wrought
 To som goldsmyth, and wite if they been ouht. 1333
 For by my feith, I nolde for myn hood
 But if that they were silver fyn and good;
 And that as swithe preeved it shal bee.'
 Unto the goldsmyth with thise teynes three 1337
 They wente, and putte thise teynes in assay
 To fir and hamer. Myghte no man seye nay
 But that they weren as hem oghte be.

This sotted preest, who was gladder than he? 1341
 Was nevere brid gladder agayn the day,
 Ne nyghtyngale in the seson of May.
 Nas nevere man that luste bet to synge,
 Ne lady lustier in carolynges, 1345
 Or for to speke of love and wommanhede;
 Ne knyght in armes to doon an hardy dede,
 To stonden in gracē of his lady deere,
 Than hadde this preest this soory craft to leere. 1349
 And to the chanon thus he spak and seyde:
 'For love of God, that for us alle deyde,
 And as I may deserve it unto yow,
 What shal this receite coste? telleth now.' 1353

'By oure Lady,' quod this chanon, 'it is deere,

- I warne yow wel, for save I and a frere,
In Engelond ther kan no man it make.
‘No fors,’ quod he; ‘now, sire, for Goddes sake,
What shal I paye? telleth me, I preye.’ 1357
‘Ywis,’ quod he, ‘it is ful deere, I seye.
Sire, at o word, if that thee list it have,
Ye shul paye fourty pound, so God me save;
And nere the freendshipe that ye dide er this 1361
To me, ye sholde paye moore, ywis.’
This preest the somme of fourty pound anon
Of nobles fette, and took hem everichon 1365
To this chanon for this ilke receit.
Al his werkyng nas but fraude and deceit.
‘Sire preest,’ he seyde, ‘I kepe han no loos
Of my craft, for I wolde it kept were cloos. 1369
And as ye love me, kepeth it secree;
For and men knewen al my soutiltee,
By God they wolden han so greet envye
To me bycause of my philosophye 1373
I sholde be deed; ther were noon oother weye.’
‘God it forbeede,’ quod the preest, ‘what sey ye?
Yet hadde I levere spenden al the good
Which that I have, or elles wexe I wood, 1377
Than that ye sholden falle in swiche mescheef.’
‘For youre good wyl, sire, have ye right good preef,’
Quod the chanon. ‘And farwel, grant mercy!’
He wente his wey, and never the preest hym sy 1381
After that day. And whan that this preest shoold
Maken assay, at swich tyme as he wolde,
Of this receit, farwel, it wolde nat be!
Lo, thus byjaped and bigiled was he. 1385
Thus maketh he his introduccion,
To brynge folk to hir destruccion.
Considereth, sires, how that in ech estaat
Bitwixe men and gold ther is debaat 1389
So ferforth, that unnethë is ther noon.
This multiplying blent so many oon
That, in good feith, I trowe that it bee
The cause grettest of swich scarsetee. 1393

Philosophres speken so mystily
 In this craft that men kan nat come therby,
 For any wit that men han nowadayes.
 They mowe wel chiteren, as that doon jayes, 1397
 And in hir termes sette hir lust and peyne,
 But to hir purpos shul they nevere atteyne.
 A man may lightly lerne, if he have aught,
 To multiplie and brynge his good to naught. 1401

Lo, swich a lucre is in this lusty game
 A mannes myrthe it wol turne unto grame,
 And empten also grete and hevye purses,
 And maken folk for to purchacen curses 1405
 Of hem that han hir good therto ylent.

O fy for shame, they that han been brent,
 Allas, kan they nat flee the fires heete?
 Ye that it use, I rede ye it leete 1409

Lest ye lese al, for bet than nevere is late.
 Nevere to thryve were to long a date.

Though ye prolle ay, ye shul it nevere fynde.
 Ye been as boold as is Bayard the blynde, 1413
 That blondreth forth and peril casteth noon.

He is as boold to renne agayn a stoon
 As for to goon bisides in the weye.
 So faren ye that multiplie, I seye. 1417

If that youre eyen kan nat seen aright,
 Looke that youre mynde lakke noght his sight;
 For though ye looken never so brode and stare,

Ye shul nothyng wynne on that chaffare, 1421
 But wasten al that ye may rape and renne.
 Withdraweth the fir, lest it to faste brenne.

Medleth namoore with that art, I mene;
 For if ye doon, youre thrift is goon ful clene. 1425
 And right as swithe I wol yow tellen heere

What that the philosophres seyn in this mateere.

Lo, thus seith Arnold of the Newe Toun,
 As his Rosarie maketh mencion. 1429

He seith right thus, withouten any lye:
 'Ther may no man mercurie mortifie
 But it be with his brother knowlechyng.'

- How that he which that first seyde this thyng 1433
 Of philosophres fader was, Hermes —
 He seith how that the dragon doutelees
 Ne dyeth nat, but-if that he be slayn
 With his brother; and that is for to sayn, 1437
 By the dragon mercurie and noon oother
 He understood, and brymstoon by his brother,
 That out of Sol and Luna were ydrawe.
 'And therfore,' seyde he — taak heede to my sawe! — 1441
 'Lat no man bisye hym this art for to seche,
 But-if that he thentencion and speche
 Of philosophres understonde kan.
 And if he do, he is a lewed man; 1445
 For this science and this konnyng,' quod he,
 'Is of the secree of secrees, pardee!'
 Also ther was a disciple of Plato,
 That on a tyme seyde his maister to, 1449
 As his book Senior wol bere witnesse;
 And this was his demande, in soothfastnesse:
 'Telle me the namē of the privee stoon.'
 And Plato answerde unto hym anoon, 1453
 'Take the stoon that Titanos men name.'
 'Which is that?' quod he. 'Magnasia is the same,'
 Seyde Plato. 'Ye, sire, and is it thus?
 This is ignotum per ignocius. 1457
 What is Magnasia, good sire, I yow preye?'
 'It is a water that is maad, I seye,
 Of elementes foure,' quod Plato.
 'Telle me the roote, good sire,' quod he tho, 1461
 Of that water, if it be youre wille.'
 'Nay, nay,' quod Plato, 'certein, that I nylle.
 The philosophres sworn were everychoon
 That they sholden discovere it unto noon, 1465
 Ne in no book it write, in no manere;
 For unto Crist it is so lief and deere
 That he wol nat that it discovered bee
 But where it liketh to his deitee 1469
 Man for tenspire, and eek for to deffende
 Whom that hym liketh; lo, this is the ende.'

Thanne conclude I thus: sith that God of hevene
Ne wil nat that the philosophres nevene 1473
How that a man shal come unto this stoon,
I rede us for the beste lete it goon;
For whoso maketh God his adversarie,
As for to werken anythyng in contrarie 1477
Of his wil, certes never shal he thryve,
Thogh that he multiplie terme of lyve.
And there a poynt; for ended is my tale. 1480
God sende every trewe man boote of his bale! Amen.

Heere is ended the Chanons Yemannes Tale.

[FRAGMENT IX (GROUP H)]

THE MANCIPLE'S HEAD-LINK]

Heere folweth the Prologe of the Maunciples Tale.

Woot ye nat where ther stant a litel toun,
Which that ycleped is Bobbe-up-and-down,
Under the Blee, in Caunterbury weye?
Ther gan oure Hooste for to jape and pleye, 4
And seyde, 'Sires, what! Dun is in the myre!
Is ther no man for preyere ne for hyre
That wole awake oure felawe al bihynde?
A theef myghte hym ful lightly robbe and bynde. 8
See how he nappeth! see how, for Cokkes bones,
As he wol falle fro his hors atones!
Is that a cook of London, with meschance!
Do hym come forth, he knoweth his penaunce; 12
For he shal telle a tale, by my fey,
Although it be nat worth a botel hey.
Awake, thou Cook,' quod he, 'God yeve thee sorwe!
What eyleth thee to slepe by the morwe? 16
Hastow had fleen al nyght? or artow dronke?
Or hastow with som quene al nyght yswonke
So that thow mayst nat holden up thyn heed?'
This Cook, that was ful pale and nothyng reed, 20
Seyde to oure Hoost, 'So God my soule blesse,
As ther is falle on me swich hevynesse,
Noot I nat why, that me were levere slepe
Than the beste galon wyn in Chepe.' 24
'Wel,' quod the Maunciple, 'if it may doon ese
To thee, sire Cook, and to no wight displese
Which that heere rideth in this compaignye,
And that oure Hoost wole of his curteisye, 28
I wol as now excuse thee of thy tale;

For in good feith, thy visage is ful pale,
 Thyne eyen daswen eek, as that me thynketh,
 And wel I woot, thy breeth ful soure stynketh. 32
 That sheweth wel thou art nat wel disposed.
 Of me certeyn thou shalt nat been yglosed.
 See how he ganeth, lo, this dronken wight,
 As though he wolde swolwe us anon right! 36
 Hoold cloos thy mouth, man, by thy fader kyn;
 The devel of helle sette his foot therin!
 Thy cursed breeth infecte wole us alle.
 Fy, stynkyng swyn! fy, foule moote thou falle! 40
 A, taketh heede, sires, of this lusty man!
 Now, sweete sire, wol ye justen atte fan?
 Therto, me thynketh, ye been wel yshape.
 I trowe that ye dronken han wyn ape; 44
 And that is whan men pleyen with a straw.'

And with this speche the Cook wax wrooth and wraw,
 And on the Manciple he gan nodde faste
 For lakke of speche, and doun the hors hym caste, 48
 Where-as he lay til that men up hym took.
 This was a fair chyvachee of a cook —
 Allas, he nadde holde hym by his ladel!
 And er that he agayn were in his sadel, 52
 Ther was greet showvyng, bothe to and fro,
 To lifte hym up, and muchel care and wo,
 So unweeldy was this sory palled goost.

And to the Manciple thanne spakoure Hoost, 56
 'Bycause drynke hath dominacion
 Upon this man, by my savacion,
 I trowe lewedly he wolde telle his tale.
 For were it wyn, or oold or moysty ale, 60
 That he hath dronke, he speketh in his nose
 And fneseth faste, and eek he hath the pose.

He hath also to do moore than ynough 64
 To kepen hym and his capul out of slough.
 And if he falle from his capul eftsoone,
 Thanne shal we alle have ynough to doone
 In lifyng up his hevvy, dronken cors.
 Telle on thy tale; of hym make I no fors. 68

'But yet, Manciple, in feith, thou art to nyce,
 Thus openly reprove hym of his vice.
 Another day he wole, peraventure,
 Reclayme thee and brynge thee to lure. 72
 I meene, he speke wole of smale thynges,
 As for to pynchen at thy rekenynges,
 That were nat honeste if it cam to preef.'
 'No,' quod the Manciple, 'that were a greet mescheef; 76
 So myghte he lightly brynge me in the snare.
 Yet hadde I levere payen for the mare
 Which he rit on than he sholde with me stryve.
 I wol nat wratthen hym, al so moot I thryve!
 That that I speke, I seyde it in my bourde. 81
 And wite ye what? I have heer in a gourde
 A draghte of wyn, ye, of a ripe grape,
 And right anon ye shul seen a good jape. 84
 This Cook shal drynke therof, if that I may;
 Up payne of deeth, he wol nat seye me nay.'
 And certeynly, to tellen as it was,
 Of this vessel the Cook drank faste. Allas, 88
 What neded hym? He drank ynough biforn.
 And whan he hadde pouped in this horn,
 To the Manciple he took the gourde agayn.
 And of that drynke the Cook was wonder fayn, 92
 And thanked hym in swich wise as he koude.
 Thanne gan oure Hoost to laughen wonder loude,
 And seyde, 'I se wel it is necessarie
 Where-that we goon, that drynke we with us carie, 96
 For that wol turne rancour and disese
 Tacord and love, and many a wrong apese.
 O thou Bacus, yblessed be thy name,
 That so kanst turnen earnest into game! 100
 Worshipe and thank be to thy deitee.
 Of that mateere ye gete namoore of me.
 Telle on thy tale, Manciple, I thee preye.'
 'Wel, sire,' quod he; 'now herkneth what I seye.' 104

[The Manciple's Tale is a version of the ancient apologue of the Talking Bird. It is, I think, an early piece, written when Chaucer was still dominated by theories of formal rhetoric.]

[FRAGMENT X (GROUP I)]

THE BLANK-PARSON LINK]

Heere folweth the Prologe of the Persons Tale.

By that the Manciple hadde his tale al ended, The sonne fro the south lyne was descended So lowe that he ne nas nat to my sighte Degrees nyne and twenty as in highte.	4
Fourre of the klokke it was tho, as I gesse; For ellevene foot, or litel moore or lesse, My shadwe was, at thilke tyme as there, Of swiche feet as my lengthe parted were	8
In sixe feet equal of proporcion. Therwith the Moones exaltacion — I meene Libra — alwey gan ascende, As we were entryng at a thropes ende.	12
For which our Hoost, as he was wont to gye, As in this caas, oure joly compaignye, Seyde in this wise, 'Lordynges everichoon, Now lakketh us no tales mo than oon;	16
Fulfilled is my sentence and my decree. I trowe that we han herd of ech degree; Almoost fulfild is al myn ordinaunce. I pray to God so yeve hym right good chaunce	20
That telleth this tale to us lustily. 'Sire Preest,' quod he, artow a vicary? Or arte a person? sey sooth, by thy fey. Be what thou be, ne breke thou nat oure pley;	24
For every man save thou hath toold his tale. Unbokele, and shewe us what is in thy male; For trewely, me thynketh by thy cheere, Thou sholdest knytte up wel a greet mateere.	28
Telle us a fable anon, for Cokkes bones!'

- This Pèrson answerdē al atones,
 'Thou getest fable noon ytoold for me;
 For Paul, that writeth unto Tymothee, 32
 Repreveth hem that weyveth soothfastnesse
 And tellen fables and swich wrecchednesse.
 Why sholde I sowen draf out of my fest,
 Whan I may sowen whete if that me lest. 36
 For which I seye, if that yow list to heere
 Moralitee and vertuous mateere,
 And thanne that ye wol yeve me audience,
 I wol ful fayn, at Cristes reverence, 40
 Do yow plesaunce leefful, as I kan.
 'But trusteth wel, I am a southren man;
 I kan nat geeste "rum ram ruf" by lettre,
 Ne, God woot, rym holde I but litel bettre. 44
 And therfore, if yow list — I wol nat glose —
 I wol yow telle a myrie tale in prose
 To knytte up al this feeste and make an ende.
 'And Jesu, for his grace, wit me sende 48
 To shewe yow the wey in this viage
 Of thilke parfit glorious pilgrymage
 That highte Jerusalem celestial!
 And if ye vouche sauf, anon I shal 52
 Bigynne upon my tale; for which I preye
 Telle youre avys; I kan no bettre seye.
 'But nathelees this meditacion
 I putte it ay under correccion 56
 Of clerkes; for I am nat textueel.
 I take but the sentence, trusteth weel;
 Therfore I make a protestacion
 That I wol stonde to correccion.' 60
 Upon this word we han assented soone,
 For as us semed, it was for to dōone,
 To enden in som vertuous sentence,
 And for to yeve hym space and audience; 64
 And bede oure Hoost he sholde to hym seye
 That alle we to telle his tale hym preye.
 Oure Hoost hadde the wordes for us alle.
 'Sire Preest,' quod he, 'now faire yow bifalle! 68

Telleth,' quod he, youre meditacioun,
 But hasteth yow, the sonne wole adoun;
 Beth fructuous, and that in litel space.
 And to do wel God sende yow his grace!
 Sey what yow list, and we wol gladly heere.' 71
 And with that word, he seyde in this manere: 74
 69

Explicit probemium.

Heere bigynneth the Persons Tale.

Jer. 6°. State super vias & videte & interrogate de viis antiquis / que sit via bona / & ambulate in ea & incenietis refrigerium animabus vestris &c.

[75] Oure sweete Lord God of hevene, that no man wole perisse, but wole that we comen alle to the knoweleche of hym and the blissful lif that is perdurable, [76] amonesteth us by the prophete Jeremie, and seith in this wyse: [77] 'Stondeth upon the weyes, and seeth, and axeth of olde pathes — that is to seyn, of olde sentences — which is the goode wey, [78] and walketh in that wey, and ye shal fynde refresshyng for youre soules, &c.

[The Parson's Tale is not a tale, but a prose treatise on penitence, in three parts, occupying ninety-three pages.]

Here taketh the maker of this book his leve.

[1081] Now preye I to hem alle that herkne this litel tretys or rede that if ther be any thyng in it that liketh hem, that therof they thanken oure Lord Jesu Crist, of whom procedeth al wit and al goodnesse. [1082] And if ther be any thyng that displese hem, I preye hem also that they arrette it to the defaute of myn unkonnyng and nat to my wyl, that wolde ful fayn have seyde better if I hadde had konnyng; [1083] for oure Boke seith 'Al that is writen is writen for oure doctrine'; and that is myn entente.

[1084] Wherefore I biseke yow mekely, for the mercy of God, that ye preye for me, that Crist have mercy on me and foryeve me my giltes; [1085] and namely of my translacions and enditynges of worldly vanitees, the whiche I revoke in my retraccions: [1086] as is the book of Troilus; the book also of Fame; the book of the .xxv. Ladies; the book of the Duchesse: the book of Saint Valentynes day of the Parlement of Briddes; the Tales of Caunterbury, thilke that sownen into synne; [1087] the book of the Leon; and many another book, if they were in my remembrance; and many a song and many a leccherous lay, that Crist, for his grete mercy, foryeve me the synne.

[1088] But of the translacion of Boece de consolacione, and othere bookes of legendes of seintes, and omelies, and moralitee, and devocion, [1089] that thanke I oure Lord Jesu Crist, and his blisful Mooder, and alle the seintes of hevene, [1090] bisekyng hem that they, from hennesforth unto my lyves ende, sende me grace to biwayle my giltes and to studie to the salvacion of my soule, and graunte me grace, of verray penitence, confession and satisfaccion to doon in this present lyf; [1091] thurgh the benigne grace of Hym that is Kyng of Kynges and Preest over alle Preestes; that boghte us with the precious blood of His herte; [1092] so that I may been oon of hem at the day of doome that shulle be saved. Qui cum patre &cetera.

Heere is ended the book of the tales of Caunterbury, compiled by Geffrey Chaucer, of whos soule Jesu Crist have mercy!
Amen!

KEY TO ABBREVIATIONS IN THE NOTES

AA	Anelida and Arcite.
Arch	Archaeologia.
Archiv	Archiv für das Studium der neueren Sprachen und Literaturen.
Arderne	Treatise on the Fistula (EETS). 1910.
Baillie-Grohman	The Master of Game. 1908.
Boethius	Boethii Liber de Consolatione Philosophiae, trans. G. Chaucer.
Brusendorff	The Chaucer Tradition. 1925.
CA	Gower's Confessio Amantis. ed. Macaulay, 4 v., 1899-1902.
CkT	Cook's Tale.
ClT	Clerk's Tale.
Conn Ac	Transactions of the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences.
Cook, Hist Backgr	Historical Background of Chaucer's Knight (Conn Ac , XX, 161-240).
Coulton, Social Life	Social Life in England from the Conquest to the Reformation. 1918.
CT	Canterbury Tales.
Curry	Chaucer and the Mediæval Sciences. 1926.
CYT	Canon's Yeoman's Tale.
EDD	English Dialect Dictionary.
EETS	Early English Text Society.
ES	Englische Studien.
FkT	Franklin's Tale.
FrT	Friar's Tale.
Froissart	Chronicles, transl. by Johnes.
Hammond	Chaucer. A Bibliographical Manual. 1908.
Hinckley	Notes on Chaucer. A Commentary on the Prolog and Six Canterbury Tales. 1907.
HF	House of Fame.
JEGP	Journal of English and Germanic Philology.
Jerome	St. Jerome, Adversus Jovinianum.
JGP	Journal of Germanic Philology.
Kittredge	Chaucer and his Poetry. 1915.
KT	Knight's Tale.
Lanfranc	Chirurgie (EETS). 1894.
La Tour	The Book of the Knight of La Tour Landry (EETS). 1868.
Letter Book F, G, H	Calendar of Letter Books of the Corporation of London (ed. Sharpe).
LGW	Legende of Good Women.
Liddell	Chaucer: Prologue, Knightes Tale, Nonnes Prestes Tale. 1922.

LR	Life Records of Chaucer (Chaucer Soc.). 4 vols. 1875-1900.
Lounsbury	Studies in Chaucer. 3 vols. 1892.
McT	Manciple's Tale.
Mabieu	Les Lamentations de Matheolus (ed. Van Hamel). 2 vols.
Manly, Knight	"A Knight ther was" (Trans. Amer. Phil. Assn., xxxviii, 89-107).
Manly, New Light	Some New Light on Chaucer. 1926.
Manly, Rhet	Chaucer and the Rhetoricians (Warton Lecture, British Acad.). 1926.
Mel	Tale of Melibeus.
MiT	Miller's Tale.
MkT	Monk's Tale.
MLN	Modern Language Notes.
MLR	Modern Language Review.
MLT	Man of Law's Tale.
MPb	Modern Philology.
MiT	Merchant's Tale.
N and Q	Notes and Queries.
NPT	Nuns' Priest's Tale.
OED	Oxford English Dictionary.
PdT	Pardoner's Tale.
Petersen	On the Sources of the Nonne Prestes Tale. 1898.
PF	Parlement of Foules.
PMLA	Publications of the Modern Language Association.
PbQ	Philological Quarterly.
PbT	Physician's Tale.
PrT	Prioress's Tale.
PT	Parson's Tale.
Rom Rev	Romanic Review.
RR	Romance of the Rose.
RT	Reeve's Tale.
SbT	Shipman's Tale.
SmT	Summoner's Tale.
SNT	Second Nun's Tale.
SqT	Squire's Tale.
Stud Phil	Studies in Philology.
Tatlock	Development and Chronology of Chaucer's Works (Chaucer Soc.). 1907.
TC	Troilus and Criseyde.
Tes	Teseide.
Tb	Sir Thopas.
WBT	Wife of Bath's Tale.
Wells	Manual of the Writings in Middle English, 1050-1400 A.D. (with supplements).
Wylie	History of Henry IV. 4 vols. 1884-98.
ZsfrPb	Zeitschrift für romanische Philologie.

NOTES

THE PROLOGUE

1. This line is accented thus:

Whan' that A'prille with' his shou'res soo'te.

There is no evidence for making Aprille a trisyllable. This kind of line is called a "nine-syllabled" line. The use of it here gives the poem a quick start.

1-11. Cummings regards Boethius i, m. 5 as the main source of ll. 1-7 (MLN, XXXVII, 86). Perhaps so; but many mediaeval poems begin in similar fashion; cf. e.g., the romance of Fulk Fitz Warine, a fourteenth century prose version of a thirteenth century poem.

Our pleasure in the break-up of winter and the coming of spring is nothing to the joy felt by mediaeval Europeans. In the Middle Ages, during the winter, high and low had been uncomfortable in castle and cottage. Spring brought new life in a real sense to them as well as to the birds and flowers. Besides, they lived in the country or in small towns and saw day by day the reawakening of the earth. Mediaeval poetry in all languages is therefore full of charming expressions of the joy that was universally felt, and many records attest the genuineness of the feeling. For full accounts of spring sports, see Stow, A Survey of London, chapter xi, or Coulton, Social Life, sect. x and Chaucer's England, chaps. ix and xxi. Furthermore, almost every day of spring and every act of spring labor were connected with some folk custom originally belonging to the ancient pagan religion, the central theme of which was worship of the creative forces of nature; see Brand, Popular Antiquities, Chambers, Book of Days, Cornford, Origins of Greek Comedy, or E. K. Chambers, The Mediaeval Stage, vol. I.

Besides setting the tone of the poem, these lines give the approximate date of the events. Lines 1-2 tell us that the April showers have already had time to pierce the drought of March; ll. 7-8 make the date more definite. In April, the sun — called 'young' because everything is reborn at the vernal equinox — runs through parts of two signs of the Zodiac (see p. 135), Aries (April 1-11) and Taurus (April 12-30). As he has run his half-course in the Ram (Aries), it is obviously after April 11. More specific indications of the date are given later in the conversations linking the tales.

In l. 6 croppes means, not 'crops,' but 'shoots,' 'sprouts.'

The little birds of ll. 9-10 are probably nightingales, for the Knight of La Tour Landry says that during the courting season the nightingales "syng plesauntly day and night," but "whan they have rejoyssed thaire amorous desyre and plesaunces, thei make abace melodye, for thei syng no more." (La Tour, p. 156); cf. ll. 97-98. Pliny (Hist. Nat. x, 43) says they sing day and night for a fortnight. See Flügel, JEGP, I, 118.

12-18. The custom of making pilgrimages is one of the most interesting and important features of mediaeval life. Nothing in modern times quite compares with it. Every year from all parts of the Christian world people flocked by thousands to the shrines of the saints. Poverty was no obstacle to this sort of travel, for even the poorest could depend upon being fed and clothed by the boundless charity of mediaeval society. The wills of the rich often left funds to pay the expenses of pilgrims; and some guilds sent a certain number of their members annually to certain shrines. Most frequently, of course, people visited the holy places of their own country, but those oppressed with a heavier burden of sin, or suffering from a more stubborn disease, or animated by a greater love of travel and adventure sought the more distant shrines — Jerusalem, the city of the Crucifixion; Rome, the ancient city of St. Peter and the resting place of a thousand saints and martyrs; Santiago de Compostela, in Galicia, the shrine of St. James the Apostle; or Cologne, where lay the relics of the Three Kings, who had followed the star to the birthplace of Christ. Among the hundreds of shrines in England, the most famous was that of St. Thomas at Canterbury.

Thomas à Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, was murdered on December 29, 1170. Popular feeling ran so high that he was canonized as St. Thomas of Canterbury in 1173, and plenary indulgence was given for a pilgrimage to his shrine. Almost immediately he became the subject of romantic legends, and many miracles were wrought at his tomb, which soon became exceedingly rich from the gifts of the pious and the grateful.

The most detailed account of its wealth is that of an Italian traveler in 1496-97: "But the magnificence of the tomb of St. Thomas the Martyr, Archbishop of Canterbury, is that which surpasses all belief. This, notwithstanding its great size, is entirely covered over with plates of pure gold; but the gold is scarcely visible because of the variety of precious stones with which it is studded, such as sapphires, diamonds, rubies, balas-rubies, and emeralds; and on every side that the eye turns, something more beautiful than the other appears. Nor to this natural wealth is human artistry lacking, for the gold is carved and engraved in beautiful designs, both large and small, and set in relief are agates, jaspers and cornelians, and cameos, some of the cameos being of such size as I dare not state. But everything else is far surpassed by a ruby not larger than a man's thumb, which is set on the right of the altar. The church is rather dark, especially where the shrine is, and when we went to see it the sun was nearly setting and the day was cloudy, yet I saw that ruby as well as if I had it in my hand; they say it was the gift of a king of France." — A Relation of the Island of England (Camden Soc.), p. 30.

The famous scholar Erasmus wrote: "Gold was the meanest thing to be seen there. All shone and glittered with the rarest and most precious jewels, of an extraordinary bigness."

The antiquary John Stow said that when the shrine was stripped, at the dissolution of the monasteries in 1538, the spoil in gold and jewels "filled two great chests, such as six or eight strong men could do no more than convey one of them at once out of the church." — Annales, anno 1538.

17-18. We have here what is called in English "identical rhyme" and in French "rime riche." In modern English poetry this is avoided, but in Middle English it was sought for as a special beauty; in Old French, rhymes of this sort were sometimes used throughout a poem, e.g. Le Mariage des Sept Arts.

19. on a day. What day was this? See II, 6.

20ff. Chaucer does not tell us what was the cause of his devotion. He may have received the help of St. Thomas, and have been fulfilling a vow. It is also possible that he may actually have visited the shrine in connection with the illness of his wife, who seems to have been dead by the autumn of 1387. But after all, it is hardly likely that he is narrating the incidents of a real pilgrimage in which he took part. He must in any event have been familiar with the road and the pilgrimages, as he had often passed through Canterbury on his way to France; and after the spring of 1386 he apparently lived for several years at Greenwich, where he would have seen many a group of pilgrims passing.

20. the Tabard. In early times houses were not numbered but were distinguished by signs. The sign of the inn at which the pilgrims met was that of the tabard, a coat richly embroidered with armorial bearings. It is still worn by officers of the College of Arms. An authority on the subject describes it thus: "It has no sleeves, is whole before, and open at the sides, with a square collar, and is winged at the shoulders. It is often seen on ancient seals, and is what sovereigns, princes, nobles, gentry, all entitled to armorial bearings, wore over the other parts of their dress. When they went to the hostile field, the arms of the wearer were embroidered upon it." For each of the kings of arms (the highest officials) of the Herald's College the wardrobe allowance (in 1804, apparently) was as follows:

	l.	s.	d.
3½ yds. of blue satin @ 16 s.	6	16	0
2½ yds. of crimson satin @ 17 s.	2	2	6
1½ yds. of yellow satin @ 16 s.	1	4	0
3 yds. cloth of gold @ 3 l. 5 s.	9	15	0
2 lb. 6 oz. Venice gold @ 4 l. the lb.	10	0	0
6 oz. Venice gold lace @ 9 s. the oz.	2	14	0
4 oz. Venice gold lace with plate @ 9 s. 6 d.	1	18	0
1 lb. colored silk	2	0	0
8 oz. black silk @ 2 s.	0	16	0
8 oz. of pearl and spangles for the coat @ 8 s.	3	4	0
3½ yds. crimson taffeta for lining @ 15 s.	2	8	9
Embroidering it	26	13	4
Canvas and making	1

£71 11 7

— Noble, Hist. of the College of Arms, (ed. 1804), p. 49.

When the tabard had ceased to be commonly worn and the meaning of the term had been forgotten, the name of the inn was corrupted to the Talbot.

The best general account of the old inn is in Surrey Archaeological Society, Collections, xiii (see also the Victoria County History of Surrey, IV, 127). In Chaucer's time, and until the dissolution of the monasteries in 1548, the inn was the property of Hyde Abbey, near Winchester. The abbot's lodgings, when he visited London, were adjacent to the inn if not within its boundaries. The property, consisting originally of two tenements or holdings, was given to the Abbey of Hyde in 1306. Transcripts of deeds relating to it are preserved in MS Harl. 1761 of the British Museum, which is a cartulary of the Abbey lands ending with 1478. Details will be given later in an article in MPh. Here it will suffice to say that the tenements were deeded to the Abbey in 1306 by William de Ludegarsale on behalf of Hugh de Dyneton, or Dynyngton, and his wife Cecily, the real owners, on condition that Hugh and Cecily should, as long as they lived, have a corrody from Hyde Abbey of maintenance such as a monk would have, and their son Robert should have food and clothing such as were enjoyed by ministers of the Abbey. As some of Chaucer's ancestors were known as "de Dyneton" or "de Dynyngton," there may have been some actual connection of the donors with the Chaucer family.

The two tenements lay side by side, fronting on the east side of the high street, now Borough High Street, and running back to the common dyke of Southwark on the east. The original building was destroyed by the great Southwark fire of 1676, and the picture commonly printed (from Urry's edition of Chaucer) represents a later building. Even this has now disappeared, but the location is easily made out. The present public house called the Tabard occupies only a small part of the original site of the inn, which seems to have been a wedge-shaped piece of land, 322½ ft. deep, having a frontage of about 77½ ft. and being about 126½ ft. wide at the back.

24. Wel nyne and twenty. No doubt Chaucer means exactly what he says; see notes on 164 and 542-44.

28. wyde means 'spacious,' but it probably also suggests the hospitable welcome of the inn.

29. atte beste, 'in the best manner possible.' Atte is a combination of at and the. At a later time, when the final t had become silent, there was no difference in pronunciation between this compound and the simple word at; cf. also at first, at last.

30. shortly does not mean 'in a little while,' but 'to tell the story briefly.'

31. Chaucer here represents himself as taking the initiative in making the acquaintance of the other pilgrims. Most editors picture him as shy and reserved, but their view is based on a misunderstanding. Cf. VII, 1883ff.

43ff. The Knight is described first, undoubtedly because he is the person of highest rank in the group of pilgrims. Both his character and his career must have appealed to Chaucer's contemporaries as they do to us. The institution of chivalry was already doomed by the invention of gunpowder and the development of commerce, but as always happens to a doomed ideal, devotion to it burned in the hearts of some with unwonted, and even fantastic, intensity and purity, as can be read in many a page of Froissart and other chroniclers. Chaucer's Knight was not, as Skeat's note implies, a mercenary soldier who sought employment under foreign lords when there was no fighting going on at home. The campaigns to which he devoted his life — for the French wars are merely glanced at in l. 47 — had a twofold interest: first, they were all crusades against the infidels; secondly, they were all fought on the very borders of European civilization. They fall into three groups: (1) those against the Moors, at the western end of the Mediterranean — Algezir, Belmarye, and Tramysse; (2) those against Turks and other heathen at the eastern end — Alisaundre, Lyeys, Satalye, and Palatye; (3) those against Lithuanians and Tartars in what was then the borderland between Christians and heathens in the northeast — Lettowe and Ruce. The enemies in the northeast were rude, semi-civilized barbarians: those in the south were regarded as equal, if not superior, to the Christians in science, art, and general culture. The mysterious charm and wealth of the Orient are well suggested by that story — possibly heard by the Knight himself at Alisaundre or in Palatye — which the Squire began, but left half told.

The siege of Algezir, one of the most famous enterprises of its time, was part of the long warfare which resulted in driving the Moors out of Spain after an occupation of more than six hundred years. The city was the chief seaport of Granada and lay just west of the present fortress of Gibraltar. The Spaniards under King Alfonso XI invested the city on August 3, 1342. Money was sent to aid them by the pope and the king of France, and Christian knights came from France, Germany, and England to participate in this 'holy war,' for the salvation of their souls, as the Spanish Cronica records. The leaders of the bands from England were Henry, earl of Derby (later earl and duke of Lancaster), and William Montagu, earl of Salisbury. King Edward himself, in a letter to King Alfonso, speaks of the desire he had cherished to take part in the siege. Chaucer was an infant at this time but might later have heard tales of the siege from many of the English knights who were present; Henry of Lancaster was, of course, the father of the Duchess Blanche.

The king of Belmarye (the name of a tribe, the Beni-Marin, transferred to the territory occupied by them, a part of Morocco) was an ally of the Moorish king of Granada in 1342-44, but the fighting to which Chaucer refers in ll. 57 and 62 (Tramysse, modern Tlemçen, in western Algeria) perhaps belongs to a later date. There was a plan for an invasion in 1365: "une armee pour aller sur Sarrazins qui les royaumes de Grenade et de Belle Marine tiennent," Chron. de Sir Bertrand du Guesclin, chap. lv; cf. also chaps. lvii and lxvii. Froissart gives accounts of campaigns in the '80's.

The capture of Alexandria in Egypt by an army from many Christian lands under the leadership of Peter, king of Cyprus, in 1365, though of no permanent importance, was famous and highly spectacular and was celebrated in a poem of about 8000 lines (La Prise d'Alexandrie) by Guillaume de Machaut, the leading French poet of the day. Peter had visited all the courts of Europe to procure aid for his crusade and was feted everywhere. King Edward of England entertained him royally and, although he refused to commit England to the crusade, allowed all knights who wished to join Peter to do so. The Chronicon Angliae, p. 56, says there were present at the capture several (plures) from England and Aquitaine, who brought back with them "pannos aureos holosericos, splendoresque gemmarum exoticos, in testimonium tantae victoriae." Many who went were with Peter not only at Alexandria but also in campaigns in Satalye (Adalia) and Lyeyes (Ayas), two of the most important cities of Asia Minor, in 1361 and 1367. The S of Satalye, like that of Stamboul, is the remnant of the Greek preposition eis.

Palatye (modern Balat) was ruled by a Seljuk Turk, who was expelled in 1390 by the Ottoman Turk Bajazet (Bayezid). See Cook, Hist. Backgr., pp. 235 f. Cook notes that the name should be Palat'ia, not Palati'a.

The campaigns in Pruce (Prussia), Ruce (Russia), and Lettowe (Letau, Lithuania) were conducted under the leadership of the Knights of the Teutonic Order — a military order founded in Palestine, but early in the thirteenth century invited by Poland to aid in repelling the pagans of Lithuania and Prussia. The prestige of the order became so great that knights from all parts of Europe visited Königsberg, its principal city, to learn chivalry and take part in its wars. Many Englishmen were among these visitors.

From l. 87 we infer that the Knight had come straight from his port of landing to make his pilgrimage, no doubt to give thanks for his safe return, as was commonly done. If he had just come from Germany, he may have landed at Ipswich or Orwell (cf. l. 277) or Harwich; if from the East, his ship, coming through the strait of Gibraltar, may have landed at some port in the west of England, say Dartmouth (cf. l. 389). But in that case he would more probably have taken the pilgrim road from Winchester to Canterbury, not passing through London.

The romantic character of the Knight's career is suggested by ll. 62-63, which show that the tournament was not merely an amusement in peace but a method of warfare. Froissart describes such a tournament, in which ten Christian knights fought with the Saracens at the siege of the City of Africa in 1390 (Froissart, bk. iv, ch. 22). Vivid pictures of this chivalric type of warfare against the heathen (but placed nearly two hundred years earlier) are given in Scott's Talisman.

As the portrait is far from being merely typical, it may well be that of some real knight, or, more probably, a composite picture based upon the adventures of more than one knight. It may be noted that near the Thames Street house of Chaucer's father lived several members of the Scrope family whose careers resemble that of the Knight: Sir William Scrope was at the siege of Satalye; Sir Stephen was at the capture of Alexandria and in Prussia, Hungary, and the Orient; and Sir Geoffrey also fought with the Teutonic Knights and was buried at Königsberg. That Chaucer knew the Scopes well we learn from his own testimony in the Scrope-Grosvenor trial, 1386.

For many picturesque facts about the campaigns of the Knight, see Manly, Knight, or Cook, Hist. Backgr. Cook thinks Chaucer may have taken as his models Henry, earl of Lancaster (d. 1361) and his grandson Henry, earl of Derby (later Henry IV of England). But Chaucer's Knight, though probably a banneret, was apparently not a member of the nobility.

52. To begin the bord certainly meant to 'sit in the place of highest honor.' The Teutonic Knights occasionally held a special banquet called a Table of Honor, at which the "bord was bigonne" by the knight — of whatever nation — who was most renowned for his chivalry. Cook gives the best account of these "Tables" (Hist Backgr, pp. 209-12 and JEGP, XIV, 375-88) but strangely thinks that Chaucer can have heard of them from no one but Henry, earl of Derby. Chaucer, however, does not appear to be talking about the Tables of Honor, for he says that his Knight began the board "ful ofte tyme," whereas Cook says we know of only five Tables of Honor from 1377 to 1400. Chaucer apparently thought that the honor of beginning the board was assigned at every formal banquet — as was the custom, if we may believe the romances, cf. OED, s. v. board.

54. reysed. Reyse, n. and v., from Ger. Reise, was a technical military term in both French and English. It seems to have died out early in the fifteenth century, for the scribes of several of the MSS substitute some other word for it in the present passage: "been," "ridden," etc.

60. armee. Skeat adopted aryve, from MSS Ha⁴ and Gg, but an armee is 'an armed expedition' either by land or by sea. There is no good evidence for aryve in the sense of 'disembarkation.' For the use of at, cf. "The Squier come from a viage that he hadde ben atte" (La Tour, p. 51) translating, "l'escuier . . . vint d'un voyage et d'une armée ou il avoit esté."

70. vileynye is not 'wickedness' but 'rudeness,' 'lack of courtesy,' characteristic of a country boor (villanus); cf. l. 726.

72. Note that verray is an adjective, meaning 'true.' Chaucer never uses it as an adverb.

74. hors is plural (cf. § 18). Are we to suppose that the Yeoman was leading the Knight's war horse (destrier)? There was a regular post service of horses for travelers between Southwark and Canterbury, but none of our pilgrims, except perhaps the Shipman, seem to have made use of it. The charge was 12 d. from Southwark to Rochester, and 12 d. from there to Canterbury. The horses were branded to prevent their being stolen; cf. Jusserand, Engl. Wayfaring Life, p. 348.

75ff. It may be worth noting that, as they were riding, neither the Knight nor any of the other pilgrims has the conventional pilgrim dress — gown, staff, and scrip; but all would probably bring back with them Canterbury bells or the little flasks called ampullae Thomae (for pictures of them and other Pilgrim's signs see Sidney Heath, Pilgrim Life in the Middle Ages, pp. 129-32).

79-100. The Squier. The Squire's dress (ll. 89ff.) suggests that he had not been with his father in "his viage" but had met him on his return, perhaps in London. He is the typical young man of fashion, wearing the short coat and absurdly long and wide sleeves railed against by the satirists of the time.

The one chyvachie in which he could have joined took place in the summer of 1383, in Flanders and the adjoining French districts of Artois and Picardy. It was called a crusade; but was really a religious war within the Church, which at that time had two rival popes: Urban VI at Rome, to whom the English adhered, and Clement VII at Avignon, supported by the French. It was headed by the able and worldly Bishop of Norwich, and though professing to be directed against the followers of Pope Clement, it was little else than a series of plundering raids in Flanders and the neighboring districts.

As to the Squire's accomplishments, we may remember that Chaucer himself had been a squire and had, perhaps, been just such a gay young fellow. He was with the army that ravaged Artois, Picardy, and Champayne in 1359; cf. especially Emerson, "Chaucer's First Military Service," Rom Rev, 321-61.

Of course the Squire's accomplishments were those of a common ideal, which had long been recognized and often set forth in French literature; according to the Enseignements of Robert de Ho, the well-bred young man should know how to sit a horse, manage dogs and falcons, speak modestly, act firmly, and compose verses properly.

81. lovyere: Chaucer's usual form is lovere. Whether the Southern lovyere had any special technical or slang vogue, I do not know.

82. I gesse: cf. Hinckley, MPb, XIV, 317, and the quotation from Selden, below, note on l. 310.

83. of evene lengthe, i.e. of moderate height. Robert of Gloucester says of William the Conqueror (Morris, Specimens, II, 15):

Suthe thikke mon he was and of grete strengthe,
Grete-wombede and ballede and bote of evene lengthe.

88. in his lady grace. For the genitive without s cf. § 17.

91. floytynge: since Flügel's note (JGP, I, 108), this has commonly been interpreted as 'whistling,' but perhaps the older interpretation is correct. Among the many instruments heard by Mahieu when he dreamed he was being received into heaven were 'fleütes de Behaingne' (Mahieu, iii, 2946). The French version of this poem dates from c. 1370. Is it not likely that the Bohemian flute had become fashionable in England after the coming of Queen Anne? I do not know the old Bohemian form for flute; if it was derived from the MHG floite, this would account for Chaucer's form in this passage. In HF, iii, 133 floute may name an earlier instrument (cf. OF flaute, flahute and Prov. flauta).

Flügel's objection that the Squire seems not to have had a flute with him is weak. Several of his accomplishments were not exhibited on the pilgrimage.

93. According to Hoccleve (De Regimine Principum, 421, 553) such sleeves were still fashionable in his day, a generation later.

95. To make songs was to compose music; to endite was to compose the words. Both were fitting accomplishments for a 'lovyere'; Chaucer tells us that he himself when young had made many hymns for the holy days of the God of Love —

That highten balades, roundels, virelayes. — LGW (F), 423.

As he was then working in the technique of Guillaume de Machaut, who insisted that the lyric poet should compose the music as well as the words of his songs, it is likely that Chaucer also composed music. This conclusion is supported by the interest in music manifested in his writings.

100. In ancient times carving was regarded as specifically a gentleman's accomplishment. To a squire belonged the duty of carving before his knight; cf. III, 2243-45 and IV, 1772-73. For details on ancient manners, see Early English Meals and Manners, ed. Furnivall, or The Babees Book, ed. and modernized by Edith Rickert.

101-117. The Yeoman, as Tyrwhitt long ago pointed out, is not the servant of the Squire, but with him accompanies the Knight; the he of 101 resumes him of 79. The costume of the Yeoman seems better suited for his duties as forester than for a foreign campaign. Either Chaucer conceived him as having ridden with the Squire to meet the Knight or thought of him in his general character rather than in the special conditions of this journey. As it is, he is almost a purely decorative figure, but if Chaucer's plan of the Canterbury Tales had been completed, we might reasonably have expected from him a good tale, perhaps Gamelyn or one like it.

104. Roger Ascham, in his Toxophilus, speaks very scornfully of peacock arrows, but they were in great favor in Chaucer's time. They are often mentioned in contemporary accounts of purchases, and Lydgate ("The Horse, Goose, and Sheep," 211-14) says:

Through al the land of Albion
For fethered arwes, as I reherse can,
Goos is the best, as in comparison,
Except fetheres of pekok or of swan.

107. According to Ascham (Tox. 128-33), feathers may be low for either of two reasons: (1) naturally — "Nowe to looke on the fedders of all maner of birdes, you shall se some so lowe, weke, and shorte," etc.; (2) artificially — "the yonge goose fether is weake and fyne . . . and it must be curled at the first shering somewhat hye, for with shoting it wyll saddle (settle) and faule (fall) very moche."

115. Images of the saints were commonly worn for protection; readers of Quentin Durward will recall King Louis, with his hat stuck full of images. St. Christopher was the patron saint of foresters, but his cult was not confined to them. That the sight of his image protected from danger and death is certified by many mediaeval verses:

1. Christophore sancte, virtutes sunt tibi tante,
Qui te mane vident nocturno tempore rident.
2. Christoferi faciem die quecunque tueris,
Illa nempe die morte mala non morieris.

Other interesting verses are given by J. G. Waller in an article "On a Painting of St. Christopher in Newdigate Church, Surrey," Surrey Arch. Coll. VI, 57-69 and 293-300. Automobiles which I have hired in Italy, Southern France, and Corsica were protected by an image of St. Christopher.

119-162. The Prioress was no doubt a contemporary type, but she is thoroughly individualized. Chaucer seems to have had in mind a particular person. The fact that the details of her table manners (127-136) are derived from RR does not contradict this. These were simply the manners of good society throughout the Middle Ages and are prescribed in the books of etiquette; cf. the EETS volume on Early English Meals and Manners, or Rickert, The Babees Book. See also "Le Chastoiement des Dames," ll. 521ff., quoted by Langlois, La Vie en France au Moyen Age, p. 181:

Totes les fois que vos bevez
Votre boiche bien essuez,
Que li vins engraissez ne soit, etc.

It is not definitely said that she was Prioress of the convent of St. Leonard's at Stratford — only that her French was of the kind spoken there — but she may well have been. Stratford — unlike the neighboring abbey at Barking, which was a special resort for ladies of the aristocracy — was patronized by the citizens of London. If it was not a sort of finishing school for the daughters of the London middle class, as seems probable, it at least received such persons as lodgers (see Cal. Wills . . . in the Court of Husting, I and II, passim).

Lowes, Anglia, XXXIII, 440-51, shows that coy means simply 'quiet' and has no implication of coquetry. According to Langlois, op. cit., p. 178, people were judged by their manner of laughing; RR, La Clef d'Amors, and similar treatises taught when and how ladies were to laugh. Coi was commonly applied to charming ladies; cf. Froissart, Dit dou Blau Chevalier, ll. 99f.:

De la plaisans, simple, amoureuse et quoie,
Qu'ai tant amé.

A word may be said about the Prioress's singing. Dr. J. Lewis Browne, an authority on Gregorian music, tells me that the recitative parts of the church service, such as the psalms, canticles, and responses, have, from time immemorial, been chanted in a nasal drone, to avoid straining the throat. This is also the practice in Buddhistic convents in India.

In ll. 124-26, Chaucer is poking fun at the French spoken at Stratford. Professor Skeat was certainly mistaken in denying this and maintaining that Englishmen regarded their French as equal to that of Paris. Gower, among others, apologizes for his French, as that of an Englishman; see especially Hinckley, pp. 10f., and read the amusing account given by Trevisa of the decay of French in England at this time (quoted in modernized text at p. 7 above). At court French was probably spoken well, for it was thronged with Frenchmen and the nobility often sent their children to France to acquire a good accent. But what was the French of Stratford? We can hardly doubt that the fashion of speaking there was set by Queen Philippa's sister, Lady Elizabeth of Hainaut (Manly, New Light, pp. 204-09 and 218-20), and consequently that it was not Parisian French but the dialect of Hainaut. Chaucer's wife, Philippa de Roet, also came from Hainaut. Sir Frank Heath suggests that this may have added to Chaucer's enjoyment of his jest.

The jibes at the Prioress's attempts to imitate the manners of the ladies of the court (ll. 139f.) and at her pronunciation of French (ll. 124 ff.) may possibly represent the views of the aristocratic Abbey of Barking, where an Elizabeth Chaucy, supposed to have been a sister or a daughter of the poet, became a nun in 1381 (LR, No. 144). But Chaucer himself had abundant reason for interest in the convent at Stratford. It was situated on the king's highway only two and a half miles east of Aldgate, where Chaucer lived from 1374 to 1386, and he had apparently visited it when a boy, in the train of Elizabeth, countess of Ulster, and her husband, Prince Lionel. In September 1356 they visited Stratford to see Elizabeth of Hainaut, a sister of Queen Philippa and consequently aunt of Prince Lionel. This lady was a nun in St. Leonard's for many years. In her will, dated 1375, she makes two bequests to a sister nun named Madame Argentine (Domina Argentyn). This name is curiously suggestive of Madame Eglentine, but we know the name of the prioress of St. Leonard's at the time Chaucer was writing to have been Mary Syward (or Suhard).

If the Prioress attempted to imitate the manners of great ladies in most respects (139f.), she — appropriately enough to her sincerely religious feeling — differed from them in swearing. Many of them no doubt swore "good mouth-filling oaths," even "to-tearing our blessed Lord's body" (cf. VI, 472); her greatest oath was only by St. Loy. Even great dignitaries of the Church swore profanely; the favorite oath of Samson, the famous abbot of Bury St. Edmunds, was "By the face of God (Per faciem Dei)," perhaps in imitation of King Henry II, who swore "Per oculos Dei" (Jocelyn of Brakelond, Camden Soc., pp. 35, 169, etc.). Perhaps, however, Chaucer wrote this line, not to suggest her piety, but her social status. Lowes (Rom Rev, V, 368-81) has made it clear that this does not mean, as some have supposed, that she did not swear at all, and has shown why St. Loy was her favorite saint. "He was at once, in a word, an artist and a courtier and a saint, a man of great physical beauty, and a lover, in his earlier days, of personal adornment." Born about 590, he was apprenticed to a goldsmith, and became famous as the artificer of beautiful chalices, crosses, censers, and reliquaries, and founder of the great school of enamel work centering at Limoges. The Latin form of his name is Eligius, the French Eloi, shortened, as here, to Loy, Loi. The reasons why the carter, in FrT (III, 1564) swears by St. Loy are very different; they are fully discussed by Lowes in the same article, pp. 382-85.

There may have been a special cult of St. Loy at the English court at this time, perhaps because Queen Philippa came from the district in which the saint was especially popular. The Countess of Pembroke gave an image of St. Loy to the high altar of the Grey Friars, one of the most fashionable churches in London.

Brusendorff airily declares that the choice of St. Loy was due solely to the need of a rhyme; but rhyming is not as difficult as Brusendorff implies.

120. On the need for a final e in Seint see Tatlock in MLN, XXXI, 139 n.

125. scole; used rather vaguely; cf. what is said of the dancing of the parish clerk Absolon:

In twenty manner coude he trippe and daunce,
After the scole of Oxenforde tho. (I, 3328f.)

and "Many sicke feynngis ben of the fendis scole." (Wyclif, English Works, ed. Arnold, i, 136.)

146-50. Nuns were forbidden by Church law to keep dogs; see for example an order of 1345 quoted in Dugdale (Mon. Angl. II, p. 619, No. xi): "Also we command that neither birds [perhaps falcons] nor dogs nor little birds be kept by any abbess or nun within the walls of the abbey or within the choir, especially while they should be engaged in divine services." Some old-fashioned moralists objected then, as now, to the interest ladies of fashion took in little dogs; see the amusing story (La Tour, pp. 28f.) of the lady who was rebuked by a friar for giving her two little dogs "disshes with soppes of mylke . . . and the pore pepill so lene and famisshed for hunger." We may certainly hesitate, as Hinckley does (p. 12), to place the Prioress among the ladies who accepted dogs as presents from their lovers; but if ladies of the court kept dogs, the Prioress would of course wish to do so.

147. wastel breed. According to the London assize of bread (Liber Albus, transl. Riley, pp. 303-05), this was a fine white bread, exceeded in cost only by payn demayn (see note on VII, 1915). Stratford was one of the principal places that supplied bread to London in the fourteenth century, but this may have no significance for the Prioress's use of wastel breed for her dogs.

149. men is not plural here, but a phonetically weakened form of the indefinite man, 'someone' (= French on).

152. eyen greye as glas: the usual expression for what we call 'blue eyes.' They were much admired; according to the "ABC on the Passion," even Christ was thought to have had "gray eyes" (Pol. Relig. and Love Poems, p. 273).

155. It is true that mediaeval ladies plucked out their hair and eyebrows to make their foreheads seem high, but here Chaucer seems to be speaking rather of a broad forehead. Gower emphasized this as a point of beauty (CA, vi, 769f.):

He seth hire front is large and plain
Withoute fronce of eny grein.

And Bishop Stapledon, who was sent to inspect the future queen Philippa, reported that "her forehead is high and broad, and standing somewhat forward" (Coulton, Chaucer and his England, p. 181).

Compare Hoccleve's satirical praise: "hir golden forheed is ful narw & smal" (Minor Poems, II, 37).

159. a peire of bedes: a rosary. Until recently English retained some other phrases in which pair meant a set of more than two: 'a pair of stairs,'

'a pair of cards' (a pack), 'a pair of arrows' (three). Bede originally meant a prayer; the modern sense of 'bead' arose by transfer of the name from the prayer counted to the round object used in counting. The beads of a modern rosary are arranged in decades, each decade consisting of ten small beads for the Ave Marias and a large ornamented one called a gaud, for the Paternoster.

The modern rosary, known as Our Lady's Psalter, consists of fifteen decades, in allusion to the one hundred and fifty psalms of the Psalter. But this may not have been in use in Chaucer's time. One of Hoccleve's best poems (Minor Poems, II, 16ff.) explains the origin of it and seems to imply that it was new. The rosaries of earlier times were mostly of two lengths, one of fifty, the other of no more than ten Aves; see Rock, The Church of Our Fathers, III, 328, and Addis and Arnold, A Catholic Dict. s. v. rosary. The shorter ones were carried in the hand or fastened to the little finger by a ring; note that carried by Chaucer in most pictures of him. The Religious still use the small rosaries on occasion. The longer ones used to be worn suspended about the arm, like the Prioress's, or fastened to a girdle, as is usual now. In ancient times rosaries were usually called paternosters. Among the records of Henry, earl of Derby, are several purchases of paternosters: "1 pr. paternosters de Cokyll et de Jaspre (40 s); 1 par paternosters de corall cum gaudees aur'." (Wylie, 162, 174.) The rosary of the Prioress seems not to have been very costly — small coral, gauded with green. This may indicate the comparative poverty of her nunnery, as does the fact that her Priest rode a foul and lean jade (VII, 4002-03).

162. Nothing in the description of the Prioress or her conversation indicates any interest in sexual love. Amor was constantly used for love divine. Rock (Church of Our Fathers, III, 202f.) gives examples of similar mottoes and of a "crowned M," alluding to Our Lady. William of Wykeham left by will "a pair of beads of gold, appended from a bracelet of gold, having these words engraved on them I H S [Jesus] est amor meus" (ib. III, 330, n. 80). Lowes pointed out that a "crowned A" often was used as Queen Anne's mark, but he rightly thought that a reference here to the Queen was not very probable.

163f. Line 163 begins as if Chaucer were going to describe the Nun, but he seems either not to have been much interested in her or not yet to have formed any clear conception of her, for not only does he fail to describe her here, but he has no word about her either before or after she tells her tale.

That the nun accompanying the Prioress should have been her chapeleyn was natural. The chaplain of a high official of a convent was a sort of private secretary. The duties of the chaplain of an abbot are indicated in the Chronicle of Jocelyn of Brakelond (tr. Clarke, in "The King's Classics"). In most Benedictine convents the abbess or prioress has a nun chaplain — not to be confused with a priest; see Anglia, iv, 238; N and Q, 7 ser. vi, 485; Academy, 1890, ii, 152; and Essays on Chaucer (Chaucer Soc.), pp. 183ff. For further light on Prioress and Nun see Sister M. Madeleva, Chaucer's Nuns and Other Essays, and especially Eileen Power, Medieval English Nunneries.

164. and Preestes thre. In spite of the last half of l. 164, it seems certain that there was only one priest. Only one is mentioned elsewhere (see VII, 3999); it would be quite absurd to have three; Chaucer says in l. 24 that there were nine and twenty pilgrims assembled at the Tabard, and this is exactly accurate if only one priest is counted. As we know, for other reasons, that Chaucer left CT unfinished, it seems highly probable that he intended to describe the Nun and the Nuns' Priest but never wrote more than

Another Nonne with hire hadde she
That was hire chapeleyne —

Who added and preestes thre, no one knows.

The convent at Stratford was founded for nine nuns and a prioress and had that number at the dissolution; apparently it never had more. The will of Elizabeth of Hainaut makes it clear that the confessor of the convent — the nun's priest — was the priest of the parish (see Manly, New Light, pp. 222f.).

165ff. The Monk. The most interesting account we have of life in a large monastery in mediaeval England is Jocelyn of Brakelond's chronicle of abbot Samson's rule of St. Edmunds at Bury, one of the largest and richest of the English abbeys (see Chronicle of Jocelyn of Brakelond, ed. Clarke, "King's Classics" series, or Carlyle's Past and Present). It is difficult to form a conception of the enormous possessions of some of the wealthier abbeys and consequently of the degree to which the abbot and many of his chief officers were obliged to devote themselves to purely secular business. Jocelyn tells us that Samson's predecessor, Abbot Hugh, was "a kind and pious man, a good and religious monk, yet not wise or far-sighted in worldly affairs," and consequently "the townships and all the hundreds were set to farm, the forests were destroyed, the manor houses threatened to fall, everything daily got worse and worse." The abbey ran continually into debt, borrowing money from both Jews and Christians. Jocelyn speaks of debts totaling £2320 (equal in modern value to $174,000). When Abbot Samson deposed William the sacrist, he exhibited securities amounting to £3052 (= $228,900), besides the interest that had accrued — which was probably quite as great. "Behold," said he, "the good management of William, our sacrist; look at the multitude of securities signed with his seal, whereby he has pledged silken copes, dalmatics, censers of silver, and books ornamented with gold, without the knowledge of the convent, all which I have redeemed and restored to you." He also destroyed the houses of the sacrist because of the "frequent wine-bibbings and certain other acts not to be named, which he [Samson], with grief and indignation, had witnessed while he was sub-sacrist." Samson drew up a written survey of the manors, including rents due from freemen, the names of the laborers and their tenements, and the services due from each. He repaired the old halls and unroofed houses, built new chapels and inner chambers and upper stories in many places where only barns had been before. "He also inclosed many parks, which he replenished with beasts of chase, keeping a huntsman with dogs; and upon the visit of any person of quality, sat with his monks in some walk of the wood, and sometimes saw the coursing of the dogs: but I never saw him take part in the sport."

It is not strange that the men upon whom the management of the larger monasteries devolved had to give most of their time to worldly affairs or that some of them acquired the tastes and habits of secular lords.

165. for the maistrie is an adverbial phrase modifying fair. Tyrwhitt says that in old medical books it was "applied to such medicines as we usually call sovereign, excellent above all others." It therefore does not mean 'to show his excellence,' as Skeat suggests; 'a fair for the maistrie' means merely 'an extremely fine one.'

166. outridere is well illustrated by the lines about the able young monk in the Shipman's Tale:

This noble monk of which I yow devyse
Hath of his abbot as hym list licence —
Bycause he was a man of heigh prudence
And eek an officer — out for to ryde
To seen hir graunges and hire bernys wyde.

— VII, 1252-56

170. gynglen, jingle. Professor Skeat notes that "fashionable riders were in the habit of hanging small bells on the bridles and harness of their horses," and quotes passages to show that this was done both by laymen and by worldly members of the clergy.

172. A celle was a subordinate monastery, not necessarily a small one. Some of the richest priories in England were cells of abbeys in France, notably of the abbeys of Cluny and Fécamp. The head of any subordinate house would be called a prior. Whether the Monk was a prior or not, he was at least fit to be prior or even abbot (l. 167), and his celle was by no means a small one (l. 168).

173. In the fourteenth century the religious orders of the church were organized under one or another of four rules, the Basilian, the Augustinian, the Benedictine, and the Franciscan. The rule of St. Benedict was first promulgated at Monte Casino, Italy, where St. Benedict founded his first monastery in A.D. 529. St. Maurus was believed to have introduced the rule into France, where the success of the Benedictine order was so great that he came to be regarded as almost equal with St. Benedict in the establishment of monasticism. For further information see Cath Encycl or Addis and Arnold, A Catholic Dictionary.

176. the space, used adverbially, = 'meanwhile,' but the expression was not very familiar in the fifteenth century, for many of the MSS substitute trace for it.

177ff. For an interesting and valuable discussion of the whole passage by Professor Emerson, see MPb, I, 105-15. The idea that hunters were not holy men goes back to St. Jerome's comment on Ps. 90: "Esau was a hunter, therefore he was a sinner, and indeed we do not find in the Holy Scriptures a single pious hunter. Pious fishermen we do find." Chaucer may have read discussions of the subject in many learned writers, but the saying was well known to hunters, and was resented by them. The Duke of York, in the prologue to his translation of the famous hunting treatise, The Master of Game, promises to prove "that the life of no man that useth gentle game and disport be less displeasable unto God than the life of a perfect and skilful hunter, or from which more good cometh" (Baillie-Grohman, p. 4).

Some editors change recchelees (l. 179) to cloysterles, which is the reading of only one manuscript and was due to the scribe's failure to understand recchelees. Koch inadvisedly emended to reuleless. Recchelees is frequently applied to persons neglectful of their duties, and is more than once applied to vagabonds. The best-known example of the word in the sense of 'vagabond' is that in Gammer Gurton's Nedle, II, i, 72. For many other quotations see Emerson in MPb, I, 110ff. Ecclesiastical authorities were continually disturbed by monks who left their cloisters and clerics who wandered free from jurisdiction. The 'text' alluded to is attributed in the decretals to Pope Eugenius: "sicut piscis sine aqua caret vita, ita sine monasterio monachus." It is quoted by many mediaeval authors, including Gower.

181. This is to seyn introduces a specification of recchelees.

184. What = 'why.'

187. St. Augustine's treatise De Opere Monachorum, written at the request of Aurelius, bishop of Carthage, because of the conduct of monks who, under pretext of contemplation, indulged in idleness, became the standard authority for monastic life; cf. Cath Encycl, II, 79.

191. Note that prikyng does not mean 'hard riding,' as is commonly supposed, but 'tracking the hare, not by scent but by footprints' (cf. OED). The mediaeval esteem for hare hunting is well indicated by Machaut's lines:

C'est honneur, solas, et joie;
C'est uns fais que noblesse prise,
Qui est de gracieuse emprise

— Jug. dou roy de Navarre, 510-12.

193ff. The dress of the Monk must have been very expensive. Furs and fur-lined garments were much worn in the Middle Ages, because the houses were not well heated in winter, but the fine gray fur with which the Monk's sleeves were trimmed was not for comfort only but for ornament. Under ordinary circumstances monks were forbidden to wear boots, but this prohibition, like most others, was often violated. Tyrwhitt quotes from a writer of the thirteenth century part of a description of a worldly abbot whose boots must have been much like those worn by the Monk: "He wore boots without a wrinkle, as if they had been born on his feet" (ocreas habebat in cruribus quasi innatae essent, sine plica porrectas).

200. in good poynnt: cf. embonpoint.

202. (Eyes) 'that gleamed like the furnace of a cauldron'; cf. OED, lead, sb¹, 5 a and steam, v, 2: "To emit a flame, glow." Chaucer may have had in mind the furnaces kept burning day and night under salt pans to evaporate the water; cf. EDD, s. v. lead. Brusendorff's objections are frivolous, and his idea that the passage means "His head steamed as a furnace does when a piece of lead is put into it" is to be rejected.

206. The regulations of the monastic orders prescribed only plain food for monks, and meats were not to be eaten by them except when ill or feeble, but the wealthier monks had long disregarded this regulation. At Winchester in the twelfth century they complained because their dinner had been reduced to thirteen courses (Coulton, Social Life, p. 118).

208ff. The Frere. The four orders referred to in l. 210 were: 1. The Dominicans, or preaching friars — also called Iacobini — founded by St. Dominic in Spain in 1206. They came to England in 1221, and from the color of their gowns were known as Black Friars. 2. The Franciscans, Fratres minores, founded in 1209 by St. Francis of Assisi. They first came to England in 1224, and were commonly called Grey Friars. 3. The Carmelites, or White Friars, who claimed to have been instituted by Elijah and to have had an establishment at Mount Carmel ever since his day. Their rule was formulated in 1209, and they held their first chapter in England in 1245. At the time of the dissolution of the monasteries they were very flourishing, and had fifty-two houses in England. 4. The Augustine or Austin friars (or hermits), who claimed historical descent from St. Augustine of Hippo, but were not organized into an order until 1256. They had thirty-two houses in England at the dissolution. These four orders of friars were known preëminently as the Four Orders. All of them had been established as part of the great thirteenth century movement to reform abuses which had arisen in the monastic orders, chiefly through the accumulation of wealth. In order to prevent similar abuses, the friars were forbidden to hold property, not only individually but even as a community. Houses for them to live in were, however, necessary, and the prohibition was evaded by having the property held for them. Ambitious men soon crept into the order, and from the middle of the thirteenth century to the Reformation the friars were the object of attack for corrupt practices of all sorts. Wyclif and his followers called all the friars 'children of Caim' (Cain), from the initials of Carmelitae, Augustini, Iacobini, Minores.

Friars differ from monks primarily in the fact that the latter were organized for a life of retirement and meditation (vita contemplativa), the former for lives of active service to men (vita activa).

212. Hinckley approves of Flügel's attempt (YGP, I, 118ff.) to save the Friar's reputation by suggesting that this line means that the Friar married runaway couples free of charge. But the picture of him is full of innuendoes.

216. frankeleyns. Franklins were a class of large landholders, ranking in the feudal system immediately below barons. In the fourteenth century the term seems to have been rare in the south of England, but was still very common in the north. Many persons are designated as franklins in the Yorkshire Subsidy Roll for 1380. For evidence that Chaucer thought of the Friar as coming from Yorkshire, see the discussion of the quarrel between the Friar and the Summoner, note on III, 1265-1300.

218-20. A great cause of complaint by the priests against the friars was that they were licensed to hear confessions and give absolution in all cases, even in those beyond the jurisdiction of the parish priest. Wyclif says: "For comynly if ther be any cursid jurour [swearer], extorsioner, or avoutrer [adulterer], he wil not be schryven at his owne curat, bot go to a flatryng frere, that will asoyle hym falsely for a litel money by yeere, thof he be not in wille to make restitucioun and leeve his cursid synne."

224. pitaunce. Originally a pitaunce was a portion of food added to the regular monastic fare. In the course of time it came to mean merely a gift.

227f. Here the first he refers to man, the second and third refer to the Friar.

233. The complaint that the friars carried small inexpensive presents like knives and pins to win the favor of the women was often made in contemporary satire. Compare the "Song against the Friars" (Wright, Political Poems, I, 264-65):

Thai dele with purses, pynnes, and knyves,
With gyrdles, gloves, for wenches and wyves;
Bot ever bacward the husband thryves
Ther thai are haunted tille.

Ther is no pedler that pak can bere,
That half so dere can selle his gere,
Then a frer can do.
For if he gife a wyfe a knyfe
That cost bot penys two,
Worthe ten knyves, so mot I thryfe,
He wyl have er he go.

Hinckley quotes a passage of similar import from Matthew, English Works of Wyclif, p. 12.

239. champion. Explained by Skeat and others as 'a professional fighter in judicial lists,' but here the word has its modern meaning, as it has often in the contemporary Tale of Gamelyn (ll. 203-18, 219, 227), where the champion is merely an expert wrestler.

252. After this line a few MSS have two lines which do not appear in the other MSS:

And yaf a certeyn ferme for the graunt,
Noon of his brethren cam ther in his haunt.

Some scholars regard them as genuine, apparently because they seem not unworthy of Chaucer, but in the present state of our knowledge of the relations of the MSS it is impossible to trace the tradition back to Chaucer. Ferme means 'fixed payment.'

254. In principio. John, i, 1-14, seems to have been used as a religious exercise by the friars in their visits, even as late as the sixteenth century, as is proved by Tyndale's reference to "the limiters saying of In principio erat verbum, from house to house"; cf. further, MLN, XXIX, 141-42 and PMLA, XXXVII, 208-15.

256. This seems to have been proverbial, both in French and in English. RR has "miex vaut mes porchas que ma rente," and a character in the Towneley Plays says:

He gettis more by purches
Then by his fre rent.

rent is regular income. Apparently it does not here mean what the Friar paid for his limitation; cf. MLN, XXIII, 142-44, MPb, VII, 475-77. Purchas originally meant 'property obtained in any way except by inheritance or the mere act of law.' The word was often used with a suggestion of fraud.

258. love dayes. These were days set apart for the adjustment of complaints by arbitration. From a passage in PP (A, iii, 154) it appears that the arbitrators were not always averse to taking bribes to pervert justice.

259. cloysterer: the poor brethren who remained in the cloister, devoted to their religious duties, were called "cloisterers."

264. This affectation is not typical, but personal.

269. The name Huberd is by no means common in the fourteenth century. Indeed I do not recall a single instance of it in the records of the south of England during Chaucer's lifetime.

270ff. The Marchant is in some respects undoubtedly a typical figure, but not all merchants were in debt, not all of them violated the king's laws by selling foreign money in exchange, and not all of them were specially interested in keeping clear of pirates the route between Middelburg and Orwell. Knott (Pb2, I, 2-16) has recently made a careful study of the details of the Merchant's portrait, and has suggested that he belonged to the city of Ipswich, of which Orwell was the seaport. He might have added that the connection of Chaucer's family with Ipswich may have given him a special interest in this picturesque but not entirely admirable person.

The Merchant was not an ordinary shopkeeper, but a wholesale merchant engaged in the export and import trade. Knott and all other scholars have regarded him as trading at the Staple; but he may equally well have been a member of the company of Merchants Adventurers, who originally organized in the thirteenth century under the name of "The Fraternity of St. Thomas" for trade between England and the Low Countries. They seem to have moved from Bruges to Middelburg immediately after the death of Louis de Male, in 1384; see Manly, New Light, pp. 181-200. The fact that the Merchants Adventurers were "the Fraternity of St. Thomas of Canterbury" may be a reason for the Merchant's wish to visit St. Thomas's shrine.

The dress and appearance of the Merchant were designed to impress the public with a sense, not of his sedateness, but of his wealth. A forked berd was a fashionable cut, as is shown by many pictures and effigies of the time. Motlee was, as we know, both from records of the time and from the picture of the Merchant in the Ellesmere MS, a rich cloth in which was woven a figured design, sometimes in the same color as the ground, sometimes in another. Flaundryssh beaver hats were worn by the upper classes. They were of various shapes and prices. One bought by Henry, earl of Derby, when he was eighteen years old cost 3 s. 4 d. (Wylie, IV, 167.) The Merchant may have bought his abroad; but such hats could be bought in London.

Hye on horse he sat (271) is an expression frequently used in the Middle Ages concerning knights and others who wished to make an imposing appearance on horseback. Its meaning is perhaps illustrated by the well-known picture of Bernabo Visconti, which shows him seated in a very high saddle.

274f. resons has not its modern meaning, but is a term for remarks in general, and solempnely carries no hint of dullness, but only of eloquence and perhaps pomposity.

Some editors have explained sownynge as meaning 'tending to,' but this meaning would require an in after sownynge, as in l. 307. Here the word means only 'proclaiming,' 'talking about.'

276f. The keeping of the sea against pirates and privateers was essential to the safety of the foreign trade. The Libel of English Policy, a famous fifteenth century pamphlet (in verse), is chiefly devoted to this subject; cf. especially the Prologue (Wright, Pol. Poems and Songs, II, 157-59). Edward III had asserted his claim to the title of Lord of the English Seas, and special taxes were imposed on merchandise for the maintenance of a force to protect English trade (Stubbs, Const. Hist. of Engl., II, 399, 554-56).

Except during periods of truce between England and France, privateers of each nation freely attacked the ships of the other. Between 1382 and 1389 hostilities were so active that the danger was especially great. As England had no navy, the keeping of the sea was farmed out to private persons. Thus on May 6, 1383, two wealthy London merchants, Gilbert Maufeld (who lent Chaucer money in 1392) and Robert Parys, and two mariners were appointed to keep the seas between Winchelsea and Berwick-on-Tweed for a year and a half. For this they were to receive 2500 marks and the 6 d. in the pound and the 2 s. a tun granted to the king in Parliament (except the money taken at Dover) and one half of all fines levied for non-payment (Cal. Pat. Rolls, 1381-85, p. 278).

Orewelle is frequently mentioned as an important harbor; for example, Queen Isabella landed there on her return to England in 1326, and Edward III assembled his ships there for his voyage to Flanders and Germany in 1338. Very near it was Harwich, incorporated under Edward II but represented in Parliament only in 17 Ed. III. A little farther up the river Orwell, where it was joined by the Gipping, lay Ipswich, one of the most active commercial towns on the east coast. Chaucer's father was born there and owned property in the very heart of the town, but we have no evidence that Geoffrey Chaucer had any special interest in the town and its affairs. It and Orwell were, however, the nearest important English towns to the Flemish port of Middelburg, where the English Merchant Adventurers settled after being driven out of Bruges by Philippe le Hardi in 1384; see note on ll. 270ff.

During the years 1384-88, the Wool Staple — that is, the market through which English merchants could sell wool to the Continent — was by act of parliament placed at Middelburg. As all scholars had regarded the Merchant as a merchant of the staple, Hales (Folia Litteraria, 100f.) argued that Chaucer must have written the Prologue during this period. Although this date is possible enough for some parts of the Prologue, not much weight is now attached to the argument; partly because the composition of CT, and even of the Prologue itself, apparently extended over several years, and partly because trading through the Staple was never exclusive. If the Merchant belonged, not to the Staple, but to the Merchant Adventurers (see above), there is additional reason for abandoning the argument based on these two lines.

278. The selling of foreign money in exchange was reserved by law to the Royal Exchange, and private persons were forbidden under serious penalties to make exchanges for profit. The sheeldes were the gold coins known as 'florins d'escu,' from a shield stamped on one side of them. Their nominal value was 3 s. 6 d.

281. The Middle Ages regarded it as unnatural that money should breed money, and the Church passed severe laws against the taking of interest, regarding all interest as usury. These laws resulted partly in placing financial transactions largely in the hands of the Jews and Lombards (or persons so called), and partly in evasions of the letter of the law. Knott discusses the financial transactions of the king with Italian banking companies and with native syndicates, in one of which Chaucer's stepfather, Richard, participated to the extent of 500 l. Whether the Merchant's bargaynes and chevyssaunces were private transactions or loans to the king we have, as Knott points out, no means of knowing, but ll. 279-80 seem to imply that he was borrowing to carry on his business. The lending of money to private persons, with or without security was, however, an important part of the business of some merchants. The daybook of one of these, Gilbert Maufeld, has been preserved. The book covers 1390-95, during which years he lent money to more than thirty of the persons whose names appear in the Chaucer LR, including Chaucer himself, John Gower, Esquire, and Henry Scogan. Many other names appear, ranging from those of servants and small tradesmen to those of bishops and lords. But prosperous as Maufeld seems to have been at this time, he died in debt to the king (cf. MPh, XXIV, pp. 249ff.).

284. Chaucer's profession of ignorance of the Merchant's name is intelligible enough in view of the insinuations he has made concerning his character.

285ff. There is no reason to believe that the Clerk of Oxford was intended as a portrait of Chaucer himself as a young man. We have as yet no evidence that Chaucer ever attended either of the universities. His higher education seems rather to have been obtained at the Temple (see Introd., pp. 11-13). In only one respect, so far as we know, does the Clerk resemble Chaucer, and that is in his love of books; cf. ll. 293-96 and LGW (G), 271-74. Moreover it must not be supposed that all university students of the fourteenth century were sedate and serious persons like the Clerk. The innumerable riots between them and the townsmen indicate that many of them were much like the most careless and reckless of modern students (cf. Chaucer's account of one of them, I, 3190-3220).

The mediaeval university curriculum consisted of two parts. The first, called the trivium, included grammar, logic, and rhetoric. The second, or quadrivium, included arithmetic, geometry, music, and astronomy, and in Chaucer's time natural and moral philosophy. A student who had completed the trivium was ready for the degree of Bachelor of Arts; after which he might continue in residence for four years, studying and taking a small part in teaching before he became qualified for the degree of Master of Arts. For a further degree in theology ten years work was required; for canon or civil law eight; for medicine five years of reading and two years of practice. The emphasis on logic and philosophy indicates that Chaucer's Clerk had taken his B.A. degree and was pursuing his studies for the M.A.; cf. especially Jones, PLMA, XXVII, 106-15.

Aristotle's works were the chief authorities for both natural and moral philosophy in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, and indeed down to the end of the sixteenth century. The mediaeval scholars, however, did not know Aristotle in the original versions, but only in Latin translations made from Arabic translations from the original Greek. Many of these translations were so inaccurate that the great thirteenth century scholar Roger Bacon declared that the world would be benefited by the total destruction of them.

The Clerk was obviously not rich, for he was dependent upon the contributions of his friends for his living, but ll. 299-300 indicate that his poverty was due, not to any lack of liberality on the part of his friends, but to his own extravagance in the purchase of books. Very few persons at that time possessed as many as twenty books. Chaucer's library of sixty (LGW (G), 273) was very exceptional. Coulton (Social Life, p. 99), summarizing the wills of sixty testators, finds that they owned altogether one hundred and thirty-eight books, and that the largest library consisted of fourteen volumes. Coulton calculates that the twenty volumes of Aristotle which Chaucer's Clerk had — or wished for — could hardly have cost less than the value of three ordinary citizens' houses in a great town. But the cost of making books varied very widely, and schoolbooks were apparently not as expensive as Bibles, which were the basis of Coulton's calculation. Wylie (IV, 172) quotes from the records of the Duchy of Lancaster in 1395-96 the purchase of seven books of grammar bound in one volume, bought in London for the young lord, Henry, for 4 s. In 1324 the Countess of Clare kept a scriptor for sixteen weeks writing Vitae Patrum, paying him 8 s.; i.e., 6 d. a week plus board and lodging. He wrote 3300 words a day (Rogers, Hist. Agr. and Prices, II, 612; Coulton, Social Life, p. 102).

296. The clerk Nicholas, of MiT, would have preferred the robes and musical instruments; cf. I, 3203-20.

297. philosophre. In the Middle Ages this term covered a wide range, as both theoretical and practical ethics and the natural sciences, genuine and false (astrology and alchemy), were included under philosophy. Chaucer's little joke turns on the claim of the alchemists to be able to change the baser metals into gold.

299ff. Students in the universities were often aided, not only by their personal friends, but by others; but cf. Jones, ut sup. Letter Book F (p. 209) contains letters dated May 1, 1350, from the lord mayor to the pope and various others in behalf of Richard de Cleaungr, "a simple but learned clerk," who was held in high esteem at Oxford. The expenses of a university student in 1374, according to Riley, Memorials, p. 379, were: board 2 s. per week, teaching two marks (26 s. 8 d.) per year, clothing 40 s. per year, sundries 20 s. per year (cf. also Letter Book G, p. 322). In 1394-95 room rent for one term for a student not holding a scholarship was 3 s. 4 d. (Oxf. Hist. Soc. Coll. III, 19), but a large proportion of the students at the universities in the Middle Ages were members of religious orders or secular persons supported by them. These students lived in halls established for their benefit; cf. Durham College Rolls (Oxf. Hist. Soc. Misc. III, passim). "According to a papal bull of 1361 printed by Lewis (Life of Wyclif, p. 4) Sir William Felton in 1361 incorporated the parish church of Abbotesley with Balliol Hall, thus increasing the number of scholars, aiding their library, supplying clothing and twelve farthings a week; and providing that they shall be at liberty to remain in the Hall, whether they are masters and doctors or not, until they obtain a sufficient church living" (Lechler-Lorimer, Life of Wiclif, p. 99). The royal household accounts also regularly contain allowances for the king's scholars at King's Hall, Cambridge. On the whole subject see Rashdall, Universities of Europe, vol. ii and R. S. Rait, Life in the Mediaeval Universities.

305. in forme and reverence, i.e. 'formally and respectfully' (Hinckley).

307. Sowynyge in moral vertu, 'making for righteousness, tending to virtue.'

309ff. The Man of Law is described as not merely a lawyer, but a member of the highest grade or degree, sergeant of the lawe, of which there were comparatively few. Men were summoned to this degree by special writ from the king, and only those were eligible who had devoted at least sixteen years to the study and practice of the law. The ablest of those who were thus qualified were, on recommendation by the judges of the king's court, summoned by royal writ to become sergeants. The ceremonies connected with the making of sergeants were very elaborate and very expensive. They lasted a whole week, and cost so much that a penalty of 1000*l.* was imposed for failure to accept the summons to the degree. Sir John Fortescue, our earliest authority on the subject, compares the splendor of the ceremonies and feasts to those attending the coronation of a king. From the sergeants were chosen the judges of the king's courts and the chief baron of the exchequer.

Among the score or so of lawyers who were sergeants at the time Chaucer wrote, the vast majority can easily be set aside as in one respect or another not answering to the description given of the sergeant who belonged to the Canterbury group. Many circumstances seem to indicate that in painting the portrait he may have had in mind Thomas Pynchbek, one of the most eminent lawyers of the time, who was especially noted not only for his learning but also for his accumulation of landed property (cf. 318-20). Perhaps there is a pun on his name in l. 326; cf. for details of the argument, Manly, New Light, pp. 131-57. It is significant that this man, Thomas Pynchbek, came from a little village in Lincolnshire very near the country home of Chaucer's sister-in-law, Katherine Swynford. A series of records, discovered after this book was sent to the printer shows Chaucer as being prosecuted in 1388 by John Churchman for a debt of five marks. One of the writs to arrest him was signed by Thomas Pynchbek, as chief baron of the exchequer.

310. at the parvys. Editors have always explained this as a reference to the porch of St. Paul's, where lawyers were accustomed in the sixteenth century to meet their clients for consultation. But this explanation seems doubtful. In the first place, it is not certain that St. Paul's was so used in the fourteenth century. Paradisus and its vernacular equivalent parvys were in common use, and there was a paradisus at Westminster, mentioned in fourteenth century building accounts recorded in Rymer's Foedera (see Syllabus, Index, under Westminster). According to a document of May 17, 1550, it was then used for the court of the Exchequer (Rymer, O, XV, 233 or H, VI, pt. iii, 190). There is, however, still another explanation that demands consideration. The great lawyer John Selden, in a note on Fortescue's De Laudibus Legum Angliae (ed. 1737, p. 120), after quoting this passage from Chaucer, says: "It signifies an Afternoon Exercise or Moot, to the Instruction of young Students, bearing the same name originally (I guess) with Parvisiae in Oxford, as they call their Sitting Generals in the Schools in the Afternoon." He quotes Wake, Musae Regnantes for this usage: "Has, quia iis inferiores, Parvas, jam etiam corrupto nomine, Parvisias dicere consuevimus." See also the quotations in OED (Parvis, 2) under 1530, 1706, and 1886, with the concluding remarks.

As the emphasis is on the Man of Law's wisdom, either of the two last explanations would seem preferable to the first: that is, either 'he had often sat in the court of the Exchequer,' or 'he had often presided at the moots of the students in the inns of court.' I think the last the more probable.

314f. The courts of assize were the regular county courts, composed of justices appointed by special commission to determine suits of various sorts. The patente was an open letter from the king, appointing a person as justice (the patent appointing Chaucer one of the justices of the peace for Kent is in LR, No. 183; the commission is No. 188). A pleyn commissioun empowered the justices named to hear cases of all sorts.

For G. J. Turner's criticisms of Stubbs' account of the various commissions issued to the justices of assize, see Scottish Hist. Rev. 1914, p. 419.

317. robes were a regular part of the compensation paid to professional men, such as lawyers and doctors (cf. note on l. 442). A robe was not a mere cloak but a whole suit of clothing. The scarcity of money in the Middle Ages explains the frequency with which payments of various sorts are made in cloth, cups, jewelry, etc., instead of in money; cf. Wylie, iv, 214.

318. Some scholars think that purchasour has here a double meaning. I cannot find that it is ever used of an agent. The implication here seems to be simply that the Man of Law was so skilful that no matter by what tenure land was held, he could bring about its transfer to himself by as good title as if it were held in fee simple (that is, absolutely).

323f. English law has always been largely a matter of precedent. The Man of Law knew accurately (in termes) the cases and the decisions from the time of William the Conqueror. The following quotations from Maitland's Select Pleas of the Crown (Selden Soc.) will illustrate the present passage: "Almost to the extreme limit of legal memory, almost to the coronation day of Richard I extends the series of our yet extant Plea Rolls" (p. vii). "If the judicial records of the thirteenth century were printed in a hundred volumes, those volumes would be stout" (p. viii).

328. A medlee cote might be of a single color; cf. "two pieces of cloth of appel blom medle" (Letter Book F, 262), a surcoat of "broun medle" (ibid. 266). Lipson, Hist. of the Engl. Woollen and Worsted Industries, p. 142, says: "Sometimes the wool was dyed after it was washed but before it was woven, wool-dyed cloth being termed 'medley cloth.'" A special feature of medlee was that it had not a plain surface, but was woven in stripes. Some medlee was, however, particolored, and this may have been the case with the Man of Law's coat, for the sergeant's official robes were of brown and green stripes; see the 15th century pictures of the law courts in Arch. XXIX.

329. Originally barres, it seems, were metal strips placed across the ceint, or girdle; but smaller pieces of metal, perforated to receive the tongue of a buckle, were later called by the same name.

331f. The traveling companion of the Man of Law was the Frankleyn, a character whose traits are unmistakably individual. It would seem, therefore, that if one could find a large landholder who was a neighbor of the Man of Law and who had a public career as sheriff, pleader, and knight of the shire in parliament, one would be justified in suspecting that his portrait also was drawn from a living model. Such a duplication of the career of the Franklin is afforded by Sir John Bussy, who was knight of the shire in 1383, 1388, and every other parliament of Richard's reign. He was certainly sheriff of Lincolnshire in 1384 and 1385, and according to some authorities in other years also. Year after year he sat on commissions of the peace, twice with Pynchbek, and always with men commonly associated with Pynchbek. He lived in Kesteven, only a short distance from Pynchbek's home, where his family had owned land for at least more than a century.

The Franklin was a wealthy country gentleman, and though clearly not a knight banneret, he may have had the rank of knight bachelor; see above, note on 216.

There is no reason for assigning the Franklin to Kent, as some editors have done. If he had lived in Kent he would probably not have gone to London to begin a pilgrimage to Canterbury.

332. The English daisy, crimson-tipped, affords a suggestive comparison for the Franklin's white beard against the background of his red face.

333. complexion. This is primarily a technical term, meaning temperament. Ancient physiologists classified men under four temperaments, according to the predominance of one or another of the so-called humors, or fluids. The sanguine complexion or temperament resulted from the predominance of blood, and was described as hot and moist; the phlegmatic from the predominance of phlegm, and was called cold and moist; the bilious from the predominance of bile, and was called hot and dry; the melancholic from the predominance of black bile, and was called cold and dry. As the humors determined not only the temperaments but the appearance of persons, "complexion" developed the meaning it has in modern English.

334. Before coffee and tea were introduced into England, beer and wine were in common use as morning drinks. This line does not imply that the Franklin was a drunkard. Recipes for making sops in wine are given in the Two Fifteenth Century Cook Books (EETS), pp. 11 and 90.

In Cornwall a species of apple is called "Sops in Wine" (N and Q, x, 8, 249) but the Franklin had probably not heard, "An apple a day," etc.

340. St. Julian was the patron saint of hospitality. The mediaeval belief in his power is well illustrated by a passage in the Decamerone (II, 2):

And pray, sir, (said one of the rogues) what sort of prayers do you use when you are upon a journey? In truth, answered Rinaldo, I know little of those matters, and am master of very few prayers; but I live in an old-fashioned way, and can tell that one hundred cents make a dollar; but nevertheless on a journey I have always been accustomed to say in the morning a Pater Noster and an Ave Maria for the souls of the father and mother of St. Julian; after which I pray God and him to give me good lodging for the coming night. And many a time have I been in great danger, but have always escaped, and when night came on, I always had a good lodging, which favor I firmly believe St. Julian obtained of God for me, nor do I think I should ever travel serenely or have good lodging at night were I to forget this prayer.

Hospitality was practiced so extravagantly in the Middle Ages that Edward II thought it necessary to restrain it by ordinance (Bateson, Medieval England, p. 303), but the laws probably had little effect; cf. the epitaphs of two of the Lords Cobham emphasizing their hospitality, Arch. Cant. XI, 49ff.

It is interesting, though perhaps not significant, that a generation later Thomas Chaucer, the poet's son, was praised as the St. Julian "of his contree." And it will be remembered that although he was one of the wealthiest and most powerful persons in England, his status was that of a "frankeleyne":

Saynt Julian owre joye and all owre gloyre
Come hoome ageyne lyche as we desyre,
To suppowaylen al the hole shyre.

—"At the Departyng of Thomas Chaucer," pr. by Hammond,

MPb, I, 333-36

341. after oon, 'up to the same high standard.'

343f. bake mete . . . Of fissh and flessh: 'pies of fish and flesh.' The changes of menu according to the seasons may be illustrated from Wynkyn de Worde in Babees Book, pp. 274-82. Russell's menu for a fifteenth century franklin's feast is given in the same volume, p. 170f.

350. In consequence of the many fast days on which it was not permitted to eat meat, ponds (stewes) to provide fresh fish, were maintained by all who could afford to have them. Some of these mediaeval stews are still in existence, for example that of The Vache, the ancient manor of Sir Philip la Vache, Chaucer's friend, at Chalfont St. Giles.

353. As the hall of a manor house was the principal living-room, the dining-table was usually a temporary affair set up for each meal and removed at its close. In a will of 1374 (Sussex Arch. Coll., XXV, 150) such tables are called "mobiles" — "tabulis tam mobilibus quam aliis." Compare the directions for serving in a great house given in A Fifteenth Century Courtesy Book (EETS), p. 12:

And the yemen and gromys or grome of the chambre . . . or the vsshare or gromes or grome . . . shall set vp bordes and make redy the stoles afore mete and haue hem redy at the setting of bordes, and bryng hem redy to the marshall when he callithe, and also after mete bere away the bordes, trestelles, and stolis.

The Franklin is represented as being so hospitable that he kept a table always ready to serve anyone who might come in.

355f. The Franklin had presided at sessions of justices of the peace, just as Roger de Coverley did in a later day. He had also often represented his county in parliament.

357. An anlaas was a two-edged stiletto or dagger broad at the hilt and tapering to a point. A wound made by one is described as 1 inch long and 5 inches deep (Sharpe, Cal. Cor. Rolls London 1300-1378, p. 98). A gipser was originally, as the name indicates, a game bag, but in Chaucer's time it was applied to any sort of small bag, even a purse: "8 June 1376. Richard Bor accused of having deceitfully silvered a number of buttons and circlets of latten for purses called 'givesers.'" (Letter Book H, p. 34.)

359. The term countour had two meanings. It seems impossible to determine which was intended here. It might mean 'an accountant' (BD, 435). More probably it means 'a pleader in court.' In the London Letter Book G, p. 74, countour is translated 'pleader,' and non-professional pleaders are distinguished from men of law.

360. A vavasour was originally a 'vassal of vassals,' that is, one who held his property, not directly from the king, but from a tenant-in-chief. Vavasours ranked after knights bannerets. Harrison says: "It was a denomination applied unto all degrees of honour under the first three" (Harrison's Description of England, I, 113-15. New Shakspeare Soc. ed.; cf. also Arch., XXXIX (1), 191). The term seems not to have been in very common use in the South in the fourteenth century, and as a proper name it was rare in the South, though common in the North.

361ff. Haberdashers were of two kinds: haberdashers of hats, and haberdashers of small wares. The latter dealt in needles, tapes, buttons, and all sorts of miscellaneous small goods. Tapicers dealt sometimes in blankets. On the city tradesmen see pp. 70-72 above, and for a fuller account consult Kuhl, "Chaucer's Burgesses," Trans. Wisc. Acad. XVIII, 652-75. The essential fact is that these men all belonged to the 'non-victualing' trades, which in the conflict for political control of the city were partisans of John of Gaunt. Chaucer does not, however, choose representatives from any of the ten non-victualing companies which openly denounced Mayor Brembre in the Parliament of 1386. As he had been long associated with Brembre in the Customs, this may be significant.

363f. Although of different trades, these men belonged to the same fraternitee, or gild, doubtless a gild organized ostensibly for philanthropic and religious purposes. The patron saint of the Drapers was St. Thomas of Canterbury; possibly the "solempne and gret fraternitee" was dedicated to him. The returns of 1389 show the gilds to have been prevailingly religious, not merely burial or benefit clubs. Many gilds were founded for specific purposes, such as repairing a chapel, supporting a priest to assist the vicar, repairing bridges, educating boys, giving a play, etc. The terrible effects of the Black Death had made gilds very necessary. The distinction between religious and trade gilds would hardly have been understood in the Middle Ages, as all gilds were religious. On the whole subject compare Westlake, Parish Gilds, and of course Gross, The Gild Merchant.

376-77. Chaucer can never refrain from poking fun at the social ambitions of the women. The ceremonies of the vigils were held on the evening before the gild festival. Probably the reference is to these rather than to the ordinary church services on the vigils of saints' days.

379f. for the nones. Originally meaning 'for the once' (that is, 'for the occasion') this phrase developed all the meanings of which that phrase is capable. Sometimes it means 'for this occasion only'; sometimes it is an adjective meaning 'of the right sort'; sometimes an intensifying adverb practically equivalent to 'very.' Here it is doubtful whether Chaucer represents the Cook merely as being especially skilful or as being brought by the tradesmen for the express purpose of cooking their meals on the pilgrimage. As we have no account of what occurred at any of the stopping-places, we do not know whether the tradesmen had their own table or not (but cf. ll. 747ff.). On the whole subject of meals and manners in ancient inns the student can safely read Fynes Moryson's picturesque account, quoted in Harrison's Description of England (New Sh. Soc.), Appendix II, pp. lxxf.; for there can have been no great changes between Chaucer's time and Shakespeare's. The disreputable character of the Cook comes out in his tale and the conversation introducing it (I, 4325, 4420).

386. mormal, a cancerous sore; for a description of it and the method of cure, see Lanfranc's Cirurgie (EETS), pp. 293f., Arderne's Fistula, p. 53, and, for a full discussion, Curry, pp. 47-52.

387. blankmanger. Not the dish now called 'blanc-mange,' but capon minced with rice, milk, sugar, and almonds. See Liber Cure Cocorum (EETS), p. 9.

388ff. The Shipman has been regarded as a typical figure; but, with a skilful disclaimer of responsibility, Chaucer suggests that he came from Dartmouth; and curiously enough Dartmouth was very much in the public eye just at this time in connection with piracy. Its leading citizen John Hawley (or Hauley) had been several times cited before the King's council, of which Chaucer's friend Sir Lewis Clifford was a member, for piratical attacks on the vessels of friendly nations. Charges of this sort against Hawley and the men of Dartmouth appear in the Patent Rolls for 1386, 1387, 1388, and 1389, and their exploits are recorded by the chroniclers Knighton, Walsingham, and Malvern. But it seems probable that the event which all Chaucer's readers would recall at the mention of Dartmouth was the seizure — notwithstanding their possession of a safe conduct from Sir John de Roches, captain of Brest — of five French ships in the neighborhood of Brest, between the Forland and Penmark, by four vessels under the leadership of John Hawley and manned largely by Dartmouth seamen. Inasmuch as the honor of Sir Thomas Percy was involved in the matter, the case was tried in the Court of Chivalry — the same court in which Chaucer had himself been a witness. The proceedings lasted several years and the testimony, highly abbreviated, fills nine rolls of seventy-one skins of vellum.

Hawley himself was too distinguished a person, and perhaps too cultivated, to have been the original of the Shipman. If Chaucer had an individual in mind it was perhaps Peter Risshenden, who is recorded as the master of the Maudeleyne on Sept. 21, 1391, and who was with Hawley in the seizure of the vessels near Brest.

In any event, it may be noted that it would have been easy for anyone familiar with Dartmouth to identify the Shipman. According to the Subsidy Roll of 1377, Dartmouth contained, exclusive of the clergy and mendicants, only 506 persons above fourteen years of age.

390. rouncy. Hinckley has shown that the common opinion that rouncy means a poor horse is wrong, and brings evidence to prove that it means rather a great, strong horse. It has been suggested that the Shipman's horse was one of the regular post horses supplied for travel along the Canterbury Road. This may be true if the Shipman came by water to London, as seems probable.

395. a good felawe; cf. note on l. 653.

396. The precise manner in which the Shipman stole the wine can hardly be ascertained. Kölbing, ES, XXIV, 341, refers to the trick of Lazarillo de Tormes, who used a long straw to draw wine from the cask of his blind but suspicious master, but that is not very probable here.

401ff. The Shipman was expert in knowledge of tides, currents, the phases of the moon, the waters of harbors, and all other matters necessary for piloting a ship (lodemenage).

404. Cartage. Not the ancient Carthage in Africa, but probably Cartagena, or New Carthage, in southeastern Spain. Less likely is Cartaya, near the town of Lepe in Spain, from which much Spanish wine was imported into England.

410. For records of a Dartmouth ship called the Magdeleine, and the name of the master in 1379 and 1391, see the article by Karkeek, Essays on Chaucer (Chaucer Soc.), pp. 484ff.

411ff. The high qualifications, mental and moral, demanded of a Doctour of Phisik, date at least from the time of Hippocrates; they are urged with great earnestness by both Lanfranc (pp. 8f. and 298) and Arderne (pp. 123, 141).

413. To speke of phisik and of surgerye. Curry (esp. p. 28) connects this phrase with lyk and understands Chaucer to represent the Doctor as having no equal for talking about his profession and his own eminent qualities. Largely upon the basis of this, he builds up a conception of the Doctor as a highly problematical character, probably in the main a fraud (see pp. 35f.). I take the phrase, not as a complementary infinitive, but as a loose expression, meaning 'with respect to,' or 'if anyone is speaking of'; cf. I, 142, 1829, IV, 211, etc. Consequently I regard the description of him, not as self-revelation, but as Chaucer's objective report on him; and I do not believe that the insinuations of ll. 427f., 438, and 442ff. are meant as singling him out for special reprobation. Many a man at the present day indulges in jibes at medical science and its practitioners who has the highest respect both for the science and the men.

That Chaucer's Doctor was not a charlatan seems to me quite certain. The authors he knew were those in highest professional esteem, and only those. His theories of physiology and medicine were those held by the best writers and practitioners. There is no hint of his reliance on quack handbooks or quack methods of treatment. Although his study was but little on the Bible, he is nowhere represented as resorting to the irreligious practices of "black magic" or to illegal medicines or operations.

414ff. Medicine is the child of magic. In Arabic the same word designated both, and all the old medical books contained both magical formulas and medical receipts; cf. Douthett, Magie et Religion, pp. 36ff. and on the whole subject see Thorndike, Hist. of Magic in the Middle Ages, and Gunther, Early Science at Oxford. On medicine in Chaucer cf. Lowes, "The Loveres Maladye of Hereos," MPb XI, 491ff., and Curry, op. cit.

Mediaeval medical science was largely derived from the Arabs, and although the divorce of it from magic had begun in Chaucer's time, it was by no means complete. Even so intelligent a surgeon as John Arderne gives in his book a charm against cramp, which was to be written on parchment, placed in a purse, and put on the neck of the patient, while those who stood by said the Lord's prayer and one to Our Lady Mary. He says: "I used to write it in Greek letters that it might not be understood by the people," and adds, "and if anyone carries that charm written fairly in the name of God Almighty and believes without doubt, he will not be troubled with cramp" (op. cit. pp. 102ff.).

Astronomy in the Middle Ages included astrology (Intro. pp. 137-44), which — since it merely attempted to make use of natural forces — was regarded as magyk natureel. The ymages for which the doctor chose fortunate ascendants (see pp. 137-43 above) were certainly not the wax images described by most commentators on this passage. Those were, I think, used only in "black magic," with unlawful ceremonies, to injure persons represented by the images. See The Proceedings against Dame Alice Kyteler (Camden Soc.), and the accusations brought against the Duchess of Gloucester in 1441 (K. H. Vickers, Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, pp. 271ff.). The ymages here meant are the astronomical or astrological images discussed by Thebit ben Corat (Tractatus de Imaginibus) of the ninth century and many later writers on astrology and medicine (cf. Thorndike, I, s. v. Image, esp. pp. 664-66, 388ff., 399-400, 673-74). They may be made of any substance; the important thing is that they should be made under a fortunate ascendant, that is, when the celestial body just rising in the east is favorable to the purpose intended and is in favorable "aspects" with other powerful and propitious stars and signs. So Cecco d'Ascoli in his Comment on Alcabitius, after giving the reasons why the triplicity of the signs Aries, Leo, and Sagittarius is nobler than all the other triplicities, says, "This is what Damascene meant in saying that medicines do not act because they are hot or cold, but because they are endowed with celestial virtue. . . . And in this manner images operate that are made to procure love, honor, or similar benefits; for if an image to procure love is made in the hour of Venus, Venus being in Pisces or in Taurus fortifying Venus, then in the pouring of the metal the due proportion of elements is obtained by this modal aspect, whence results the required quality in the thing itself (Il Commento di Cecco D'Ascoli all' Alcabizzo, ed. Boffito, p. 26.).

420f. See note on I, 333.

423f. "It is impossible for a chirurgian for to kane a cure but-if he knowe the cause therof" (Lanfranc, p. 201; cf. also Arderne, pp. 56ff.).

429ff. The physicians mentioned in these lines were the medical authorities in greatest esteem in the fourteenth century. Among the small number of books forming the library of the faculty of medicine of New College, Oxford, about the year 1400 were the following: "Contentum de libris Galieni; Passionario Galieni; Razis in Almos; Averoy's in collecta, Liber alter Ypocratis; Pars Gilbertini Anglici, cum aliis"; and the following were chained in the library for common use: "Galienus de electis, cum aliis; Collecta Averoy's, cum aliis; Canon Avicennae; Gilbertinus; Bernardus de Metodo curandi morbos, cum aliis; Dioscorides de summa medicina; Gadesden super affectibus; Rosa medicinae; Alia Rosa medicinae" (Leach, "Wykeham's Books at New College," Oxf. Hist. Soc. Coll., III, 242-44). Curry suggests that the Doctor is citing mythical treatises. I see no reason for this insinuation. Even in the case of the olde Esculapius the allusion is probably, not to the Herbarium which Apuleius received from Esculapius and Chiron the centaur (cf. Thorndike, I, 597, n. 2), but to Esculapii de morborum . . . origine, causis, descriptionibus, et cura liber, which with Trotulae curandarum aegritudinum mulierum . . . lib. formed the Experimentarius Medicinae, published in folio by John Schott, 1544. The significant fact about Chaucer's list is that it contains ancient classical authorities (Hippocrates, Dioscorides, and Galienus), the most famous of the Arabian authorities (Averrois, Avicenna, Haly, Rasis, and Serapion), as well as the modern European authorities, among whom the latest was the Englishman John Gaddesden, who was an instructor in Merton College, Oxford, and later court physician. Chaucer might have found the names of some of these writers in almost any mediaeval treatise on medicine, but Lounsbury's suggestion that Chaucer's reading was in general superficial is hardly borne out by the evidence. He was at any rate very familiar with mediaeval science, as is abundantly proved by Curry. Details concerning these physicians will be found in Thorndike, A History of Magic and Experimental Science.

435f. Arderne also (p. 4) urges moderation in diet and dress, but in regard to clothing he advises that it be not rich and gaudy but like that of a learned man: "Also dispose a leche hym that in clothes and othir apparalyngis be he honeste, not likkinyng hymself in apparalyng or beryng to mynistrallez, but in clothing and beryng shew he the maner of clerkes. For-why it semeth any discrete man ycladde with clerkis clothing for to occupie gentil mennez borde."

438. This line is difficult to interpret. On the one hand, from the time that the healing art was dissociated from the official priesthood, medicine has in all countries been regarded as unreligious, if not anti-religious. Note the Arabic classification together of doctors and sorcerers, and the widespread modern feeling that doctors are freethinkers. On the other hand, we cannot disregard the strong insistence of mediaeval physicians such as Lanfranc, on the necessity of piety and reliance on God; cf. Lanfranc (pp. 123, 141) and Arderne (pp. 2ff. and 7). Arderne's opinion is in no degree discounted by his remark (p. 8): "Also it spedeth that a leche kunne talke of gode talez and of honeste that may make the pacientes to laughe, as well of the bible as of other tragediez." The piety of Chaucer's Doctor seems, however, to have been questioned by more than one of the pilgrims (cf. VI, 307 and IV, 1810), for the letuaries were not in good repute.

442. Arderne not only insists upon a clear understanding in regard to the amount of the fee, but counsels that the surgeon boldly ask more or less according to the estate of the patient: "But ever be he ware of scarce askings, for over scarce askings setteth at naught both the market and the thing. Therefore ask ye competently, of a worthy man and a great an hundred marks or forty pounds, with robes and fees of an hundred shillings term of life by year. Of less men forty pounds, or forty marks ask ye without fees; and take ye not less than an hundred shillings. For never in all my life took I less than an hundred shillings for cure of that sickness" (p. 6; cf. 4ff. and note).

443f. "Aurum potable" or drinkable gold was a highly esteemed medicine in the Middle Ages and early modern times. The alchemists gave many recipes for making it. Some physicians held that wine in which a heated gold plate had been several times cooled possessed rare virtue as medicine (Thorn-dike, II, 854). Chaucer slyly suggests this as a reason for the doctor's love of gold.

445ff. To search for a model for the Wyf of Bath may seem a quixotic and impossible undertaking; and as a matter of fact I shall not try to suggest a definite individual. But a curious indication of the accuracy of detail in Chaucer's work has come to light in the course of my study of her. It will be remembered that Chaucer does not say she comes from Bath, but "from beside Bath." Investigation of the history of the cloth industry in Bath shows that it had been practiced there from very ancient times, but there is no evidence that any of the neighboring villages were engaged in it. Just outside the north gate of the city, however, lay the church and parish known as "St. Michael's Without" or "St. Michael's juxta Bathon," a suburb largely given over to weaving. The road from London to Bath passes directly through the suburb, before entering the north gate of the city. St. Michael's church stands just outside the gate and opposite to it. On his journeys to North Petherton Chaucer could hardly have failed to travel this road; and interested as he must have been in wool and woollen manufactures, he could hardly have failed to learn of any specially picturesque inhabitant of St. Michael's Without, even if he did not meet her. It will be noted that, not only in Bath, but wherever the cloth industry flourished in England, women were prominent in it. There may be no significance in the fact that the records of Bath in the fourteenth century contain an unusually large number of instances of the name Alyson (cf. V 548, 804).

The encomium of lines 447f. is exaggerated and perhaps ironical, for the West Country weavers were not in very good repute, according to Atton and Holland (The King's Customs, p. 26), who cite an enactment of Richard's reign "that all West-Country cloth should be exposed for sale open, as merchants who had bought it by the bale and had taken it abroad had been in danger of their lives from the incensement of buyers who had found the bales deceptive." The cloth of Ypres and Ghent and other cities of the Low Countries was for centuries in the highest esteem.

449ff. The strife of women over precedence in going to the offering is cited as a common trait in Mabieu, II. 1420ff.

453-55. Most editors think that Chaucer playfully exaggerates the weight of the Wife's headdress, but the pictures of the enormous structures which were sometimes in fashion suggest that there was little exaggeration, if any. See Fairholt, History of Costume in England, figs. 125, 129, 130, 151.

460. In ancient times marriages were celebrated at the church door; see Rock, The Church of our Fathers, III, pt. 2, 172, Brand, Popular Antiquities, II, 134, and La Tour, p. 59.

463ff. Jerusalem. Various mediaeval spellings show that the second syllable of this word should be slurred. The Wife visited Boulogne in France, because of a famous shrine of the Virgin; the shrine of St. James in Galicia, because it was one of the three most frequented of holy places; Cologne, because of the relics of the Three Kings, which were, and still are, supposed to be kept there.

In Mabieu, one of the bitterest of the satires on women, the author declares that women commonly attend church and go on pilgrimages "en obeissant a Venus"; numerous other testimonies are cited by Van Hamel in his edition, II, p. 166.

Cook (MLN, XXII, 126) quotes a passage from the Victoria History of the County of Cornwall showing that there was a regular service of ships from the southern ports of England for pilgrims to Santiago de Compostela.

468. In explanation of this line Professor Skeat refers to a present-day superstition that teeth set far apart are a sure sign of luck and travel. That the Wife was what our ancestors called calida mulier is undeniable, but the suggestion that gat-tothed mean 'goat-toothed, lascivious' has little to commend it. Gat is a regular form for 'goat' in northern English, but would hardly be used by Chaucer except in dialect.

Curry ("More about Chaucer's Wife of Bath," PMLA, XXXVII, 45) ascribes her possession of wide-set teeth to the influence of Mars in her horoscope, and quotes authorities on physiognomy to the effect that such teeth indicate a vain, bold, unfaithful, impious, and lascivious person.

473. Women rode astride in fourteenth century England until Queen Anne and her ladies introduced the new custom of sitting sidewise. In the beautiful series of pictures representing early fifteenth century life in the Duke de Berry's Très Riches Heures, the ladies of the aristocracy are represented as riding sidewise; see the reproduction, opp. p. 192.

475. Whether the remedies of love known to the Wife were derived from reading Ovid's Remedia Amoris may well be doubted. To know the olde daunce was fourteenth century slang in French as well as in English; cf. RR, I. 4300: "for she knewe all the olde daunce." It means she was past mistress of the art of love.

477ff. The Person evidently represents Chaucer's conception of the ideal priest. One of the pilgrims (II, 1173) takes him for a Lollard, and it is possible that John Wyclif may have furnished some hints for the portrait (cf. Tatlock, MPb, xiv, 257-68). Chaucer was undoubtedly closely associated with some of the leaders of the Lollard movement, and the most striking and characteristic features of the Parson's life and principles can be closely paralleled from the writings of Wyclif. But there were many orthodox priests in England at that time who might have furnished the essential traits of the picture and who, without being followers of Wyclif, were distinctly pious, and even puritanical. Moreover, orthodox churchmen had long described the ideal priest in terms very similar to those used by Chaucer. On the general subject of the Parson, see Rogers, Six Centuries of Work and Wages, pp. 64-66.

The parish of this good man was poor as well as wide. As the very term person implies that he was a rector, not a vicar or a curate (cf. Lincoln Diocesan Docs. EETS, p. 225), we may suppose that his poverty was due to the fact that the larger tithes were impropriated by some monastery or other patron. In many parishes the houses were fer asonder; the parish of Dinton (Bucks) was so large (3800 acres), that the inhabitants of the village of Ford clubbed together to pay a chaplain of their own (English Register of Godstow, EETS, pt. iii, Introd., pp. lxxvif.; on impropriations, cf. ibid., p. lxxv).

486-90. The principal income of a parish was derived from the tithes and other fixed dues established by law. Properly this income was to be divided into four equal parts: one for the rector, one for the dependent clergy, one for the maintenance of the church buildings, and one for the poor. How greatly and in what ways the church funds were misappropriated is told in detail by Coulton, The Medieval Village (see the index, under Dues, Parish, Tithes). Parishioners who failed to pay their tithes were liable to excommunication, or cursing. In addition to tithes, special dues had to be paid on special occasions, such as marriages and deaths. Besides these the parishioners made voluntary offerings. Many of the clergy were rich, but many, like Chaucer's Person, were as poor as their parishioners.

497. Gower also has this idea:

Crist wrought first and after taught. — (CA, II, 188).

507ff. The complaint was common that parish priests hired substitutes to perform the duties of the parish, and themselves went to London to obtain employment in singing masses in the chantry chapels of the city churches. In 1362 the Archbishop of Canterbury had fixed the salaries of chantry priests at five marks a year and those of parish chaplains at six marks. Eighteen years later Archbishop Sudbury increased these salaries to seven and eight marks respectively. The chantries — endowments for daily masses for a term of years or forever — were maintained sometimes by individuals, sometimes by guilds (cf. bretherhed, l. 511). The rector of a parish who hired a chaplain to perform his parish duties would of course take all the income of the parish above the six or eight marks paid to the chaplain. As almost everyone who died possessed of any property established a chantry for his own soul and for those of some of his relatives or friends, the demand for chantry priests was enormous. Even as early as 1345 (July 8) a letter, under the seal of the mayoralty, was sent to the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, complaining of the lack of chantry priests to perform the duties of chantries founded by citizens in the City's Mother Church; cf. Letter Book F, p. 124. The supply of priests was terribly diminished by the ravages of the Plague in 1348-49, 1362, 1369 and 1376, with the result that many parishes were left without anyone to conduct religious services. On the whole subject of chantries see Westlake, Parish Guilds, pp. 46-48.

511. bretherhed; cf. Tatlock, MLN, xxxi, 139-42. Skeat's doubt of the use of withholde was unjustified, cf.:

Extorcioun, kontek, ravine

Withholde ben of that covyne. — (CA, viii, 3015f.)

526. a spiced conscience seems to be one that has been sophisticated in some way; cf. the quotations in OED.

529ff. As his brother was a priest, it is probable that the Plowman was not a serf but a free laborer, perhaps owning a horse and cart and working for wages.

541. The tabard was originally a rich coat worn by nobles and heralds (see note on l. 20, above), but by Chaucer's time the name was applied also to the blouse or smock worn by poor laborers; see especially the episode in Wright's Reliquiae Antiquae, I, 61–63, in which the priest demands the tabard from the poor man's back in payment for a mass to protect him from the temptations of the fiend.

On Dec. 28, 1377, the king granted a pardon to Elena Clytero for having entered the house of Richard Couper at Cranefield and there stolen four sheets, value 6 d.; a coat, value 10 d.; a pair of paternosters, value 12 d.; and a tabard, value 8 d. (Cal. Pat. Rolls, 1377–81, p. 86.)

Persons of wealth and rank usually rode horses, not mares.

542–44. Some scholars think that the persons named in these lines were not in Chaucer's original plan, but were added as an afterthought; see Hammond, pp. 254f. This seems doubtful. The Reve, the Millere, the Pardonere, the Somnour, and the Maunciple may not have been in his original plan, but that Chaucer himself was, from the first, one of the pilgrims seems clear from I, 17ff.

545ff. For a good account of the social and economic status of the Miller see Rogers, Six Centuries of Work and Wages, p. 65. As the miller had a monopoly of grinding the grain of the tenants of a manor, and as his occupation admitted of much trickery and dishonesty, enmity between millers and reeves was not uncommon. Chaucer perhaps intends to indicate this by making the Reeve lag sullenly at the rear of the procession, as far as possible from the Miller, who, because he played the bagpipe, rode at the head.

The portrait of the Miller is full of individual traits, and his quarrel with the Reeve serves to link him with the Reeve as drawn from a living model (cf. note on I, 587ff.).

548. The best picture of the popular sport of wrestling — for which a ram was a common prize — is given in The Tale of Gamelyn, which, although commonly believed not to be by Chaucer, occurs in a large number of the manuscripts of CT (see above, p. 81).

560. goliardeys. At some uncertain date, but long before Chaucer's day, vagabond clerics who wrote satires on the church and a considerable amount of Latin verse decidedly worldly in substance and tone were commonly called 'Familia Goliae,' or 'Goliardi,' or 'Goliardenses.' By Chaucer's time the term 'Goliardeys' was used loosely for any teller of disreputable stories or singer of disreputable songs. On the origin of the term see "Familia Goliae," MPb, V, 201-09 and, for a different theory, Thompson, Stud Phil, xx, 83-98.

563. The old proverb "An honest miller has a golden thumb" is parallel to the other proverb "A perfectly honest man has hair growing in the palm of his hand." The suggestion that Chaucer also has in mind the value of the Miller's thumb in testing the quality of flour is possible but not very probable.

567ff. A maunciple was a subordinate official of a college or other similar organization; in the Inner Temple he ranked below the cook. Although Chaucer devotes twenty lines to him here, he merely emphasizes his dishonesty and cunning and makes no effort to give any definite impression of him. As the same traits are brought out in the little scene preceding his tale (IX 1-104), it would seem that Chaucer was merely hitting at the cunning of manciples in general and perhaps at the same time chaffing the learned masters of law who allowed themselves to be cheated by such servants.

The societies of the Inner Temple and the Middle Temple got their names from the buildings which they occupy. These buildings were originally the property of the great and wealthy order of Knights Templars, but after the suppression of the order and confiscation of its property, they were granted to the order of Knights of St. John of Jerusalem. The Knights of St. John then sublet the premises to lawyers for a school. Formerly it was supposed that in Chaucer's day there was only one society of lawyers occupying the Temple buildings; and consequently some scholars doubted whether in l. 567 the correct reading was a Temple or the Temple. Recent research confirms the MS reading a. It appears that certain apprenticii, drawn mainly from St. George's Inn, one of the already existing law schools, first settled in some of the Temple buildings between 1322 and 1326. Later, another group, from Clifford's Inn, obtained a demise of the remaining parts and took possession of them. The first group became known as the Society of the Middle Temple; the other as the Society of the Inner Temple. See Master Worsley's Book (ed. A. R. Ingpen), Introduction.

The education in the inns of court was very broad, including instruction not only in law but also in Latin, French, history, music, and other subjects supposed to be of value professionally or socially. Many of the members of the Temple devoted themselves, not to practice at the bar, but to the management of large estates and other professional business. The training given was the best preparation for a business career then offered in England (cf. ll. 576-83).

570. by taille, by tally. A tally (from tailler, to cut) was a strip of wood notched to indicate the amount of a debt. It was then split, each party retaining one half. At a date set for payment, the creditor presented his half as evidence of the amount owed. For full information about tallies cf. the learned and interesting article of Jenkinson, in Arch, LXXIV, 289-351.

579. Cf. Davenport, Norfolk Manor, p. 22:

"It was usually the business of holding court that brought him [the steward] to the manor. His special province was to protect the legal rights of the lord, and he had also to acquaint himself with the economic administration of the estate."

He acted as a check upon the bailiffs and other officers. It may be worth noting that these men obtained a legal training, not in order to practice law, but to fit them for business management. Chaucer's object in obtaining a legal training seems to have been similar.

586. sette hir aller cappe, slang for 'got the better of them.'

587ff. Two of the most definitely detailed portraits of the Prologue are those of the Reeve and the Millere, whose ancient enmity breaks out on the very first morning as soon as the Knight has finished his tale, and motivates with entire naturalness the departure from the conventional order in calling upon the story-tellers. The Reeve is unmistakably individual. Not only are his personal appearance and his equipment described in detail, but he is definitely allocated to an insignificant village in a distant part of Norfolk. The situation of his dwelling is described, and he is specifically said to have had charge of the affairs of the manor since his lord was twenty years of age. What interest, one may ask, could Chaucer have had in a distant village like Baldeswelle, and what could the mention of it have meant to the circle of friends and acquaintances for whom CT were written? These questions are not as difficult as might be supposed. Baldeswelle and the adjoining manor of Foxley were parts of the Norfolk estates of the earls of Pembroke. The second earl went abroad in the retinue of the Prince of Wales before April 4, 1369, only a few months after he had come of age, and with the exception of brief visits to England remained in foreign service until his death in 1375. At his death all his landed estates held by direct tenure from the king reverted to the king and remained in his hands during the minority of the heir. In 1378 the king granted the care and management of some of them to Sir William Beauchamp, whose two mainpernors or sureties were "John Beverle and Geoffrey Chaucer of London." The estates had long been mismanaged, and continued to be so while in the hands of Sir William de Beauchamp. He therefore after considerable discussion turned them over in 1386 to the Countess of Norfolk, the grandmother of the young Pembroke heir.

That Baldeswelle and Foxley were not among the lands concerning the management of which Chaucer had assumed definite financial obligations as mainpernor, strengthens the case. Beauchamp, who had once hoped for the possession of all the lands, and who must have regarded the Countess of Norfolk as in some sense a rival, could hardly have failed, when his own management of the part he had was questioned, to enjoy a satire on one of her rascally officers. Undoubtedly the prominence of the principals — Sir William de Beauchamp, the young Earl of Hastings, and the great Countess of Norfolk — was such that the whole affair must have been a subject of common talk both in the small circle of the court and among substantial men in the city.

Originally the reeve of a manor was one of the serfs attached to the estate, elected annually to represent the interests of the serfs against the bailiff, who originally represented the interests of the lord of the manor. In the course of time, however, the reeve came to be more and more trusted by the lord, and in many cases seems to have taken over the functions of the bailiff as well as those originally belonging to the reeve (cf. Davenport, op. cit., pp. 25 and 50). In some instances his appointment was not annual but for an indefinite term. He kept account of all receipts and expenditures, whether of money, grain, or stock, and was obliged to submit to the auditors of his lord evidence of the correctness of these accounts in the shape of written bills, or, more frequently, tallies.

The bailiff was appointed by the lord, as has been said, and sometimes resided on the manor to look after the interests of the lord, to see that the demesne was properly tilled, the grain garnered, stock cared for, and the produce sold in the best market. He was paid yearly wages (in the fourteenth century about 100 s.) and also had his dwelling and an allowance for his horse (ibid. p. 22). Sometimes he had charge of more than one manor.

The steward (cf. l. 579ff.) was the general representative of a landowner who possessed a number of manors. He passed from one manor to another as supervisor of all the manor officials. His authority was only less than that of the lord of the manor himself.

"As the steward acted as a check upon the bailiff and other officers, so did the accountants (or auditors) upon the officers of the manor, including the steward himself. Before threshing time they sometimes came to the manor to examine into the condition of the estate and to estimate the quantity of grain . . . one of their chief duties was to collect money that was due" (ibid. p. 23).

604. covyne, any sort of agreement to defraud. Letter Book G (p. 295) records that the dyers, by covine among themselves, now receive 12 d. or 14 d. for a pound of Brazil dye instead of 7½ d. as formerly.

616. Scot seems to have been a common name for a workhorse; it occurs twice in John de Berington's inventory (1389), Oxf. Hist. Soc., Misc. III, 60, n. 12; cf. CT, III, 1543.

620. Baldeswelle, the modern Bawdswell, a village in the northern part of Norfolk not far from Reepham; cf. note on ll. 587ff.

623ff. A Somonour was an apparitor or constable attached to an ecclesiastical court. In the fourteenth century minor officials of both the ecclesiastical and the secular courts preyed unmercifully upon the poor and ignorant. They accepted bribes for bringing false charges against innocent persons, and also brought false charges on their own account for the purpose of securing bribes to let the charges drop. The best comment on this sketch of the Sumnour is FrT. Cf. Lanfranc (pp. 191, 193, 203) and Letter Book H, pp. 328, 330.

624ff. The full repulsiveness of the Summoner's face does not appear at first. It is only after ll. 627 and 632f. that one fully understands l. 628. The flaming red face, spotted with white-headed pustules, the scraggly beard and scabby eyebrows, the eyelids swollen so as to leave only a narrow slit for seeing, and probably deprived of lashes and turned partly wrong-side out, are manifest symptoms of alopicia, a form of leprosy. As the treatments suggested in ll. 629-32 are the usual mediaeval prescriptions for this disease, there can be no doubt of Chaucer's intention. For a full discussion of the whole subject, see Curry, ch. ii.

627. piled berd. Lanfranc, p. 180, says: "Allopix in grew [i.e., Greek] is seid fox in latin; for a fox in sum tyme of the yeer his heer pilith awei, and therfore fallyng awei of heer is clepid allopucia"; cf. also "piled away," ibid. p. 184.

635ff. Chaucer was not the only person in the Middle Ages to note the tendency of strong drink to promote the gift of tongues. Wander, Deutsches Sprichwörter-Lexicon, quotes a proverb:

Post sumere vinum loquitur mea lingua Latinum:
Et bibo cum bis ter, sum qualibet arte magister.
(After I drink wine my tongue speaks Latin,
And after six drinks I am master of every art.)

Gower writes (Miroir de l'Omme, 8149ff.):

Yveresce fait diverse chance:
Latin fait parler et romance
Au laie gent et au clergoun
Tolt de Latin la remembrance.

Compare also Beunans Meriasek (ed. Stokes, 1872), ll. 80f.

644. grope is commonly used as a technical term for close questioning. Cf. III, 1816f.:

Thise curatz been ful necligent and slowe
To grope tendrely a conscience.

646. questio quid juris. In his exaltation, the Summoner imagines himself conducting a case in the court and using phrases he has heard from the lawyers.

649ff. good felawe was slang for 'a disreputable fellow,' 'a rascal'; cf. "I never besorted or played the good fellow, as sometimes ye know flesh and blood will be frayle, but my wife hath knowen on it ere I came home (John A. Kent, p. 41). The reference is probably to those priests who, contrary to the law of the Church, lived with women. Such women were commonly called concubines. In 1372 the Commons petitioned the king to deprive any priest who lived with a concubine, if after six months the ordinary had failed to do so (Rot. Parl., ii, 314). But the offences of laymen against morals were also under the jurisdiction of the archdeacon.

To "pull a finch" has usually been explained as slang for 'cheat a victim,' but in MPb, VII, 476f., Kittredge quotes four French songs to show that plumer has an obscene sense. For uses of the corresponding English term "pulle" he refers to "Piers of Fulham" and "The Baffled Knight."

655. The archdeacon was normally the executive officer of a district of the diocese and the head of the ecclesiastical court. Sentences of excommunication ('cursing') were therefore under his control.

662. After a sentence of excommunication had been passed by the Church, a writ for seizing the excommunicated person was issued by the civil authorities at the request of the bishop. This writ, technically called 'De excommunicato capiendo,' began with the words "Significavit nobis venerabilis pater," and was popularly called a 'Significavit.'

663. daunger still retained its original meaning of 'power, control.' Hinckley rightly says it is best rendered by 'under his thumb, at his mercy.'

664. girles. 'young people,' without regard to sex. Skeat points out that knave gerlys, meaning 'boys', occurs in the Coventry Mysteries; cf. also, "Grammer for gerles I garte first wryte" (PP, B, x, 175).

665. Note that conseil means 'secrets'; cf. VI, 819.

666ff. The Summoner, having perhaps already imbibed too freely, was arrayed very festively. The usual sign for a mediaeval drinking place was a bush of ivy or a garland of leaves and flowers wreathed on a hoop and suspended from a pole, called an alestake, which projected horizontally above the door of the alehouse; cf. VI, 321f. Competition led to the use of alestakes so large and long as to become dangerous. In the city of London ordinances were passed that no alestake should extend more than seven feet over the roadway. Cf. Liber Albus, trans. Riley, pp. 389, 992.

669ff. The Pardoner. On the general subject cf. Jusserand, "Chaucer's Pardoner and the Pope's Pardoners" in Essays on Chaucer (Chaucer Soc.), pp. 421-436, or his Wayfaring Life in the Middle Ages, pp. 309-337.

Indulgences were originally commutations of penances imposed for sins. The pope, archbishops, and bishops were believed to have the power of permitting good works, or payments for the support of good works, to be substituted for the usual penances for sins. Later — under the theory (elaborated by St. Thomas Aquinas) of a treasury of merits accumulated by Christ and the saints, participation in which could be granted by the proper ecclesiastical authorities — money payments for indulgences became more and more common. Abuses arose in two ways: first, by the forgery of papal credentials and bulls of indulgence, commonly called pardons; second, by the corrupt practices even of quaestors or pardoners properly authorized by the pope and handling genuine bulls.

The bulls of indulgence were written on strips of parchment with the leaden seals of the papal office attached. These bulls were purchased wholesale at a price which seems not to have exceeded a penny apiece, and then disposed of for all that the traffic would bear. Technically the profits made by duly authorized quaestors or pardoners went to some religious organization and were devoted to some pious work, such as the support of the brethren or sisters, or the building or repair of their houses. In practice, however, much of the profits stuck to the fingers of the pardoners themselves. According to ecclesiastical law, pardoners were not allowed to operate in a diocese without the permission of the bishop, but according to PP not only the bishop but even the parish priest sometimes shared the ill-gotten gains of the pardoner. Cf. PP, Prol., ll. 64-79.

Notices of pardoners are common in all parts of England in the fourteenth century, and they continued their activities even to the time of the Restoration. A satirical poem printed by Wright, Political Poems, II, 79, names those of St. Thomas of Acres, of Antoun, and of Rouncival. The B text of PP, II, 108, mentions "Pieres the Pardonere of Paulynes doctrine." R. H. Morris, Chester in the Plantagenet and Tudor Reigns, p. 573, quotes from the Churchwardens Accounts of St. Mary on the Hill (Chester) in 1536-37, entries of payments for the privilege of selling indulgences: "Received of two pardoners viii d., of a pardoner of St. Chad ii d., of a pardoner of Our Lady Rounseval iv d." The best study of the pardoners of Rouncival is that in The Story of St. Mary Roncevale, by James Galloway, 1907; see also Westlake, Parish Gilds, especially pp. 77-96. The Rouncival referred to was at Charing Cross, then a village just outside London. It was a cell or subordinate house of Our Lady of Roncevaux in Navarre. Toward the end of the fourteenth century, the house passed into the possession of a fraternity and ceased to have any relations with the mother house except the payment of a small annual rent. Whether this change occurred before or after the operations of Chaucer's Pardoner does not clearly appear; but Galloway prints records which charge that certain persons had collected money for the hospital and retained it for their own use. It has been pointed out that pardoners were especially abundant after the jubilee year 1390 (Lea, History of Auricular Confessions and Indulgences in the Latin Church, III, 66), but long before that date their activities had aroused the severest condemnation, not only of satirists and of the general public, but of bishops and popes, as is abundantly proved by the quotations in Jusserand.

There were other houses called "Rouncival" in England. Prof. T. A. Jenkins refers me to the Cartulary of the Monastery of St. Frideswide (Oxford Hist. Soc.), I, 399, for mention of a "domo . . . vocata . . . Runcivall." The charter describes it as "in Oxeneford in vico S. Johanni." But this has nothing to do with our Pardoner.

671. the court of Rome. From 1378 to 1417 Christendom was divided by the Great Schism. There was a pope in Rome, who was recognized by England, Bohemia, Hungary, and the greater part of the Empire, and a rival one in Avignon, who was recognized by France, Spain, Scotland, Sicily, and Cyprus. The causes of the division were not religious but political, and the strife between the two popes led to many deplorable conflicts, which threatened to discredit the church in the eyes of all sincere believers. As England acknowledged the pope of Rome, it was natural that the Pardoner operating in England should come, not from Avignon, but from Rome.

672. Com hider, love, to me: apparently the first line or the refrain of a popular song. Professor Skeat thinks it is the same as that referred to in Pearl, l. 763, but the quotation there is "Come hyder to me, my lemman swete," which, although it is the same in sentiment, is obviously different in form and rhythm.

Note the rhyme of Rome with to me (cf. note on I, 17-8).

675ff. From the abundance of the Pardoner's hair some scholars have inferred that he was a layman who had not received the tonsure. This is entirely possible, and the fact — which we learn later — that he was accustomed to preach does not interfere with this supposition, for laymen were sometimes appointed as quæstors or pardoners and licensed to preach. On the other hand, since the tonsure consisted only in shaving a small space at the crown of the hair, and since tonsured persons were often censured for letting their hair grow long, it is quite possible that Chaucer's Pardoner was in minor orders; cf. note on III, 163ff.

682. the newe jet, the new style, or fashion — which perhaps he was bringing from Italy; cf. "But now a dayes and a woman here of a newe gette, she will never be in pees till she have the same" (La Tour, p. 31).

685. vernycle, a small copy of the handkerchief of St. Veronica preserved at Rome. According to the legend, when Christ was compelled to bear the cross on the road to Calvary, a woman named Veronica lent him a handkerchief to wipe his face. When he returned it to her, it was found to have his picture imprinted upon it. Copies of this portrait, called 'veronicae,' or 'veroniculae' — in English, 'vernicles' — were often brought home by pilgrims to Rome. In the picture of the Pardoner in the Ellesmere MS the portrait of the vernicle can be plainly seen.

692. Berwyk unto Ware: commonly taken to mean from one end of England to the other, but I know of no other early instance of the expression. The district between Berwick-on-Tweed in the extreme north and Ware (in Hertfordshire) would not include London; that between Barwick in Somerset and Ware might be regarded as doing so, but this Barwick seems to have been little known, whereas Berwick-on-Tweed was famous.

694. The development of modern mail, letters and packages carried in a male, or bag, furnishes an interesting study in semantics. pilwebeer was in common use in the eighteenth century. It occurs a number of times in Humphrey Clinker.

696ff. The reference is apparently to the time when St. Peter attempted to walk on the Sea of Galilee and lost his courage and faith.

702. relikes. With the list of relics given here compare that given by the Pardoner himself in V, 347-76. Mock lists of relics were not uncommon; cf. those in the Decamerone, and Heywood's Four PP; cf. also Petit de Jullenville, Repertoire du Théâtre Comique, p. 189.

706. made . . . his apes: slang, 'made fools of them.'

709f. A lesson, or lection, was a passage from the Bible or from a Church Father read in the services of the Hours. Storie, or historia, has several liturgical meanings; see Karl Young, MLN, XXX, 976; and in Manly Anniversary Studies, especially pp. 257-58. The meaning intended here is doubtless the series of lectiones covering a story in the Bible or the life of a saint. The offertorie is the portion of the service of the mass sung while the faithful present their offerings. But it is a mistake to suppose that the offertory was for the benefit of the Pardoner; it was the regular offering for the church.

719. Chaucer seems to indicate very precisely the location of the Tabard, but I can find no other early reference to the Bell inn. Baum's article, MLN, XXXVI, 307-09, though inconclusive, should be consulted. Whether there was another Tabard in Southwark I do not know. There were inns of that name in London; cf. "the tenement which Robert Lyndesone has in Wodestrete at the Tabard in the parish of St. Albans" (Plea and Mem. Rolls, A 30 m. 5d.), and there were at least two more: On 2 June, 7 Richard II, the Mayor and aldermen of London required innholders to give surety for good behavior; in the list for Breadstreet ward was 'John Hostiller at the Tabard'; in that for Faringdon-Without was 'John Lenham atte Tabard' (ib., A 27 m. 11).

723. viage, 'voyage'; in early English the word did not imply travel by water.

741. Chaucer himself could not read Plato in Greek. He took his quotation either from Boethius, De Cons. Phil. iii, pr. 12 — which he translates "Thou hast lerned by the sentence of Plato that nedes the wordes moten be cosines to the thinges of which they spoken" — or from RR, 15820-22:

Li dis doit le fait ressembler;
Car les voiz as choses voisines
Doivent estre a lor faiz cousines.

Few scholars in western Europe in the fourteenth century could read Greek, but there were translations into Latin of many of Aristotle's works and of parts of three of Plato's Dialogues. Such writers as Bradwardine (see note on VII, 4432) quote freely from Plato, but their knowledge is largely derived from the works of St. Augustine and other early church fathers.

747ff. These lines apparently indicate that the pilgrims ate at the table of the Host. If so, it would seem that the London tradesmen were not served by the Cook during the journey; see note on l. 379f.

751ff. We learn from I, 4358 that the Host's name was Harry Bailly. For evidence that this was actually the name of the host of the Tabard at the time when the CT were written, see note on I, 4358.

752. The duties of a marshal called for dignity, a knowledge of precedence, and tact; cf. Two Fifteenth Century Books of Courtesy (EETS), p. 15.

760. The Host, though genial, was taking no chances on the pilgrims.

771ff. Apparently the telling of tales on the road to Canterbury was a common practice. For other forms of entertainment, see the following passage from The Examination of William Thorpe, in 1407:

"They will ordain with them before to have with them both men and women that can well sing wanton songs; and some other pilgrims will have with them bagpipes: so that every town that they come through, what with the noise of their singing, and with the sound of their piping, and with the jangling of their Canterbury bells, and with the barking out of dogs after them, they make more noise than if the King came there away, with all his clarions and many other minstrels. And if these men and women be a month out in their pilgrimage, many of them shall be, a half year after, great janglers, tale-tellers, and liars." — Pollard, Fifteenth Century Prose and Verse, pp. 140-141.

791. oure. The Host has not yet proposed that he should join the pilgrims, but for all that Chaucer may have purposely written oure here and in I, 799 instead of the youre found in some MSS.

793. Hinckley thinks that to Caunterbury ward should be construed with viage of I, 792; but cf. VII, 1734.

798. sentence. Latin 'sententia' regularly means 'valuable morality.'

799. oure aller: a relic of the old genitive plural from ure ealra; cf. I, 823.

803. El has self; but Chaucer probably wrote seife or selven.

810. Professor Skeat says 'we swore our oaths,' but it is rather 'our oaths were sworn.' But we is supplied as subject of preyden in the next line.

814. reportour: not to record the tales, but to report on their merits.

826. The old maps of the Canterbury road show St. Thomas Watering about a mile and a half from the Tabard Inn.

829. After and, most editors insert I, which is found in several manuscripts. El and *Ha*⁴ omit it. Dd has if ye it record. The line with I is not metrically objectionable, but it seems possible that Chaucer may here be using yow recorder as a reflexive verb group of which ye is the subject. The French se recorder regularly means 'to recall, to remember.'

835. cut in the sense of 'lot' is probably not connected with the English verb cut, but is derived, as Hinckley has suggested, from Welsh cwt ('a lot'). A fourteenth century glossary printed in Wright's Reliquiae Antiquae, I, 6-9, has 'sors, a kaut or a lotte'; cf. "Thei saide they wolde drawe cutte" (La Tour, p. 34).

839. neer: not 'near,' but 'nearer.'

THE KNYGHTES TALE (859-3108)

In LGW (F), 420f. Queen Alceste names among the poems she cites in Chaucer's defence:

And al the love of Palamoun and Arcite
Of Thebes, thogh the storye ys knowen lyte.

The source of Chaucer's story of Palamon and Arcite is undoubtedly Boccaccio's Teseide, a long courtly epic in twelve books. The fact that certain stanzas of the epic, closely translated from the original, were used by Chaucer in three of his poems (PF, 16 stanzas; AA, 10 stanzas; and TC, 3 stanzas) all of which are in seven-line stanzas, led scholars for a time to believe that Chaucer had made a complete translation of Boccaccio's epic in the seven-line stanza and that when he came to compose the CT he rewrote this extensive translation, condensing it into the comparatively brief form now known as KT. This view, however, has been generally abandoned, and scholars commonly believe that Chaucer's original version was essentially the same as KT as we now have it. It is clear, of course, that the text must have undergone some revision, cf. ll. 885-92.

Professor Root (The Poetry of Chaucer, p. 295) now believes that the composition of KT falls two or three years later than that of PF. This may be true, but his argument in support of it, p. 168, rests upon a mistaken interpretation of the second line quoted above. He says, "In the Prologue to LGW it is clearly implied that TC is widely known . . .; whereas it is explicitly stated that the story of Palamon and Arcite is 'known lyte' . . . This suggests that it had only recently been finished or at any rate that its circulation had not been wide. If composed as an independent poem earlier than TC it is hard to see why the work should be 'little known.'"

But Chaucer does not say that his poem was little known. He merely speaks of the story as little known, and in doing so he translates accurately the words with which Boccaccio characterizes it in the letter to his mistress Fiammetta, prefixed to the Tes: "Una antichissima storia, e al piu delle genti non manifesta"; in Tes itself (bk. I, st. 2) Boccaccio repeats the characterization: "There has come to me the desire to write in piteous rhyme an ancient story so hidden and secreted among the years that so far as I know no Latin author tells anything about it in any book":

E' m' e venuta voglia con pietosa
Rima di scriver una storia antica,
Tanto negli anni riposta e nascosa,
Che latino autor non par ne dica,
Per quel ch' i' senta, in libro alcuna cosa.

Although the exact date of the original composition of KT is uncertain, there can be little doubt that it was originally composed as an independent work and not for use as a Canterbury tale. This is indicated, not merely by the reference to it in LGW, but also by the fact that it is much longer than any of the other tales in verse. Several passages in the poem also support this view; cf. ll. 1201, 1347-48, 1459-60. It is, however, appropriately enough assigned to the Knight, and worthily introduces the series of tales.

Boccaccio's Teseide is a fine example of the courtly epic. It is full of brilliant and elaborate descriptions of sieges, and battles, and social functions, and of long and eloquent speeches. Partly by eliminating these features, and partly by confining his narrative strictly to the love story of Palamon and Arcite, Chaucer has reduced the length of the poem to about one-fifth of the original, has simplified its structure, and given it the qualities of a metrical romance instead of those of a courtly epic. The interest of Boccaccio's poem lay chiefly in its rich elaboration; that of Chaucer's lies chiefly in dramatic situation. The characters are, with the exception of Theseus, drawn in simple outline. This is doubtless due, not to any lack of development of Chaucer's power of characterization, but to the requirements of the story itself. Emelye has necessarily no individuality, not so much because of her youth, but because she is merely the prize for which the two noble kinsmen contend. They in their turn are necessarily so much alike that the reader is as little able to choose between them as was Emelye herself. In brief, the story in Chaucer's hands becomes primarily a presentation of the conflict between love and the closest conceivable bonds of friendship, in which, although love is for a time triumphant, the claims of friendship are finally reasserted in the end. Curry (ch. VI) credits Chaucer with motivating the incidents of the story by the quarrel between Mars and Venus and the intervention of Saturn, but this is already in Boccaccio. What Chaucer did — and it was perhaps artistically important — was to identify gods and planets and so bring them nearer to human appeal.

The Latin quotation at the beginning of the tale is from the Thebaid of Statius. Chaucer was familiar with this poem, but he makes little use of it. It is not clear why the lines are recorded in the MSS.

859-83. In these twenty-five lines Chaucer summarizes the first book and part of the second of Boccaccio's epic. The remainder of the second book furnishes the basis of ll. 983-1027.

877. the regne of Femenye. Gower as well as Chaucer uses a word derived from Latin femina, 'a woman,' to designate the country called by ancient writers Amazonia. According to mediaeval belief, it lay partly in Asia and partly in Europe. The classic account of the Amazons (a kingdom of women who permitted no man to reside in their country) was derived principally from Herodotus, but there are references to the legend in various ancient writings, including even the Iliad.

879. for the nones. An intensifying adverbial phrase modifying great, cf. note on I, 379.

884. the tempest at hir hoom comynge. As Boccaccio tells of no tempest at the home-coming of Theseus and Hippolyta, and as one of the Latin chronicles (Walsingham, Historia Anglicana, II, 46) contains an account of a "commotion of the sea immediately after the arrival of Anne of Bohemia in England which caused the destruction of the vessel in which she had come," Lowes (MLN, XIX, 240-43) argues that Chaucer has here introduced an allusion to that event, and therefore that these lines were written shortly after her arrival in England (December 18, 1381). This widely accepted view has recently been combated on the ground that tempest may mean nothing more than the popular excitement which such an event as the return of the conqueror Theseus with his bride Hippolyta would naturally produce; see Curry, MLN, XXXVI, 272-74.

893. duc. In designating Theseus as a duke it is possible that Chaucer was influenced by the fact that there was in his day a duke of Athens (cf. Liebermann, Archiv, CXLV, 101-02 and W. Miller, The Latin Orient, pp. 27-31). But like all mediaeval writers he conceived of the organization of society in ancient times as being the same as that with which he was familiar; cf. I, 2125. He was therefore conscious of no anachronism in using mediaeval titles for heroes of antiquity or in ascribing to ancient times the customs, dress, and arms of his own.

908. that, not 'who,' but 'that ye.'

913. That the lady should indulge in a swoon before speaking is a romance convention. Hinckley suggests that Chaucer mistook Evanes, the Italian form of the name Evadne, wife of Capaneus, for the preterit of a verb meaning 'to swoon.' If so — which seems doubtful — this would be an indication that at this time Chaucer's knowledge of Italian was not impeccable.

925. The conception of the fates of men as controlled by Fortune and her false wheel was a commonplace of mediaeval literature and art. It may have come to Chaucer from any one of numberless sources. Undoubtedly familiar to him were the passages in RR (cf. the 14th c. translation, ll. 4353-64) and in Boethius (Chaucer's tr., ii, pr. 2). Many mediaeval manuscripts contain pictures of Fortune turning a wheel, to the rim of which are bound representatives of different states and occupations. In the choir of Rochester cathedral there is a 13th c. wall painting of this subject, which Chaucer had probably seen. The most accessible picture to the student, however, is a woodcut of the early sixteenth century reproduced as frontispiece to Lydgate's Fall of Princes, pt. I (EETS). This was originally prefixed to a German translation of Boccaccio, De Casibus Virorum et Feminarum Illustrium, a work devoted entirely to this theme.

938. El has now after yet; probably caught up from the next line.

968. go ne ride. When contrasted with ride, go means 'walk,' as in the Shakespearean jingle, "ride more than thou goest" (Lear, I, iv, 134).

975. statue, that is 'picture,' probably embroidered in the banner; red, because the planet Mars is red, and red is the appropriate color for the god.

977. Hinckley produces six quotations from mediaeval literature to show that it was a commonplace to speak of the fields through which an army passed as glittering with the splendor of the banners. He might have produced many more. Decisive passages are quoted by Kittredge, MLN, XXV, 28. As Chaucer is commonly supposed to have been working on AA at about the same time as on this poem, it is interesting to note that he there says of Emelye (ll. 40f.):

That al the ground aboute her char she spradde
With brightnesse of the beautee in her face.

979. ybete. Thin sheets of beaten gold were often used for decorative purposes, but many passages occur in which 'beaten' must mean 'embroidered.' Miss Rickert reminds me that the livery rolls record many payments for embroidering (vapulandum), and suggests that it is the same thing as "whipping" meaning to 'overlay with thread or cord.' Bete and whip are synonyms of different dates. OED gives: "Frettes of whipped gold of damaske very rich (Hall, Chron.); and "ouer-whipt with gold twist" (R. Greene). Hinckley cites, among other similar passages, Kinge Alisaunder, 1034: "Hire herneys gold, beten with selk"; cf. also Emerson, Pb2, II, 85.

1011. by and by: 'side by side.'

1012. Bothe in oon armes: As they belonged to the same family, they had the same coat of arms (cf. cote-armures, l. 1016) — another illustration of the fact that Chaucer conceived ancient customs and manners to be the same as those of his own day.

1013f. Chaucer took the names Arcita and Palamon from Boccaccio. Hinckley's idea that Boccaccio derived the former from the Archytas of Cicero's De Senectute and the latter from Polemon, the name of a Greek philosopher, seems improbable, as also does the suggestion of Hales that Palemon was coined from the Greek to mean a wrestler or suitor; Hinckley himself admits that Palaemon was the name of a Theban in Statius and in the Roman de Thebes.

1024. Holding prisoners for ransom was a common custom in the Middle Ages. Chaucer himself was so held in 1359. The profit derived from ransoms became one of the principal inducements for knights to go to war.

1047. doon honour to May. The observance of May was common to all classes in the olden time. Skeat quotes appropriately a passage from Stubbes, Anatomy of Abuses (ed. Furnivall, p. 149): "Against Maie, every parishe, towne, and village, assembled themselves together, bothe men, women, and children, olde and yonge, even all indifferently, and either going all together or devidyng themselves into companies, they goe, some to the woodes and groves, some to the hills and mountaines, some to one place, some to another, where they spend all the night in pastimes; in the morninge they return, bringing with them birche bowes and branches of trees, to deck their assemblies withalle." Similar passages occur in many authors; cf. also I, 1491-1512.

1049. The heroines of the Middle Ages are usually represented with golden hair and blue eyes. Unmarried girls wore their hair in a braid.

1051. the sonne upriste, 'the sun's uprising.' The OE genitive was sunnan, which regularly gave sunne (or sonne) in ME.

1087f. An aspect of the heavenly bodies is the way in which from their relative positions they look upon each other. The aspects are properly three: trine, quartile, and sextile, or respectively $\frac{1}{3}$, $\frac{1}{4}$, and $\frac{1}{6}$ of 360 degrees. Some authors count conjunction and opposition also as aspects.

Saturn is so malignant a planet that his influence is always "wikke." Curry (p. 120) seems to suggest that the malignant influence of Saturn upon the fortunes of Arcite had already begun, and speaks of Saturn as Arcite's planetary enemy. Saturn seems, however, to have acted from no personal enmity, but only to please Venus (cf. I, 2438-78) and to have taken no special interest in the heroes earlier. But Chaucer undoubtedly inserts the early references to the planets to prepare the reader for their later influence.

1089. although we hadde it sworn — an idiom, meaning 'although we had sworn that it should not.'

1101. wher, 'whether.'

1122. I nam but deed, 'I shall surely die,' an idiom.

1132. Brotherhood by oath was in the Middle Ages regarded as even more sacred than brotherhood by birth; compare the story of Amis and Amiloun or The Romance of Athelston. It is still so regarded in the East. Kipling's well-known "Ballad of East and West" develops this theme finely.

The syntax of this line is somewhat doubtful. Liddell thinks that and introduces the phrase Ysworn ful depe. It is true that Gower has many passages in which and follows, instead of preceding, the words it introduces, but the occurrence of this idiom in Chaucer is doubtful, and the position of the caesural mark after depe is against its occurrence here. Most editors regard and ech of us til oother as merely emphasizing by repetition the preceding clause.

1133. in the peyne: some form of torture, such as pressing to death or hanging up by the thumbs. Hinckley (p. 64f.) discusses it fully and refers to Blackstone, bk. 4, ch. 25 and to his own notes on I, 1451 and 1746.

1147. conseil, probably 'confidant.' Liddell says OED records no other use of the word in this sense before 1647. But it occurs in the sense of 'secret' in l. 665.

1150. lay: 'should lie' (Hinckley).

1155. 'To love paramour' is 'to be in love with,' as distinguished from the love one may feel for one's relatives or the worship of a higher being; cf. Macaulay, MLR, IV, 16. Hinckley's idea that paramour is here a mild oath is hardly acceptable.

1163ff. The olde clerk is Boethius; cf. iii, m. 12, a passage which Chaucer translates thus: "What is he that may yive a lawe to lovers? Love is a gretter lawe and a strengre to himself than any lawe that men may yeven."

1167. positif law ('lex positiva') is a technical term opposed to 'natural law.' It is that which depends upon man's decree; cf. Macaulay MLR, IV, 17, who gives several examples from Gower to illustrate the term. Gower discusses it thoroughly in connection with the story of Canace.

1198ff. This story comes from RR (ed. Michel, 8898-8904; Ellis's translation, 8555-59).

1201. to write. This is usually regarded as evidence that the story was not originally meant to be told. This is possible, but it is equally possible that Chaucer merely forgot that he was writing it for one of the pilgrims; in III, 224f. the Wife of Bath speaks as if other women than the two nuns were in her audience.

1209. pleynly. Liddell translates this 'fully,' but it probably means 'clearly,' 'definitely.'

1212. o stounde. El has or — probably because of the preceding or.

1246. The four elements, of which all things were supposed to be made.

1251ff. The sentiment comes from Boethius, iii, pr. 2.

1255-57. Som man . . . som man, 'one man . . . another.'

1261. Proverbial; cf. III, 426, and Boethius, iii, pr. 2, 642.

1262ff. Chaucer found this in the manuscript of Boethius which he translated (iii, pr. 2). It is really a gloss commonly ascribed to St. Thomas Aquinas.

1279. Hinckley notes that grete goes with fettres.

1303-12. Liddell calls attention to a similar apostrophe in Boethius, i, m. 5.

1306. parlement, not a 'meeting,' but 'a decree'; cf. Hinckley.

1315-21. The idea that the brutes are happier than men is a commonplace of both ancient and modern times. Hinckley quotes Dialogus inter Corpus et Animam, ll. 227-30 (Latin Poems Commonly Attributed to Walter Maper, p. 103):

O felix conditio pecorum brutorum.
cadunt cum corporibus spiritus eorum,
nec post mortem subeunt locum tormentorum.
Talis esset utinam finis impiorum!

1328. The mention of Juno shows that Palamon is thinking rather of the heathen gods than of the planets as astrological influences.

1344. upon his heed, 'on pain of losing his head.'

1347-52. Questions of this sort were a common amusement of the courts of love. Cf. Manly, "What is the Parlement of Foules?", (Morsbach Jubilee Volume) and V, 1621-24.

1356-79. The symptoms and actions here ascribed to Arcite are those belonging to the lover's maladye of hereos and manie (ll. 1373f.). There is a similar passage in Tes, iv, st. 26-29, but Chaucer has undoubtedly made use of what the great medical authorities say concerning 'amor hereos': Signa autem sunt quando amittunt somnum, cibum, potum [Bernard], cf. l. 1361; Et maceratur totum corpus [Bernard]; et eorum corpora dessicantur [Razis]; et sunt omnia membra eius arefacta [Avycen], cf. l. 1362; Et oculi sicci et concavi [Razis], cf. l. 1363; Et eorum facies sunt croceae propter vigilias [Razis]; citruui sunt ipsorum colores [Constantyn], cf. l. 1364; Pacientes . . . ereos incedunt stridendo . . . et clamando tota nocte [Razis], cf. l. 1366; Alteratur dispositio eius . . . ad tristitiam et fletum, cum amoris cantilenas audit [Avycen], cf. ll. 1367ff.

The explanation of the lover's maladye of hereos — a term long misunderstood — is due to Lowes, who in an enormously learned and extremely interesting article (MPh, XI, 491-546), showed that it was a form of erotic hysteria clearly recognized and fully discussed by the principal medical authorities of the Middle Ages. The term amor hereos was ultimately derived from the Greek word ēpos ('love'), but was influenced in both form and meaning by Latin herus ('master') and heros ('hero'). It was recognized as having many stages or degrees and as passing over into the more extreme mania: "Unless hereos is cured, they [the sufferers] fall into mania or die" [Bernard]. Mania might be engendered by any of the four humors, but the mania that is akin to amor hereos comes, like that, from melancholia. Its location is that given by Chaucer (l. 1376); "Mania quidem est infectio anterioris cellulæ capitis" [Arnaldus de Villanova]. That the reading of the best MSS is correct and that Ha⁴ is wrong in inserting in after Biforen is proved by a passage in Bernard, which I will translate: "It is to be understood that the brain (cerebrum) has three cells, the first in the front part, the second in the middle, the third behind. In the front part of the first cell is seated common sense . . . In the hinder part of the first cell is seated fantasy."

1377. up-so-down, an idiomatic phrase which has been displaced by upside down.

1378. habit. Of the many possible meanings of this word, 'bodily condition' seems to be the most probable, as contrasted with disposicion, which implies mental condition.

1379. Daun, frequently spelled Dan. This word, like the Spanish don, is derived from Latin dominus and is merely a title of respect, like Mr. It is, apparently, not used with family names, but only with given names. Tennyson therefore in "The Dream of Fair Women" should have said "Dan Geoffrey," not "Dan Chaucer."

1386. murie, this word is usually spelled mery. It occurs in rhyme only twice in CT, once here and once in the Prologue, 802, where it rhymes with Caunterbury. As the u in Canterbury represents an older y, pronounced like ɥ, (Kentish ɥ) and as we have several rhymes of the spelling merye — I, 207 (: berye), I, 3067 (: serye, 'series'), IV, 615 (: herye, OE herian), and the rhyme mery is, rhyming with berys, 'berries' (VII, 4156) — we should probably pronounce the word here as if spelled merry or mirry. The latter pronunciation is rendered probable by the only other rhyme which occurs for Mercurie: porfurie (porphyry), VIII, 775.

1387f. Chaucer tells us that the messenger Mercury was arrayed as he was when he put the hundred-eyed Argus to sleep. (Ovid, Met, I, 671-716.) Here he has laid aside his winged shoes; in Ovid he laid aside his hat also. sleepy yerde apparently translates somniferam virgam of Claudian, De Raptu Proserpinæ, I, 178.

1418. fil in office, 'got employment.'

1423. Cf. I, 545.

1428. In Tes, iv, 3, Arcite assumes the name of Pentoe. Chaucer took the name Philostrate from the title of another poem of Boccaccio's, which he later translated under the title of Troilus and Creseyde. Boccaccio had taken over Philostrate from the Greek. It ought to mean 'army lover,' but Boccaccio confused the last part of it with the Latin stratus, and explained it to mean 'vanquished by love,' and this is the sense in which Chaucer uses it here.

1444. honestly and slyly. Neither of these words has its modern meaning. honestly retains the sense of the Latin honeste, 'fittingly,' that is in accordance with his pretended status; slyly does not imply trickery, but only prudence.

1460. Cf. § 153.

1463. I think that by the thridde nyght Chaucer means 'the night preceding the third day'; for the reasons for this as the date of meeting, see note on l. 1850, below.

1468. Boccaccio gives the name of the friend as Panfilo, and tells in detail how the escape was effected. Chaucer rightly subordinates the incident.

1471f. For a full discussion of the fine opium of Thebes, which was especially soporific, see Emerson, MPb, XVII, 287ff.

1477. nedes cost: 'necessarily'; cost is from Icelandic kostr, 'manner, wise.'

1494. This fine line Chaucer took from Dante, Purg., i, 20.

1495. Hinckley produces evidence to show that here and in 1641 greves means 'bushes'; in 1507 it has the rarer sense of 'branches, sprays.'

1502. This line is repeated in LGW, 1204.

1509. Cf. TC, ii, 920:

Ful loude sang ayein the mone shene.

1512. grene; probably with reference to the controversy of "the flower and the leaf"; cf. LGW (F), 188-93.

1518. El has afered of his deeth thanne.

1522. Skeat quotes this old proverb in English, Latin, and German versions.

1524. at unset stevene, 'at unappointed hour'; cf. "And atte laste thei sette steven that the knight shulde come (La Tour, p. 6). The proverbial character of the saying is evident in the passage quoted by Skeat from Sir Eglamour, l. 1282:

Hyt is sothe seyde, be God of heven,
Mony metyn at onsett stevyn.

1539. A proverbial expression meaning that Friday is seldom like the rest of the days of the week; cf. Lowes, MLR, IX, 94, Koch, Anglia Beiblatt, XXV, 333ff.

1559. According to classic tradition, the fall of Thebes was due to the wrath of Juno. Note that Arcite here regards Mars as his enemy; cf. 2367ff.

1560. kynrede. The other seven printed texts have lynage. The scribe of El may have made the change unconsciously.

1566. One of the many instances of Chaucer's persistent determinism; the same figure occurs in LGW, 2629; cf. Hibbard, PhQ, I, 222-25.

1591. In Tes, Arcite is discovered by Palamon's friend Panfilo, and Palamon escapes from the prison for the express purpose of meeting and fighting with Arcite.

1606. love is fre: a proverbial saying.

1625f. Chaucer is translating Tes, v, st. 13:

. . . signoria
Ne amore sta bene in compagna;

but the idea was a familiar one, due perhaps to Ovid, Ars Amatoria, iii, 564:

Non bene cum sociis regna Venusque manent.

The fact that Matthieu de Vendôme Ars Versificatoria, iii, 10, quotes this passage to express impatience of rivalry supports this suggestion. The passage usually cited (Ovid, Met., ii, 846f.), merely means that dignity and love are incompatible.

1626. hir thankes: an idiom meaning 'willingly.'

1638. This fine simile was doubtless suggested by Tes, vii, st. 106f., but Chaucer has made it more effective by transferring it from the tournament to the lonely combat between Palamon and Arcite.

1665. A not uncommon exaggeration. Hinckley quotes Richard Cœur de Lion, 5814-16 and Havelok, 2684-87. It occurs also in the Icelandic saga of Gunnlaugr Ormstunga.

1665. hath seyn biforn, 'hath foreseen.' Chaucer's use of the idea of predestination gives to this story and to that of TC something of the tragic dignity connected with the Greek idea of fate.

1668f. Translated from Tes, v, st. 77. Cook (MLN, XXII, 207) quotes passages to show that it was proverbial both in Chaucer's time and in Shakespeare's.

1678. hunte, 'hunter.' OE had two synonymous words, hunta and huntere. The former survived in Shakespeare's "mouse-hunt" and still survives in the family name Hunt.

1697. Under the sonne he looketh. This expression has been the subject of considerable discussion. See especially MLN, XXVII, pp. 120, 376, 377 and XXVIII, p. 59. Tatlock seems right in insisting upon a distinction between all under the sun, meaning 'all around' and Chaucer's under the sonne, meaning 'in the direction of the sun.'

1707. up peyne; El has up on peyne, but the usual 14th c. idiom is up peyne.

1710. mystiers, the reading of El, is probably an error for myster ('kind of').

1739. We should say 'doom and death.'

1746. To torture you to force a confession.

1748. "Boccaccio says little of the anger of Theseus and nothing whatever of any intercession by the queen. Chaucer seems to have had in mind the celebrated occasion when Edward III condemned to death six citizens of Calais but revoked the sentence, unwillingly and after a struggle, at the entreaties of the good Queen Philippa. See Froissart (ed. Kervyn de Lettenhove), V, 204-05" (Hinckley, p. 75). Froissart says that Chaucer's father-in-law,

Sir Paonnet de Roet, was with Queen Philippa on this occasion. But the whole incident has been questioned by historians. In any event, Chaucer is more likely to have been thinking of Queen Anne's intercession for all offenders in 1382 (Knighton, II, 151). Her later intercessions were numerous.

1761. Chaucer uses this line four times. Cf. IV, 1986, V, 479, LGW, 503. It seems to have been suggested by Dante's:

Amor, che al cor gentil ratto s'apprende. — (Inf. v, 100)

1781. after oon, 'according to the same rule' (Skeat); cf. I, 341.

1785. This is the only passage in Chaucer in which benedicite has five syllables — perhaps because it is spoken meditatively. Usually it has three; cf. note on II, 1170. For the sentiment expressed in this and the following lines Skeat refers to RR, II, 878-84.

1799 The sentiment was familiar to every mediaeval schoolboy. One of the first books in the course in Latin was the Sententiae Pueriles of Publilius Sirus, the fifteenth sententia being: "Amare et sapere vix deo conceditur" (to love and be wise is scarcely granted even to God).

1806. game, 'joke.'

1808. Kan hem . . . thank, 'feels grateful to them'; cf. Fr savoir grè.

1810. of, perhaps a mistake for or.

1814. servant, a technical term for a lover; cf. I, 1923.

1827. 'They did him homage.'

1829. To speke of, 'with regard to,' 'speaking of'; cf. I, 413.

1838. Slang; 'he may go whistle.'

1839. now, perhaps jocose.

1850. fifty wykes, a loose expression for 'a year.' Boccaccio says "un anno intero," and it is obvious that this was what Chaucer intended, although he says "fifty wykes fer ne ner." Skeat, assuming that Chaucer fitted the dates of the escape, the encounter in the forest, and the tournament to the calendar of the year in which he was writing KT, attempted to determine what year this would be. He interpreted the thridde nyght in May (ll. 1462f.) to mean the night following and completing May 3. As Palamon and Arcite met the next morning, a Friday, and fought the next day, the date of the fight would be Saturday, May 5, and the Sunday in the following year on which the assembly for the tournament occurred would also be May 5. The calendar shows that May 5 fell on a Sunday in 1381 and 1387. Skeat, therefore, settled upon 1386-87 as the date at which Chaucer was writing KT. But Chaucer's mention of the story of Palamon and Arcite in LGW (l. 420) renders so late a date highly improbable. The dates in 1380-81 would fulfil the conditions of the tale equally well, but the arrival of Queen Anne — an event supposed to be alluded to in l. 884 — did not occur until December 18, 1381.

There is, however, no justification for the assumption that Chaucer's choice of the dates was dependent upon the calendar of the year in which he was writing.

It is, on the contrary, highly probable that his reason for placing the escape of Palamon and meeting with Arcite on May 3 was that May 3 was an unlucky day — being one of the dies mali or dies Aegyptiaci (see below) — in itself unlucky for beginning any undertaking and of course doubly so when it fell on a Friday (cf. ll. 1534–39 and VII, 4531).

The choice of dates for the events of other stories was based on similar reasons. In NPT, for example, Chauncleer's dream and his seizure by the fox occur on the night and morning of Friday, May 3 (cf. VII, 4377–85 and 4531). In M_rT, the language first used in expressing the date of the assignation in the garden (IV, 2132f.) is obscure:

... er that dayes eighte
Were passed, er the month of Juyl (so all MSS).

But that the time meant is early in June is proved by ll. 2222ff.:

He [the Sun] was that tyme in Geminis, as I gesse,
But litel fro his declynacioun
Of Cancer, Jovis exaltacioun;

for the sun passes out of Gemini and attains his greatest declination, in the first degree of Cancer, on June 12. Taken together, the two passages indicate June 8 as the date intended; and June 8 was regarded as one of the "very unlucky" days. In FrT (V, 906) the day on which Dorigen made her rash promise to Aurelius was May 6 —

And this was on the sixte morwe of May.

Finally, in TC (ii, 55f.) the day on which Pandarus visited Criseyde to urge the suit of Troilus was May 3:

... it so bitidde,
As I shal singe, on Mayes day the thridde.

Doubtless many variant lists of lucky and unlucky days were current in Chaucer's time, and it would be difficult to decide which he made use of. There are two that he may easily have known. The first is the list of dies Aegyptiaci (explanations of which Ducange, s.v. dies, quotes from Peter Comestor, Historia Scholastica, and Durandus, Rationale Divinorum Officiorum). The list is expressed in the mnemonic distich:

Augurior decios, audito lumine clangor,
Liquit olens Abies, coluit Colus, excute Gallus.

The words represent the months, in regular order; the initial letter of the first syllable of each word expresses the first unlucky day in the month, counting from the beginning of the month, the initial of the second syllable expresses the second unlucky day, counting from the end of the month (the letters b and j are disregarded). The results are: January 1 and 25; February 4 and 26; March 1 and 28; April 10 and 20; May 3 and 25; June 10 and 16; July 13 and 22; August 1 and 30; September 3 and 21; October 3 and 22; November 5 and 28; December 7 and 22. The list used by Chaucer seems, however, to have been more like that quoted by Brand-Ellis (Popular Antiquities, II, 48) from a calendar prefixed to Grafton's Manual, or Abridgement of his Chronicle, 1565 (other editions have a different list):

"January 1, 2, 4, 5, 10, 15, 17, 29, very unlucky. February 26, 27, 28, unlucky; 8, 10, 17, very unlucky. March 16, 17, 20, very unlucky. April 7, 8, 10, 20, unlucky; 16, 21, very unlucky. May 3, 6, unlucky; 7, 15, 20, very unlucky. June 10, 22, unlucky; 4, 8, very unlucky. July 15, 21, very unlucky. August 1, 29, 30, unlucky; 19, 20, very unlucky. September 2, 4, 21, 23, unlucky; 6, 7, very unlucky. October 4, 16, 24, unlucky; 6, very unlucky. November 5, 6, 29, 30, unlucky; 15, 20, very unlucky. December 15, 22, unlucky; 6, 7, 9, very unlucky."

Finally, it may be pointed out that if the thridde nyght (I, 1463) means the night preceding May 3, the only date between 1370-71 and 1392-93 when the calendar would fit the conditions in KT is 1381-82. I will not attempt to marshal all the arguments for this view but will only point out that, in ME, to-nyght regularly means the night just past (cf. VII, 4116).

All the dates in the story except May 3 are determined absolutely by the astrological scheme of planetary hours and days which controls the events of the story. The first meeting of Palamon and Arcite is appropriately on Friday, because that is the day of Venus; and at the first hour after sunrise, because that is the hour of Venus. The interrupted combat occurs on the next day, because that is the day of Saturn, and apparently at the first hour of the day, which is the hour of Saturn. The tournament cannot occur on Sunday, the day of the Sun, but since Arcite, who worships Mars, is to be victorious, must occur on Tuesday, the day of Mars. The visits of Palamon, Emelye, and Arcite to the shrines of Venus, Diana, and Mars occur in the order of the planetary hours, near the beginning of Monday morning: that of Palamon in the second hour before sunrise (ll. 2209-11), an hour sacred to the goddess and planet Venus; that of Emelye in the first hour of the morning (ll. 2271-74), because that hour was sacred to the goddess Diana and her planet, the Moon; that of Arcite three hours later, in the hour sacred to the god and planet Mars.

For the system of planetary hours upon which all this depends, see Introd. p. 143f.

1860. to wyve: 'for wife,' a petrified dative; cf. § 16.

1881. Tournaments were among the greatest and most popular spectacles of the Middle Ages. In 1390 Chaucer, as Clerk of the King's Works, had the duty of erecting the lists for two splendid tournaments at Smithfield, one in May and one in October.

1894. Observe the metre.

1906. I have adopted the reading of MS Ad¹. The wide variation in the readings of the MSS indicates that there was some defect in the original MS.

1910. Hinckley suggests that reed coral, mentioned here and in other accounts of palaces, was really red porphyry. He is wrong, however, in thinking that alabaster was an unusual building material. A white stone called by that name was used for buildings in 14th c. England.

1913. doon wrought, 'caused (to be) made'; cf. han doon fraught, II, 171, and doon yow kept, IV, 1098.

1918ff. The description of the temple of Venus is only loosely imitated from Boccaccio. Chaucer had already used a closer imitation in PF, ll. 183-294. The personification of abstract qualities, as here and in the descriptions of the other oratories, was a commonplace of mediaeval poetry, but allegorical wall-paintings were common not merely in Italy, where Chaucer probably saw some of the masterpieces of the early Italian painters, but also in France and England.

1936. Venus derived her name Cytherea from the island of Cythera, near which she is said to have risen from the sea. In connecting her with Mount Cithaeron, Chaucer and other poets were misled by the likeness of the two names, and perhaps also, as Hinckley has suggested, by Aeneid, x, 51 or 86.

1940. In RR, Idleness is the porter of the garden in which the Rose is kept.

1941ff. For the stories about the persons in classical mythology mentioned here and later, see Gayley, Classic Myths in English Literature, or Bulfinch, The Age of Fable.

1955. Skeat thinks the description of the statue of Venus was derived by Chaucer from the De Deorum Imaginibus of a twelfth century Londoner known as Albricus Philosophus.

1962. In Boccaccio the doves were real ones flying above the temple; cf. PF, 237f.

1970ff. The temple painted on the wall is largely derived from Boccaccio's account of the temple of Mars in Thrace.

1971. estres. This usually means the inner parts of a building, and perhaps Chaucer means that the walls of this temple were painted like those of the great temple in Thrace.

1987. The northren lyght probably does not refer to the Aurora Borealis.

1995. Ther saugh I. This and similar expressions in ll. 2011, 2017, 2028, 2056, 2062, 2065, 2067, 2073, were undoubtedly suggested by expressions in Tes. Boccaccio represents the prayers of Palamon, Arcite, and Emelye as taking human form and, after visiting the distant temples of the gods, returning to report what they had seen and heard. Some editors regard these passages as belonging to the earlier version of the Palamon and Arcite story, which they supposed to be closely translated from Boccaccio. Hinckley thinks that Chaucer meant originally to imply that he had seen the temples yet standing during his continental travels. It seems more probable that both in these instances and in l. 1918, where Chaucer is not translating Boccaccio, he is merely using a device to secure vividness of expression.

GEOMANTIC FIGURES

From MS Bodley 581, a treatise written for King Richard II in March 1391.

1996ff. It is perhaps worthy of note that the personified abstractions in this passage are derived from Boccaccio, while the concrete images, the pykepurs, the smylere, and the shepne are Chaucer's additions.

2002. Hinckley suggests that this is derived from "la morte armata" (Tes, vii, st. 35) by a misreading of "marte" for "morte," but it seems more likely that it is derived from ll. 4-6 of the same stanza:

Ed ogni altare quivi era copioso
Di sangue sol nelle battaglie fuore
De' corpi uman cacciato.

2007. The semicolon after l. 2006 seems necessary, as it is obvious that the slayer of himself could not drive the nail into his own head. Koch arbitrarily wishes to read of her husband instead of of hym self in l. 2005.

2017. shippes hoppesteres: a much discussed passage. It is obviously derived from "navi bellatrici" of Tes, vii, 37 (fighting ships), but Chaucer may have read "ballatrici" and taken the word to mean 'dancers' or 'dancing.' The burning of the ships is not in Boccaccio; Chaucer introduces it to connect them with Mars.

2021. Liddell places a colon after for yeten. I prefer the punctuation of most editors, but I take "by" to mean 'with reference to,' 'concerning'; cf.

This balade may ful wel ysongen be,
As I have seyde erst, by my lady fre. — LGW (F), 271.

2029. Chaucer knew the story of Damocles from Boethius, bk. iii, pr. 5.

2031-34. Chaucer probably had in mind the passage from Bernardus Sylvester quoted in connection with II, 197-203.

2035. by figure. This seems to be a technical astrological term referring to a drawing or horoscope showing the positions of the heavenly bodies.

2037. sterres. Apparently the original MS had st'res (abb. for sterres). Many of the MSS misplaced the abbreviation and wrote sertes; El, not understanding this, wrote certes.

2045. Puella and Rubeus do not belong to astrology proper, but to geomancy, a sort of substitute for astrology. In geomancy, readings of astrological influences were obtained from certain numbers of dots set down at random. The process was as follows: Take a piece of paper and make without counting them a number of dots. Then count them, to see whether they are odd or even. If they are even, put down two dots, if they are odd, put down one. Repeat this three more times, placing each result below the preceding one. This will give a geomantic figure consisting of four lines of dots, in ones and twos, arranged one above another; see below for examples. With these as a basis, a horoscope can be drawn up or any particular question can be answered astrologically.

As it is possible to have either one or two dots in each of the four superposed lines, there are sixteen possible figures. Here are some of them:

.
.
.
.
(1) . .	(2) .	(3) . .	(4) .	(5) . .	(6) .

These are called: (1) Rubeus, (2) Albus, (3) Puella, (4) Puer, (5) Fortuna Minor, (6) Fortuna Major. I give these names according to a treatise in MS Bodley 581 which was prepared for Richard II in March 1393. Skeat says that Chaucer was mistaken in assigning Puella to Mars, but this treatise gives: "Puella Martis retrograd" (fo. 19) and "Rubeus Martis direct" (fo. 20). The experts differ as to the forms and assignment of Puella and Puer (No. 4). Robert Flud, De Animae Intellectualis Scientia seu Geomantia (in Fasciculus Geomanticus, Verona, 1687) agrees with Chaucer, MSS Bodley 581 and Harley 671. Some other writers call No. 4 Puella and No. 3 Puer.

2047f. Suggested, says Skeat, by Albricus (cf. note on l. 1955): "Ante illum vero lupus ovem portans pingebatur, quia illud scilicet animal ab antiquis gentibus ipsi Marti specialiter consecratum est. Iste enim Mavors est, id est mares vorans."

2049. The MSS read was depeynted. The metre can be remedied either by reading depeynt or reversing the order of was depeynted.

2056. Calistopee. Boccaccio gives the name correctly as Callisto. Hinckley suggests that Chaucer confused the name with Calliope, but it does not appear why he should have done so, and the more I study Chaucer the less am I inclined to ascribe to him any deviation from the best knowledge of his day. The story of Callisto is first told by Ovid. Gower retells it, CA, vi, 225-37, but calls her Calistona. Chaucer's version seems to us a little confused. Calisto was changed to the constellation of the Great Bear, and her son into Boötes. But Chaucer had authority for his statements. Boccaccio (De Genealogia Deorum, v, 49) says: "Calisto autem ursa minor dicta est, ubi major vocatus est Arcas."

2062. Ovid is also the source of the story of Daphne, a girl beloved by Apollo and changed into a laurel. The form Dane Chaucer probably derived from some French source. Gower also tells the story, CA, III, 1685-1720. The stories of Actaeon and Atalanta are also from Ovid.

2075. seet. The usual form of the singular is sat. The plural is seeten, from which this form may be derived.

2082ff. Diana was the triform goddess (cf. ll. 2297ff. and 2313): in heaven Luna (the Moon); on earth Diana and Lucina (goddess of childbirth); and in the underworld Proserpina.

2103. A frequent expression for ability in fighting; cf. the Shakespearean "a tall man of his hands."

2112. paramours, not a noun, but an adverb meaning 'with passion,' 'in the manner of lovers'; cf. note on l. 1155.

2128. Chaucer's description of Lygurge combines features from Boccaccio's descriptions of Agamennone and Evandro.

2133. grifphon. Whether griffin here refers to a species of vulture or to the fabulous animal with the head, front, and wings of an eagle and the body and hind quarters of a lion has been debated. The suggestion that it means a pirate, or robber, takes no account of the context (MLN, XXII, 47-49).

2139. trays, plural. Our word traces is really a double plural.

2141. nayles yelewe. In Tes, vi, 36, the nails of the bear's paws seem to have been gilded.

2142, 2144. for old and for blak, idiomatic, meaning 'on account of age' and 'with regard to blackness.' This explanation of the idiom was given in class many years ago by Professor Child.

2148. alauntz, 'huge wolfhounds.' Cook (Conn. Ac. XXI, 128, XXIII, 30) thinks Chaucer must have seen them in Italy (cf. Baillie-Grohman, ch. xvi).

2155ff. The name Emetreus seems derived by accident from Demetrius. The description of this hero, who is not mentioned by Boccaccio, is decidedly individual and somewhat suggestive of King Richard II; cf. especially ll. 2165-70. Hinckley's suggestion that the high nose is an Asiatic touch is perhaps over-subtle.

2160. clooth of Tars. See Skeat's long note on PP, xvii, 299. Tars (Latinized Tarsicus and Tartarinus) was a fine silk imported from China through Tartary.

2172. Chaucer's heroes are usually from twenty to twenty-five years of age.

2178. Hinckley sees in the white hunting eagle a further Asiatic touch, and still another in the lions and leopards of l. 2186. Certainly they are appropriate enough for the king of Inde; but Deschamps uses the leopard to signify the king of England (cf. Deschamps, X, 205, for references).

2209ff. The hour indicated is the twenty-third hour of Sunday. This was chosen by Palamon because it was the hour of Venus (cf. ll. 2216f. and Introd. p. 143) and was therefore an appropriate time for an appeal to her.

2223. Translated from Tes, vii, 43, 3.

2271ff. The third hour after Palamon's appeal to Venus was the first hour of Monday and therefore appropriate for Emily's appeal to Diana or the moon.

2273. Cf. 2212.

2281. Mather pointed out that this line is a curious misreading of Tes, vii, 72:

Fu mondo il tempio e di be' drappi ornato
(The temple was clean and decked with fine hangings).

Chaucer's manuscript may have had Fumando ('smoking') for Fu mondo ('was clean'). The absolute participial construction was recommended by the rhetoricians and much used by Chaucer.

2294. Statius has nothing about the tale of Palamon and Arcite.

2367ff. The first hours of Monday are assigned as follows: 1, the Moon; 2, Saturn; 3, Jupiter; 4, Mars. The next hour of Mars is therefore the fourth hour of Monday, which was appropriately chosen for Arcite's appeal to that god.

2373ff. The prayer is based on Tes, vii, 24-28.

2398. mercy heete, 'promise mercy,' the current expression for 'grant love.'

2399. in the place; Hinckley shows that this means 'in the lists.'

2415ff. There is probably no connection between this vow and that of the Nazarites.

2423. Rings were not uncommon on ancient doors. They may have been used as knockers.

2449. An ancient proverb; cf. TC, iv, 1456, and The Proverbs of Alfred (EETS), p. 136. In general, I have not noted easily recognizable proverbs; and I see no justification for multiplying references to those that are familiar.

2454. The planet Saturn, before the discovery of Neptune and Uranus, had the largest known orbit. Mediaeval astrology confused or identified the gods and their planets. Curry seems to me wrong in treating this as special to Chaucer.

2462. Saturn is particularly malign when in the zodiacal sign of the lion.

2469. lookyng: 'astrological aspect.'

2503. Nailynge the speres: see Arch, LVII, pt. 1, pp. 40-42. The metal head of the spear was fastened upon the spear shaft by a nail which passed through a hole in the head and the shaft, just as the head of a golfing iron is fastened to its shaft.

2504. Giggyng, 'fitting the shield with straps'; the g's are hard.

2519. he, used like a demonstrative pronoun = 'that fellow'; cf. ll. 2606, 2609, 2612, etc.

2523. Several MSS omit that. Chaucer's fondness for beginning sentences with a participial construction favors this reading.

2544. shot, 'arrow' or 'crossbow bolt.'

2602. sadly in arrest, 'firmly into the rest,' where the spear was held in charging.

2626. Probably the vale of Gargaphie, where Actaeon was turned into a stag (Ovid, Met, III, 155f.).

2637ff. The tournament occurred on Tuesday (l. 2491) and lasted until late in the day (l. 2637). The success of Arcite is well accounted for by the fact that the whole day belonged to Mars, to whom he had appealed. But it does not seem likely that success came in an hour belonging especially to Mars, as the only hour in the afternoon belonging to him would be the eighth, lasting approximately from 1.10 to 2.20 p.m. This seems too early for the indication given in l. 2637. The misfortune of Arcite can hardly have occurred in an hour belonging to Venus, for the next hour of Venus would be the tenth. Curry thinks it occurred in the next hour of Saturn, which came immediately after sunset.

2681. One group of the manuscripts has here two additional lines, which do not seem in harmony with Chaucer's presentation of Emily:

For wommen as to speken in comune,
Thei folwen all the favour of fortune.

2683. Furnivall unnecessarily inserted in before chiere.

2684. furie. One group of manuscripts has fir, but furie is correct.

2696. korven out. The armor was so securely fastened together that it had to be cut apart.

2743ff. For such an injury as Arcite had suffered the mediaeval treatment consisted in attempting to reduce the swelling and draw off the pus by blood-letting, cupping, and the use of purgative drinks made of herbs. veyne blood (l. 2747) seems to mean 'drawing off the venous blood,' although OED has no other example of this meaning. Ventusinge (l. 2747) is defined by OED only as 'drawing blood by means of a cupping glass,' but modern French physicians use ventousing to reduce congestion by setting up a counter-irritation, without blood-letting. But medical remedies failed to remove the corrupted and clotted blood. Moreover, Nature—that is, the tendency of the human body to heal itself—had lost its power. The "virtues" (forces controlling the processes of life) were three: the natural (originating in the liver), the vital or spiritual (seated in the heart), and the animal (working through the brain). The virtus naturalis could originate an impulse to expell venom from the system but the actual work of expulsion could be effected only by the virtus animalis. In this case the virtus animalis, acting for the virtus naturalis, was unable to effect the expulsion. For a fuller discussion, see Lanfranc (pp. 50–58 and 161–66) or Curry (pp. 139–48). In 2750, modern editors adopt Fro from El; the correct reading, For, is found in Dd, Ha⁴ and several other MSS. Curry retains Fro, against the whole tenor of his discussion.

2775. wyf. In Tz, ix, st. 83 Arcita marries Emelye on his deathbed, but Chaucer may use this term merely to indicate Arcite's devotion.

2809f. At this point, Boccaccio describes the passage of Arcite's soul, but curiously enough Chaucer translates and uses Boccaccio's lines in TC, v, 1807–27, omitting them here.

2817. No modern poet would use such words as shrieked and howled in a serious passage like this, but earlier writers and readers seemed to have felt no comic effects from them.

2874. White gloves were used as mourning at the funeral of an unmarried person.

2895. Turkish bows are frequently mentioned in mediaeval romances as especially good.

2959. Tyrwhitt says, "Chaucer seems to have contounded the wake plays of his own times with the funeral games of the ancients." But funeral games were of much the same general character all over the world; cf. the familiar account that Wulfstan gave King Alfred of the funeral customs among the Esthonians.

2967. Boccaccio makes the marriage take place after only a few days.

2968. Liddell puts a period at the end of this line and takes l. 2969 with what follows. This is possible, but if Chaucer had intended this construction he would perhaps have avoided ambiguity by placing l. 2970 before l. 2969.

2987ff. Theseus's speech is based principally upon Boethius (i, m. 5; ii, m. 8). The faire cheyne of love was probably derived by Chaucer directly from RR, ll. 16,786f.:

La bele chaene doree,
Qui les quatre elemens enlace.

Of course the idea goes back to Plato. The latter part of the passage, ll. 3017ff., is based largely upon Boccaccio.

3042. Still a familiar quotation. St. Jerome is the first writer known to have used it: "Facis de necessitate virtutem" (Adv. Rufinum, 3, 2).

3084. a kynges brother sone. Emerson thinks this may have been intended as a compliment to King Richard, whose father's brother, John of Gaunt, was, in the right of his wife, king of Castile and Leon; but this seems a doubtful compliment to offer to one who was himself the king of England.

THE WORDS BITWENE THE HOOST AND THE MILLERE

I 3124. Pilates voys. In the mediaeval Corpus Christi plays Pilate and Herod were commonly represented as violent, ranting characters.

3125. By armes, etc.: cf. VI, 472-75, 649-59.

3139. Myssspeke or seye; i.e. missspeke or misseye; cf. § 100.

3140. Wyte may take two objects, without a preposition; cf. § 155.

3155f. These two lines are not in most of the MSS. The first is almost identical with LGW (G), 277.

3170 Mathynketh: me athynketh.

THE MILLERES TALE (3187-3854)

The Miller's Tale is a vulgar tale of the fabliau type, reciting a deceit practised on a carpenter. Though the precise source of this tale has not been found, parallels to its incidents have been pointed out; cf. Barnouw, MLR, VII 145-48. As the other versions do not involve a carpenter, it is probable that this feature was introduced here to exploit the enmity of the Miller for the Reeve. If this is true, the tales of Miller and Reeve were not only assigned to them but written especially for them.

The Miller's Tale, as a whole, is not fit to be read in a mixed company, but the portraits of the Oxford student, the carpenter's wife, and the parish clerk are brilliant examples of Chaucer's latest and best methods of portraiture. They are therefore included in our selections.

3191. Art: no doubt the "seven arts" constituting the mediaeval curriculum.

3193. a certeyn of conclusions: a certain number of astrological operations; cf. note on V, 1263.

The questions here alluded to are known as horary questions. When information is desired concerning the result of any undertaking or any impending event an astrological figure is erected for the minute in which the question was asked. The answer is given by inspection of the positions and relations of the heavenly bodies at this time. The rules concerning horary questions are numerous and elaborate. A full statement of them would require a whole volume. Even those concerning the weather are too numerous to be set forth here. The reason for the specific reference to Nicholas's skill in weather predictions is that the later intrigue of the story requires the prediction of a rain greater than "Noes flood."

3208. Almageste: a famous treatise by Ptolemy, the founder of astronomy and astrology. The name is a combination of the Arabic definitive article al with the Greek adjective μεγιστη (greatest).

3209. astrelabie: a simple instrument much used for observation of the heavenly bodies. Chaucer wrote a treatise on the use of it for his "litle son Lowys."

3210. augrim stones: Karpinski says that these were counters marked with Arabic numerals and used for calculations on the abacus. Augrim is a popular form of Algorithm (or Algorism), which in turn is derived from Al Khowārizmī, the name of a distinguished Arabic mathematician (MLN, XXVII, 206-209).

3216. Angelus ad virginem: This beautiful anthem is printed in the Chaucer Society edition of MS Harley 7334, with a facsimile from a MS of c. 1260. The MS gives the Latin text, an English version, and the music. Very different from this pious song — probably even ribald — must have been the kinges note. In The Complaint of Scotland (EETS ed. p. 64) the shepherds "excedit al thir foure marmadyns in melodius music." Among the songs they sang were: "Stil vndir the leyuis grene; Lady, help your prisoneir; Kyng Villyamis note; Trolee, lolee, lemmeu dou; and The Frog cam to the myl dur."

3227f. The Disticha Catonis de Moribus were almost as highly esteemed for wisdom in the Middle Ages as the proverbs of Solomon, and were perhaps even better known; for they were studied in the grammar schools. They are bits of proverbial wisdom, expressed in pairs of hexameters. Their composition is assigned to the 3rd or 4th century; their author is unknown, but our ancestors credited them to the elder Cato.

3256. The Tower of London was the seat of the mint and of the King's treasury.

3268. a primerole: a primrose, a daisy, or a cowslip. Piggesnye has long been used as a term of endearment, but no explanation of its use has been given until recently. Of course it ought to be a flower. Henslow (Medical Works of the Fourteenth Century, 1899, p. 237) so lists it, with a query. In Dialect Notes, V (1923), 245, Garrett reported that in Minnesota and other states of the Northwest 'pig's eye' is a name for trillium. In Essex it is a name for the cuckoo flower (Eng. Dialect Dict. s.v. pig).

3318. Powles window: the open work ornamentation of Absolon's shoes is compared to the tracery of a window in St. Paul's. Possibly the expression was already current colloquially.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE REVES TALE

3860. Osewold. This name must have been very rare in the district in which Chaucer places the Reeve. Although common enough farther north, I have found no instance of it in Norfolk records of the fourteenth century. It should be noted, however, that a Passio S. Oswaldi, extant in a thirteenth century MS, was written by a monk of Bury St. Edmund's, not far from the Reeve's home. Whether Chaucer was here careless of realistic detail or scrupulously accurate can hardly be decided.

3861. The unnamed London carpenter does not seem to have taken offence — which is perhaps a reason for thinking that the enmity between Miller and Reeve was of long standing. Why these two men should lay the scenes of their tales in the two university towns is a puzzle for which Miss Rickert will soon suggest a solution. The local color in both is astonishingly accurate.

3864. So theeek: so thee ik, "so may I thrive." Ik is the northern form of ich ('I'). In the tale itself the dialect words occur mainly if not exclusively in the speeches of the two northern students. The absence of such words from the language of the teller of the tale is capable of several explanations.

3888. a coltes tooth; cf. III, 602, a popular expression for a lascivious tendency.

3905-08. The pilgrims seem to have got an early start (I, 822ff.), but now at half-past seven (half-way prime) are only about four miles from Southwark. Ogilby's map of the Canterbury Road in 1675 (reprinted in Notes on the Road from London to Canterbury, EETS) gives the distance from the center of London to Deptford as five miles. The British Road Book (Cyclists' Touring Club), vol. I, Route I, gives the distance from the Southwark end of London Bridge as four and a quarter miles. Greenwich lies just off the main road to the left. The Host's remark may be a sly dig at Chaucer, who probably lived there at this time.

3911. sette his howve: a variant of the slang phrase 'sette his cap,' see I, 586.

3919. In Matt. vii, 3 the Vulgate version, following the Greek, has festucam, "a stalk."

THE REVES TALE (3921-4324)

This tale also is of the fabliau type. The Reeve obviously makes the miller of his tale a twin brother of the Miller of the pilgrim group. The old mill-site on the brook, in the fen near Trumpington, can still be traced. A specimen of the tale will suffice.

3928. turne coppes. This expression has entirely baffled the commentators, perhaps because they were hunting for too significant a meaning. Possibly it means only that he was skilled in turning wooden cups on a lathe.

3931. a joly poppere; slang for a short dagger.

3935. piled. Curry (pp. 82f.) argues that "the hair of the Miller's head is thick (most likely bristly), and especially that it comes far down over his wide, 'villainous low' forehead." But Skeat was right. This miller was bald; otherwise his wife would never have mistaken his head for the white cap she supposed Aleyn to be wearing (4297-4306).

3949. Evidently the miller was not a serf, but a freeman, proud of his status.

4006ff. Quite in harmony with the traditional characteristics of the Northerner.

4014. Strother. There was a castle of Strother in Northumberland; and curiously enough, Aleyn was a name common in the Strother family. In Chaucer's time both Alan and John Strother were men of some importance in the North. Alan, particularly, held many offices which must have brought him into contact with Chaucer's circle — the Nevilles, Beauchamp, Stury, and the entourage of the Dowager Countess of Pembroke (Mary de St. Pol). There was a long-standing connection of the Strother family with the court, which must have made the name familiar there; but among the many tangled threads of association which may have led Chaucer to satirize the name, the exact clue has not yet been found.

4023. fares: Northern English. Chaucer's representation of the Northern dialect is accurate as far as he carries it, but he does not strive for consistency. The scribes of some of the MSS strengthen the dialectal coloring very considerably.

4040. El lacks and, but the scribe probably omitted it because he did not regard it as necessary.

4066. wehee: the usual imitation of a horse's neigh; cf. PP, iv, 22 and Winner and Waster, ll. 281-82.

4084. El omits John, by mistake.

4087. Goddes: El has god, by mistake.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE COKES TALE (4325-4364)

4331. The apocryphal book Ecclesiasticus was commonly quoted as by Solomon. The reference here is to xi, 31 (29): "Bring not every man into thy house; for many are the snares of the deceitful."

4336. Hogge (pron. Hodge) is a nickname for Roger (l. 4353). Curry (p. 49) oddly supposes the Cook's name to be Roger Hogge.

In 1363 a London cook, Roger de Waltham, was condemned to the pillory for selling a peck of eels unfit for food (Letter Book G, p. 192). Letter Book F (p. 267) records a cook named John de Ware, on Jan. 20, 1356. It would be dangerous to assert that he was Hogge's father. The practises of the Cook are illustrated by a proclamation of the City authorities in 1388-89 forbidding "pastelors" to buy "garbage" of capons, guinea-fowls, or geese from "cooks of Bredestrete" or from the houses of lords for the purpose of making pasties for sale (Letter Book H, p. 338).

4346f. When a meat-pie was not sold the day it was cooked, the gravy was drawn off, so that the pie would keep longer. Jakke of Dovere seems to have been a slang term for such a pie. Skeat cites Roquefort's Glossaire de la Langue Romane for this meaning of Jaquet, Jaket. Brunsendorff's skepticism is excessive, and his own interpretation of the passage highly improbable (p. 480).

4351. stubble goos. OED says "a goose fed with stubble"; the quotations show that it means an old goose fed on stubble, as opposed to a "green goose," i.e., a young goose, which had eaten grass.

4357. There were many Flemings in London in Chaucer's time (see note on VII, 4584); from whom Chaucer may have got this proverb and that in MeT (IX, 350). Some of the MSS read quaad spel for quaad pley, perhaps attempting to make the whole proverb Flemish.

4358. Herry Bailly seems to have been the real name of the Host. In the Subsidy Rolls, 1380-81, for Southwark occurs the entry: "Henri Bayliff, ostyler (innkeeper) Christian uxor eius 2 s." He was a person of some local importance, being one of the controllers of the subsidy. A Henry Bailly, probably the same person, represented the borough of Southwark in Parliament in 1376 and 1378, and a Henry Bailly of Southwark was appointed special coroner in 1393 and 1394 (see Manly, New Light, pp. 79-82).

THE COOKES TALE (4325-4422)

4366. In view of Kuhl's discussion of vitailers and non-vitailers (see note on I, 361ff.), it may be significant that Chaucer makes this representative of the vitailers so shady a character.

4377. Ridyng was the usual term for a procession, religious or secular; cf. "the Riding of the George," Kelly, Notices of Leicester, pp. 38-51. Ridings were common features of mediaeval life. Chepe, "Cheapside," was one of the principal streets in the heart of the city. See the picture of "The Procession of King Edward VI" in Harrison's Desc. of England, pt. III, Supp. (New Sh. Soc.).

4385. ne was: El has nas.

4402. The penalty for drawing sword or knife in the city was a fine of half a mark or 15 days imprisonment in Newgate prison; if blood was drawn, 20 s. fine or 60 days in prison (cf. Liber Albus, transl. Riley, p. 335). The city minstrels accompanied prisoners to the place of punishment (ibid. pp. 394-96).

4404. his papir soghte, examined his accounts; cf. PP, C, xiv, 38.

CkT is left fragmentary in all the MSS. Apparently Chaucer never finished it.

Many MSS insert at this point the Tale of Gamelyn, which is probably not by Chaucer. Possibly its presence in these MSS may be explained by the supposition that Chaucer intended to rewrite the tale, perhaps for assignment to the Knight's Yeoman, and consequently had a copy of it among his papers, which being found there after his death was by some persons supposed to be his composition and therefore placed among his tales. For the name Gamelyn cf. Gamelyn Mot in Letter Book H, pp. 257, 350, 422; and William Gamelyn was in the retinue of the earl of Devon in 10 Richard II.

FRAGMENT II (FURNIVALL'S GROUP B¹)

THE WORDES OF THE HOOST (1-98)

1ff. The remarks of the Host (see especially ll. 17-19, 32) indicate that no tales had been told for some time, perhaps none on this morning. Chaucer here disclaims for the Host, as he does for himself elsewhere, expertness in astronomy; but the two calculations call for more knowledge than the ordinary man possessed. It may be remarked, however, that if the Host had not known it was ten o'clock, his first calculation would not have given him the date; and if he had not known the date, his second calculation would not have given him the hour. He was reasoning in a circle. These elaborate astronomical methods of expressing the date and time were probably imitated from Boccaccio and Dante. Brae, in his edition of Chaucer's treatise on the Astrolabe, showed that in the latitude of London, on April 18, the sun would be above a point on the horizon half-way between its rising point and its noon point at 9:20. Half-an-hour and ten minutes more would bring it to ten o'clock. The calculation is, obviously, based not on the path actually traversed by the sun but on its position with reference to the horizon. The artificial day (l. 2) is the period from sunrise to sunset.

5. El, Dd, and related MSS read eighte and twentithe or xxviii; Hg and many others read xvijithe; Ha⁴ reads threttenthe. Professor Kurt Laves, of our department of Astronomy, has tested these readings by their conformity to ll. 2-3 and 11-14 and finds that xvijithe is more accurate by 20 min. than eighte and twentithe.

16. Lordynges was the common mode of address, equivalent to "Gentlemen" or "Ladies and Gentlemen." In the fifteenth century, the term "Sovereigns" had taken its place; cf. Manly, Spec. of the Pre-Shakespearian Drama, I, 316.

20-28. A common theme of ancient poets and philosophers; Skeat refers particularly to Ovid, Art. Am. iii, 62-65, Seneca, Epist. i, and RR, 369ff.

39. depardieux, a mild oath. French phrases were too common in Chaucer's England to permit much weight to the suggestion that this is used to characterize the Man of Law.

47. That; we should expect But here or Nath (for Hath) in l. 49, but most of the best MSS have the logical inaccuracy of our text. Brusendorff (p. 476) misses the point. What is needed is not ne that but that ne.

47-76. The allusion of the Man of Law to Chaucer's earlier poems lends verisimilitude to the account of the pilgrimage. Originally, no doubt, the main purpose of ll. 45-96 was, as Lowes suggests, to motivate the telling of a prose tale by the Man of Law. There is good reason to believe that this prose tale was Mel, which Chaucer later assigned to himself; cf. Tatlock, 196-97.

The story of Ceys and Alcione is a part of Chaucer's Book of the Duchesse. For the other lovers mentioned the Man of Law refers to what he calls the "Legend of Cupid's Saints," which is commonly known as the Legende of Good Women.¹ Of the sixteen ladies named in ll. 63-75, eight are actually the subjects of legends in that poem — Tisbe, Dido, Phillis, Adriane, Isiphilee (with Medea) and Ypermistre — though curiously enough the list omits Cleopatra (subject of the first legend), and Philomene (subject of the seventh). Five of the others mentioned — Hero, Eleyne, Ladomea, Penelopee, and Alceste — are celebrated in the ballade incorporated in the LGW; Dianire, Hermion, and Brixseyde are not even mentioned in LGW; but it is entirely possible that when Chaucer wrote the present passage he intended to compose legends of these eight ladies also — and perhaps others — (cf. LGW (F), 554-57). In the F version of the Prologue to LGW (written probably in 1386) Alceste imposes this penance upon the poet:

"Thou shalt while that thou lyvest, yere by yere,
The moste partye of thy tyme spende
In makyng of a glorious legende
Of goode wymmen . . .
And whan this book is made, yive it the Queene,
On my byhalfe, at Eltham or at Sheene."

If Chaucer fulfilled this command, he would have produced nine legends — one each year — before the death of the Queen, which occurred June 7, 1394. As there actually are nine, it is reasonable to take the lines of the penance as expressing literally Chaucer's plan and to suppose that he was still engaged in carrying it out when he wrote the lines of the Man of Law. It is possible that he was engaged on the unfinished ninth legend when the Queen died. As he knew that CT would not soon be completed, he would naturally make the Man of Law refer not only to the legends already in LGW but to the others that he intended to write.

¹ Undoubtedly we ought, as Kittredge (p. 150) suggests, to prefer for this poem the title indicated by Chaucer himself. Note particularly that the heroines of five of the legends are called martyrs.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE MAN OF LAWE 565

77-88. The two repulsive stories here referred to are contained in Gower's CA. Why Chaucer mentioned them and what was the effect of this passage upon his friendship with Gower are puzzling questions, which I hope soon to discuss in MPh. Gower pronounced Cana'ce (rh: grace, place), and Appol'linus (for Apollo'nus). Chaucer may have been chaffing him about this. Certainly there is no basis in Gower for l. 85.

91-93. The Man of Law suggests that it would be as dangerous for him to contend with Chaucer in poetry as it had been for the daughters of Pierus to contend with the Muses. According to Ovid (Met, bk. v) they were changed into magpies. Shannon (MLN, XXXV, 288-291) shows that in using the form Metamorphosios Chaucer was not guilty of ignorance. Most of the MSS of Ovid's poem have the genitive singular, and some of the early editors argued in favor of it. Gower has the astonishing form Metamor (CA, i, 389).

THE PROLOGUE OF THE MANNES TALE OF LAWE

99ff. Lounsbury pointed out (The Nation, July 4, 1889) that three stanzas of the prologue and four stanzas of the tale itself are derived from the treatise by Pope Innocent III entitled De Contemptu Mundi, sive de Miseria Conditionis Humanae. As the second prologue of LGW mentions a translation by Chaucer of "The Wretched Engendring of Mankind" (l. 414), it has been suggested that parts of it were used here. Skeat speaks of Chaucer's translation as "this juvenile work of his," but it is equally possible that Chaucer used some parts of Pope Innocent's treatise in this tale, and later — perhaps in the nineties — made a complete translation. The abridged translation of the same work by the French poet Eustache Deschamps under the title of "Le Double Lai de Fragilire Humaine" was dedicated to King Charles VI in 1383, but if Chaucer's translation had been made before the first version of the Prologue to LGW was written, he would probably have mentioned it there, and if he broke it up and discarded it, it is strange that he mentions it at all.

Chaucer's purpose in writing such a prologue is hard to discover. Tatlock emphasized the inappropriateness of the tale, the clumsiness of the manner in which it is introduced, and the probability that it was not originally written for the Man of Law. He also pointed out that the connection finally effected between the tale and its teller is only mechanical. We can hardly disregard the unanimous testimony of the MSS, though it is permissible to wonder whether, if Chaucer had completed his plan, he would have left this tale to the Man of Law.

The tale is a pious romance of the adventures, sufferings, and final triumph of a Christian heroine over the machinations of her two wicked mothers-in-law and other incidental enemies. The story was very popular in the Middle Ages, as is proved by the existence of more than twenty distinct versions of it. It forms the subject of one of Gower's tales in CA (ii, 587-1598). The immediate source of both Chaucer's version and Gower's was the Anglo-French Chronicle of Nicholas Trivet (first half of fourteenth century), which is printed in Originals and Analogues of Chaucer's CT (Chaucer Soc.).

113. The wise man is not Solomon, but Jesus, son of Sirach. See Ecclesiasticus, xi, 28: "Melius est enim mori quam indigere". RR, l. 8178, translates it "Meaux vient mourir que povres estre."

118. In Prov. xv, 15, the Vulgate has: "Omnes dies pauperis mali."

124f. ambes as, 'double aces,' a losing throw. sys cynk ($6 + 5 = 11$), 'the best chance.' The game known to Chaucer as 'hazard' is now known as 'craps,' from the old name, 'crabs,' of the throw of ace deuce.

THE MANNES TALE OF LAWE (134-1162)

144. message, 'messenger'; cf. l. 333.

156. see, here in the sense of 'protect.'

161. In the margin of several MSS is the gloss: "Europa est tercia pars mundi." Many of the MSS contain marginal glosses in this tale, mainly quotations explaining or illustrating the astrological passages.

171. Cf. note on I, 1913, and § 164.

185. seriously, 'seriatim,' 'in detail.'

190-203. This passage, and the other astrological passages, Skeat regards as later insertions in the tales. But Chaucer's interest in astrology is demonstrably earlier than the date of CT.

Curry (pp. 171-91) points out that this tale was organized and developed upon astrological premises.

The idea that events are written in the stars long before they occur was current in Chaucer's time; cf. I, 2031ff. In the margin of El, Hg, Cp, Pw, Ln, and Dd are written, with some errors, four lines of Latin verse from a poem by Bernardus Sylvester entitled Megacosmus, or De Mundi Universitate:

Sceptra Phoronei, fratrum discordia Thebae
Flammae Phætonis, Deucalionis aquae . . .
In stellis Priami species, audacia Turni, Sensus Ulixæus, Herculesque vigor.

([In the stars were written beforehand] the rule of Phoroneus, the strife of the Theban brothers, Phaeton's fires, Deucalion's flood. . . . In the stars, the beauty of Priam, the boldness of Turnus, the cunning of Ulysses, the strength of Hercules.) The idea is exactly the same, although Hercules and Turnus are the only names common to the two passages. Bernard's poem, forgotten though it now is, was familiar to Chaucer's contemporaries, and is quoted in a treatise on rhetoric which he apparently knew, the Ars Versificatoria (iii, 28) of Matthieu de Vendôme; cf. also Everardus Alemannus, Laborinthus, ll. 27-33.

224. In Trivet the heathen are called Saracens ("Sarazins") and their temples are spoken of as "les temples de Maumetz." Mediaeval Christians, regarding all heathens as idolaters, supposed that their principal god or prophet was Mahoun or Makomete. Chaucer naturally did not trouble himself over the fact that Mahomet was only a child at the time when the events of this story were supposed to have occurred.

273-87. "Perhaps added in revision," says Skeat, but there is no evidence that MLT is a revision of an earlier tale.

289. Or Ilion brende: 'ere Ilion burned.' The burning of Ilion, the citadel of Troy, is again referred to LGW, 936f. By an error most MSS omit at before Thebes.

295-315. An astrological insertion by Chaucer. Opposite l. 295 several MSS have a Latin quotation from Ptolemy's Almagest, explaining ll. 295-98.

Previous editors have taken firste moevyng as adjectives modifying firmament; but they really form the name of the outermost sphere, called in Latin 'primum mobile'; cf. Introd. p. 134. My punctuation is intended to show that the speaker first addresses the sphere by its name and then calls it cruel.

The unfavorable astrological situation, the writer tells us, is due — not to the individual motions of the planets, as Curry seems to suppose — but to the revolution of the primum mobile, which has placed the planets in unfavorable positions (therefore cruel) in the mundane houses — not in the zodiacal signs, as Curry holds. The situation of the heavenly bodies at the moment of one's birth is important for every event of his life and one should not enter upon any important undertaking without ascertaining whether the planets controlling his fortunes are well situated. In the case of Constance this ought to have been easy to ascertain as the root, or horoscope, of her birth must have been known — she being of royal birth.

Athazir (l. 305) is explained by Alcabitus (fo. 22b) as the process of obtaining the celestial distance between the place of any significator and any position in the zodiac. This distance upon being translated into time shows when the event indicated will occur; for an example see the commentary of John de Saxonia in the same volume, ed. 1521, fos. 83ff. To the same effect are the words of Haly (Albobazen Haly Filii Abenragel libri de Iudiciis Astrorum: Basel, 1551, p. 17, col. 1): "quod fortunae et infortunia non sunt nisi per Athazir. Athazir est significator nativitatís, deferens significationem nati ad quodlibet signum, eundo per signa et domus."

The trouble with Mars, the lord of the ascendant sign Aries, seems to be that the movement of the primum mobile has "crowded" or thrust him from his angle, probably the ascendant itself, into the darkest of the mundane houses, a cadent (perhaps the 12th house, which adjoined the ascendant), and therefore one where he was helpless. The moon, too, which is of special influence on voyages is said to be not "in reception" with any favorable planet; that is, that none of the planets which have "dignities" where she is situated are situated where she has any "dignity." She is therefore "feeble, and unable to help." For further information see Introd., pp. 139-43.

The plain meaning is that the stars were unfavorable to her going, and that this ought to have been known to the "philosophers."

In the margin of several MSS opposite l. 309 is the gloss:

Omnes concordati sunt quod elecciones sint debiles nisi in diuitibus; habent enim isti, licet debilitentur eorum elecciones, radicem i. natiuitates eorum, que confortant omnem planetam debilem in itinere etcetera.

332. Alkaron, 'the Koran,' al being the Arabic definite article.

358. In the margin of many of the MSS is written the word auctor (i.e. author). This is a common method of calling special attention to important sentiments or views. It does not necessarily imply that the author is intruding upon the narrator.

360. According to mediaeval belief, the serpent who tempted Eve had the body of a serpent and the face of a woman. Such a creature often appears in mediaeval art, and allusions to it are frequent. Skeat quotes the alliterative Troy Book (EETS), l. 4451:

Hade a face was fourmet as a fre maydon;
and PP, B, xviii, 335 thus:

Ylyke a lusarde with a lady visage;

and Peter Comestor, Historia Libri Genesis: "Elegit etiam quoddam genus serpentis (ut ait Beda) virgineum vultum habens."

401. Lucan does not make a boast of the triumph of Julius, but laments that he had no triumph to record. Shannon, however (MPb, XVI, 609-14), quotes three passages which may have led Chaucer to suppose that the triumph was celebrated.

421-27. In the margin of several MSS is quoted a passage from Pope Innocent's De Contemptu Mundi of which this stanza is a paraphrase; cf. note on 99ff.

438. foot hoot, 'foot hot,' i.e. 'hastily,' a colloquial idiom.

449-62. Not in Trivet. Skeat suggests that it was added in revision.

451. weleful: El has woful.

470-504. "Not in the French text; perhaps added in revision" (Skeat).

491. See Revelation, vii, 1-3, which indicates that the angel spoke only l. 494.

500. St. Mary the Egyptian (5th cy.), after her conversion, retired to the wilderness beyond Jordan and lived the rest of her life with no other food than two and a half—or, as some authorities say, three—loaves of bread; cf. Skeat's note on PP, C, xviii, 23.

510. tyde; cf. l. 798; in both passages tyde may mean 'hour' or more probably 'the flowing of a tide.'

519. According to Trivet, Constance had learned many languages and addressed the constable in his own tongue, the Saxon.

525. deye; this word sometimes rhymes with words in eye and at other times with words in ye. Even in modern English some words — for example, leisure — have two pronunciations.

557. a furlong wey or two: a measure, not of distance, but of time. A "mile way" is 20 min.; a "furlong way," 2½ min.

578. Skeat notes that King Alla (Aella) figures in the celebrated incident of Pope Gregory and the English slaves, an incident which led to the sending of Christian missionaries to England.

620. Berth hire on hond, 'bears her in hand,' i.e. 'accuses her falsely.'

631-58. "Not in the original. A later insertion of much beauty" (Skeat). Ll. 631-32 refer to "trial by combat." A person accused of a crime was allowed to prove his innocence by a formal combat with his accuser. If unable to fight, the accused was allowed to be represented by a champion. For an account of such a combat, see the mediaeval romance The Erl of Toulous, or Browning's Count Gismond.

638. "Sit on knees" is the usual idiom for 'kneel.'

639. Susanne. The story of Susanna, from one of the Apocryphal books of the Old Testament, was widely popular in the Middle Ages. On the false testimony of two malicious elders she was condemned to be stoned to death for adultery, but was proved innocent by the skilful cross-questioning of Daniel.

641. Seint Anne, the mother of Mary, the mother of Christ.

647. Supply he before gat.

660. Cf. note on I, 1761.

682. I take innocent to be a noun.

703. What, 'why.' These lines exemplify the rhetorical figure dubitatio, of which Chaucer was rather fond; cf. Manly, Rhet.

715. Knave: so originally, but altered here and in l. 722 to man by El (cf. II, 444, 447 and 612); probably because knave was taking on its modern meaning.

736. lettres, plural in form, though singular in meaning, like Latin literae; cf. l. 747.

748. direct, 'addressed.'

762f. These lines hardly seem to belong to the letter, but there is no other way to treat them.

771-77. The passage on drunkenness is not in Trivet, but is derived from Pope Innocent's treatise; cf. note on 99ff. The gloss gives the Latin.

813-19. From Boethius, i, m. 5. Ll. 820-833 are merely hinted at in Trivet, and ll. 834-75 are also additions by Chaucer.

842. eggement, 'inciting'; the g's are hard, as in egg.

849. El omits litel.

876-84. Much abridged from Trivet.

893. out of drede: 'without doubt,' 'certainly.'

896. with meschance; not an adverb, but an imprecation; cf. l. 914.

925. This stanza and the two following are additions by Chaucer. Ll. 925-31 are based on a passage in Pope Innocent's treatise, which is quoted in the margin of El and other MSS.

939. Judith. The story of Judith and Holofernes is told in the Apocryphal book of Judith.

961. Trivet gives the name of the senator as Arsemius and his wife's name as Helen. In l. 981 Chaucer calls Helen Constance's aunt. She was really her first cousin.

1009. If this is aimed at Trivet and Gower, Chaucer's memory played him false, they merely say that Constance instructed the child how he should act at the feast.

1035. *sight*e, 'sighed.'

1036. that he myghte, 'as fast as he could.'

1037-71. Additions by Chaucer in his characteristic psychologizing manner.

1060. El has and hise halwes.

1086ff. Chaucer deliberately rejects the statements of Trivet and Gower on this point, and gives his reason for doing so.

1091. Sente, the sentence is so involved that Chaucer has left the construction imperfect, but he obviously means Sente to be subj., equivalent to 'as that he should send.' It is not necessary to change it to sende.

1126. Certainly not the Gesta Romanorum. Whether the tale is contained in the gigantic collection of tales known as the Faits des Romains I am unable to say.

1132, 1135. Latin quotations from Pope Innocent's treatise are written in the margin opposite both these lines. The first is paraphrased in ll. 1132-34; the second in ll. 1135-38. These additions, and indeed the remaining lines of the tale, which seem to us inartistic, are in thorough accord with the principles of mediaeval rhetoric.

[THE MAN OF LAW'S END-LINK (II, 1163-90)]

In thirty of the manuscripts MLT is followed by a link of twenty-eight lines. In twenty-seven of them the link serves to introduce SqT, which immediately follows in the manuscript; but four of the twenty-seven (La, Mc, Py, Ry³) read sompnour instead of squire in l. 1179. Two other manuscripts, Ry¹ and Ha⁴, have the link with the reading sompnour; but in Ry¹ the link is immediately followed by the Merchant's End-Link, then with no break by the Squire's Head-Link, and then by SqT; in *Ha*⁴ the Link is followed by WBT. The only MS containing the order and reading adopted by modern editors is Se. Its order is MLT, Link, SbT, and the reading in l. 1179 is shipman. In Se, however, MLT does not come in its usual position, but is moved forward to follow F&T. For discussion of the situation see Introd., p. 80.

As this passage does not appear in El or the other MSS of Group I (see Introd., p. 80), I give it here in the Notes instead of including it in the Text, as is usual. I print it from the interesting MS belonging to Lichfield Cathedral; to the Dean and Chapter of which I am indebted for permission to make photostats of the MS.

[THE LICHFIELD MS]

Here endeth the tale of the man of lawe
Here begynneth prologe of the Squier
Owre host vpon his sturpes stood anoon
And seide goode men herkeneth euerychon
This was a thrifty tale for the nones	1165
Sir parissh preest quod he for goddes Bones
Telle vs a tale as was thi forward yore
I se wel that ye lerned men in lore
Konne moche good by goddes dignite
The person hym answerde benedicite	1170
What eyleth the man so synfully to swere
Oure host answerde o Jankyn be ye there
I smelle a loller in the wynd quod he Now goode men quod oure host herkeneth me
Abideth for goddes digne passion	1175
For we shal haue a predication
This loller here wol prechen vs somewhat
Nay by my fader soule that shal he nat
Seide the Squyer here shal he nor preche
He shal no gospel glosen here ne teche	1180
We leeuene alle in the grete god quod he
He wolde sowe som difficulte
Or springen cokkel in oure clene corn
And therfore hoost I warne the biforn
My ioly body shal a tale telle	1185
And I shal clinken with so mery a Belle
That I shal waken al this companie
But it shal be of no philosophie
Ne phislyas ne termes queynte of lawe
Ther is but litel latyn in my mawe	1190

Explicit prologus

The other manuscripts which have the passage, with squire or esquire in various spellings, are the following: Bw, Cp, En², Fi, Gl, Ha², Ha³, Ht, Ii, La, Ld², Lc, Mm, Ne, Pw, Ra¹, Ra², Ry², Sl¹, Sl², Tc¹, Tc².

Notes of explanation and comment follow:

1165. The words thrifty tale seem to echo l. 46 of the Man of Law's words to the Host, and are at least as appropriate to Mel, which is thought to have been originally assigned to him, as to the tale of Constance, which seems finally to have fallen to his lot. On the other hand, ll. 1188-89 describe Mel very well indeed and are entirely unsuited to Constance.

1168. The learned men of the party were the Man of Law, the Doctor, the Clerk, and the Parson. Perhaps Chaucer himself should be included in this list, though the Host might not have recognized his claims until after the telling of Melibeus. The Monk is represented in the Prologue as scornful of learning, whereas later (II, 3155-72) he seems very bookish.

1170-83. In this episode, whether merely for dramatic effect or not, by at least two of the Pilgrims the Parson is treated as a Wyclifite. Skeat, in a learned note, distinguishes between lollere, 'an idle vagabond,' and lollard, originally a general term for wandering religious enthusiasts, later specifically applied to the followers of Wyclif. But the meaning here is made perfectly definite by ll. 1179-83, especially l. 1183. A contemporary collection of documents concerning the Wyclifites — the Fasciculi Zizaniorum, or 'Bundles of Cockle' — begins with an allusion to the well-known parable of the tares, Matt., xiii, 24-30, and quotes a passage from St. Jerome implying that lollum was a more familiar word for 'cockle' than zizanium. Whether Chaucer conceived his Parson as a Wyclifite, or took Wyclif himself as his model, may admit of discussion, but undoubtedly he represents him as impressing two of the Pilgrims as a puritan and a follower of Wyclif.

1170. Benedicite, "bless ye," was formerly a common exclamation. It occurs several times in Chaucer: cf. I, 1785, I, 2115, I, 4583, III, 1456, III, 1584, VII, 1974, and TC, i, 780 (where two MSS have the spelling bendiste). Usually it is a trisyllable, but in I, 1785 it has its full five syllables. In the Parson's speech — and always, I think, where it is trisyllabic — it is an exclamation to ward off evil. In FrT (III, 1456) the summoner uses it when he learns that his traveling companion was not "a yeman," but "a feend"; and the widow uses it (III, 1584) when the summoner knocks and calls violently at her door. In the Towneley Plays (Second Shepherd's Play, l. 55) the speaker, meditating on the evil times, exclaims: "Benste and Dominus! what may this be meyne?"; and another (ib. l. 358), as he wakes from a bad night, mumbles: "Benste be herein! so my body qwakis!" That Benedicite is the first word of the Song of the Three Children in the Fiery Furnace — indeed the first word of almost every sentence in the song (see the Thanksgiving after Mass in the Roman Service) — is true but probably has no bearing upon the use of the word as an exclamation.

1172. The Host's query is slang: "Ah, Johnnie, are you there?" Sir John was a common term for a priest. Perhaps it is also worth noting that John was commonly a part of the names or pseudonyms of the mysterious leaders of the Peasants' Revolt of 1381 — John Ball, John Miller, John Sheep, John Nameless, John Carter, John Trueman, Jack Straw (cf. Knighton, II, 139, Walsingham, II, 33-34) — for some contemporaries thought that John Wyclif was at least in part responsible for that great but short-lived struggle for liberty.

1179. Despite the fact that so many MSS have here the name of the Squire, it seems impossible that Chaucer could have intended him to be the speaker; he would hardly swear by his father's soul, for his father was alive, and the humor of ll. 1181, 1183, in the mouth of some rascal, like the Shipman or the Summoner, is too exquisite to be lost. The whole passage is, indeed, unsuited to the Squire.

1189. phislyas. The original MS must have had something that looked either like phislyas or like philleas, fileas, for these forms, in various spellings, clearly represent the MS tradition. If Chaucer wrote physik, as some modern editors and a few late scribes have supposed, it is difficult to see how it could have given rise to the other forms. That no satisfactory explanation of phislyas or philleas has yet been given proves nothing except that we do not yet know fourteenth century English perfectly. The latest suggestion is that of Goffin (MLR, XVIII, 335f.). He thinks the original reading was filas (Anglo-Fr. filaz, 'files or cases'). He refers to OED, s.v. filace. At first I rejected this — rather superciliously, I fear. I am now convinced that it offers the key to the enigma. The speaker, whoever he is, seems to be one of the ruder members of the party. To represent him as making an unsuccessful attempt to use a technical term would be entirely in Chaucer's manner. The best example of this is his consistent representation of the Host as fond of using words that he does not understand and consequently disfigures in some way. Note, as illustrations of this tendency, "By corpus dominus" (VII, 3120), "By corpus bones" (VI, 314), "By Seint Ronyan" (VI, 310), "By that precious corpus Madrian" (VII, 3082), "jurdones," "Galiones" (VI, 305, 306), and "cardynacle" (VI, 313). His error in one case is emphasized by his obvious delight in his creation —

And lyk a prelat, by Seint Ronyan!
 Seyde I nat wel? I kan nat speke in terme —

and by the humorous twist given to the name of this new-found saint by the Pardoner —

'It shal be doon,' quod he, 'by Seint Ronyon'!

In the present passage the speaker was apparently trying to use a term familiar to the Man of Law. What he meant to say was filas (or filace); what he said may be represented as fileas, or phillias. Physlyas arose from some scribe's mistaking the first l of phillias (or phylyas, or the like) for a long s.

The quotations in OED under filace show that it, in various spellings — among them filas — was a technical term in the higher courts of law for centuries. There was in each of these courts (except that of the Exchequer) an officer called a filacer, who filed original writs and issued processes thereon. The filas of a case in the Common Pleas was very necessary for the successful prosecution of the case. There was even a derivative, filacery (OED). The term, then, was in common use in England in Chaucer's day; but, being a technical term, was not entirely familiar to the rude interrupter of the Host's invitation to the Parson.

[FRAGMENT III (FURNIVALL'S GROUP D)]

PROLOGUE OF THE WYVES TALE OF BATH (III, 1-856)

The Wife of Bath's Prologue and Tale are not linked to any preceding tale. They form the first section of a group including also the tales of the Friar and the Summoner, which are closely linked together by conversation and narrative.

The Wife of Bath's Prologue is an account of her own experiences of married life, and is in the main highly dramatic and entirely in character. If at times her revelations are more intimate than would seem natural even under the conditions of the Canterbury journey, we may account for this by remembering that self-revelations or confessions were a conventional device of mediaeval literature. Just as the Elizabethan dramatists made use of the conventional device of the soliloquy to convey information or make revelations which could not easily be dealt with otherwise, the mediaeval satirists used the conventional device of the confession to bring out experiences and traits of character which under ordinary circumstances the person making the confession would never think of revealing.

The Wife's revelation of her acts, motives, and character belongs to the general stream of mediaeval satire on women, and includes all the most striking features of that satire. In writing it Chaucer draws heavily upon preceding satires, each of which is more or less based upon those that had gone before. The earliest with which we are concerned, and the basis of all that followed, is the treatise of St. Jerome Against Jovinian (Adversus Jovinianum). The Latin text of this was known to Chaucer and to some at least of the circle of readers for which he wrote, for the margins of several MSS contain many quotations from this treatise. Included in St. Jerome's treatise was a translation into Latin of a part of what he calls the Golden Book on Marriage of Theophrastus, the friend of Aristotle. Of the twelfth century is the epistle written by Walter Map to one of his friends, entitled Valerius ad Rufinum, de non ducenda uxore. Next in order of time is Jean de Meun's satire in RR, which is itself largely based upon St. Jerome. Of equal importance is the contemporary poem by Eustache Deschamps entitled Le Miroir de Mariage. Whether Chaucer knew the even bitterer and more extensive satire entitled in Latin Lamentationes Matheoluli or the French version of it by Jehan le Fevre entitled Les Lamentations de Matheolus is not known, as no one appears yet to have investigated the subject. For the indebtedness to St. Jerome, see especially Woolcombe in Essays on Chaucer (Chaucer Soc.), pp. 297-304; Lounsbury, II, 292-95; Koeppl in Archiv, LXXXIV, 413-15, and in Anglia, XIII, 174-83. For the indebtedness to RR see especially Mead in PMLA, XVI, 388ff. and Fansler, Chaucer and the Roman de la Rose. For numerous examples of the indebtedness to the Miroir de Mariage see Lowes in MPh, III, 305-22. I add a few references to Les Lamentations.

Numerous glosses appear in the margins of El and other MSS in this prologue. They are passages — mainly from St. Jerome and the Bible — which were certainly in Chaucer's mind when he wrote. Whether their presence in the MSS is due to him or to some early commentator is not yet decided.

1. Mediaeval scholars recognized two types of argument, that from authority — that is, the written opinions of reputable authors — and that from experience. The Wife of Bath has learned the jargon of the schools from her fifth husband, who was a clerk. In RR the Old Woman, la veille, who is one of the sources of Chaucer's satire, says in like manner that her knowledge of love is derived, not from schools, but from experience:

N'onc ne fui d'Amours a escolle
Ou l'en leüst la theorique,
Mais je sai tout par la pratique:
Esperiment m'en ont fait sage,
Que j'ai hantez tout mon aage.
— (12,802-06).

4. According to canon law, twelve was the legal age for the marriage of girls.

7. All the printed MSS with the exception of El and *Ha*⁴ read (with insignificant variations of spelling):

If I so ofte myghte han wedded be.

El and *Ha*⁴ change if to for, and El omits myghte. It is obvious that the scribes thought they were correcting an error, and modern editors have agreed with the scribes; but they have all failed to understand the Wife's meaning. She knows well enough that she has gone through the marriage ceremony with five men, but she does not know whether they were really her husbands. The question is one that was raised by Jerome (I, 14, 15), where he is discussing how many times a woman may marry, and expresses the view that "where there are more husbands than one, the proper idea of a husband, who is a single person, is destroyed" and goes on to say that "if there is more than one husband it makes no difference whether he be a second or a third, because there is no longer a question of single marriage." In the course of the argument Jerome cites the example of the Samaritan woman in the same way in which it is cited by the Wife of Bath (II, 14-25): "At all events this is so if the Samaritan woman in John's Gospel who said she had her sixth husband was reproved by the Lord because he was not her husband." The Wife's doubt therefore was merely whether her five marriages were valid, and her whole argument through l. 25 is on this point. The argument from Christ's having attended only one wedding (II, 10-13) is represented as being, not only that one should not marry more than once, but that only one marriage is valid. The reading of El makes sense in l. 7, but obscures the argument of the passage as a whole.

11. In the margin is the gloss: "In Cana Galilee."

12. El reads: "by the same ensample thoughte me." The reading given in the text is that of most of the other MSS and is required by the context. In the margin of several MSS is the gloss (from Jerome; cf. John, ii, 1-11):

Qui enim semel iuit ad nupcias docuit semel esse nubendum.

14. 10, omitted in El, Ha⁴, and Sl¹.

18. El reads: "and that man the which that hath now thee." The reading adopted is that of most of the other MSS.

23. In the margin of several MSS is the gloss:

Non est vxorum numerus diffinitus; quia secundum Paulum, Qui habent vxores sic sint tanquam non habentes.

28. Some MSS have the gloss:

Crescite & multiplicamini.

This and the other Biblical allusions are taken directly from St. Jerome.

29. El omits wel.

33. From Jerome (i, 15): "I do not condemn bigamy, nay nor trigamy; nor, if I may use the expression, octogamy." Both St. Jerome and the Wife of Bath are discussing successive marriages. According to the canonists, bigamy might consist in marrying a widow or a woman of loose morals as well as in marrying two women at the same time or in succession; cf. Gy, Adam de le Hale, pp. 412ff. and Matheolus, II, pp. cxiiff. and 145f.)

44. Between this line and the next, thirteen MSS (Ch, Cn, Cx², Dd, Ds, En¹, Hl, Ma¹, Ne, Ry¹, Se, Si, Tc²) insert six lines. Tatlock agrees with Skeat and Tyrwhitt in regarding them as genuine:

Of whiche I have ypiked out the beste,
Bothe of hir nether purs and of hir cheste.
Diverse scoles maken parfit clerkes;
Divers praktyk in many sondry werkes
Maketh the werkman parfit sekirly;
Of fyve housbondes scolerling am I.

Not only the general argument but the special figure comes from Jerome.

46. Some MSS have the gloss: "Si autem non continent nubant." Cf. 1 Cor. vii, 9. Most of the Biblical allusions are from this chapter, but through St. Jerome.

48ff. In the margin of some MSS are glosses, mainly from St. Jerome.

49. El omits that here; holy in l. 58; and any in l. 59.

54. The allusions to Lamech and other Old Testament worthies come from Jerome.

73. In some MSS is the gloss:

Paulus de virginibus: preceptum non habeo, consilium autem do, etcetera.

75. The gloss is: Inuitat ad cursum, tenet in manu virginitatis brauium; qui potest capere capiat, etcetera.

81. Some MSS give the Latin:

Volo autem omnes homines esse sicut me ipsum.

85. El omits that: and in l. 91 has that for he heeld.

96. preferre, 'take precedence of.' An uncommon use of the word.

99ff. The argument and figure are again from Jerome.

103ff. Some MSS have the marginal glosses:

Vnusquisque proprium habet donum ex deo; alius quidem sic, alius autem sic.

Qui cantant sequentur Agnum xliiij^{or} Millia (cf. Rev. xiv, 1-4).

160ff. Glosses, from 1 Cor. vii, occur.

163ff. Whether the Pardoner was in clerical orders it is difficult to determine. The church permitted the marriage of the lower clergy. The third Lateran Council (1179), which was a general council, says expressly: "It is permitted any subdeacon to marry" (permittitur subdiacono cuidam contrahere matrimonium). Those who took advantage of the permission laid aside the ecclesiastical costume and renounced the tonsure and took a part in secular affairs, but they still retained the privilege of "benefit of clergy." But G. R. Owst, in the latest and best book on the subject, says that many of the preaching pardoners were laymen (Preaching in Medieval England, p. 104; cf. pp. 96-110).

167. What: 'why.'

168. to yeere, 'this year,' like today.

170. another tonne. The two tuns of sweet drink and bitter which Jupiter keeps before his door for all mankind are described at length in RR; cf. Ellis's translation, ll. 7191-7224. Skeat points out that Gower also alludes to them.

172. El omits the; and in l. 177 has that for thilke.

180-82. In the margin of MS Dd is written

Qui per alios non corrigitur

Alii per ipsum corigentur.

Chaucer's ascription of this saying and that quoted in ll. 326-27 to Ptolemy has puzzled his editors, because they were unable to find them in any of Ptolemy's writings. Flügel furnished the explanation in Anglia, XVIII, 133-40. The Venice edition (1515) of Gerard of Cremona's Latin version of the Almagest contains at the beginning a brief life of Ptolemy, followed by a collection of thirty-three apophthegms ascribed to him. Of these No. 18 reads: "Qui per alios non corrigitur: nec alii per ipsum corrigitur." This is obviously the source of the gloss on ll. 180-82. No. 23 is: "Inter homines altior existit mundo: qui non curat in cuius manu sit mundus" (cf. note on ll. 324-27). In Anglia, XXI, 222-30, F. Boll discussed the sources and history of these additions to the Almagest.

All the published MSS except Pw and La distort the name of Ptolemy to Protholomee. The distortion may therefore have occurred in the MS from which all the extant ones are derived, but the distorted form does not suit the metre. Pro is written in MSS of this time by P with a curved stroke through the stem. The distortion probably originated as a scribal error.

191. of is not in El.

193ff. In some MSS occurs the following comment:

Bihoold how this goode wyf serued hir .iij. firste housbondes whiche were goode olde men.

197. El has the thre men were goode and.

215. El werk.

218ff. The reference is to the flitch of bacon which could be claimed by any pair who, after a year of marriage, could make oath that they had never had a quarrel, never regretted their marriage, and if free would again marry one another; cf. Chambers' Book of Days, I, 749, where we are told that the flitch was claimed in 1445, 1467, 1701, 1751, and 1763. Skeat in his note on PP, C, xi, 276 adds that it was claimed in 1772, 1851, 1855, and 1876.

221. This is one of the passages Lowes regards as due to the Miroir de Mariage; Skeat had referred it to the Aureolus Liber de Nuptiis, written by a certain Theophrastus, who is mentioned in l. 671 and in IV, 1310. The work is known only from the long extract quoted in the treatise of Jovinian (bk. 1, chap. 47).

228. El has as kan a womman.

232. 'Make him believe that the chough is crazy.' Cow is a common spelling of chough (a kind of jackdaw); see OED, s.v., chough. Perhaps the first element of cow-blackbird is the same word. The story alluded to is that a jealous husband sets a talking bird to report on the faithfulness of his wife. When the bird reports her misconduct, the wife by a trick persuades the husband that the bird is crazy, and he kills it. It is the story of the husband and the parrot in the Arabian Nights' Entertainment, and Clouston printed several versions of it to illustrate Chaucer's McT in the Chaucer Society Originals and Analogues, pp. 437ff. and 545f.

235. Cf. Matheolus, ii, 1452ff.

257. El has seyst that here; and repeats som for in l. 260.

259. El kan synge and.

269. El omits ther.
- 278-80. Proverbial. From Pope Innocent's De Contemptu Mundi: "There are three things which do not permit a man to stay in his house: smoke, dropping water, and a bad wife." Guillaume de Normandie, a 13th cy. poet, wrote a whole poem — Les Treis Moz — on the subject for an English bishop; cf. ZsfrPh, III, 225ff.
280. hous. The MSS are about equally divided between hous and houses. The evidence seems to indicate that the original had hous, which was changed to the plural by some scribes on account of the plural pronoun. For the word benedicitee cf. note on II, 1170.
282. El that we. On the subject matter, cf. Matheolus, i, 642-632.
285. hors. An old uninflected plural. On trial marriages; cf. Matheolus, ii, 430ff. and iii, 265-94.
303. The whole passage, ll. 265-302, is largely based upon the extract from Theophrastus in St. Jerome.
308. El omits this.
311. Oure dame: herself; cf. l. 713.
319. El omits nat.
320. dame Alys. It is a little curious that Chaucer gives the same name to both the Wife of Bath and her "gossip"; cf. ll. 530, 548, and 804.
323. El has blessed.
324. Cf. note on l. 182f. The Latin is given in the margin of the MS.
342. 1 Tim. ii, 9, is quoted in the margin.
350. his, 'its'; the sex of the cat is indicated in ll. 352ff. in, not 'tavern,' but merely 'dwelling.' The saying was common; cf. Matheolus, ii, 307iff., and Miroir, ll. 3214f.
354. caterwawed, 'a-caterwauling.' Skeat showed that the ed is not the participial ending, but represents an old English ending ad forming abstract nouns, like huntað, 'hunting.' Cf. the note on VI, 406.
358. The hundred-eyed Argus was set by Juno to keep watch over Io, who had been changed into a cow; cf. note on I, 1385ff.
361. make his berd; slang, 'put something over on him.' so moot I thee;
a mild oath, 'so may I thrive.'
362. In some MSS is a gloss (from Jerome):
eciam odiosa vxor si habeat virum bonum, etcetera.
- 371ff. In the margin of some MSS occur glosses (from Jerome):
Amor illius inferno et arenti terre et incendio comparata. Vnde illud, etcetera. Infernus et amor mulieris et terra que non saciatur aqua et ignis non dicent satis, etcetera. Sicut in ligno vermis ita perdet virum suum vxor. Nemo melius scire potest quid sit vxor vel mulier nisi ille qui passus est.

373. wilde fyr; wild fire seems to have been distinguished from Greek fire, but both were preparations of naphtha or other inflammable substances that could not be quenched by water. Colonel Hime concluded that Greek fire was distinguished by the presence of quicklime; cf. Greek fire in Encycl. Brit.

401. A translation of a mediaeval proverb which is quoted in the margin of some MSS: "Fallere, flere, nere, dedit Deus in muliere."

415. Cf. I, 4134 and RR, 7518-20.

432. Wilkyn, a diminutive like Janekyn and Malkyn; here of course used humorously.

460. This anecdote comes from Valerius Maximus; cf. note on l. 642. In some MSS occurs the gloss:

Valerius, libro 6°, capitulo 3°. Metellius vxorem suam eo quod vinum bibisset fuste percussam interemit.

484. croce, 'a staff'; cf. croche in OED. St. Joce, a Breton saint. His hermitage near Amiens became a famous monastery, and must have become familiar to Englishmen in the course of the French wars, but Skeat thinks Chaucer remembered a passage in Le Testament de Jean de Meun, ll. 461-64, which suggested both the idea and the rhyme of this couplet.

489. In Matheolus, iii, 1673-1720, God, in reply to the reproaches and arguments of Mahieu, tells him that he has established several purgatories, the most painful of which is marriage, and that anyone who has endured that is relieved from the others. Later—in his dream—Mahieu is received into heaven by a chorus of "bigamists," who cry:

Welcome, welcome, true martyr!
Come and join our dance.

492f. Jerome (i, 48): "We read of a certain Roman noble who, when his friends found fault with him for having divorced a wife beautiful, chaste, and rich, put out his foot and said to them, 'And the shoe before you looks new and elegant, yet no one but myself knows where it pinches.'"

496. "Across the arch which usually divides the chancel from the nave in English churches was stretched a beam on which was placed a rood, i.e. a figure of Our Lord on the cross" (Bell).

498f. Chaucer's knowledge of the tomb of Darius seems to have been derived from Gualtier de Chatillon's Alexandreis, sive Gesta Alexandri Magni. Lounsbury (II, 354) summarizes the description of the magnificent tomb, a lofty pyramid of white marble, overlaid with gold.

517. Wayte what, not exclamatory, but an indefinite relative, 'whatever'; cf. Derocquigny's note, MLR, III, 72 and Cook's note on look what, MLN, XXXI, 442. Both constructions have been commonly misunderstood.

521. With daunger, 'grudgingly,' to enhance the price.

552. An Ovidian expression that had become proverbial.

556ff. She enumerates the principal occasions which brought people together in the Middle Ages. Cf. Mahieu's account of the use women made of all such assemblies, Matheolus, i, ll. 947-1022. See also RR, 13,517-28.

571. nof, a contraction of "ne of."

572f. Proverbial in many languages; cf. G. Herbert, Jacula Prudentum, 67: "The mouse that hath but one hole is quickly taken." Chaucer may have read it in RR (13,150ff.) or in the rhetorical treatise of Mathieu de Vendôme; cf. Manly, Rhet., p. 12.

576. My dame. Curry (p. 94) thinks this refers to "the love star, Venus." But the satirists commonly represent the tricks of women as traditional lore, passed on by older women; cf. Matheolus, ii, 1807-1992, or Lowes, MPb, III, 316f.

577. mette, 'dreamed'; the verb is used both impersonally and personally.

602. The Reeve also claimed to have a trace of youth; cf. I, 3888.

604. Seinte Venus seel: a "birth mark"; cf. Barnouw, The Nation, CIII, 504, and Curry, pp. 104-07.

609-16. In the margin opposite these lines El has Latin glosses, of which these lines are a paraphrase. The first is from a collection of astrological maxims known as the Aphorisms of Almansor; the other from a similar collection, ascribed to the mysterious Hermes Trismegistus.

The more significant of the glosses is the second: "In the nativities of women, if either of the houses of Venus is in the ascendant and Mars in it (or vice versa) the woman will be unchaste." The Wife of Bath says that when she was born the ascendant was Taurus, the night house of Venus, and that Mars was situated in it. This "constellation" or disposition of the stars controlled her temperament and character. Curry (ch. v) argues that Chaucer built up the character of the Wife of Bath entirely from her horoscope.

642ff. Romayn geestes is, to be sure, a literal translation of Gesta Romanorum, but it does not appear that Chaucer ever uses the term in that sense. The two stories referred to come from the Dictorum Factorumque Memorabilium Exempla of Valerius Maximus, a Latin collector of historical anecdotes, whose book was much read in mediaeval schools, and was often quoted by Chaucer.

651. Ecclesiaste, not Ecclesiastes, but the Apocryphal Ecclesiasticus, xxv, 25.

655. "This is clearly a quotation of some old saying, as shewn by the metre, which here varies, and becomes irregular. There is a slightly different version of it in Wright's Reliquiae Antiquae, i. 233:

'Who that byldeth his howse all of salos,
And prikketh a blynde horsse over the falowes,
And suffereth his wif to seke many halos,
God sende hym the blisse of everlasting galos!'" — Skeat.

659. I sette noght an hawe of, slang, 'I don't care a penny for.'

660. sawe: E^h has awe; Hg, Ha⁴, and Gg sawe; the other MSS lawe. Long s and l are so much alike in the MSS that we need not hesitate to read sawe, as the context requires.

668. deaf, cf. I, 446. Deaf was still pronounced to rhyme with leaf by many old persons a generation ago. The pronunciation with a short vowel is a modern development.

669ff. The Wife of Bath was fairly familiar with the contents of her husband's book. According to her description, it was a volume in which he had collected the most famous ancient and mediaeval satires on women. A MS volume in the library of Sir Henry Savile in the 16th century contained three of these books (cf. Trans. Bibliog. Soc., IX, 188, No. 152). The Valerie mentioned is the Epistola Valerii ad Rufinum, by Walter Map. For Theofraste, see note on l. 221. Material from the book is used also in ll. 235, 257, 271, 282, 285, 293, 303. St. Jerome's treatise Adversus Jovinianum has already been discussed. Tertulian (Tertulan, l. 676) was perhaps represented by one or more of the treatises De Exhortatione Castitatis, De Monogamia, and De Pudicitia. Crisippus is not known as an author. Chaucer probably found his name in the treatise of Jerome. Trotula was a famous woman, associated with the great medical school of Salerno. For a discussion of her and her name (cf. Dame Troi) see Hamilton in MPh, IV, 377ff. The love letters of Eloisa (Helowys) to Abelard were famous in both mediaeval and modern times. She gives many reasons for refusing to marry Abelard. Ovid's De Arte Amandi was the source of much mediaeval writing about love.

692-96. The Aesopic fable of the sculptor and the lion is well known. In the Spectator No. 11, Steele tells it of a painter and a lion, and represents the lion as saying: "We lions are none of us painters, else we could show you a hundred men killed by lions for one lion killed by man."

696. the mark of Adam; all in his likeness; cf. V, 880.

697-705. The children of Mercury and Venus are those born under the domination of these planets. The characteristics of Mercury and Venus are opposite (ll. 691-700), and therefore, according to astrology, each has its casus, or fall, in the sign in which the other has its exaltation. Thus Virgo is the fall of Venus and the exaltation of Mercury; and Pisces is the fall of Mercury and the exaltation of Venus. A planet in its fall indicates misfortune. In its exaltation it has special power.

In the margin are two glosses from Almansor, explaining fall and exaltation, and giving the attributes of Venus and Mercury.

713. sire. Sire and dame (l. 311) were sometimes used colloquially in early English for the husband and wife, as papa and mamma are today in some classes of society.

737. The distortion of Clytemnestra recalls the similar distortion of Hypermetra into Ypermystra in II, 75. Such odd spellings were not uncommon in the Middle Ages. Even Boccaccio's learned De Genealogia Deorum has Hypemestra.

741. Amphiorax, 'Amphiarus'; Chaucer apparently pronounced the name as if spelled Amphioras, x representing an s sound in a number of words taken over in French spelling, as Ceyx (for Ceys), Brixseyde. All the classical allusions here are taken over from Jerome Against Jovinian, but Chaucer had also read the story of Eriphyle's betrayal of her husband Amphiarus for a golden necklace in the Thebaid of Statius, though he follows Jerome in calling it a brooch (ouche, monile).

747. Lyvia. Editors print Lyma; but ui, ni, iu, in, m are usually indistinguishable in the MSS; cf. Jenkinson, The Later Court Hands in England, p. 36. Chaucer's source may have been Valerie (l. 671), but he seems to have had fuller information than is given there. Skeat points out that the stories of Livia and Lucia are retold by Ben Jonson, Sejanus, act II, sc. 1, and Tennyson, Lucretius.

757. This story was told in ancient and mediaeval times of many persons, but no version of it is known which mentions Latumys. The earliest appearance of it is in Cicero's De Oratore, but Chaucer is more likely to have got it from some mediaeval source — probably from Walter Map's Valerius.

775. From Ecclesiasticus, xxv, 16: "I had rather dwell with a lion and a dragon than to keep house with a wicked woman"; cf. Proverbs, xxi, 19.

778ff. Cf. Proverbs, xxi, 9, 10.

782f. From Jerome, who correctly ascribes it to Herodotus.

784. Cf. Proverbs, xi, 22.

847. Sidyngborne, 'Sittingbourne'; about forty miles from London, and ten miles beyond Rochester, which is mentioned in VII, 3116.

THE WYVES TALE OF BATHE (857-1264)

The Tale of the Wife of Bath illustrates the woman's desire for domination, or sovereignty, which was the basis of her conflicts with her husbands. According to Kittredge, this is the first of a group of tales organized by Chaucer into a definite discussion of the problem whether in marriage the husband or the wife should rule. The Wife of Bath maintains that wives should rule their husbands. The Clerk of Oxenford replies with a story in favor of the submission of wives. The theme is continued by the Merchant, and after an interval of relief furnished by SqT, which deals, not with marriage, but with love, is brought to a conclusion by the Franklin, whose tale illustrates the view that happiness in marriage depends upon love and gentillesse on both sides; cf. especially V, 764-78, 791-98, 803-05. Kittredge's theory has awakened the liveliest interest. The chief contributions to the discussion are: Kittredge, "Chaucer's discussion of Marriage," MPb, IX, 457ff.; Lawrence, "The Marriage Group in the Canterbury Tales," MPb, XI, 247ff.; Tupper, "The Quarrels of the Canterbury Pilgrims" JEGP, XIV, 256ff.; Kenyon, "Further Notes on the Marriage Group," JEGP, XV, 282ff.; Hinckley, "The Debate on Marriage," PMLA, XXXII, 292ff.

WBT was a favorite tale, and has been often told. For a full discussion of the sources and all versions of it see especially G. H. Maynadier, The Wife of Bath's Tale: Its Sources and Analogues, London, 1901.

868. The number of friars in England in the fourteenth century was a subject of common complaint by the satirists, who speak of them as "many thousand" and "without number."

876. Persons in religious orders were as a rule obliged to recite the divine office in the church, but secular priests and friars, both of whom were expected to spend much of their time among the people, were allowed to recite the service as they walked.

880. incubus; according to mediaeval superstition an incubus was an evil spirit who assaulted women as they slept. A similar spirit supposed to assault men was called succubus. Of such intercourse demon children were supposed to be born.

881. Of fifty-two MSS that have this line, thirty-two — representing all lines of descent — have but dishonour; *Ha*⁴ has but doon hem dishonour; *Ra*² has but honour. Thirteen MSS — *Ad*¹, *Bo*¹, Ds, *En*¹, *En*², He, *Ma*¹, Nl, Si, *Tc*¹, Gl, *Ra*³, and Ps — have no dishonour; Cn and Gg have none (or non) d. The closely related *Cx*¹, *Cx*², *Tc*² have ne . . . ony d. Chaucer's ironical humor is said to favor the reading non or no. Several scholars have defended the reading but, which is best supported by MS authority. Brusendorff's argument (pp. 475f.) that ne . . . but means the same as ne . . . non seems unsound. It seems possible, however, to retain the MS reading if one supposes a decided rhetorical pause before but.

884. ryver, not 'river,' but 'riviere,' that is, 'hawking for waterfowl.' Cf. note on VII, 1927.

885. he; so El, Dd, Hg and nineteen other MSS. Most editors adopt she, the reading of thirty-two other MSS. But it seems more necessary to say that he was alone than that she was.

887. maugree hir heed, 'in spite of her head,' that is, 'despite all she could do,' a colloquial idiom.

940f. The context seems decisive in favor of interpreting this to mean 'if any one scratches us on a sore place, we will kick,' because he tells us the unpleasant truth.

949. rake-stele, 'rake handle'; stele is from OE stela meaning 'a stick,' and is not the same word as steel from OE style.

952. Ovid's version of the Midas story is not quite as Chaucer gives it; see Met, xi, 174-93. He attributes the betrayal of the secret to Midas's barber, not to his wife.

1021. pistel, 'epistle,' here used loosely for a brief communication.

1109-76. Such views on gentillesse were fairly common. They may be found in Boethius, Jehan de Meun, Dante, Gower, and numerous other writers. On the whole matter cf. Lowes "Chaucer and Dante's Convivio," MPb, XIII, 19-33. On gentility, the equality of men, etc., cf. also J. Falk "La Démocratie dans l'Épopée française," in Mélanges de Phil. Romane dédiés à Carl Wablund.

1113. Looke who; not exclamatory but an indefinite relative, 'whoever'; cf. Cook, MLN, XXXI, 442, and note on III, 551.

1126. sentence: 'thought,' 'theme.'

1142. lye, 'blaze.'

1159f. Brusendorff's idea (p. 475) that these lines run contrary to the context, and require but to be taken in the sense of noon rests on a failure to follow the course of the thought. Chaucer is contrasting the conventional, false idea of gentillesse with the true.

1168. During a great part of the Middle Ages the prose works of the Roman philosopher Seneca were not easily accessible. Roger Bacon tells us that he had tried for twenty years before he succeeded in obtaining a copy of Seneca. Nevertheless Seneca was freely quoted at secondhand, and there were several treatises not of his authorship which went under his name. On the general subject cf. Harry Morgan Ayres, "Chaucer and Seneca," Rom Rev, X, 1-15.

1179. wilful poverté, 'voluntary poverty.' From the middle of the thirteenth century to the end of the fifteenth the question whether true followers of Christ ought to renounce worldly possessions and live in voluntary poverty was constantly under discussion. St. Francis had founded the Franciscan Order on this principle, but the next minister general, Brother Elias, relaxed the rule and a long controversy arose which ended in the division of the Franciscans into two great branches, the Conventuals following a mitigated rule and the Observantines maintaining the original rigor of the Order. In fourteenth century England the controversy was continued by the reformers Richard Fitzralph and Wyclif and by PP.

1183. A translation of the Senecan sentence: "Honesta res est laeta paupertas." The ideas in ll. 1184-90 are from the same source.

1191. it syngeth; most of the MSS curiously distort this line. Most of them have "verray poverté is synne proprely." Dd has the same words in a different order. El and Gg have the correct reading, which is that adopted in the text.

1192. Juvenal's line:

Cantabit vacuus coram latrone viator was proverbial in the Middle Ages. Wyclif (Works, ed. Arnold, II, 364) says "For it is said comounly, that a wey-goer, whan he is voide, singith sure bi the theef."

1195ff. The passage is based upon sayings attributed to an unknown philosopher called Secundus, the Latin original of which is quoted in the margin of the MS: "Secundus philosophus: Paupertas est odibile bonum, sanitatis mater, curarum remocio, sapientie reparatrix, possessio sine calumpnia"; cf. note on VII, 4353f. These sayings were very popular in the Middle Ages. They first appear in a fabulous report of a dialogue between the emperor Adrian and the philosopher (Vincent of Beauvais, Speculum Historiale, x, 71).

1203. Spectacles were not uncommon after the 13th century. The reference here is not to a perspective glass for distant vision; Roger Bacon's declaration that lenses could be arranged so as to enable one to see things at great distances is interesting, but does not bear upon this passage.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE FRERES TALE (1265-98)

The quarrel between the Summoner and the Friar which broke out during the course of the WBT appears to have been one of long standing. They seem both to have come from the North Country, specifically from that part of Yorkshire called Holderness. The principal town of the district was Beverley, where there was a convent of Franciscan friars, who at this time were engaged in collecting money for making repairs, as the Friar is represented as doing in SmT. For the jurisdictional quarrel which at this time attracted special attention to Beverley, and for the general background of the tales of the Friar and Summoner, see Manly, New Light, pp. 102-22 and Kuhl, MPb, XI, 335ff.

1267. honestee; not 'honesty,' but 'good manners,' 'decorum.'

1272. scole matere: obviously a jest. The subject of WBT was not one commonly discussed in schools, though there of course had been much ecclesiastical discussion of celibacy and marriage, singular or plural.

1276. auctoritees. As Skeat points out, this is a direct reference to l. 1208 above, and perhaps also to l. 1; see also the note on l. 44.

1295-96. Nearly all the MSS have these lines at this place. Recent editors have followed Ha⁴ in placing them between ll. 1308 and 1309; but they break the connection there, whereas they fit here without difficulty.

THE FRERES TALE (1299-1664)

1301. my contree, Holderness; cf. note on ll. 1265-98 and Intro. pp. 70-74.

1302. erchedekene, an archdeacon was an administrative and disciplinary officer of a diocese or a district of a large diocese. To his court were summoned all ecclesiastics who were accused of crimes and all laymen who were accused of violations of ecclesiastical law. In ll. 1304-16 the Friar gives a pretty comprehensive list of the offences of which the archdeacon's court took notice.

1308-09. See note on ll. 1295-96.

1311. syngen: slang; cf. l. 1316.

1313. persone: 'parson.'

1314. "No fine could save the accused from punishment" (Skeat). But it seems rather to mean: 'no money penalty, however small, could escape the archdeacon.'

1317. Cf. PP, C, xi, 92:

Dobest bere sholde the bisshopes croce,
And halye with the hoked ende ille men to goode,
And with the pyk putte adoune preuaricatores legis.

1322. A slyer boye, colloquial.

1323. espaille, a collective noun meaning 'a body of spies,' as poraille (I, 247) means 'the poor' collectively.

1325-26. The use of 'stool-pigeons' is ancient.

1329-30. Friars were not subject to the jurisdiction of the bishops, but only to that of the general of the order and the pope.

1332. Peter I, a common exclamation; cf. especially VIII, 665. styves. 'The stews' derived their name from French estuve, 'a hot bath'; though they were throughout the Middle Ages associated with houses of assignation and ill fame, they were not under ecclesiastical jurisdiction but directly under royal control.

1334. Cf. note on II, 896.

1343. approwours, 'agents,' 'men who looked after his profits,' from OF prou, n. 'profit.'

1347. Cristes curs, 'excommunication'; cf. I, 655ff.

1349. atte nale, ME at then ale, OE æt þām ale. The n has been transferred, as in the vulgar a napple for an apple. The reverse of this process has given us a newt from an eft and an apron from a naperon.

1356. These were probably priests, as Sir was the usual term applied to the secular clergy; cf. note on VII, 4000.

1364. hire. Editors generally adopt thee from Pw and other MSS. But the man has already been 'piled,' cf. 1362 and 1365 (as in this cas).

1367. briberyes: 'robberies' or 'thefts,' cf. OED.

1369. dogge for the bowe: 'a dog trained to accompany an archer and to follow a hurt deer'; cf. IV, 2014, and the beautiful panegyric on the intelligence and moral character of hunting dogs in Baillie-Grohman (ch. xii, pp. 75-84).

1373. fruyt of al his rente, 'the substance of all his income'; cf. l. 1451.

1377. Twenty-seven manuscripts including *Ha*⁴ read Rood for; Gg, Ps read Wente for; Gl, Nl, *Ra*³, *Tc*¹ read Redy for; twenty-one manuscripts including El and Hg have simple For — all these omit And in l. 1379.

Ribibe, like rebekke (III, 1573) is a slang term for 'an old woman.' Both words properly mean 'a kind of fiddle.' No doubt this use of rebekke was influenced by the mention of Rebecca in the marriage service, as Skeat suggested; but he was probably wrong in rejecting Hallowell's suggestion of a pun between vetula, 'an old woman,' and vitula, vidula, the etymon of the word viol.

1380ff. Cf. the description of the Yeoman in I, 101-17.

1413. north contree; an ambiguous term meaning either 'North England' or 'the infernal regions.' Satan was commonly said in the Middle Ages to have his habitation in the North. The association of evil with the North seems to come rather from the Bible than, as Skeat suggests, from Norse mythology; cf. the numerous passages about the North in the Old Testament, which may be found by consulting any concordance. The mediaeval view is expressed in the current proverb: "All evil from the North," "Ab Aquilone omne malum," and in Lucifer's declaration, "I will place my throne in the North," "Ponam sedem meum in Aquilone."

1436. A proverbial expression still current.

1451. See note on I, 256, and cf. III, 1373.

1459. It was known that devils could assume any shape desired; therefore the question whether they had any definite form of their own was a subject for subtle theological discussion.

1463. yow, 'to you.'

1502f. The legend of St. Dunstan's control of the Devil has not been discovered. Various instances are related in which the apostles made use of devils.

1510. Phitonissa, another spelling of 'Pythonissa,' the name given in the Vulgate text of I Chron. x, 13 to the Witch of Endor. The incident referred to is that related in I Sam. xxviii, 8-25. The fiend here suggests that God sent a devil in the form of Samuel to prophesy the doom of Saul.

1519f. Referring to the description of the underworld in Vergil's Aeneid, vi, 268ff., and Dante's Inferno. Rede in a chayer means 'deliver a formal lecture.'

1564. Seint Loy. See the note on I, 120, but Saint Loy was also the patron saint of horseshoers, blacksmiths, and carters. The carter's reasons for invoking the saint were very different from those of the Prioress. A fine fourteenth century statue on Or San Michele, in Florence, represents St. Loy as a blacksmith.

1570. According to ancient custom a landlord could claim the use of a tenant's horses and carts without payment, and the tenant could get a release only by paying carriage. The Devil jests about his failure to get any money from giving up his claim to the carter's horses.

1579f. Probably a slight joke at the canniness of the men of the North.

1582. virytrate; the term trot or trat is often applied to an old woman. Virytrate may be either provincial or slang. It is not known to occur elsewhere.

1602. com of, colloquial, like come on.

1613. St. Anne was the mother of the Virgin Mary. There seems no particular reason why the summoner should swear by her rather than any other saint.

1618. lixt: 'liest,' perhaps pronounced list.

1626. Mabely. On the name, cf. "Item, Mabilia Lance quondam tenuit duo mesnagia," (Oxf. Hist. Soc. Collectanea, IV, 76).

1630. stot, properly 'a stallion' or 'a bullock,' but here merely a term of abuse. The contrast between the manners of the summoner and those of the Devil is delightful.

1635. by right, because the old woman had wished them to the Devil in sincerity and had not repented as the carter had done.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE SOMONOURS TALE (1665-1708)

The Summoner is the most disreputable member of the Canterbury group; cf. I, 623ff. and notes. Both his prologue and his tale are too vulgar to be given in full, but the picture of the Friar's visit is too famous to be omitted.

THE SOMONOURS TALE (1709-2294)

1722. possessioners, 'monks' and 'the beneficed clergy'; between whom and the friars there were perpetual jealousies.

1724f. trentals, offices of thirty masses for the benefit of souls in Purgatory. The masses were usually sung on thirty consecutive days; the Friar argues that it is better to sing them all on the same day and deliver the soul at once.

1730f. Pictures of the torments of hell involving the use of hooks, awls, and boiling, baking, and broiling are common in mediaeval literature and art. One of the most distressing is that reproduced from a MS in Sharpe's Dissertation on The Coventry Mysteries, where the torturing fiends are half human and half animal in form. Similar figures appear among the decorations of mediaeval churches and cathedrals.

1734. qui cum patre, the beginning of the formula with which prayers and sermons were ended — "who with the Father and the Holy Spirit lives and reigns forever and ever." Here, as often, it is used as a formula of leave-taking.

1740. His felawe, in accordance with the rules of the order, the friars went in pairs.

1741. tables, 'writing tablets.' Tables were made of leaves of ivory or wood spread with wax, and the writing was done with a pointel, or stylus, of bone, silver, or some other metal.

1747. A Goddes kechyl. Tyrwhitt said that goddes here and in l. 1749 translates the French "expression de Dieu, meaning 'sent from God.'" This popular idiom, usually applied to something of small value, is still current.

1755. hostes man. Skeat explains this as 'servant to the guests at the convent,' and quotes Wyclif to show that the man who carried the bag for the friars was commonly nicknamed after Judas Iscariot: "Thei leden with hem a Scarioth . . . to robbe pore men bi beggyng."

1770. Deus hic, 'God be here,' the ordinary formula of benediction on entering a house.

1778. was go walked, 'gone on a walk': go is past participle; walked is the same construction as blakeberyed in VI, 406.

1792. glose, 'gloss,' 'interpretation.' Ancient Bibles gave the text with a "voluminous paraphrase and comment called Glossa Ordinaria. Secular texts — Vergil's Aeneid and many standard treatises on various subjects — were also provided with glosses."

1804. The friar's greeting of the goodwife was the usual mode of salutation and has no sinister implications.

1810. Ye, 'yea.'

1812. Graunt mercy, 'much thanks,' a French expression colloquially pronounced 'grammercy.'

1817. grope, the usual technical term for 'examination at confession.'

1832. je vous dy, 'I tell you.' This does not imply any special knowledge of French on the part of the friar. Such expressions were common enough in fourteenth century England. But he seems fond of them; cf. l. 1838.

1834. defended, 'forbade.'

[FRAGMENT IV (FURNIVALL'S GROUP E)]

THE CLERKES PROLOGE

The story of Griselda is one of the most famous in mediaeval and modern literature. The earliest known version of it is that forming the tenth novel of the tenth day of Boccaccio's Decamerone. Ultimately, as D. D. Griffith has shown in an unpublished Chicago dissertation, it is derived from two types of folk tales — parts I-V from a Cupid and Psyche tale, part VI from a tale like Laila Frêne. In Archivum Romanum, VIII, 281-93, Eduard Castle attempts to show that the four Griselda Märchen published by A. Köhler in Gosche's Archiv, I, 409-27 (1870), were not derived from Boccaccio, but represent earlier versions. He is probably right in this, but he does not seem to understand the folktale relationship.

Petrarch for some reason did not read Boccaccio's version for many years, but was then so delighted with it that he translated it into Latin, in order to make it accessible, not merely to Italians, but to the whole world of educated men. This Latin version Petrarch sent to Boccaccio in the spring of 1373, in a letter explaining his reasons for making the translation, and incidentally remarking that he had heard a version of the story many years before. Chaucer's version is based, not upon Boccaccio's Italian, but upon Petrarch's Latin version, or possibly some French translation of it. Petrarch's letter to Boccaccio furnished some of the suggestions for the Clerk's Prologue. Heigh style, l. 18, was very probably suggested by the words alio stilo (misread or miswritten alto stilo; see note on ll. 1142-62) in Petrarch's letter; cf. Hendrickson in MPb, IV, 188-92.

The question whether Chaucer visited Petrarch at Padua has been much discussed. In l. 27 Petrarch is represented as living at Padua. As he usually lived at Arquà but was in Padua during the time of Chaucer's first visit to Italy in the spring of 1373, the statement of l. 27 is thought to support the view that Chaucer visited him there, but the statement of l. 27 is sufficiently accounted for by a passage toward the end of the letter, in which Petrarch tells of the effect of the story upon a Paduan who was a common friend of theirs: "Legit eam primum communis amicus Patauinus uir altissimi ingenij, multiplicisque notitiae, et cum epistolae medium uix transisset subito fletu praeuentus substitit."

It seems also worth suggesting that Chaucer's interest in Alceste may very well have been awakened by a passage near the end of Petrarch's letter. One of Petrarch's friends having doubted the possibility of such patience as was shown by Griselda, Petrarch declares that we should not set the limits of possibility by our own capacities, and inquires, "Who would not believe the stories of Portia, Hipsicratea, Alceste, and others like them to be feigned fables, whereas they are true stories?" "Quis uel Portiam, uel Hipsicrateam, uel Alcestim et harum similes non fabulas fictas putet? Atque historiae uerae sunt."

16. On Chaucer's knowledge of rhetorical theory and its influence upon his early writings, see Manly, Rhet.

31. The name of Petrarch's father was Petracco, which the poet changed, perhaps for literary reasons, to Petrarca. In French references he is often called Petrac, or the like; cf. Hamilton, MLN, XXIII, 171f., and Tatlock, p. 159.

33. It is commonly supposed that Chaucer is here speaking of Petrarch's Italian verses, but it is practically certain that he refers rather to his poems in Latin. It was upon these that Petrarch prided himself, and it was a portion of his Latin epic Africa which obtained for him the coronation as "laureat poete." Chaucer may have known of Petrarch as a writer of Italian poetry, but there is no clear evidence that he did. When in translating one of Petrarch's sonnets in TC (i, 394ff.) he speaks of the author as Lollus, it seems possible that he really did not know that he was translating from Petrarch.

34. Lynyan. Giovanni di Lignano was professor of canon law at Bologna in 1363, and died there in 1381. His epitaph recites his eminence in civil and canon law and calls him another Aristotle, Hippocrates, and Ptolemy. Chaucer's singling him out for mention seems to indicate some special interest in him. This may have been because he met him on one of his visits to Italy or when Lignano visited England as papal legate, or because of their common interest in science and philosophy. No doubt many of Chaucer's readers would remember Lignano's visit to England. Perhaps he was liked and honored. It is an interesting fact, the significance of which has not yet been worked out, that MSS of several of Lignano's writings seem to have been known in England in the fourteenth century. For further information about Lignano's fame, see Cook, Rom Rev, VIII, 353-82.

41. In the margin El quotes the passage from Petrarch's Latin that Chaucer translates in ll. 45-51. Many quotations from Petrarch's letter are in the margins of the MSS. I shall not give them, unless it seems important to do so.

44ff. The scene of the story is the district of Saluzzo, about thirty miles south of Turin. When Chaucer visited Genoa and Florence in 1373, he may have passed through this district. One of his companions, Jacopo de Provano, came from Carignano, a village half way between Turin and Saluzzo. Boccaccio's version of the story was certainly in circulation then.

Chaucer gives the names of the places their French forms, not their Italian, or, with the exception of Vesulus, their Latin. Either it was his habit to use French forms of foreign names or he really worked, not from Petrarch's Latin, but from a French version of it. Cook argues that Chaucer used a French version (Rom Rev, VIII, 210-22).

THE CLERKES TALE

57. In the margin is quoted from Petrarch:

Inter cetera ad radicem Vesuli terra saluciarum vicis et castellis.

82. leet he slyde, colloquial, if not slang.

88. that. This word goes with he of the next line to form a relative.

106. us lyketh yow. We expect ye for yow, but it is possible that Chaucer treats yow as if it were the object of the impersonal us lyketh, in spite of the grammatical difficulty involved.

197. From Petrarch is quoted:

fruit haut procul a palacio, etcetera.

210. "Chaucer calls her Grisildis and Grisilde; Petrarch Grisildis (except once Griselda); Boccaccio Griselda. The French play of 1390 has the same forms as Chaucer" (Hinckley).

212. oon the faireste under sonne; idiomatic, cf. Kellner, Hist. Out. Engl. Syntax, p. 111f. (§ 176).

215-17. A Chaucerian addition.

253. hath doon make, 'has caused (someone) to make.' In the otherworld story which lies at the basis of this, the heroine's new clothes were of course supernaturally provided. This is one of the necessary rationalizations.

266. as fer as last Ytaille. Hinckley points out that "this looks like a Latinism, equivalent to usque ad ultimam Italian" but that "some of the scribes understood last to be a verb meaning 'extends,' 'reaches.'" I understand it as the scribes did.

276. The entrance to the otherworld in folk tales is usually through a spring or lake. The well mentioned here is apparently a trace of the ancient tale.

350. avyse, 'consider the matter'; compare the regular formula, le roy s'avisera, for expressing the royal refusal to a proposed measure.

403. but dorste han swore: 'durst have sworn the contrary,' cf. note on I, 1089.

409. thewes, 'mental or moral qualities.'

414. The word order is awkward, probably for the sake of the rhyme.

422. Hendrickson, MPb, IV, 191, points out that Petrarch's Latin is corrupt in the printed texts and in the version quoted in the MSS, and suggests that Chaucer may have had before him a text showing the same error, honestatis for honestatus. The gloss reads:

Sic Walterus humili quidem set insigni ac prospero matrimonio honestatis summa dei in pace, etcetera.

425-41. The original of these lines is quoted in the margin.

429. humblenesse. MSS Cp and La have homlynesse, which is nearer to domestica of the Latin text. feet, Fr. fait, 'acts.'

444. knave; El has man here and in ll. 447 and 612; cf. note on II, 715.

449-55. The gloss quotes the original, from Petrarch, here and opposite ll. 499, 540, 603, 610, 624f., 664f., and 722.

459-62. A Chaucerian addition. In several MSS l. 460 precedes l. 459.

483ff. Skeat regards Walter's use of thee and thy as "a slight but significant sign of insult, offered under pretence of reporting the opinion of others." Usually Walter addresses his wife with the more formal and courteous ye, but in l. 508 the original reading seems to be thee, which the scribes of five MSS corrected to yee, as not agreeing with yow of l. 506.

516. A mile way is twenty minutes, a furlong way two and a half; cf. note on II, 557.

550. moste, 'might.'

590. El has Pavik (not Pauik); many MSS read Panik. Petrarch seems to have Panicio and Boccaccio Panago. No such title is known.

625. sikly berth, 'dislikes,' a Latinism translating aegre ferre (Hinckley).

704. Chaucer was not thinking here of bear-baiting. That was not the only purpose for which stakes were used.

736. In the Middle Ages, especially among the upper classes, early marriages were the rule. Blanche of Lancaster married John of Gaunt at twelve, and the young Philippa, daughter of Chaucer's first patron, was a mere infant when she was betrothed to Edmund Mortimer, earl of March. The early marriage of the Wife of Bath (III, 4-6) is a different story.

738. message, probably plural, as translating the Latin nuncios; cf. hem, l. 739.

834. Ther: 'where.'

852-61. A Chaucerian addition.

867f. your . . . your. MS authority is about equally divided between your and my. It seems probable that Chaucer wrote your, which was changed to my by some of the scribes; cf. l. 869. The Latin supports the reading your.

880-82. A Chaucerian addition.

903. a lyves creature, 'creature of life,' 'living being.'

911ff. The preservation of the old clothing is a feature of the original folktale.

915. she. The MSS that have my in 867f. have he here. But the reading she seems to be supported by the Latin.

916. El has and she more, and in l. 917 than at hir — probably scribal attempts to improve the lines.

935ff. Most clerkes were celibates, and mediaeval satire on women was very severe. The sentiments of ll. 936-38 are characteristic Chaucerian additions.

960ff. The requirement that the rejected wife shall assist in preparing for the wedding of the new wife is a common feature of folktales of the Lai le Frêne type.

970. Some of the MSS read feynyng, but feyntyng means 'failing.'

Opposite ll. 995-1001, the MSS have Auctor, but l. 1002 shows that they are not the author's comment.

999. jane, a small Genoese coin, worth $\frac{1}{2}d.$; cf. VII, 1925.

1037-43. The original for the stanza is quoted as a gloss:

Vnum bona fide precor ac moneo ne hanc illis aculeis agites quibus alteram agitasti namque et iunior et delicacius nutrita est pati quantum ego vt reor [ego auguror] non ualeret.

1039. mo: plural, though the reference is only to herself. The vagueness of the expression has been rightly praised for its delicacy; cf. alteram, in the gloss last quoted.

1054. Hinckley puts a period after 1054 and a comma after 1055. It seems better to construe assayed both with have (l. 1053) and with was (l. 1054). Instances of double functioning are not uncommon in informal syntax.

1079-1106. A Chaucerian addition.

1098. Cf. note on I, 1913.

1142-62. The moral of the tale is given by Petrarch in a passage much of which is quoted in the margin of several MSS. Chaucer's lines paraphrase this very accurately:

Hanc historiam stilo nunc alto retexere visum fuit, non tam ideo vt matronas nostri temporis ad imitandam huius vxoris pacienciam, que inimitabilis videtur, quam vt legentes ad imitandam saltem femine constanciam excitarent. Vt que [quod] hec viro suo prestitit, hoc prestare deo nostro audeant, qui licet, vt Iacobus ait apostolus, Intemptator sit malorum et ipse neminem temptat; probat tamen et sepe nos multis ac grauibz flagellis exerceri sinit, non vt animum nostrum sciat, quem sciuit antequam crearemur, etcetera.

Petrarch tells Boccaccio that some of his friends believed in the truth of the Griselda story, and others frankly declared it impossible. But no story of its time surpassed it in popularity. The wise old citizen of Paris who wrote that delightful book, the Ménagier de Paris, to train his fifteen-year-old wife, at the very time when Chaucer was writing the Canterbury Tales, translates the story for her benefit and adds some characteristic comments:

And I, who have put this here only to teach you, have not done so to make it apply to you, nor because I want from you such obedience, for I am not worthy of it — neither am I a marquis, nor did I take you as a shepherdess — nor am I so foolish, so arrogant, nor so youthful in sense that I do not know it would be most unbecoming for me to make such demands of you or similar trials. God keep me from testing you in this way or in others, under color of false pretences. I shall not test you in any way; for suffices me the proof I have made of the good name of your ancestors and of yourself, which I know and see with my own eyes and recognize by my own experiences. And, pardon me, but in my opinion, the story tells of too much cruelty — beyond reason. And I do not believe it ever happened; but the story is such that I dare not correct or change it, for one wiser than I compiled it and gave it its name. And I wish that since others have seen it, you also should see it and be able to talk about it like the others. (Ed. Pichon, I, 124ff.)

1163-1212. Skeat thought that Chaucer's tale originally ended with l. 1162, and that ll. 1163-1212 were a later addition. He regarded ll. 1177-1212 as unsuited to the character of the Clerk of Oxenford. Some scholars agree with him; but cf. Kittredge's brilliant defense of the dramatic propriety of the Clerk's envoy (pp. 194-200). The MSS agree in heading ll. 1177-1212 with Lenvoy de Chaucer, but the Merchant's repetition of the words from l. 1212 indicates that the envoy was an integral part of the tale, belonging to the Clerk.

1170-76. In sixteen MSS this stanza is omitted and the fourth stanza of the Envoy (ll. 1195-1200) stands last. All but three of these MSS — Ld³, To, Tc² — belong to Class IIc.

1177ff. A masterpiece of versification. It would be difficult to find anywhere a more remarkable tour de force of rhyming. Its only equals for several centuries were two other poems by Chaucer.

1188. Chichivache, 'the lean cow.' "The allusion is to an old fable of French origin which describes a monstrous cow named Chiche Vache as feeding entirely upon patient wives and being very lean in consequence of the scarcity of her diet. A later form of the fable adds a second beast named Bicorné (two-horned), who, by adopting the wiser course of feeding upon patient husbands, was always fat and in good case" (Skeat). See Lydgate's poem on "Bycorne and Chichevache," Minor Poems of Dan John Lydgate, pp. 129ff. (Percy Society, vol. 2).

1190. countretaille. The only known meaning of this word is 'counter-tail'; here it is used figuratively for 'echo.'

1204. aventaille, a wide strip of chain-mail attached to or forming part of the coiffe and protecting the neck and upper breast; cf. Hamilton in MPh, III, 541-46.

THE WORDES OF THE HOOST

1213*-19.* Many scholars regard this stanza as part or a link originally designed to follow l. 1169, and join CkT to the next tale. Later, they think, Chaucer added ll. 1177-1212 (headed Envoy de Chaucer in many MSS) and the introductory lines, 1163-1176, and joined them to MrT by ll. 1213-44, cancelling this stanza and using some of its lines in the link following Mel (VII, 3079-86); but, by oversight or misunderstanding, the cancelled lines were copied into the ancestor of one large group of MSS. This seems very probable; the Mel-Mk link contains other lines also that seem to have been originally written for a different purpose (cf. p. 646, below). Brusendorff (p. 76) thinks the Host stanza (ll. 1213*-19*) should be retained in the text as belonging to Chaucer's final plan.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE MARCHANTES TALE (1213-44)

The Merchant has been profoundly affected by the contrast between Griselda and his newly married wife. He is however unwilling to tell his "own sore" but gladly obliges the company with a tale of an old man who married a young wife, in spite of the warning of his friends, and was deceived and tricked by her.

THE MARCHANTES TALE (1245-2418)

The Tale itself can hardly have been originally composed with the Merchant in mind as the narrator. In the first place, there are several lines which indicate that the narrator belonged to the clergy (ll. 1251, 1322, 1384, 1390 and 2055). In the second place, the detached tone of quiet irony is entirely unsuited to the Merchant and contrary to the tone of his Prologue; cf. especially ll. 1267-1390.

No exact original of MrT is known, but several similar stories have been discovered and printed (See Originals and Analogues, Chaucer Society).

THE MERCHANT'S END-LINK (2419-40)

In several MSS these lines are indicated as part of the Prologue to the Squire's Tale, and are connected with it by the lines now commonly designated as V, 1-8. Other MSS have the same passages but use them as a prologue to FkT, inserting the name of the Franklin in l. 1. See the discussion on the order of the groups, Introd. pp. 84-85.

[FRAGMENT V (FURNIVALL'S GROUP F)

THE SQUIRE'S HEAD-LINK] (1-8)

In El these lines are part of a continuous passage headed "The Prologue of the Squires Tale," consisting of ll. IV, 2419-40 and V, 1-8. There can be little doubt that this passage stands as Chaucer left it, and that he intended to have SqT follow MrT. Twenty or more MSS, however, place SqT immediately after MLT. For a discussion of the causes of the displacement see above p. 81, and Hammond, pp. 310f., and her article in MPb, III, 163ff.

THE SQUIERES TALE (8-672)

Few if any of the Canterbury tales have aroused so keen an interest among literary men as this unfinished tale of love and Oriental marvels. Among the pleasures of imaginative musing conceived by Milton was to

... call up him who left half-told
The story of Cambuscan bold.

Spenser attempted the difficult feat of writing a continuation of one theme of the tale, and writers and scholars without number have speculated on the untold incidents of it.

The ultimate sources of both the incidents and the setting are undoubtedly Oriental, but research has not yet succeeded in discovering, either among the tales of the East or among their western descendants, the immediate source from which Chaucer derived his inspiration and his materials. Here it may suffice to remark that Jones seems justified in suggesting that "Chaucer was following no one source but working freely, with a knowledge of the Cléomadès and related folk tales, and that the allusions to Oriental customs may have come from varied sources, oral as well as written" (cf. PMLA, XXIII, 557ff.).

9. Sarray, the western capital of the Tartar empire, situated on the Volga, was one of the finest cities of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

10. werreyed Russye. In the thirteenth century the Tartars were so enterprising and successful in war that they threatened to conquer not only Russia, but the whole of eastern Europe.

12. Cambyuskan. In the six-text edition of El, Dr. Furnivall printed Cambynskan, but remarked: "MS more like Cambyuskan all through." His note on Hg indicates that it reads Kambyuskan. Either form seems possible; but the latter preferable, for the name is undoubtedly derived from that of the famous Ghengis Khan, the founder of the Tartar empire, whose name was Latinized as Camius. That Milton spelled the name Cambuscan, and accented it wrongly was due to his use of the 1602 ed. of Chaucer; cf. Magoun, "The Chaucer of Spenser and Milton," MPh, XXV, 129-36. Skeat thinks that although Chaucer took the name of his Tartarian emperor from that of Ghengis Khan, he took the description of him from his grandson Kublai Khan. This would be a natural conclusion if we were sure that Chaucer's information about Tartar history and customs were all derived, as Skeat thinks, from Marco Polo; but other descriptions of Tartary were accessible to Chaucer, and there was no reason why he should stick to historical facts in constructing his picture of the Tartar emperor and his family. Lines 13-27 are indeed not Oriental in origin but merely an assemblage of the traits usually ascribed in mediaeval literature to great kings.

On the general Tartar background cf. Manly, "Marco Polo and the Squire's Tale," PMLA, XI, 349-62, and Lowes, "The Squire's Tale and the Land of Prester John," Wash. Univ. St. I, ii, 3-18.

18. lay, 'religious law or faith,' in this instance that of the Tartar sect. Chaucer perhaps knew little more about the Tartar religion than that it was a heathen cult.

29-33. The names Elpheta and Algarsyf are not known to occur in any earlier tale or history (but cf. Hinckley, Acad., 1908, I, 866). My own view is that Chaucer found the name Elpheta in some list of the principal stars. In Liber Astronomicus, qui dicitur Albion, ascribed to Richard de Wallingford, abbot of St. Albans, c. 1326 (MS Harley 80, f. 51a) it is thirteenth in a list of fifteen. Its position is given as 75° , 2° , $40'$ and 44° , $30'$. Cambalo was perhaps suggested by Kambaluc, the name of a son of Kublai Khan. That Chaucer should use Canacee as the name of his heroine is certainly very curious; perhaps he wished to give it pleasanter associations, see note on II, 11, 77-88.

45. the feeste of his nativitee. Marco Polo gives elaborate descriptions of the birthday festivals of the Tartar emperor and of the magnificent gifts made on these occasions. See the Boke of Ser Marco Polo, bk. ii, ch. 14.

47. The last Idus is the very day of the Ides, i.e. the fifteenth of March. After the yeer seems to mean 'according to the course of the year.' Chaucer's reason for placing the birthday of Cambyuskan on this date is not clear. Certainly he was not following Marco Polo, who places Kublai's birthday in September; and he can hardly have been confused, as Skeat suggests, about New Year's Day, the day of the White Feast, for he states correctly the position of the sun, and he knew that the vernal equinox did not occur on March 15.

48-51. The zodiacal sign Aries is described by all astrologers as hot and dry, therefore colerik. It was one of the two mansions of Mars (the other being Scorpio), and was divided into three "faces" of ten degrees each, the first of which belongs to Mars, the second to the Sun, and the third to Venus. The exaltation of a planet is the position in which it is supposed to exercise the greatest influence. The exaltation of the Sun occurs in the 19° of Aries. On March 15 the Sun would, in Chaucer's day, be in the 4° of Aries. For further details, see Introd. pp. 138ff.

67-71. Chaucer had heard in some way of the strange foods eaten by the Tartars. Skeat thinks his information came from Marco Polo, but rumors concerning the strange things eaten in Tartary were as common then as those concerning Chinese foods are now.

73. for it is pryme: yet apparently at least two tales had been told that morning.

81. It was not uncommon in romances for persons to ride into a hall (cf. Gawayne and the Greene Knight). Similar incidents occurred in real life. The surprising thing here is that the steed was a steed of brass. In Chaucer's tale there are four magical gifts, the horse, the mirror, the ring, and the sword. In the romance of Cléomadès three kings who are suitors for the three daughters of the king of Sardinia offer three gifts: a man of gold, who sounded a golden trumpet when danger approached; a hen with six chickens, all of gold and able to walk and sing; and a horse of ebony that traveled through the air with the turning of a pin.

95. Gawayn, formerly the most famous of the knights of the Round Table. Chaucer seems to think of him as well as of King Arthur as still living in the land of Faerye.

129ff. The term constellation here refers, not to one of the permanent arrangements of the fixed stars, commonly called constellations, but to the temporary arrangements of the planets produced by their motions and the motions of the spheres. In order to perform so wonderful an operation as the construction of the horse of brass it was necessary to choose very favorable astrological conditions, which were watched for (waited) with great care. Besides taking this advantage of "magic naturel" the makers of the horse seem to have made use also of the seals and bonds belonging to astrological practice. Accounts of these are given in many of the treatises on magic; cf. Thorndike, op. cit., II, 858, et passim.

All the magic gifts are of the Oriental type and are matched in tales of India and Arabia.

160-165. Weapons which produce wounds that can be healed only by the weapon itself appear in poetry and folk lore from the remotest times. The principle is the same as that involved in the proverbial: "The hair of the dog is good for its bite."

193. Lombardy was famous for its horses.

195. Poilleys, not 'Polish,' but 'Apulian.'

201. a fairye, a supernatural thing; some MSS have of fairye.

209. the Grekes hors Synon, 'the horse of the Greek Sinon.' The separation of the two words in apposition sometimes produces amusing results in this construction, as: "The erles wif Alein," i.e. 'the wife of Earl Alein'; "themperours moder William," i.e. 'the mother of Emperor William.'

Homer was little known to western Europe in the Middle Ages, and was commonly regarded as giving an unfair account of the siege of Troy. The western nations, many of which claimed descent from the Trojans, preferred versions of the Troy story derived from Dares Phrygius and Dictys Cretensis, two writers who claimed to be eye-witnesses. For a full account of these writers see N. E. Griffin, Dares and Dictys — an Introduction to the Study of Mediaeval Versions of the Story of Troy. That the horse with which Troy was betrayed and captured was made of brass is an idea that Chaucer seems to have derived from the Historia Trojana of Guido delle Colonne, an Italian writer of the thirteenth century, who put into Latin an abbreviated version of the French Roman de Troie of Benoit de Sainte Maure. Both these versions of the Troy story were known to Chaucer and were used by him in TC.

219. jogelours; sleight of hand performers were common in the Middle Ages and were always to be found at great feasts. One of the famous persons Chaucer saw in his vision in HF was such a performer:

Ther saw I Colle tregetour
Upon a table of sicamour
Pleye an uncouth thyng to telle;
I saw him carien a wynd melle
Under a walsh-note shale (walnut-shell).

— HF, 1277-81.

A "tregetour" was regularly attached to the royal household. A gift to "Johanni Tregettour" is recorded in the same exchequer account in which Chaucer was paid for carrying letters from Calais to England in October 1360, though the gift to him may have been to a person of that family name. See Moore, MLN, XXVII, 80; and Royster (St. Ph., XXIII, 380-84), who has shown that there was a famous English "tregetour" named Nicole — familiarly, "Colle" — in Chaucer's time.

231. An allusion to the magic mirror said to have been set up in Rome by Vergil, who was better known in the Middle Ages as a magician than as a poet. For a full account of Vergil the magician see Comparetti, Vergil in the Middle Ages.

232. Alocen and Vitulon, celebrated writers on optics; the former, better known as Alhazen, was the greatest of all Arabic scientists. He was born about 965 at Basra and died at Cairo in 1038. His treatise on optics was translated into Latin by the Polish physicist Witelo (whom Chaucer calls Vitulon) in the second half of the thirteenth century. Alhazen is called the first great discoverer in optics after the time of Ptolemy. He was the originator of the theory that the image of the object passes from the object to the eye instead of being the result of visual force issuing from the eye. See Encyc. Brit. under Alhazen.

233. writen, preterit plural.

234. For prospectives see the note on III, 1203.

238. Thelopus, pronounced 'Telophus.' Telephus, king of Mysia, was wounded by the spear of Achilles and healed by the same spear. Chaucer may have learned the story from Ovid.

250. he Moyses; cf. Introd. § 115. Both Moses and Solomon were celebrated as magicians. According to Peter Comestor's Historia Scholastica, Moses made a ring which produced forgetfulness. The ring of Solomon had such power that it enabled him to subdue demons, as all readers of the Arabian Nights will remember.

254. fern asshen: ashes made by burning ferns.

256. fern, "long time," adverbial; note the rhyming of two words having the same sound but different meanings; cf. note on I, 17-18.

263. the angle meridional covers the portion of the ecliptic thirty degrees east of the south point; i.e. the sun had passed the noon point; see Introd. pp. 141-42.

264-65. the beest roial is the zodiacal sign Leo. Hinckley, following Allen (Star Names and their Meanings), thinks that Aldrian is a plural, referring to the stars Castor and Pollux in one of the forepaws of Leo. He says that Aldira means cubit, and was a name especially appropriate to these two stars, which, being four and a half degrees apart, were used to measure distances in the sky (but see Introd. p. 135). On March 15 in Chaucer's time the Lion began to ascend above the horizon about noon. It would of course continue to ascend for two hours. The time indicated was therefore before two o'clock in the afternoon.

269. chambre of parementz, the Presence Chamber.

272. lusty Venus children deere, 'lovers.'

273. the Fyssh, 'the sign Pisces,' is astrologically the exaltation of the planet Venus; cf. note on l. 48f.

291. spices is the object of hye; cf. § 162.

299. Hg, Cp, Pw, and La have at after that; MSS El, Gg, Dd, and Ha⁴ have the reading given in the text. Skeat and Hinckley adopt the reading of the first group and regard the construction as a Gallicism derived from the French il y a.

316. For the omission of the relative cf. § 125.

340ff. "The horse seems to have disappeared when divested of the bridle by means of which he could be summoned at need" (Hinckley). Jueles included all sorts of precious objects, such as cups, saddles, bridles, spurs, as well as precious stones.

352. The old physiologists supposed that each of the four humours dominated for a part of the day. The Shepherd's Calendar says: "Six houres after midnight bloud hath the mastery, and in the sixe houres afore noon choler reigneth, and six houres after noon raineth melancholy, and six houres afore midnight reigneth the flegmatick."

359. According to the mediaeval theory of dreams those caused by fumes were of no significance; the theory is well expounded by Pertelote the hen, VII, 4111ff.

360. pryme large, apparently the same as fully pryme, i.e. 9 A.M., when the hour of prime was completed.

372. avision; a dream sent as a revelation or a warning; cf. Chanticleer's examples, VII, 4160ff., esp. 4312ff., and on the whole subject see Curry, ch. VIII.

374. maistresse: 'duenna.'

376ff. The construction is confused. Chaucer obviously intends to say: "Her duenna, who was inquisitive, as old women usually are, answered and said."

383. El has an for a before ten. The explanation of an is probably to be found in Hg, which writes "an x or xij" where the name of the numeral letter seems to have taken the place of the numeral.

386. As the sun in Chaucer's day entered the sign of Aries at midday March 12 and traveled one degree a day, it was now March 16.

387. noon hyer was he, i.e. not higher than four degrees; it was therefore only a little after six o'clock.

392. trench, not 'a ditch,' but 'an alley through the trees.'

393. glood, 'glided'; cf. § 56.

401. knotte, like the Latin nodus (Horace, Ars Poetica, 191). We use point for the same idea.

409. for drye; El and Gg have fordryed; Dd has ful drye; the other printed MSS have for drye. Editors have usually printed fordrye and interpreted it as if it were fordryed, i.e. 'completely dried up.' It seems more probable that for drye is an example of the same construction as for olde, I, 1284, and for blak, I, 1286; i.e. it means 'on account of dryness.' Skeat is reminded of the famous Arbre Sec, or dry tree, which figures in the narratives of Marco Polo and Maundeville, but there seems to be no connection between this 'dry tree' and that.

428. faucon peregryn, 'a peregrine falcon,' so called because no one ever finds its nest. It is described by Brunetto Latini as well-bred, bold, and well-mannered. That the bird rescued by Canacee is in reality a human being is clear from the story she tells. It has been pointed out that the love story is in all essential features the same as that told in AA. This fact and a number of similar expressions in the two poems have suggested the view that Chaucer was engaged in writing them at the same time. This is possible; but I should rather think that, after some years, Chaucer may have taken up again a theme of earlier interest. Moreover, the view that similar expressions in two works by the same author necessarily imply that they were written at the same time seems to me psychologically unsound. The same idea or situation may produce similar phrases after a lapse even of many years.

434. Hinckley points out that wel modifies everything, rather than understood.

435. leden, from AS læden, which in turn is derived from latinum. The Latin language was in such general use that its name came to mean language in general. Neither word is restricted to the language of birds.

458. as dooth; cf. § 146.

461. ferde, 'acted,' like our colloquial 'went on.'

467. disese, not 'illness,' but 'distress,' the original meaning of the word.

474. aswowne. Skeat's note seems to indicate that this word is a compound of on and swowne; in reality the noun swoon is derived from this word, which is the past participle geswogen, as Skeat explains in his glossary.

479. Cf. I, 1761, II, 660, IV, 1986, and LGW 503.

480. his similitude, 'his like'; smerte is an adjective.

488. The use of But here is odd. Perhaps it crept in from the next line.

490f. A proverbial expression explained in Cotgrave's Dictionary as: 'To punish a mean person in the presence and to the terror of a great one.' Skeat quotes also Herbert's Jacula Prudentum: "Beat the dog before the lion," and Shakespeare, Othello II, iii, 272. Tatlock, MLN, XXXVIII, 506f., produces other lore.

496. 'As if she would turn to water'; verbs of motion are often omitted after auxiliaries; cf. § 99.

499. That: so EI and Gg; most MSS have Ther. For harde many MSS have ilke.

504. The male falcon is called 'tercel' or 'tercelet' because it is normally one third smaller than the female; cf. PF, 415, etc.

511. in greyn, 'fast color'; originally referring to scarlet dye, which was supposed to be made from a seed, or berry, but in reality is from an insect.

512. hit, contracted form of hideth. The Vergilian warning, "A snake is hiding in the grass" (Latet anguis in herba, Ecl., iii, 93), had become a common proverb.

519. corps, pronounced cors, and so written in some of the MSS.

537. Apparently proverbial; true man was colloquial for 'honest man'; cf. I, 1326 and Much Ado, III, iii, 54.

545. and clogs the line, but most of the MSS have it.

548. Jason; by some queer error El and Gg have Troilus instead of Jason, but l. 549 would show that Jason is correct, even if Troilus were not so thoroughly inappropriate.

559. til, northern English for to.

582. the peyne of deeth. Hinckley points out that the mediaeval belief was that death, being a dissolution of the whole body, was inconceivably painful. He refers to PT (X, 213), Hampole's Prick of Conscience, ll. 1900ff. (Morris and Skeat, Specimens, II, 121-122), and quotes a passage from Bacon's Essays ("Of Death") in which Bacon states the whole idea only to reject it.

593. A proverb first recorded in the writings of St. Jerome ("Facis de necessitate virtutem," Adv. Rufinum, iii, 2), who has also, "Necessitatem in voluntatem vertit" (Vita S. Pauli, 5).

596. Hinckley records as an amusing anachronism that Gower (GA, V, 3416) represents Jason when he wooed Medea as taking St. John "to borwe," i.e. as surety. The choice of St. John the Baptist as a pledge of faith by mediaeval lovers is perhaps connected with the folk festival of the summer solstice on St. John's Eve. Brand (I, 330-36) records many forms of love divination practiced at this time; the most famous treatment of the subject in English literature is doubtless Thomas Hardy's The Woodlanders.

607ff. The text is from Boethius, iii, m. 2, a part of which is quoted in the margin of the MS. A few lines above this passage occurs the exemplum used, in 611-17. Chaucer uses the same exemplum in IX, 163ff.

613. cage; Hg and Cp have cages; Hinckley thinks we should read cage, regarding it as a plural, but this seems unnecessary. Note the variation between singular and plural pronouns throughout the passage.

624. kyte; the kite was regarded as a cowardly bird, unfit for falconry.

640. Canacee's ring gave her knowledge of the medicinal qualities of plants, but it does not appear why she should choose those that were beautiful of color.

647. El has In which ther were ypeynted.

648. tidyves; the tidyf is a small bird (apparently not a wren), mentioned as inconstant in LGW, 154f. Drayton (Polyolbion, xiii, 79) calls it a tydie; according to him it is a beautiful singer.

649-50. Tyrwhitt, reading And pyes in l. 650, reversed the order of these lines. His action is approved by Pollard, but rightly rejected by Skeat. Most MSS, except El, Hg, and Dd, omit and in l. 650, which gives an easy and correct construction. The and was probably inserted for metrical reasons.

656. Cambalus seems to be the brother of Canace, called Cambalo in l. 31. Chaucer's statement of the incidents yet to be told in his story is not clear or easily intelligible, and has given rise to much discussion. The reconciliation here referred to offers no difficulty, and the adventure of Algarsif (l. 663-66) is perhaps of the same character as that in which Cleomades wins the Princess Clarmondine. But who is the Cambalo of l. 667, why he fought for Canace, and who were the two brethren with whom he fought are questions to which no satisfactory answers have yet been given (cf. Jones in PMLA, XX, 352f. and Skeat's note on l. 667).

671f. Another astrological indication of time, quite in the manner of Chaucer and therefore, as Skeat maintains, probably genuine. Skeat completes the sentence with the words "he entreth," and translates: "Apollo (the sun) whirls up his chariot so highly (i.e., continues his course in the zodiac) till he enters the mansion of the god Mercury, the cunning one." Mercury has two mansions, Gemini and Virgo. The sun entered the former on May 12, the latter on August 14. Skeat supposes that the reference is to Gemini and says: "It is a truly Chaucerian way of saying that two months had elapsed."

[THE SQUIRE-FRANKLIN LINK] (673-708)

Although SqT was left unfinished, l. 673 shows that Chaucer intended it to be followed by FkT.

676. I allowe the, 'I commend thee.' The rhyme with yowthe proves that final e was pronounced; most MSS write allowe the as one word.

683. This does not mean the amount of land that could be purchased for twenty pounds, but such an amount as would rent for twenty pounds a year.

687. vertuous, not specifically 'moral,' but 'endowed with excellent qualities'; cf. moral vertu, I, 307.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE FRANKLEYN'S TALE (709-23)

709. Britons, inhabitants of Brittany, now called 'Bretons.' We have no examples of the early Breton lays, but a large number of mediaeval French poems exist which profess to have been derived from Breton lays. For an interesting account of the characteristics of these lays the student may read either the section devoted to them in Nitze and Dargan's History of French Literature or W. H. Schofield, "Chaucer's Franklin's Tale," PMLA, XVI, 405-49. Whether the Franklin's Tale was derived from such a lay or not, it might well pass for one in subject matter and general characteristics. Schofield maintained that we should take the statement in ll. 714-15 literally; but it seems more probable that this, like the statement in regard to meeting Petrarch, is merely a literary device and that the tale was suggested by a story in Boccaccio's Filocolo (cf. Rajna, in Romania, XXXII, 204-67, and Lowes, in MPb, XV, 689-728). Certainly the forms of the names Aurelius and Arviragus suggest that Chaucer was not dealing with a traditional lay, but himself threw into the form of a lay a story which seemed to him to be capable of such a transformation, borrowing the two names just mentioned from Geoffrey of Monmouth and the others from what he had heard about Brittany. For other versions of the story, see Originals and Analogues.

716. burel man, 'a man of no education'; i.e. such a man as wears burel, a kind of coarse woolen cloth.

Beside ll. 721ff. El has a Latin quotation from Persius (Sat., Prol. 1-2) from which l. 721 is translated. This does not necessarily imply that Chaucer was familiar with the Satires of Persius. He may have got this quotation from some collection of fine passages. The spelling of Cicero in l. 722 is peculiar, but there is, I think, no reason to believe in any association of the name with Mount Cithaeron.

723. colours; the usual technical term for 'rhetorical devices'; not 'pretenses' as in V, 511.

THE FRANKELEYNS TALE (728-1624)

729-30. In many MSS the order of these two lines is inverted.

731ff. The proper attitude of a lover towards his lady and the whole conduct of love-making in mediaeval and indeed in early modern times are fundamentally based upon the conceptions which gave rise to the courts of love and the amour courtois of the twelfth century. But courtly love in Provence and in northern France in the twelfth century expressly excluded marriage as the aim of the lovers; indeed it was held that the courtly love could not exist between a man and his wife. Chaucer's love poems, while preserving much of the spirit and technique of courtly love, treat it commonly as a prelude to marriage. This was probably due to a general social development. For further information on this subject see W. F. Dodd, Courtly Love in Chaucer and Gower.

734. oon the faireste; cf. § 106.

764ff. The ideas in this passage were probably suggested by RR, but the expression is original with Chaucer.

771. Looke who: 'whoever'; cf. note on III, 517. See also l. 992.

774. Skeat cites several authors who express this sentiment. First among them is the so-called Dionysius Cato whose Distichs were a common school-book in mediaeval and early modern times (cf. note on I, 3227f.). The reference is to Book i, 38:

Quem superare potes, interdum uince ferendo,
Maxima enim morum semper patientia uirtus.

782. complexion, 'temperament.' The temperament was supposed to be controlled by the four humors; cf. note on I, 421.

786. kan on governance, 'that knows about governing.'

792ff. Again influenced by RR.

801. Pedmark. All the Breton names in the tale are discussed and the physical background of it is described by Tatlock, The Scene of the Franklin's Tale Visited (Chaucer Soc.). "Pedmark is the modern Penmarc'h . . ." All the published MSS but one spell the name Pedmark(e). Tatlock suggests that the d is not an error but is possibly a dialectical or individual pronunciation, n becoming a nasal d.

It is perhaps worth mentioning that Penmarch was well known to Chaucer's contemporaries and after 1386 was in the public eye because of the seizure of three vessels near there by John Hauley and his men: cf. Manly, New Light, pp. 170-73.

808. Kayrrud. Tatlock tells us that the name means 'red house,' or 'red town' and that the modern equivalent of it is Karru. Places of this name occur in modern Brittany, but none is known near Penmarc'h. Tatlock therefore thinks that it may have been the name of some ancient ruined castle of red Roman brick. Arveragus is a Latinized form of a Celtic name. It appears first in Juvenal, Sat., iv, 127.

815. Dorigene. Tyrwhitt gave the name of the wife of Alain I of Brittany (reigned 1388-1407) as Droguen or Dorguen. In contemporary documents her name is spelled Oreguen, Ohurguen, etc., but mediaeval texts sometimes call her Dorguen or Droguen. Tatlock (pp. 37-41), in a learned discussion of the name, shows that similar names occur in Brittany as place names or personal names, and concludes that the name of Chaucer's heroine may be derived from one of them, or more probably from the Dorguen just mentioned. In this case the g would be hard.

848ff. Tatlock, who made a careful investigation of the Breton coast with reference to Chaucer's realism, points out that at no part of the coast very near Penmarc'h is there "a bold shore facing alarming ledges at sea." Two possibilities present themselves: either Chaucer saw the rocks only from the sea, or there may have been a change in the coast line in the centuries that have elapsed since. The rocks at any rate were and are very real, and they are the essential feature.

880. thyn owene merk, 'thine own likeness.'

899. places delitables, a French plural; rare in Chaucer (cf. VII, 2038).

900. tables, 'backgammon'; chess and tables were favorite games of the upper classes, and are often mentioned in the romances.

932. beste farynge, 'handsomest'; cf. welfarynge ('handsome'), VII, 3132, and note on V, 734.

938. Aurelius, a name of Roman origin but applied to British kings in Gildas and Geoffrey of Monmouth.

942. withouten coppe; 'drinking without cup' was colloquial, or slang, for 'getting a beating.'

951f. Chaucer seems to follow Ovid, and the margin of El has the side note Metamorphosios. The reference is to Met., iii, 407ff.

992ff. In the Filocolo version of the story the lady promises to gratify her lover if he will procure for her a garden in full bloom in the month of January.

"The removal of the rocks . . . is a happier invention than the creation of a garden in midwinter, inasmuch as [it] could have on the lady's part no motive but solicitude for her absent husband" (Hinckley).

999-1007. In placing ll. 999f. after l. 1006 I follow several of the MSS commonly regarded as of inferior lineage. The improvement is so manifest that I am confident that they preserve a genuine MS tradition.

1018. Hinckley asks: "Is not this curiously abrupt line a mark of immaturity in the poet's art?" Most editors have taken it as the Franklin's jocose apology for using language too ornate for his character and education; but Chaucer was poking fun at the rhetorical figure called circumlocutio, cf. Manly, Rhet., p. 13.

1031ff. Chaucer appeals to the heathen gods but is obviously thinking of the sun and moon and their actual effects upon the seasons and tides. The marginal note in EI has "The compleint of Aurelius to the goddes and to the sonne," and at l. 1045 explains Lucina by "Luna." Declinacion in l. 1033 is used in its technical astronomical sense, 'distance from the celestial equator,' which as he rightly explains causes the seasons. Chaucer knew that the highest tides occur when sun and moon are either in conjunction or opposition (cf. l. 1057).

1058. Leon, the sign 'Leo.' Aurelius does not ask for a high tide at the next opposition of sun and moon — which would occur during May when the sun was in Gemini; but at the next one that will occur with the sun in Leo, when its power would be greatest.

1074. hir owene dirke regioun; cf. note on I, 2082.

1077. Vows to make a pilgrimage barefoot to the shrine of some saint were common in the Middle Ages. Chaucer conceives the heathen to have made similar pilgrimages to the temples of the gods. Chaucer is only one of a long series of writers who call Delphi Delphos. Skeat thinks this is due to using the accusative case-form. Other editors ascribe it to confusion with Delos.

1084. thoght, 'grief.'

1086. chese he, subj.; wheither, pronounced 'wher.'

1094. ymaginatyf, 'suspicious.'

1095. oute, 'abroad.'

1110. In the margin EI has: "Pamphilus ad Galathea/ vulneror & clausum porto sub pectore telum &c." This gives the first line of a thirteenth century Latin poem relating the love of the poet for a lady whom he calls Galatea. The poem is an imitation of Ovid, ascribed to a writer called Pamphilus Maurilianus; cf. Lounsbury, II, 370-72. The same poem is referred to in VII, 2945-50.

1113. sursanure, a wound healed only superficially, the arrowhead being left in the wound (cf. 1115). One of the many evidences of Chaucer's interest in medicine.

1118. The University of Orleans was famous in the Middle Ages, and was by its situation the one which a student from Brittany would be most likely to attend. The French poet Deschamps, like the Franklin's Clerk, seems to have read astrology (magyk natureel) when he should have been attending to his regular studies.

1130ff. The doctrine of lunar influences seems to have been a separate branch of astrology. Disregarding the usual division of the zodiacal path into twelve signs, this pseudo-science divided it into twenty-eight equal parts, called lunar mansions, to correspond roughly with the portion traversed by the moon in one day. It is difficult to decide whether to take seriously or not Chaucer's professions of disbelief in judicial astrology. It is true that he makes this profession in his own person in the treatise on the Astrolabe: "Nathales thise ben observaunces of judicial matiere and rytes of payenes, in which my spirit ne hath no feith ne no knowing of hir horoscopum," pt. ii, § 4. But his knowledge was great, even if his faith was small.

1140ff. Such tales were common in the Middle Ages; cf. note on IV, 219.

1196. ryver, not 'river,' but 'the bank of a river where waterfowl were plentiful'; cf. notes on III, 884, and VII, 1927.

1204. oure. Skeat calls attention to the graphic use of this word.

1225. goon. Hinckley translates this as 'proceed,' but perhaps it merely means 'go to Brittany.'

1228. That the world was round was no new discovery made by Columbus or the men of his time. It was the common doctrine of scientific men in antiquity and in the Middle Ages, and several attempts were made to calculate its size. These were very inaccurate, not because the method of calculation was wrong, but because their instruments were incapable of close measurement. Columbus seems to have derived his inspiration from a passage quoted from the writings of Roger Bacon, the thirteenth century English Franciscan. The doctrine was taught and explained in the treatise De Sphaera of Johannes de Sacro Bosco (Holywood), which was the usual textbook on astronomy.

1244. There is no particular reason in F&T for placing the miracle in mid-winter. Chaucer may have been influenced by the fact that in the Filocolo version the task set was the production of a blooming garden in January.

1246. The Sun was in his hottest declination in midsummer in the sign of Cancer. He enters Capricornus at the winter solstice.

1252. The actual experiment did not occur until January, the month of the double-headed Janus. El has the marginal note "Janus biceps."

1255. Nowel. It has been suggested (MPb, XVI, 45f.) that the use of this word and the drinking from a horn (l. 1253) are indications of a Breton source for the story, but both are common features of the great mediaeval Christmas festivities which lasted from Christmas Day to Twelfth Night (January 6). Noel is the common French word for birthday (Latin natalem), but came to be used specifically for the birthday of Christ and for carols celebrating it.

1263. conclusion, practical exercise in astronomy or astrology; the second part of Chaucer's Astrolabe is headed: "Here begynnen the conclusions of the astrolabie." The first of them is: "To find the degree in which the sun is day by day," and there follows a series of exercises in the use of the instrument.

1273. tables Tolletanes. The most widely used astronomical tables of the Middle Ages were those originally calculated for the latitude of Toledo. For the use made of them by the clerk, cf. Introd. p. 136.

1280ff. The eighth sphere contained the fixed stars and was therefore of course the sphere of the constellations. The zodiacal signs were originally theoretical divisions of the zodiacal circle located in the ninth sphere or primum mobile. The positions of the constellations and the zodiacal signs corresponded at a remote period in the past, called the beginning of the Great or Platonic Year, a period of approximately 36,000 solar years. The beginning of the first year is supposed to have coincided with the date of the creation of the world, and it was held that with the completion of each Great Year and the beginning of the next the events of history would begin to repeat themselves. A gloss in the MSS beside ll. 1281f. explains that Alnath is the name of the first mansion of the moon. This is true; but the reference in the text is to the bright star Alnath, from which the mansion got its name. As this star was near the beginning of the constellation Aries, it had, by the wirking of that sphere (cf. Introd. p. 136), been "shoved" away from thilke fixe Aries, the first point of the sign Aries, which lay in the ninth sphere. Chaucer's explanation of the processes of his astrologer is accurate enough; but was probably no more intelligible to the ordinary fourteenth century reader than it is to the reader of today. His main purpose was to produce upon the reader the impression of great learning and scientific accuracy on the part of the subtil clerk.

1285-90. The moon was of especial influence in such magical operations, and the clerk needed to know its position and movements in order to choose a propitious time. For face and term see Introd. p. 319. The moones mansion (l. 1289) is one of the eight and twenty lunar mansions mentioned in l. 1130 above.

1305. cares colde, a common expression for serious distresses of any kind.

1325. youre grace, 'of your favor,' as contrasted with of right, 'as a right.'

1354. compleynt. Complaints were a favorite form of fourteenth century lyric. Chaucer has several; cf. "The Complaynte unto Pite," "The Complaynte of Mars," "Complaynte to his Lady," "The Complaynte of Faire Anelida to False Arcite," "The Complaynte of Venus," "Fortune," and "The Complaynte of Chaucer to his Purse." Most of these are very elaborate metrically. In the present instance and in the brief "Complaynte of the Man in Black," BD, 475-86, the form is simpler.

1367-1456. These lines are devoted to citations of twenty-three examples from classical antiquity by which Dorigen encourages herself to her proper course of action. They were drawn from St. Jerome's treatise Against Jovinian, as is definitely stated in the last of seventeen glosses written opposite these lines in MSS E1 and *Ad*³.

Chaucer's use of "examples" is undoubtedly due to the precepts of the rhetoricians and the influence of Machaut. Machaut's latest editor, Hoepffner, credits him with giving vogue to this curious pedantic device. "It is in the Dit de l'Alerion that Guillaume uses it for the first time. Thereafter he wrote no poem in which these examples do not occupy a considerable place . . . Poets contemporary with Machaut inform us of the importance then ascribed to these narratives, equally amusing and instructive, which in discussions and disputes were arguments of high value. Machaut draws his examples from various sources: most of them are borrowed from ancient mythology and history" (Hoepffner, Oeuvres de Guillaume de Machaut, I, Introd. lxxiii).

1455-56. These lines are found only in El and Ad³, but they seem to be genuine.

1471. and, 'if.'

1479. A much-admired line, but often misunderstood; trouthe does not mean 'truth,' but 'troth,' i.e. 'one's pledged word.' Probably it was suggested by the motto on the tomb of King Edward I: "Pactum serva."

1493-98. El and Ad³ are the only MSS that have these lines, the other forty-six MSS that have the tale omit them; but they sound genuine.

1580. goon a-begged; cf. note on VI, 406.

1602. apparence, used as a technical term.

1611f. Debates upon the relative merits of knight and clerk as a lover are frequent in mediaeval literature, but there seems to be no special reference to them in these lines. The present question is one of generosity between a husband, a lover, and a clerk, as is distinctly stated in ll. 1621f. Cf. Manly, What is the Parlement of Foules? (Morsbach Festschrift).

[FRAGMENT VI (FURNIVALL'S GROUP C)]

The position of this fragment in the series of tales has been the subject of much discussion. Almost all the MSS place it late, but Furnivall and others shift it to an early position; see the references in Hammond. The best argument for an early position is Moore's, PMLA, XXX, 116-22.

THE PHISICIENS TALE (1-286)

This is the well-known story of the sacrifice of the maiden Virginia by her father to save her from the lust of Appius Claudius. The ultimate source of the legend is Livy, iii, 44-58. Tyrwhitt, Lounsbury, Skeat, Pollard, and others hold that Chaucer's real source was RR (5589-5658). This is denied by Fansler (Chaucer and the RR, pp. 30-36), who, while admitting that Chaucer translated a few lines from RR, declares that "not more than a score of lines in the English story can be surely traced to the influence of the RR." There is equal disagreement about PbT as a work of art. Fansler calls it "the finest English telling of the story"; Lounsbury (II, 281-84) thinks its badness can be explained only on the supposition that Chaucer felt that he could not deviate from his source. Gower has the story, CA, bk. vii, 513ff.; but Chaucer was apparently not indebted to Gower. The version most familiar to modern readers is probably Macaulay's (Lays of Ancient Rome), the most powerful is Webster's noble tragedy, Appius and Virginia.

Most editors and critics have felt that the tale is not particularly appropriate to the 'Doctor of Physik'; Tupper argues vigorously, but I think unsuccessfully, to prove that it is (JEGP, XV, 59-67).

THE WORDES OF THE HOOST (287-328)

288. Harrow: cf. note on VII, 4235; the Host cries out as if he would raise the hue and cry upon the false judge and his 'cherl.' On the oaths, see note on ll. 474ff.

291. advocat3: Chaucer either has a bad rhyme or uses the French plural (not sounding the t). Skeat notes that ten MSS spell the final syllable in the passage without t, that is, cas, case, or casse.

For juges El has false juges. The adjective is not in the other MSS; it overloads the line; it was probably caught up by mistake from l. 289.

Instead of ll. 291-92, Ha⁴ and several other MSS have two lines of doubtful authenticity:

So falle upon his body and his boones
The devel I bekenne him al at oones.

300. El and Hg have moore for harm; the omission of for in other MSS is perhaps due to the desire to secure a simpler and commoner construction.

Instead of ll. 299-300, Ha⁴ and Ps have the following lines:

Hir beautee was hir deeth, I dar wel sayn;
Allas! so pitously as she was slayn!

Ha⁵ and Ad³ insert them after l. 300; and fourteen MSS insert them before l. 299. Most editors admit them to the text as ll. 297-98. I agree with Koch in regarding them as spurious.

303. is no fors: the omission of it in this idiom is unusual; but cf. IV, 1092, 2430.

304. thy gentil cors: 'thy gentle body,' 'thy gentle self.' cors has both meanings in OF and ME.

305-07. urnyals and jurdones were glass vessels commonly used by physicians in diagnosing diseases. The name jurdanes (which several MSS have here) was apparently applied originally to the bottles in which pilgrims brought home water from the river Jordan, and thence transferred to vessels of similar shape used by chemists and physicians. Skeat and other editors say that ypocras and galiones are spiced drinks, named after the two great physicians Hippocrates and Galen. Ypocras certainly is such a drink; but I suspect that galiones is a word invented on the spur of the moment by the exuberant Host. At least, no other independent instance of its use has ever been cited. No doubt galion ought to be a stimulating drink; and St. Ronyan and St. Madrian ought to be good saints; but Harry Bailly seems to be their "onlie begetter." The letuarie — in a box (boyste) — was a sort of conserve containing an aphrodisiac composition. The Host's conception of the Doctor's art is a low one according to Tupper (YEGP, XV, 67ff.), but perhaps this is taking the Host too seriously.

310. The Host is, according to his lights, complimentary in comparing the Doctor to an abbot or a bishop, or other imposing dignitary of the church; cf. I, 439.

Seint Ronyan seems to be the same as Seint Ronyon (l. 320). Skeat says that these forms "are evidently corruptions of Ronan, a saint whose name is well-known to readers of St. Ronan's Well." But nothing we know of St. Ronan explains the choice of the oath. Tupper sees in Seint Ronyon a name coined from French rognon ('kidney'), with a play on Ronan and he compares St. Ognon ('onion'), St. Raisin ('grape') and St. Harenc ('herring') in sixteenth century French poems (YEGP, XV, 67). Runian occurs in fifteenth century documents as a term for a farm servant: In 1451 Sir Thomas Cumberworth leaves bequests to many of his servants; among them, to "myn runian, the day, a cowe," and to "my runian, y^e Carter, and iij of the best plomen . . . Ilkon of yam iijr. iiijd." (Lincoln Dioces. Documents, pp. 51, 55).

313. cardynacle: so in MSS El and Hg; the others have the normal form cardiale, not understanding Chaucer's intentional use of an incorrect pronunciation; cf. by corpus bones in the next line, and note on II, 1189.

315. moyste, as applied to ale, seems to be synonymous with musty.

318. beel amy: Fr. bel ami, a common term of address. Taken alone it would give no reason to think that the Host was trying to air his French, but in the light of the tendencies discussed under II, 1189, I am inclined to regard this as probable.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE PARDONERS TALE (329-462)

The frankness of the Pardoner in describing his methods and confessing his motives is quite in harmony with that of other villains in mediaeval satire; cf. note on III, 1ff. As a rule, the satirists were not at all concerned to motivate the frankness of the confessions or to attempt in any way to make the sometimes startling revelations appear natural. In this, as in other matters, Chaucer shows his superiority. Not content with establishing a general atmosphere of comradeship and a general tendency to personal confidences among the Pilgrims, he opens the heart of the Pardoner with a good drink before he begins his revelations.

While Chaucer's purpose is satire, the ostensible reason for the Pardoner's telling how he displays his relics, preaches his sermon, and gathers in the money is that his tale is to be just the sermon which he is accustomed to preach; cf. l. 915. To the references on Rouncival in the Prologue (cf. note on I, 669ff.) add S. Moore, "Chaucer's Pardoner of Rouncival," MPb, XXV, 59-66.

333. Theme. This is the regular technical term for the 'text,' the first of the six parts prescribed by the mediaeval treatises on the composition of sermons. After having announced his text and translated it into the vernacular, the mediaeval preacher would usually conciliate the favor of his audience by apologies, or expressions of humility, or would engage in some other brief form of introduction to his task. This was called the pro-theme and invariably closed with a brief invocation for divine aid. After this followed the development of the text, called the dilatation. The treatises give elaborate directions for this. The fourth part, called exemplum, consisted in the illustration or enforcement of the moral lesson of the sermon by one or more anecdotes, drawn usually from history or legend, from the experiences of life, from the best fables, or from that fictitious natural history of animals, plants, and precious stones known as Physiologus (cf. n. on VII, 4461). Great collections of these exempla, classified under such topics as Avarice, Faith, Swearing, and the like, were made in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries for the use of preachers. One of the most famous was that of Robert Holkot, an English Dominican, from which Chaucer has been thought to have derived materials for several of his tales (cf. Petersen, pp. 98-118). Following the exemplum, came the fifth part of the sermon, the peroration, or application; and then a brief closing formula in Latin, such as: "Quod nobis praestare dignetur, qui vivit et regnat Deus per omnia saecula saeculorum."

Of these six parts the Pardoner's sermon seems to have only three: the theme (334); the exemplum (463-903); the peroration (904-14); and perhaps the closing formula (916-18). But the exemplum of the Flemish rioters is elaborated by disquisitions on each of the sins of the "tavern group" reinforced by numerous allusions and brief exempla. And it may be that the pardoners were not careful to conform to the conventional sermon type as set forth in the manuals. See Lecoy de la Marche, La Chaire en France au Moyen Age, and J. M. Neale, Mediaeval Preachers and Mediaeval Preaching.

335-49. He came from Rome, the residence of the pope who was recognized by England. The bulls mentioned in ll. 336 and 342-43 were doubtless copies of those relating to the general subject of indulgences. Besides these he had a special patent with a bishop's seal (l. 337) authorizing him to show his relics and sell his pardons for the benefit of the Hospital of St. Mary of Rouncivale by Charing Cross, and forbidding interference by priest or parish clerk. Then he spoke a few words in Latin to embellish his preaching, and showed his relics.

Hinckley thinks the seal (l. 337) was that of the pope; but the bishop's seal is expressly required by the regulations (see the references in Lea, Hist. of Confessions and Indulgences, III, 285ff.). For the practice in England in Chaucer's day good evidence is the well-known passage in PP. (Prol. 66-82):

Ther preched a pardoner as he a prest were;
And broughte forth a bulle with bishopes seles,

THE PROLOGE OF THE PARDONER 615

And seide that hymself myghte assoilen hem alle
Of falsched of fasting, of vowes ybroken.

Lewed men leved hym wel and lyked his wordes;
Comen up knelyng to kessen his bulles.
He bonched hem with his brevet and blered here eyes,
And raughte with his ragman rynges and broches.
Thus ye geveþ youre gold glotones to kepe
And leveth it to losels that lecherie haunten.
Were the bishop yblessed and worth both his eres,
His sel scholde not be sent to deceyve the peple;
Save hit is not al bi the bishop that the boy precheth,
But the parisch prest and the pardonere parten the silver
That the pore peple of the parisch scholde have if thei nere.

345. saffron: saffron was used in cooking to color pies and meats; the color was a rich yellow.

346. Most MSS have men, but hem is well attested. Koch remarks that Chaucer, like Shakespeare, was not always a strict grammarian.

347. crystal stones: glass cases for the rags and bones exhibited as relics of the saints.

351. The holy Jew hinted at may have been Jacob (Genesis, xxx, 28ff.) though there is nothing in the account of Jacob's trick to explain the effects of the shoulder bone. The practice of divination by a sheep's right shoulder bone (cf. Thoms, Folklore Rec., I, 176-79) has no relation to this passage.

355. Unless ete means 'bitten,' the syntax of this line is very astonishing. Worm means a 'serpent.'

356. Many MSS have peculiar readings here; apparently the line was illegible or missing in their original.

363. Nine MSS have drynken; the rest drynke. In any event the word has two syllables. Whether the final e of fastynge shall be sounded may be left to the taste of the reader.

385-87. The confusion between singular and plural seems to go back to the original of the principal MSS.

390. an hundred mark; about twenty times the annual salary of a chaplain.

392. Viollet-le-Duc (Dict. d'Arch., II, 98f.) says that the reformers were the first to introduce seats for the congregations in their churches. Lecoy de la Marche (La Chaire Française, 209ff.) refutes this statement with evidence from France. The present passage and the much-discussed passage in Gower's Miroir de l'Homme (ll. 5245-56) telling how Somnolence sleeps in church and dreams of hearing the 'geste de Troylus et de La belle Creseide' sung prove the use of seats of some kind in English churches.

406. goon a-blakeberied: go a-blackberrying; no doubt current slang; cf. III, 354, V, 1580. The -ed is not the participial ending, but represents an OE

-að (-ath), used in forming verbal nouns, like huntað, hunting, fiscað, fishing (both of which occur in King Alfred's account of the voyages of Ohthere and Wulfstan).

407f. A close translation of RR, 5113f.

413. hym: 'my enemy,' lacks an antecedent.

416. This line and ll. 441-47 seem to imply that the Pardoner was a friar; but see the note on III, 163f.

437f. Cf. Kipling, Preface to Many Inventions.

438. that; El alone has the. The repetition of that, after an intervening clause, is not uncommon.

440. for: because.

444. On the question of the obligation of religious to support themselves by labor and the practice of Christ and the saints in this matter there was a sharp division of opinion between the monks, who labored and held property, and the friars, who lived by alms and professed to hold no property; cf. PP, B, xv, 263-310 (C, XVIII, 1-43), especially ll. 285f.:

Poule, after his prechyng, panyers he made,
And wan with his hondes that his wombe neded.

Skeat, in his note on l. 445, charges Chaucer and the author of Piers Plowman with an error in calling St. Paul the apostle a basket maker. But the error is not theirs. PP (XX, 281) says specifically that he is talking about 'Poule primus heremita.' The view that Paul the Hermit wove baskets was doubtless derived from a passage in St. Jerome's life of him (§ 16). After his death, the hermit St. Anthony, that he might not be without something that belonged to his dead friend, "took for himself the tunic which in the fashion of a basket (quam in sportarum modum) St. Paul had woven out of palm leaves."

THE PARDONERS TALE (463-968)

Why Chaucer laid the scene of this tale in Flanders has been much discussed. Skeat says, "In laying the scene in Flanders, Chaucer probably followed an original which is now lost." Miss Petersen (p. 97 n. 3) suggests that he may have been influenced by some of the exempla of Thomas of Cantimpré's Bonum de Apibus which somewhat resemble the beginning of PdT. The first tells of a gentleman in Louvain, in Brabantiae partibus, who, as he passed a wineshop (cellarium) on his way to matins, in the night following Good Friday, found a strange man bleeding and terribly wounded. Upon being asked who had wounded him the stranger replied, "Those young men who are playing at dice in the tavern." Thereupon the gentleman entered the tavern and rebuked the young men for dicing on such a night and asked them why they had so horribly beaten the man. They denied that they had beaten him or indeed had seen any one since they had begun to play. All then went outside to look for the stranger, but he had disappeared, and turning to one another, they perceived that by their terrible oaths they had again wounded and crucified Christ the Lord. In the other story we are told of the dedication of a church in a populous town, on the border between Flanders and Brabant, to which came great crowds. Among them was a certain piper who had by his posturing and gestures excited the obscene and vulgar songs of the young folks who were dancing. Toward evening a storm drove the crowd indoors but the piper still went along the way piping his indecent tunes. Suddenly two shepherd boys saw a stroke of lightning strike him dead and tear off his arm and two black dogs seize the arm and run away with it. The curate wished to refuse burial in consecrated ground to so manifest an object of divine judgment, but his friends insisted he deserved it for his devotion in attending the dedication. But behold, the morning after the burial the grave was found open and empty, and it was clear that devils had carried away the body as well as the arm.

Brabant is not Flanders, but Chaucer may well have known these and similar stories, for they were common property of the collectors of exempla. Moreover, the Low Countries, including Flanders, were notorious for drunkenness, and the English had a strong prejudice against the Flemings (cf. note on Sir Thopas, p. 629, below).

Certainly, for artistic reasons, Chaucer needed the tavern scene for atmosphere, and needed to place the story in a foreign land. Like Shakespeare, he seems to have understood the romantic value of foreign backgrounds. For further remarks on the art of the story and on Kipling's The King's Ankus, see Canby, in MPb, II, 477-87. Cf. also Kittredge, Atlantic Monthly, LXXII (1893), 829-33.

470. develes temple: Hinckley thinks this means "the body of the unsanctified drunkard," but there can be little doubt that Chaucer refers to the tavern. "Devil's temple" is a term often applied to taverns; cf. Tupper, "The Pardoner's Tavern," JEGP, XIII, 553-65. The current view is clearly stated in Le Ménagier de Paris (I, 48):

The tavern is the church [moustier] of the Devil where his disciples go to serve him and where he works his miracles. For when people go there, they walk straight and talk well and wisely, with moderation and discretion, and when they come away, they cannot stand up or talk; they are either silly or crazy [enragies], and come back swearing, and beating and abusing one another.

474f. Skeat quotes the Parson's Tale: "For Cristes sake, ne swereth nat so synfully in dismembrynge of Crist, by soule, herte, bones, and body; for certes, it semeth that ye thynke that the cursed Jewes ne dismembred nat ynough the preciose persone of Crist, but ye dismembre hym more" (X, 591); cf. VI, 651, and the story of the wounded stranger given above, p. 616. Contemporary historians tell us that the favorite oath of King Henry II was "By the eyes of God!" (Jocelyn of Brakelond, ch. 3) and that of his son King John was "By God's tooth!" (Weever, Fun. Mon., 632, quoting Chron. of Dunmow); cf. note on I, 120.

477. tombesteres: acrobats and jugglers of all kinds were among the most popular entertainers of the Middle Ages. Usually they were strolling players; they were present in large numbers at weddings and other social gatherings and payments to them are frequent in the household accounts of kings and nobles. The OE termination ster (stre) indicates a woman — as in spinster, brewster, baxter, but not in minister, master (which are from Latin). Female acrobats were almost as common as male.

479. wafereres: makers of cakes and other confectionery, but they seem to have been regarded as disreputable and dangerous to morality; cf. Skeat's note on PP, C, xvi, 199.

484. The Latin side-note is from Ephes. v, 18.

488. whoso wel the Stories soghte: an elliptical construction of a sort common in Chaucer; 'whoever should examine the Stories would find.' Skeat says the Stories means the Historia Scholastica of Petrus Comestor (called "Comestor" as being a glutton for learning), a standard universal history; but Lounsbury (II, 374) says that Petrus tells the story of Herod and John the Baptist more briefly than Matthew and Mark do and does not mention the drunkenness of Herod. Perhaps Chaucer refers to the Bible stories.

492-97. Tyrwhitt quotes the original of this passage from Seneca, Epist. 83.

499. A passage from St. Jerome quoted in the margin beside ll. 508ff. gives the mediaeval view:

Ieronimus contra Iouinianum: Quamdiu ieiunauit Adam, in Paradiso fuit; comedit et eiectus est; statim duxit vxorem (ii, 17).

'As long as Adam fasted he remained in Paradise; he ate and was thrown out; immediately he got married.

508. deffended: Fr. defendu; cf. 590.

517-20. Suggested by two Latin passages: "So short is the delight of the throat that it occupies scarcely four inches of space" (Pope Innocent III, De Contemptu Mundi, bk. II, ch. 17); and "For the sake of the short delight of the throat the lands and the seas are ransacked, and in order that mulled wine and costly food may go down our gullets we sweat with the labor of the whole of life" (Jerome, ii, 8). Both these writings were familiar to Chaucer; the latter is one of the principal sources of the Wife of Bath's Prologue and the Merchant's Tale; the former he says he translated (cf. LGW, Prol. (G), 414), and its influence appears in the Man of Law's Prologue and in ll. 483f. 513-16, 534-36, 537-46, and 551 of the Pardoner's Tale (cf. Köppel, Archiv, LXXXIV, 411ff.).

519. to swynke: Skeat and others write this to-swynke, but in my opinion there is no such word. The prefix to- (Ger. zer-) is not a mere intensive but implies rending and destruction of the object of the verbal action; no verb compounded with it is used intransitively, I think. If my view is correct, Chaucer begins his sentence with one construction in mind and changes to another.

522f. In the margin several MSS quote the Latin of I Cor. vi, 13.

529f. There is a similar reference to Philip. iii, 18.

532. The best MSS agree in reading Ther; Skeat, Globe, and Tyrwhitt follow Cx in reading That they; Koch follows four poor MSS in reading That; in PT (x, 819), the same passage is badly corrupted. The parenthetical clause seems to have confused the scribes. Perhaps Chaucer wrote Thei, but the scribe of the MS from which ours was derived caught up Ther from l. 530.

537. fynde: 'provide for,' as now in provincial usage.

538-47. Suggested by De Cont. Mundi, ii, 17: 'To the gluttonous, however, suffice not the fruits of trees, nor the pods of plants, nor the roots of herbs, nor the fish of the sea, nor the beasts of the land, nor the birds of the air; but spices are sought out, condiments are contrived, poultry is shut up and fattened for food, and then is prepared with subtle skill by the cooks and served enticingly. One stamps and strains, one mixes and blends, turns substance into accident, changes nature into art, that satiety may become desire, that fulness may develop appetite; for the tickling of the throat, not for the sustaining of nature; not for the satisfying of necessity, but for the gratification of epicurism.'

'Turning substance into accident' alludes to one of the great metaphysical doctrines of scholasticism, as Jephson pointed out. "Everything is supposed to have a substance distinct from the accidents of form, taste, color, smell, etc.; so that while the accidents remain the substance may be changed, and vice versa." In Chaucer's time the subject was a lively one because of the Wyclifite controversy about the 'real presence' of the body of Christ in the sacramental wafer.

548. The marginal passage is altered from 1 Tim. v, 6, by changing quae to qui.

549. The marginal passage came from Prov. xx, 1, probably by way of Jerome (II, 10).

551ff. Suggested by De Cont. Mundi, ii, 19.

557f. honest cure: regard for decency; cf. PT (X, 821).

560f. This is based upon a passage in Melibeus, which in turn comes from Proverbs xxxi, 4; cf. note on l. 584.

563. Lepe: near Cadiz. Spanish wines are heavier than the wines of Bordeaux and La Rochelle, districts which in Chaucer's day belonged to the king of England. Chaucer knew about wines; his father was a wine-importer and had a house in Thames Street near Fish Street. This part of the city was called the Vintry, because of the wine-merchants. Cheap (now Cheapside) was well known for its taverns. The reason why Spanish wines tended to creep subtly into the French ones may be inferred from the fact that in 1380 a city ordinance limited the price of wines of Gascony (Bordeaux), the Rhine, Greece, Provence, and La Rochelle to 10 pence, that of Spanish wines to 8 pence (Letter Book H, p. 145).

579. Skeat quotes from both Jordanes and Paulus Diaconus accounts of the death of Attila on his wedding night in the manner mentioned by Chaucer; cf. Lounsbury, II, 385f.

584. In the Vulgate, Prov. xxxi, 5 reads: "Noli regibus, O Lamuel, noli regibus dare vinum: quia nullum secretum est ubi regnat ebrietas"; cf. l. 561 above.

591f. The marginal passage—Mendaciorum et periuriarum mater est Alea—is from John of Salisbury (Polycraticus, i, 5). The same chapter furnishes the stories of Stilbon (ll. 603ff.) and Demetrius (ll. 621ff.).

603-26. These lines are a close paraphrase of a continuous passage in the chapter mentioned in the preceding note. John of Salisbury gives the name of the 'wise embassadour' as Chilon. Chaucer may have been writing from memory and have, by mistake, recalled the name of the philosopher Stilbon from an anecdote in Seneca's Dialogues, ii, 6, 1. With the story of Demetrius and the dice compare that of the gift of tennis balls to Henry V in Shakespeare's Henry V, I, ii.

633. The marginal note may be a cross between the "non iurare omnino" of Matt. v, 34 and "Nolite iurare" of James, v, 12. MS Dd refers it to Matt. v.

635. Jeremiah, iv, 2 is quoted in the margin as a gloss.

639-41. The ten commandments are composed of two sets, or tables: 1-4, those teaching our duty to God; 5-10, those teaching our duties to our neighbors. The Catholic Church regards what Protestants call the first and second as the first commandment, and divides the tenth into two; cf. Myrc's Instructions to Parish Priests (EETS), pp. 27-30, or any other mediaeval manual.

643. rather: in the literal sense, 'earlier in time'; cf. 'the rathe primrose,' Milton's Lycidas, l. 142.

649f. Skeat quotes Wyclif (Works, III, 84): "For it is written in Ecclesiasticus, the thre and twenti chapitre, there he seith this: A man much sweringe schal be fulfilled with wickidnesse, and venjaunce schal not go away fro his hous"; cf. I, 593.

651. See note on l. 474. In a Wyclifite tract, quoted by Skeat, the attitude of the reformers is thus stated: "But here Cristen sayne, that hit is not leful to swere by creaturis, ne by Goddus bonys, sydus, naylus, ne armus, ne by any membre of Cristes body, as tho moste dele of men usen" (Wyclif, Works, III, 483). Men may sometimes have sworn by the nails that pierced the hands and feet of Christ, but in the present passage, the reference is clearly to the nails of fingers and toes.

652. At the Abbey of Hales, in Gloucestershire, was shown a vial said to contain some of the blood of Christ. According to the legend (Horstmann, Altenglische Legenden, (1881) pp. 275ff.) Joseph of Arimathea caught some of the blood that flowed from Christ's side. He gave it to the emperor

Titus, who placed it in the Temple of Peace at Jerusalem. Thence half of it was taken by Charlemagne to Germany. In the thirteenth century a portion of this was given to the Abbey of Hales by Edmund, son of Richard, king of the Romans, the brother of Henry III of England. The blood was still shown at the Abbey in the sixteenth century. It was invisible to anyone in a state of mortal sin, but could be seen after the sinner became penitent and by his offerings to the shrine had obtained indulgence.

653. 'Seven is my chance and thine is five and three.' The favorite dice game was that called Hazard. It exists today practically unchanged under the name Craps; cf. note on II, 124f. Seven and eleven were the two most favorable 'chances.'

656. Cf. "I was falsly begylyd with thise byched bones" and "The byched bones that ye be, I byd you go bet" — both from Towneley Plays, p. 241; also "That bychyde Conscience," Mundus et Infans, l. 633. That bicched means cursed seems clear, but its derivation is uncertain. Carleton Brown argues that dice were called bicched because they were made of dogs' bones (ossa caninina), MLN, XXIII, 126.

662. The hours of the church services were rung by a bell. It was not yet nine o'clock.

664. A hand-bell, called a 'lych-bell,' was carried before a corpse on its way to the grave.

666. That oon: we now say, 'one.' knave: 'boy, servant.'

667. Go bet: a hunting term, but here meaning only "go quickly."

673. tonight: last night. In early English tonight refers more frequently to the night just past than to that coming.

674. This line may be either preceded or followed by a semicolon according to whether it is construed with l. 673 or l. 675. Upright, in such expressions seems usually to mean 'face upward.'

679. Which pestilence is referred to is uncertain; the great plagues which swept England and all western Europe in the fourteenth century were those of 1348-49, 1361-62, 1369, and 1375-76. There were other smaller ones. The disease was that now known as the bubonic plague; for details, see Hecker, The Black Death and Creighton, A History of Epidemics in Britain.

695. avow: the usual form for 'vow.'

696. al ones: probably 'all of the same mind.'

698. Sworn brotherhood was common in Europe in the Middle Ages and is still a vital institution in upper India, central Asia, and New Guinea; cf. KT, l. 1132, the romance of Athelston, l. 23, Richard Coeur de Lion, ll. 1661-68, and Amis and Amiloun. The ceremony of becoming sworn brothers is sometimes very elaborate, involving the mingling of the bloods, or cutting up a strip of turf with a sword and creeping under it. For the East see Kipling's "Ballad of East and West."

710. be deed: 'die.'

713. This mysterious old man is indeed an impressive figure, but it seems quite certainly a mistake to identify him with the Wandering Jew, as some critics do, or with Death.

715. God yow see: a courteous greeting.

717. with sory grace: very discourteous; equivalent to "confound you!"

727-33. Kittredge pointed out that these lines were imitated from the late Latin poet Maximian, Elegy 1, l. 1-4, 223-28; cf. also, Marston, Antonio and Mellida, III, i, 41-46.

734. cheste: box containing his property.

736. heyre clowt: haircloth for burial.

743. The marginal Latin is from Levit. xix, 32.

748. where ye go or ryde: 'wherever you walk or ride'; cf. the Fool's jingle in King Lear, I, iv, 134:

Ride more than thou goest.

769. El, Dd, Hg, Ch, Ad³ have he; the other MSS have they.

770. Many MSS have seven (or vij) for eighte (or vijj).

771. Skeat thinks the mention of florins is in keeping with the Italian origin of the story, as florins were first coined at Florence in 1252. But we do not know that the story is from an Italian source; and florins circulated in all parts of Europe.

796. Editors insert the before towne. It seems necessary for the metre, but the best MSS lack it.

802. Eight MSS omit the cut; twenty others have broughte grasse, and two have broughte strawe.

803. El has hym for hem.

818. El has Whal for What shal.

826f. El, Hg, Gg, and Dd read that right anon; Pw, Ln, and Ha⁴ have and that anon; Cp and Sp² have and thanne anon. In l. 827 three MSS have Arys, the rest Aryse, Arise; but the scribes paid no attention to such niceties. The scribe of Cp obviously regarded Aryse (827) as imperative, and perhaps changed the text to conform to his idea. With the reading of El, etc. arys can be regarded as imperative only if in a moment of forgetfulness Chaucer confused two constructions. If Looke whan means 'whenever' (see Cook, MLN, XXXI, 442), the reading of Pw, Ln, and Ha⁴ may be correct; aryse would then be imperative.

852. pothecarie; this word early dropped its original a-, which was later restored by learned influence. Originally the th represented only a t; the modern pronunciation is due to learned influence.

858. destroyed; Hinckley points out that the word means here 'harassed,' 'disturbed,' and refers to III, 1846f. The Irish appear to have preserved this sense of the word down to the present day.

889ff. The best-known book of the great Arabian physician Avicenna (cf. I, 432) was called The Book of the Canon of Medicine (Liber Canonis Medicinæ). It is divided into books, and each book is divided into fens, which in turn are divided into tractates. The sixth fen of the fourth book treats of poison, and is composed of five tractates. In treating of poisoning, as of other affectations, Avicenna gives elaborate descriptions of the symptoms and then proceeds to treat the causes and the cures. Skeat thought that Chaucer made a mistake in the use of the word canon. He says: "He seems to have taken Canon in the usual sense of 'rule,' whereas it is really the title of the whole work. It is much as if one were to speak of Dante's work in the terms — 'such as Dante never wrote in any Divina Commedia nor in any canto.'" But Avicenna himself uses canon not only as the title of his book, but also in the sense of a rule of procedure. I quote only a few examples from book IV: "Canon in dando in potu aquam ordeï & sirupum acetosum," fen I, trac. II, cap. x; "De canone curationis fluxus sanguinis," fen IIII, trac. III, cap. xvij; "De canone curationis vlcerum," fen IIII, trac. III, cap. ii; "De canone curationis solutionis continuitatis neruorum," fen IIII, trac. IIII, cap. ij. One of special interest here is the following: "De canone curationis eius qui in potu sumit venenum, ib., fen VI, cap. iiij. That the word was used in the same way by English writers is shown by the following: "For thanne a leche schal kepe the canoun of galion (Galen), that is oon of the iiij canouns," Lanfranc (p. 54). It seems therefore that Chaucer was guilty neither of misusing the word nor of an anticlimax.

891. Signes is the technical term for 'symptoms' (Lat. signa); it was not understood by the scribes, and consequently thirty-five MSS have sorwes, three have stories, and three have thynges.

907. Editors commonly explain sterlynges as silver coins in general. It is true that sterling was a current term for silver of standard fineness, but the coins known as sterlynges were specifically silver pennies. The term was in current use.

908. Skeat cites the pardoner of PP as taking in also 'rynges' and 'broches.' In view of the scarcity of money in the Middle Ages, rings, brooches, cups, spoons, and the like, were almost as current as coin.

947. theech, contracted from thee ich; southern dialect; cf. the northern theek, I, 3864. On the whole question of the Pardoner's loss of temper see Kittredge, pp. 211-18, or his note on "Chaucer's Pardoner," Atlantic Monthly, LXXII, 829-33. The most careful and elaborate study of the physical and moral characteristics of the Pardoner is that by Curry, op. cit., ch. III, 'The Pardoner's Secret.'

[FRAGMENT VII (FURNIVALL'S GROUP B²)]

THE SHIPMANNES TALE (1191-1624)

This vulgar tale of an intrigue by which a monk swindled a merchant and debauched his wife is assigned to the Shipman in all the MSS; it clearly was originally intended for the Wife of Bath, for in six lines the narrator speaks as a woman:

"The sely housbonde, algate he moste paye.
He moot us clothe, and he moot us arraye
Al for his owene worship richely —
In which array we daunce jolily.
And if that he noght may —
Thaune moot another payen for oure cost
Or lene us gold." — VII, 1201-09.

Tatlock (pp. 205-08) argues that Chaucer originally planned this tale as the Wife's part of an exchange of hostilities between her and the Merchant, and M_rT as his reply. Brusendorff (pp. 118, 119, n. 1) rejects all inferences of this sort. I think Tatlock's arguments are good, as far as they go, but he seems to have overlooked the probability that M_rT also was originally intended for another narrator; cf. IV, 1251, 1322, 1389-90 (and perhaps also IV, 1347 and 1384), which distinctly imply that the narrator was a member of a religious order. Can it have been the Monk, retaliating for the satire on monks in the Wife of Bath's Tale (now the Shipman's)?

THE WORDES OF THE HOOST (1625-42)

The Host's imperfect Latin and the elaborate courtesy of his manner toward the Prioress are charming touches of characterization.

1628. "God give this monk a thousand loads of bad years." The plural last is uninflected because used as a measure; cf. our use of hundredweight and the earlier use of pound, ton, etc., also dozen, score. After terms of measure, the name of the substance or material often appears without of; cf. IX, 24. The uninflected plural yeer is different, and is due to its being in OE a neuter with long stem (cf. § 18).

1630-31. Cf. I, 706.

1632. In originally meant a private house, not a public tavern. The town house of a bishop, earl, or other magnate was called his "inn"; cf. Lincoln's Inn — originally the house of the earls of Lincoln.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE PRIORESSES TALE (1643-1880)

1643-77. The first four stanzas are a skilful weaving together of ideas and expressions from the religious poetry of the time. The sources of the first three are the psalms, anthems, and hymns of the Church services in honor of the Blessed Virgin; see esp. the Prymer or Lay Folk's Prayer Book (EETS), Brown, The Miracle of Our Lady, (Chaucer Soc.), and Tupper in MLN, XXX, 9-11. The fourth stanza was apparently suggested by Dante's Paradiso, xxxiii, 16.

1644. If this Prologue was not written expressly for the Canterbury Tales, the expression quod she at least must have been introduced to adapt it to the Prioress. But the use of the seven-line stanza for the words of the Host (1881-1901) suggests that the tale and they were written at the same time.

1651. El omits whyte, obviously by accident. The lily as a symbol of the Virgin is common in mediaeval religious verse and prose. According to Alanus de Insulis it was derived from the Song of Solomon, ii, 2. For a popular presentation of the influence of the cult of the Virgin upon mediaeval art and life see Henry Adams, Mont St. Michel and Chartres.

1656f. The union of motherhood and perfect virginity in the Mother of Christ made a constant and strong appeal to the mediaeval love of subtlety and mystery, and was regularly illustrated by the mystery of the unburnt, burning bush which Moses saw. The biblical text, Exod. iii, 2-4, became the theme of an anthem, Rubum quem viderat, and of a religious play produced in Lincoln.

1669. El has: And getest us thurgh lyght of thy preyere.

THE PRIORESSES TALE (1678-1880)

1678. Asye: As Brown says, in his masterly study of the legend, there is a general tendency in various versions "either to leave this miracle without local attachment or to remove the scene to some remote place"; cf. A Study of the Miracle of Our Lady Told by Chaucer's Prioress, p. 55.

1679. A Jewerye: a ghetto, or Jews' quarter; cf. the Vintry, the part of London inhabited by wine-importers, vintners.

1681. Owing to the attitude of the Church toward lending money on interest, which was called "usury," the banking business of the Middle Ages was in the hands, first, of the Jews and, later, of the Lombards (or persons so called).

1685. Brown shows (MPh, III, 467-91.) that this was not a song school attached to a monastery or cathedral, but a school "of a humbler sort," situated near the Jewish quarter, and that the little clergeon (l. 1693) was not a choir boy, but a young schoolboy. Choir boys were boarded at the school; this boy lived with his mother. He was learning his letters; his little friend was learning to sing and to read Latin; later they would study grammar. The primer (l. 1708) was probably much like that published in 1537, with the title: The Primer in English for Children, after the Use of Sarum. "At the beginning one finds the Alphabet, Lord's Prayer, Salutation, Apostles' Creed, Ten Commandments, Graces (before and after dinner, and before and after supper), the psalm De Profundis, and the Works of Mercy. Then follow the prayers, as in the ordinary prymer, except that the Fifteen Gradual Psalms, the Offices for the Dead, and the Commendations are omitted. In some of the early manuscript prymers in English one finds similar elementary material prefixed." — Brown, loc. cit., p. 483.

1689. Middle English did not require of after manere (cf. § 113).

1694. "Whose custom was to go to school day by day." That . . . his is Chaucer's usual equivalent for whose, but whos does occur as a relative pronoun, cf. l. 1661. Go was regularly omitted after expressions of intention or custom.

1695. Eek also is tautological, like Shakespeare's "many a time and oft." Thymage: images of the Virgin, of Christ, and of the Saints were common beside mediaeval roads and streets. Persons passing them prayed or made the sign of the cross.

1702. "A good child will always learn quickly" — an ancient proverb; cf. "The Proverbs of Hendyng," Morris and Skeat, Specimens, II, 37.

"Sely chyld is sone ylered."

1704f. In the fourth lection of the matins of St. Nicholas' Day (Dec. 6), we learn that as an infant this saint sucked only once on Wednesdays and Fridays, although on other days he was like other babies: "Cujus viri sanctitas quanta futura esset, jam ab incunabulis apparuit. Nam infans, cum reliquis dies lac nutricis frequens sugeret, quarta et sexta feria semel dumtaxat, idque vesperi sugebat" (Tyrwhitt).

1708f. An antiphoner is a volume containing the antiphons, or anthems, of the service. The mediaeval church distinguished carefully the several sorts of sacred songs which we loosely call hymns. As the Alma Redemptoris Mater of this poem is an antiphon, it is certainly, as Brown points out (MPb, III, 475), the following:

Alma Redemptoris Mater, quae pervia coeli
Porta manes, et stella maris, succurre cadenti,
Surgere qui curat, populo: tu quae genuisti,
Natura mirante, tuum sanctum Genitorem,
Virgo prius ac posterius, Gabrielis ab ore
Sumens illud Ave, peccatorum miserere.

The song that begins

Alma Redemptoris Mater,
Quam de coelis misit Pater is not an anthem (antiphon) but a sequence.

1710. Ner and ner: nearer and nearer. Our modern near is really the comparative of the OE neah, and next is the superlative. Nearer and nearest are new formations.

1726. Kan but smal grammere: 'know but little grammar.' Grammar — one of the seven liberal arts of the mediaeval curriculum — included, not only the study of inflections and constructions, but also the interpretation of the works read.

1728. Innocent: here used as a noun. Later the word — like sely (silly) — became degraded in meaning.

1743. El omits than here and hath in l. 1745.

1753f. Youre: not an adj. but the genitive case of you. For youre (l. 1754) El has oure.

1773. Pathmos: 'Patmos.' Because th was always pronounced like t in Latin words — cf. the name Thomas — some words having the t-sound were improperly spelt with th. Some late spellings of this kind have become standard and are reproduced in our pronunciation; cf. author, anthem.

1775. Fleshly is an adverb; in El the Latin carnalitus is written above it.

1817. Rachel; cf. Matt. ii, 18.

1824. Hors is plural (cf. § 18).

1826. El has the masse.

1827. Covent: an old form of convent, still preserved in Covent Garden.

1838. To my semynge: as it appears to me.

1840. As by wey of kinde: in the course of nature.

1843. Cf. Psalm, civ, 31. Laste is subjunctive.

1850. anthephen: pron. 'antem'; the scribe confused the spellings of antiphona and antheme.

1873. El wrongly inserts alle after us.

1874ff. In the year 1255, according to Matthew Paris, a contemporary chronicler, the Jews of Lincoln stole a Christian boy, eight years old, named Hugh, and after assembling Jews from all parts of England, reenacted upon him all the tortures of the Crucifixion. They then disemboweled him, for certain uses in magic, and tried to dispose of the body; but the earth refused to receive and retain it. They finally threw it in a pit where his mother found it. Upon the confession of a Jew named Copyn, procured by the zeal of "dominus Johannes de Lexinton, vir quidem discretus et circumspectus, insuper eleganter literatus," the whole affair was discovered. Copyn himself was drawn to the gallows at the tail of a mare and then hanged; and later, eighteen of the richest Jews were similarly drawn and hanged and twenty-three others imprisoned to await the same punishment. Copyn declared that the Jews tried every year to procure a Christian child as a substitute for the paschal lamb, but often were unable to do so. Cf. Brown, The Miracle of Our Lady, pp. 87-99.

A play on the subject was performed in Lincoln at Christmas, 1316 (cf. Leach, The Schools of Med. England, pp. 192f.), which was probably still played in Chaucer's lifetime. He may have heard of it from his wife or his sister-in-law.

Similar stories have been told in modern times in Russia and in ancient times in various countries; the whole matter is discussed in Graf's History of the Jews.

THE WORDES OF THE HOOST (1881-1901)

1884-94. The older editors took these lines as a descriptive characterization of Chaucer. Tyrwhitt called them "a few touches descriptive of his own person and manner, by which we learn, that he was used to look much upon the ground; was of a corpulent habit; and reserved in his behavior." Skeat remarked: "We cannot be quite sure that the poet is serious; but these inferences are probably correct; cf. 'Lenvoy a Scogan,' 31." In the line referred to, Chaucer seems to include himself among those "that ben hore (white-haired) and rounde of shape," which agrees with the jocose description here in ll. 1890-92. But Knott has argued (MPb, VIII, 135-39) that Chaucer's manner here and his elvish look are not to be taken as permanent characteristics but as the natural effects of the touching story just told by the Prioress. Certainly I, 31f. represent him as far from shy, and his career as an official bears out this view.

Above or beside the word me, l. 1884, many MSS have the name Chaucer. At erst here means "first of all."

1894. Unto no wight dooth he daliance: he talks with no one.

1900. Ye: according to Skeat, ye is weaker than yis and "merely assents to what the last speaker says."

CHAUCLERS TALE OF THOPAS (1902-2108)

In making himself one of the group of story-tellers, Chaucer set himself a very pretty problem of manners. It would be highly unbecoming for him to tell the best tale — especially after the very complimentary remarks of the Man of Law — and hardly satisfactory for him to tell the poorest. He solved the problem with consummate skill, by first assigning to himself a burlesque romance that no reader could take for a serious effort on his part; having himself interrupted by the protests of the Host; and then pretending to be reduced to a "litel thing in prose," that is rather a moral discussion than a tale.

The Tb is commonly regarded as due to Chaucer's desire to satirize, or at least poke fun at, the poorer metrical romances of his day. Certainly he does disport himself gaily with their motifs, their absurdities of thought and speech, and their verse forms and technique. His attitude toward them, however, seems rather one of rollicking fun than of malicious satire; cf. Manly, "The Stanza-Forms of Sir Thopas," MPb, VIII, 141-44. To be successful, such a burlesque as Chaucer intended must be planned and executed on the scale of the romances themselves — otherwise it would be impossible to reproduce their wordiness, their longwindedness, their general futility; and at the same time it must be brief. The two apparently unreconcilable requirements are met perfectly by what may be called the "team-play" of Chaucer and the Host.

Chaucer begins his tale with all the requisite prolixity and is apparently ready to go on for countless thousands of lines, but he has recited only about two hundred when the Host abruptly and harshly stops him.

The stanza-form with which Chaucer begins is very common; examples of it may be found in most of the collections of Middle English Romances — cf. The Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell; Ancient English Metrical Romances, ed. Ritson; The Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Furnivall. The short verse of one accent (1983, 1993, 2003, 2013) was perhaps suggested by the romance of Sir Tristrem, ed. MacNeill (Scot. Text Soc.) and by Kölbing. Half an hour with such romances as Sir Percevall, Libeaus Desconus, Sir Eglamour will enable the student to enjoy Chaucer's fun as no amount of quotation could.

But it seems highly probable that Chaucer's primary object in writing was not so much to burlesque the minstrel romances as to produce a satire of the countrymen of Sir Thopas, and that his contemporaries enjoyed its subject matter even more than its form. In making ridiculous one of the bourgeois knights of Flanders Chaucer was sure of appealing to both the aristocracy and the London public. The Londoners hated the Flemings and were always ready to share in any sort of amusement at their expense; in 1381 they joyously took advantage of the insurrection of "Jakke Strawe and his meynce" to kill thirty-four of them. The attitude of the old aristocracy was notoriously supercilious and scornful. Two most striking examples of the laughter with which embassies of the Flemings were received at the French and English courts occur in successive chapters of Froissart (cv, cvi): once, during the siege of Oudenarde, when Philip van Artevelde sent letters to the king of France entreating him to aid in a reconciliation between the Flemings and their lord, the king had the letters read in the presence of his uncles and the council — who burst out into laughter — and then imprisoned the messenger for three weeks; again an embassy to England, charged with making an alliance and with requesting the repayment of 200,000 crowns lent forty years before by James van Artevelde and the states of Flanders, was received with concealed laughter by the lords of the council, who, says Froissart, "looked on them as proud and presumptuous in thus demanding a debt of 200,000 crowns of so very ancient a date as forty years." On the whole subject, cf. Manly, "The Rhyme of Sir Thopas," Essays and Studies of the English Association, vol. XIII.

Ill feeling against the Flemings may have been fostered in the minds of some of the English by the fact that for many years pensions were paid by the English exchequer to several of the Flemish leaders. Such men as Philip van Artevelde and Francis Ackerman were in receipt of large pensions for many years, and the commission sent to England to collect the old debt to the Flemings was apparently a charge on the exchequer for many months. One of the Exchequer Bille (3/6/19b) for Michaelmas to Easter, 7th Richard II, records a payment "A gens de Gaunt par ij taill' xxxviij li. vj s. viij d." As this payment was made at the custom's house it suggests the probability that Geoffrey Chaucer saw and knew these "men of Ghent." The same roll records the payment to him of xiiij li. vj s. viij d.

Miss Lilian Winstanley, in her edition of Sir Thopas, has argued that the special object of Chaucer's satire was Philip van Artevelde, but this personal identification seems to me unlikely. But it is perhaps not without significance that two theories so much alike as hers and mine were arrived at independently.

1907. Sire Thopas. Skeat points out that Thopas (topaz) is "an excellent name for such a gem of a knight." In June 1354 Edward III spoke of Oxford as "more precious to him than gold or topaz" (Lyte, Hist. Univ. of Oxford, p. 166). Whether Chaucer had in view any further symbolism is hard to say. Francesco Barberino (1264-1328) says the topaz was worn by young girls as a charm against luxury (cf. Hentsch, De la Litt. Didact. du Moyen Age, p. 109).

1910. No doubt the unwarlike character of Poperinghe was a special reason for making that the birthplace of the hero. Froissart represents the bishop of Norwich, who led the so-called Crusade of 1383, as saying: "We cannot better ride to our profit than to enter into the frontier of Flanders by the sea coast, as to the towns of Bourbourg, of Dunkirk, . . . of Ypres, and of Poperinghe; in these said countries, as I am informed by the burgesses of Ghent, they had never war that grieved them" (Johnes, chap. cxxxiii).

An additional reason is suggested by the reputation for stupidity which the men of that place had among their own countrymen. This was enshrined in a Latin couplet written after the king of France had devastated Ypres and Poperinghe in 1328, and is recorded in the Cronycke van Nederlent:

Flandrenses stultos francus rex Cassele multos
Stravit mille ter C bis duo sexque quater.

1911-13. As a matter of fact, the lord of Poperinghe was at this time a monk. Did Chaucer know this? His opportunities for knowing were abundant. F. H. d'Hoop, editor of the Charters of the Abbey of St. Bertin, says: "It results from charters granted by the kings of France and other persons of distinction that the abbot of St. Bertin was temporal lord of the town and district of Poperinghe, and that as such he exercised the civil power through a prior who acted in his name, except in matters of great importance, such as the alienation of rights. The provost of Poperinghe enjoyed high consideration, and with several monks he occupied very spacious buildings belonging to the church of St. Bertin" (Receuil des Chartes du Prieuré de Saint-Bertin, à Poperinghe, Introd., p. xiv).

1914-25. This description of the Flemish knight fits the theory that Chaucer was satirizing the bourgeois knights of Flanders. The comparison of his face with fine bread, his complexion with a dye for cloth, his beard with a coloring for pies and meats and confectionery; the shoes of cordewain leather, the brown Bruges hose—all suggest the tradesman, as does the silk robe that cost "many a jane" (= ha'penny).

1927. river: not 'river' but the Fr. rivière. Rivière originally meant 'the bank of a stream' (cf. V, 1197); then "hawking for waterfowl." This is perhaps the meaning of river in III, 884; cf. also Ywayne, 1443f.:

And ilk day had thai solace ser,
Of huntyng and als of revere.

Tyrwhitt quotes Froissart, i, ch. 210: "(King Edward) alloit chacun jour ou en chace ou en riviére." By a further development the word came to mean "waterfowl hunted with hawks"; cf. "For though it be that hawking with gentle hounds and hawks for the heron and the river (Reuere) be noble and commendable, it lasteth seldom at the most more than half a year" (Baillie-Grohman, pp. 1f).

1928. goshawk; not a hawk for a knight. Dame Berners in her Boke of Hawkyng (fo. d 3) gives the names of the hawks appropriate for emperor, king, prince, duke, earl, baron, knight, squire, lady, and young man, and continues: "And yit ther be moo kyndis of hawkes. Ther is a Goshawke and that hawke is for a yeman."

1930f. That wrestling for the prize of a ram was a favorite sport among the common people is well known; cf. I, 548, Gamelyn, 172: In earlier days it was practiced also by the nobility — cf. Matthew Paris's account of the ram set up in 1222 by the seneschal of the bishop of Westminster and the conflict which arose out of the march — but it is unlikely that in Chaucer's time English or French knights would take part in such plebeian sports.

1942. launcegay: a light, slender lance — apparently of Arabian or Moorish origin — well suited for hunting so fierce a beast as a hare.

1945f. What other wild beasts could one expect in the forests of Flanders?

1948f. Skeat thinks the 'sory care' was that Sir Thopas nearly killed his horse. In support of his view, he cites the romance of Amis and Amiloun (Weber, II, 410). But the lines seem merely introductory to the events that follow. The term 'a sory care,' where we expect a term implying a dangerous or fatal encounter, heightens the burlesque.

1950-55. Skeat regards these lines as a burlesque on The Squire of Low Degree, but that romance was probably not written until fifty years after Chaucer's death; cf. Wells, p. 149. The absurdity of finding the spices mentioned growing in a forest in Flanders is equaled only by the appeal which this stanza makes to the tastes of a plebeian. Cf. note on l. 2062.

1956-61. The sweet notes of the sparrowhawk and the parrot well offset the loud, clear voice of the wooddove.

1959. thrustelcok . . . her; so El, Dd, etc.; Ha⁴ and others remove the absurdity — and the humor — by emending her to his.

1968-73. What could better indicate the fierceness of heart of Sir Thopas? Gaf him good forage may mean "turned him out to graze"; but forage usually is 'dry fodder' and Sir Thopas was quite capable of the absurdity implied.

1974. benedicite: trisyllabic, see note on II, 1170.

1977. Me dremed. The earlier word for dream was meten, an impersonal verb with the word for the dreamer in the dative case. The newer verb dremen sometimes took the same construction.

1978. Any distinction that may once have existed between elves and fairies had disappeared not only before Chaucer identified them (cf. III, 859-60) but even before Layamon wrote of Argante, the queen who received King Arthur as "fairest alre alven" (cf. Emerson, A Mid. Eng. Reader, pp. 190-91).

1979. goore: properly, as now, a triangular insertion in a garment, but often used in this phrase in the romances for the whole garment.

1983. In towne: here a mere rhyme tag, in imitation of the language of the romances.

1987. Knights, theoretically at least, got into the saddle by 'vaulting,' not by 'climbing.'

1993. Instead of this line Tyrwhitt, who did not understand Chaucer's use of the single-stress lines, printed three lines:

Wherin he soughte North and South,
And oft he spied with his mouth
In many a forest wilde.

He implied that he found them in the MSS; but they really go back, through Urry to Speght's 1602 ed.; cf. Snyder in MPb, VI, 133ff.

1995. This line is found in only a few MSS, but Skeat thinks it is necessary to make sense. Surely the sense is clear enough without the insertion; the main argument for adopting it is that otherwise the stanza-form is varied in a manner not found elsewhere in the poem.

2014. El and Gg have:

Thyn hauberk shal I percen if I may;

the other MSS omit Thyn hauberk. In El the whole line is written over an erasure. Both sense and metre favor the reading of the other MSS.

2021f. Cf. Sir Eglamour, 569-70:

Of the helpe of God was alle his tryste
And of hys swerde so bryght.

2023-25. Cp, Pw, Ln insert For now in 2025, but cf. Sir Bevis of Hampton, ll. 1-3:

Lordynges, lystenyth, grete and smale;
Meryar then the nyghtyngale
I wylle you singe.

2026. sydes smale: more appropriate for a lady than for a knight.

2039. Why Sir Thopas wished to hear of popes and cardinals is not clear.

2040-77. The arming of Sir Thopas is purposely told with tedious detail.

2043. And gyngebreed: Hg and Gg read Of gyngebreed, which is probably correct. As has already been said, spicerie included not only such things as we now call spices but also foreign fruits, rice, silks, sandalwood; gingerbread, according to Skeat, is still included among spices in the North of England

2047. dide: put. I find no other example of leere meaning "skin" "body as a whole."

2050-58. The aketon was a wadded or quilted jacket worn under the armor for comfort and protection. The haubergeon originally covered only the throat, neck, and upper part of the chest, but in Chaucer's time was apparently a body-covering of chain mail (i.e. interwoven links or rings), reaching even to the knees. Skeats says the hauberk was "an upper coat of mail"; but cf. l. 2055: here it probably means the breastplate and backplate commonly worn over the chain haubergeon. A completely armed knight would also have his legs and feet covered with overlapping, skilfully-articulated plates of steel or studded leather (cf. l. 2065); and at this date, his head would be covered with a basinet with movable visor. Some knights wore an aventaille (cf. note on IV, 1204) to protect face and breast. The Jews were not only the principal money-lenders of the Middle Ages, but also the principal dealers in jewels and fine armor and weapons. This explains l. 2054, even if we do not suppose the hauberk was actually fabricated by Jewish workmen. The cote-armour was an overshirt or tunic of silk or fine linen painted or embroidered with the armorial bearings, or coat of arms, as we now call them. It did not protect the wearer but only identified him.

2062. In 1338, says a contemporary poem called "The Vows of the Heron," Robert, count of Artois, labored assiduously to inflame the ambition of the young King Edward III and incite him to war with France. In September he went hunting with his falcon along the river near London and caught a heron, which he took to the royal kitchen and ordered cooked and prepared for serving. While King Edward sat at table, concerned only with thoughts of pleasure and love and peace, Robert suddenly came in, followed by three minstrels and two noble maidens bearing the heron. Announcing that the heron, the most cowardly of birds, was destined for the greatest coward at the table, he presented it to the king, who, he explained, had tamely allowed the king of France to deprive him of the kingdom which rightly belonged to him. Edward, deeply stung by this reproach, vowed on the heron that before the end of the year he would invade France with fire and sword. Robert, overjoyed, made a similar vow, and then presented the heron to each of the knights. The ladies also made vows. The Earl of Salisbury, who was first approached, closed one of his eyes with the fingers of the Earl of Derby's daughter, with whom he was in love, and vowed that he would not open it again until he had invaded France. The lady herself vowed that she would accept no husband until Salisbury's return from the war. Other vows, many of them extravagant and absurd, were made.

This story is probably inaccurate if not entirely untrue, but it illustrates the spirit and habits of the time, and similar actual vows are recorded by Froissart (cf. Wright, Pol. Poems and Songs, I, pp. x-xviii, and notes). Vows on the swan, the peacock, and the pheasant form episodes in romances; cf. Wells, pp. 99, 105f., 242, and the references given there. Sir Thopas swears on ale and bread, as befits a bourgeois.

2065-73. The equipment was costly, but it may be doubted whether "cipress," despite its ominous bodings, was ever before used for the shaft of a spear.

2074. The "amble" was hardly the pace for a war horse.

2075. Ypotys, the story of how a Christian child converted the Roman emperor, gives a burlesque turn to this list of "romances of prys." For the text of Ypotys, see Horstmann, Altenglische Legenden (N.F.), pp. 341ff., 511ff.

THE HOOST STYNTETH CHAUCER (2109-56)

Chaucer's artistic reason for the interruption of Tb has already been discussed; see above p. 628f. The Host's disgust is apparently due to the fact that, despite elaborate preparations, nothing ever happens; and Chaucer seems to be on the verge of another long bit of elaborate inaction. The Host obviously wishes a rapid and plentiful stream of adventures.

2123ff. Why the Host declines to regard Sir Thopas as being in geeste is not clear, as this is the common term for romances. It may be that by geeste he means a true story. At any rate, his suggestion of something in prose, containing som doctrine, motivates the telling of the long prose Mel.

Chaucer's description of Mel as a litel thyng is a bit of characteristic humor, cf. VII, 2154 and X, 46; but it is literally a moral tale vertuous. Its interest for Chaucer and his contemporaries lay probably in the acute and ingenious dialectic contest between Melibeus and his wife and in the wealth of proverbs and maxims of worldly wisdom. We moderns care very little for such observations on human life; our ancestors, believing that "he is a fool who will not learn from the experiences of others," set a high value upon them. In education our emphasis is upon knowledge and power of thinking; theirs was upon wisdom for the successful conduct of life.

2131. For told El has take, which makes sense; but ll. 2133-38 indicate that told of the other MSS is correct.

2148. Note the position of with (§ 175).

CHAUCERS TALE OF MELIBEE

This tale is a close translation of a French treatise entitled Le Livre de Melibee et de Dame Prudence, which in its turn is a version of the Latin Liber Consolationis et Consilii, composed by an Italian judge, Albertano of Brescia, for the instruction of his sons, in 1246. The French text has never been edited; the Latin was edited by Thor Sundby for the Chaucer Society in 1873. The popularity of the treatise is attested by the existence of many MSS and by translations into Italian, French, Flemish, and English. Chaucer's version occupies fifty pages of the Chaucer Soc. edition; most readers of today will be satisfied with the brief specimen given here.

THE WORDS OF THE HOST TO THE MONK (3079-3180)

3082. No Saint Madrian is known. Both St. Materne and St. Mathurin have been suggested, but neither seems especially appropriate. Clearly the Host was not careful in choosing saints to swear by. It will be remembered that his Saint Ronyan (VI, 310) also is not found in the calendar. He is the only one of the pilgrims whose oaths are peculiar; cf. By corpus bones (VI, 314 and VII, 3096) and By corpus dominus (VII, 1625). That all these errors are parts of Chaucer's method of characterizing of the Host seems to me certain; cf. notes on VI, 305, 310.

3083. barel ale: cf. § 112 and note on VII, 1628.

3084. Goodelief. Miss Rickert has found that Godelief (variously spelled) appears often as a woman's name in fourteenth century records of Kent. It seems highly probable, therefore, that Chaucer uses it here as the name of the Host's wife. Whether it is a man's name (like German Gottlieb) or an epithet in III, 431 is uncertain. See Miss Rickert's letter to the London Times Lit. Supp., Dec. 16, 1926, 935 and MPh, XXV, 79-82. Kittredge calls my attention to the fact that there was a Saint Godelieva, whose day is April 18.

3094. home: missing in El and Hn, but in other MSS.

3107. do: make.

3112. seith: that is, mysseith; cf. I, 3139 and § 100.

3126. The sexteyn (or sacristan) and celerer (cellarer) were two of the most important and influential business officers of a monastery. The former had general supervision of the buildings and the church vessels and ornaments, and in a large monastery had one or more assistants; the latter had general supervision of everything relating to the food of the monks and the utensils of cellar, kitchen and refectory; he usually ranked next to the prior. For an account of the monastic officers, see Fosbroke, British Monachism, chaps. vii-xxiv; but a few minutes with the picturesque conflicts of the monks of Bury as told by Jocelin of Brakelond will give a vivid sense of the power and wealth of such officials (See the translation, ed. by Sir E. Clarke, in "The King's Classics").

3129. cloysterer: cf. note on I, 259.

3134. In the Middle Ages religion usually means a monastic order; a religious is a member of such an order. In the Church this usage is still preserved.

3157. sowneth into honestee: conforms to propriety.

3160. St. Edward: Edward the Confessor, a favorite English saint, scenes from whose life often decorated English churches; see Chambers, Book of Days, i, 53, 54, or Alban Butler, Lives of English Saints, under October 13.

3162. The Monk here seems to be distinctly a sedate and bookish person, altogether different from the conception given in the Prologue. Has Chaucer forgotten? Or did he change his mind? Which conception is the later? Cf. VII, 3995f.

3163ff. Tragedie. This term, applied in classical times only to drama — had, in the Middle Ages entirely lost its original signification. Creizenach's History of the Modern Drama, I, ch. 1, contains a good survey of mediaeval conceptions of tragedy. Dante's letter to Can Grande about the Divina Commedia specifies that tragedy should begin nobly and quietly and have a revolting and fearful end, and that it should be written in elevated style; cf. Epist. xiii, 28-30 (Le Opere, Soc. Dant. Ital., p. 439).

THE MONKES TALE

3181ff. MkT is properly not a tale but a collection of brief 'tragedies,' ranging in date from the fall of Lucifer to the death of Bernabo Visconti, Duke of Milan (1385). The longest of them is that of Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra (16 8-line stanzas); the most interesting is that of Ugolino, Count of Pisa (retold from Dante's Divina Commedia, Inferno, canto xxxiii), which seems to have been the latest written.

As the Monk has declared that he has a hundred tragedies in his cell, the pilgrims may well have been alarmed at the prospect of his reciting all of them. That the gentle and courteous Knight should interrupt him indicates that the situation seemed serious indeed; perhaps he was the only person who dared to do so. Hammond (pp. 241ff.) argues that originally the Host was the interrupter, but the evidence of the MSS hardly supports her view.

3917ff. The stanzas on the fall of Croesus are based on Boethius, ii, pr. 2, and RR, 6489-6548.

3951-53. I have kept the readings of El and Hg, which seem both more intelligible and better attested by MS authority than those adopted by Skeat and Pollard. Cf. Boethius, ii, pr. 2: What other thyng bywaylen the crynges of tragedyes but oonly the dedes of Fortune, that with unwar stroke overturneth the realmes of greet nobleye?

THE PROLOGUE OF THE NONNES PREEST

3972-75. This echoes a passage in the tale (ll. 3951-56), and perhaps the words no remedie of l. 3183; cf. also notes on II, 1165 and IV, 1213.

3982. In ll. 3119-20, the Host seemed not to know the Monk's name.

3984. Cf. I, 170. We now say "were it not for."

3990ff. Skeat refers to Ecclesiasticus, xxxii, 6:

"Ubi auditus non est, non effundas sermonem," and to Love's Lab. Lost, V, ii, 871ff.

4000. Sir John was a common designation of any priest whose name was unknown; but l. 4010 indicates that it really was the name of this priest.

4006. Cf. VII, 1900 and 2007.

THE NONNES PREESTES TALE (4011-4636)

The ultimate source of this tale is the Aesopic fable of the Cock and the Fox, many versions of which existed in the Middle Ages, but Miss Petersen has shown that Chaucer's immediate source was probably some version of the animal epic of Reynard the Fox. For a study of the numerous forms of this delightful mediaeval satire — or series of satires — see her book and G. H. McKnight Middle English Humorous Tales in Verse. Hinckley suggests that Chaucer may also have derived hints for his mock-heroic style from the Speculum Stultorum of Nigellus Wireker; cf. note on l. 4502.

4017. catel: personal property; rente: income.

4021. Keen: kine, cows. The other MSS have kyn (or kyne), which better represents the OE pl. cy (cf. Scotch kye) from cu (cow). The final n, making a double plural, is by imitation of nouns like oxen.

4022. Skeat thinks that the widow's cottage had two rooms, in one of which (the bower) she and her daughters slept, while "chaunticleer and his seven wives roosted on a perch in the hall and the swine disposed themselves on the floor." It seems more probable that the hall and bower were one and the same room; or that the "bower" was the loft above the single room of the cottage. For heating and cooking there would be a fire in the center of the hall and, as there was no chimney, the smoke would find its way out through the door and a sort of funnel which pierced the roof.

The cottage must have been much like that in which the earl of Flanders took refuge from a mob in 1382, as described by Froissart:

"The earl [of Flanders] inwardly bewailed his situation from street to street at this late hour, for it was a little past midnight, and he dared not enter any house, lest he should be seized by the mobs of Ghent and Bruges. Thus, as he was rambling through the streets, he at last entered the house of a poor woman, a very unfit habitation for such a lord, as there were neither halls nor apartments, but a small house, dirty and smoky, and as black as jet. There was only in this place one poor chamber, over which was a sort of garret that was entered by means of a ladder of seven steps, where, on a miserable bed, the children of this woman lay. . . .

"The earl of Flanders mounted the ladder as quickly as he could, and getting between the straw and the coverlid, hid himself. . . .

[The mob asked the woman where he was. She said she had seen no one] 'but I have just been at the door to throw out some water, which I then shut after me; besides, I have not any place to hide him in, for you see the whole of this house; here is my bed, and my children sleep overhead.'

"Upon this one of them took a candle, and mounted the ladder, and thrusting his head into the place, saw nothing but the wretched bed in which the children were asleep." — Johnes, ch. xcv.

4035. ey: the normal English form; the form egg comes from the Scandinavian invaders.

4036. deye: not merely a milkmaid, but a woman who looked after the cows and pigs and did other farm work; cf. "Bovers, vachers, berchers . . . deyes et touz autres gardeinz des bestes . . ." Act 37 Ed. III, c. 14, and Davenport, op. cit., p. 29. Sometimes, indeed, the term is applied to a man; cf. quot. under VI, 310 and Rogers, Six Centuries of Work and Wages, p. 94.

4039. a cok heet Chauntecleer: heet is 3 sg. pret. ind. In PE we can omit an objective relative but, as a rule, not a nominative. Thus we can say: 'I had a cock I called Chanticleer,' but not 'I had a cock was called Chanticleer.' But curiously enough, we can say, 'I saw a man I think was called Bill.'

4041. orgon is regularly plural in ME, because of the Lat. organa and because the number of pipes seemed to justify the plural. Contemporary pictures of organs and plastic representations of them indicate that, besides the small portable instruments, there were others, of considerable range; cf. especially Galpin, Old English Instruments of Music.

4044. Some of the mediaeval orloges, or clocks, were very elaborate and wonderful. In 1326 the abbot of St. Albans built one which showed the movements of the planets and the ebb and flow of the tides, as well as the time. Similar clocks, usually repaired in modern times, are at Wimborne Minster (c. 1320), Wells Cathedral (c. 1325), St. Mary Ottery (c. 1340), Exeter Cathedral (c. 1310), and a few other places.

4045ff. It was popularly believed that the cock had exact knowledge of the passage of time and crew every hour; cf. the two quotations given by Hinckley, p. 128 and his reference to Gawayne and the Green Knight, MPh, xvi, 40.

4060. No earlier instance of Pertelote as the name of the hen seems to have been found; the derived form Partlet is common later; cf. Falstaff in Henry IV, pt. I, III, iii, 60.

4069. Skeat found in MS. R, 3, 19 of Trinity Coll., Camb. a song which may be a later version of the one here quoted:

My life is faren in lond.
 Allas, why is she so?
 And I am so sore bound,
 I may not come her to.
 She hath my hert in hold,
 Where-ever she ryde or go,
 With trew love a thousand-fold.

4079ff. Although Chauntecleer is said to have seven wives (4056), six of them do not affect the story, and Chauntecleer and Pertelote are in general presented as a vain and somewhat opinionated husband and his sensible, matter-of-fact wife. Her solicitude for his health is no less delightful than her knowledge of "home remedies." The anthropomorphism is helped by such touches as gronen (4076), as well as womman (4102) and Pertelote's list of the qualities desirable in a husband (4104-10); cf. the qualities of the ideal king (V, 19ff.) and what Henryson calls the A B C of 'luves lair,' Robane and Makyne, st. 2:

At luves lair gife thou wilt leir,
 Tak thair ane A B C;
 Be keynd, courtass, and fair of feir,
 Wyse, hardy, and fre;
 So that no danger do thee deir,
 Quhat dule in dern thou dre;
 Preiss thee with pane and alle poweir,
 Be pacient and previe.

4104. free: liberal, the opposite of nygard.

4106. tool: weapon; Hinckley quotes Romeo and Juliet, I, i, 31 and Samson Agonistes, 137.

4112. Macrobius (whom Chaunticleer so triumphantly cites in 4313ff.) in his Commentary on the Somnium Scipionis (I, iii), distinguishes five kinds of dreams (somnium, visio, oraculum, insomnium, visum), the last two of which he says are unworthy of interpretation. Pertelote obviously classifies her husband's dream as an insomnium (or sweven), and in assigning the bodily cause she ascribes it to excess of red and black bile (cholera and melancholia, cf. 4136). She also fears that the sun in its ascension, acting upon his choleric complexion, may cause fever. All this is quite in harmony with mediaeval medical science. Diseases were referred to external causes operating on one or more of the four humors, or fluids of the body: blood, cholera, bile (or phlegm), and black bile (melancholia). According to Avicenna, one of the greatest authorities, a tertian fever was the result of cholera; a quartan, of melancholia (cf. Canon Medicinæ, lib. IV, fen 1, tract. ii, chaps. xxxv-xl and lxi-lxvii). Batman uppon Bartholomæ — a sort of family cyclopedia, tells us that excess of cholera causes dreams of "fire, and of lyghtening, and of dreadfull burning of the ayre," while melancholia causes "dredfull darke dreames, and very ill to see" (lib. iv, capp. 10 and 11). For further information see Curry, ch. ix.

4114. fume: vapours arising from the humours were supposed to ascend to the cells of the brain; cf. note on I, 1376.

4130f. Caton: In the fourth century A.D. some unknown author wrote a collection, in four books, of maxims in the form of distichs. They embodied proverbial wisdom on many subjects, and, being well expressed, became very popular. From a very early date down to the time of Shakespeare they were studied in the schools, and versions of them were made in the vernacular languages. They are commonly cited as Disticha Catonis de Moribus and were anciently ascribed to Cato the elder. Pertelote quotes the first three words of bk. II, dist. 32 (ed. 1598):

Somnia ne cures; nam mens humana, quod optat,
 Cum vigilat sperans, per somnum cernit idipsum.

(Trust not dreams; for what the human mind desires, hoping for while it lies awake, that very thing it sees in sleep.)

4138ff. In ancient times good housewives prided themselves on a knowledge of medicinal herbs, grew them in their gardens, and prescribed them gladly.

The editors have proved that the herbs recommended by Pertelote are just what a good mediaeval wife would have given her husband under similar circumstances — though she would probably have spared him the digestives of wormes! Curry's idea (p. 224) that a woman would normally be ignorant of these subjects is odd.

4156. As herbe yve is extremely nauseous (The Book of Quinte Essence, p. 16, says that a "stewe hoot and moist . . . with eerbe yve and sauge" has "an hevenly strenkthe" — which seems probable), mery must be used ironically. Chaucer badly needed it here for the rhyme, but in general, he seems curiously fond of the word, using it almost with the freedom of slang.

Curry is mistaken in thinking (p. 225) that herbe yve is a species of ivy. William Turner, The Names of Herbes (A.D. 1548, ed. English Dialect Soc.), p. 30 says: "Coronopus, named in greke coronopous, is called in Cambrýge herbe Ive, and it myghte also wel be named crowfote weybreaðe, it groweth muche aboute Shene above London . . ." The berries of coronopus are called gaitrys beryes.

4173. The verray preeve: the true proof, experiment. But Chaunticleer, like many another mediaeval scholar, when he praised experiment as superior to authority, did not really mean scientific experiment but only reports or statements of supposed facts by persons of high standing in religion or philosophy. And therefore we have here, in true mediaeval fashion, a long series of anecdotes offered as proof. Chaunticleer obviously tries to overwhelm Pertelote with his "auctours," and he does not even allow her the traditional right of the last word.

4174. The first two anecdotes have been found in Cicero, in Valerius Maximus, and in the exempla of Robert Holkot. Chaucer's versions differ from all three and he may have had some other source, but Miss Petersen (pp. 98-102) makes out a strong case for Chaucer's repeated use of Holkot in this Tale.

4235. Harrow: this is not merely an exclamation of grief, but the ancient Norman cry with which the community was roused to pursue a criminal.

4240. In the margin the scribe has written "Auctor," as if ll. 4240-47 were an aside by Chaucer, but the scribe was probably mistaken, as the context seems to give them to Chaunticleer; cf. note on IV, 995ff.

4243. wlatsom: Hinckley points out that the w was pronounced in Chaucer's day. In Purity it alliterates with words in w. Cf. MPh, xvi 41.

4256. As no book has yet been found in which Chaunticleer's second story is in the next chapter after his first, it is possible that he is deceiving Pertelote by a pretense of scrupulous accuracy. His insistence is suspicious.

4257-63. The sentence is broken and the syntax confused.

4300. Legends of the saints were familiar to all educated people of the Middle Ages. Kenulphus (Cenwulf) King of Mercia, dying in 821, left his son Kenelm, a child only seven years old, heir to his crown, under the tutelage of his sister Quendride. One day Kenelm dreamed that he saw a noble tree with waxlights on it and that when he climbed to the top of it, one of his friends cut it down and he turned into a little bird and flew to heaven. Shortly after, his ambitious aunt hired an assassin who killed him and buried him under a thorn tree. A miraculous ray of light shining above the place led to the discovery of his body. Cf. Alban Butler, Lives of the Saints; Early Engl. Poems ed. Furnivall, p. 51; and Caxton's Golden Legend.

4308. litil tale hath he toold: he took little heed.

4313ff. the avision — of the worthy Cipion. The Somnium Scipionis is a chapter of the sixth book of Cicero's De Republica. During the Middle Ages the De Republica was little known, but Macrobius had, about 400 A.D. compared Cicero's Dream of Scipio with Plato's famous Vision of Er (from his Republic, bk. x) and written an elaborate commentary on them, discussing the nature of dreams, the properties of numbers, the immortality of the soul, the structure of the universe, and other subjects. This treatise — perhaps because of the Dream — was very popular in the Middle Ages. That Chaucer knew the Dream is certain; he incorporated it in PF. Hinckley thinks he did not read the commentary, but this is hardly credible. Chaucer was intensely interested in many of the subjects discussed in the commentary.

4331ff. Homer was scarcely known, except by name, to the Latin world in the Middle Ages. Even Roger Bacon, who wrote a Greek grammar, and Dante, one of the most learned of poets, knew the Iliad only by report. There was a Latin translation, but most of the western nations claimed descent from the Trojans and disregarded the Homeric account of the Trojan war as being untrue. Mediaeval Troy stories are therefore based on prose accounts supposed to have been written by two eye-witnesses: Dares Phrygius and Dictys Cretensis. See Griffin, Dares and Dictys, or Taylor, The Mediaeval Mind, ch. 32, or Young, Orig. and Devel. of Story of Troilus and Criseyde.

The dream of Andromache is in Dares, chap. xxiv; cf. the Troy-book, ed. Panton and Donaldson (EETS), ll. 8425ff.

4352ff. Whether In principio refers to the first words of Genesis or to those of the Gospel of St. John makes no difference; the certainty was equal. Chaunticleer, with his false translation, has his characteristic marital jest, with no danger of retaliation from poor Pertelote, who did not understand Latin; but to the reader it is epic irony, for the real sentiment turns out to be as "siker as In principio." Mediaeval satirists of woman were fond of the reply said to have been made by the philosopher Secundus to the Emperor Hadrian's question, "Quid est mulier?" The reply was: "Hominis confusio, insaturabilis bestia, continua sollicitudo, indesinens pugna, viri incontinentis naufragium, humanum mancipium." How great a favorite the passage was is indicated by Carleton Brown, MLN, XXXV, 479-82. St. Chrysostom has an even longer series of epithets for the wicked woman: "Quid aliud est mala mulier nisi amicitiae inimica, ineffugabilis poena, necessarium malum, naturalis tentatio, desiderabilis calamitas, domesticum periculum, dilectabile detrimentum, mali natura, boni colore depicta." (Super Mat., xix.) And the same saint devotes a long paragraph in his sermon on the beheading of John the Baptist to the evils wrought by women, beginning with Mother Eve. A thirteenth century MS of extracts on the Vices and Virtues contains a series made up from the two Chrysostom passages, cf. Manuscripts Libri et Barrois, p. 192. Cf. also Mel, l. 2295.

4377ff. The traditional view was that the world was created at the vernal equinox — normally March 21, but in Chaucer's time, owing to the defects of the Julian Calendar, March 12. Roger Bacon (Opus Tertium, p. 208), referring to Josephus, tried to prove that the year should begin with October, but his argument had no effect. The date of Chaunticleer's misfortune was obviously May 3, as March was complete and thirty-two days more had passed. The sun was then in the 22nd degree of Taurus, as it entered Aries on March 11. Brae, in his edition of Chaucer's Astrolabe, pp. 98ff., showed, as Francis Thynne had done long before, that Chaunticleer's estimate of the height of the sun and his inference that it was 9 A.M. (prime) were entirely correct.

4395. See Proverbs (Rev. Version), xiv, 13, a sentiment repeated with endless variations and embellishments throughout the Middle Ages.

4402f. Cf. VI, 287. Chaucer cannot have forgotten the famous passage in the Inferno in which Francesca da Rimini tells to Dante and his guide the story of her love for Paolo and the part played in it by the romance of Lancelot (cf. the translation of the episode by Rossetti); but here he is writing, not as sentimentalist, but as humorist. Hinckley points out that Walter Map, the supposed original author of the Launcelot, was not regarded as a serious and truthful writer by his contemporaries. About 1185 Hugh of Rutland, like Map a native of Herefordshire, wrote in his romance of Ipomedon:

Sul ne sai pas de mentir l'art,
Walter Map reset ben sa part.

(I alone do not understand the art of lying; Walter Map knows well his part in it.)

4409. By heigh ymaginacion forn-cast: predestined by divine foresight.

4417ff. Judas Iscariot is called Judas Scariot in the Vulgate. Genylon is Ganelon who betrayed the French army to the Saracens in the Chanson de Roland. Synon was the Greek who designed the horse — of wood, according to Dictys, of brass, according to Guido delle Colonne — which caused the fall of Troy.

4424-40. Chaucer was apparently much interested in the problem of predestination and free will. He discusses or refers to it at every opportunity; cf. especially the long discussion in TC, IV, 953-1078. The principal authorities in his day were St. Augustine, Boethius, St. Thomas Aquinas, and Archbishop Bradwardine, but Chaucer nowhere quotes or mentions Thomas Aquinas, and St. Augustine he seems to know only at secondhand. Boethius he not only translated but had studied carefully; Thomas Bradwardine, commonly called Doctor Profundus, was lecturer at Oxford, chancellor of St. Paul's, chaplain of King Edward III, and, at his death in 1349, archbishop of Canterbury. Chaucer's father may have known him, as they both accompanied the King on his trip to Germany in 1338. In any event Bradwardine's Oxford lectures in support of predestination were famous in their day. They were printed in 1618, under the title De Causa Dei, in a huge folio of 876 pages. He also wrote on the quadrature of the circle, on speculative arithmetic and geometry, and on the art of remembering (a system much like some modern ones).

Foreknowledge that involved compelling one to do the thing foreknown would destroy free will. This, following his predecessors, Chaucer calls 'simple necessity.' If however you know that a certain man is doing a certain thing, it follows necessarily that he is doing it. This is 'necessity conditional.' But, as all time is for God an eternal now, he sees the future as well as the present, and therefore his foreknowledge does not compel the actions he foreknows.

4443. with sorwe: here, as often, an imprecation about the equivalent of 'confound her!'

4446. Skeat quotes the Proverbs of Alfred (13th cent.) l. 336, "Celd red is quene red," — apparently a translation from the Icelandic; and he refers to a similar sentiment in Mel (VII, 2286).

4453. The Wife of Bath gives a full outline of such a treatise; cf. III, 711-87. The blame of Eve for "Man's first disobedience" is a commonplace of mediaeval satire.

4460-62. Christian writers very early drew ethical or theological lessons from the real or fanciful characteristics of animals, plants, and precious stones. A collection of such interpretations of animals was called "Physiologus" by Origen. The old English poems of the "Panther" and the "Whale" belong to this type. A Latin poem, probably by Theobald, abbot of Monte Cassino (1022-35), was the basis of a French Bestiaire and a Middle English Bestiary; cf. An Old Engl. Miscellany, ed. Morris (EETS). The Encyc. Brit. gives a good summary of modern research on the Physiologus. The classical sirens were, and still are, popularly identified with mermaidens.

4467. Hinckley cites Skeat as having proved that "to cry, 'Cock' is to acknowledge oneself beaten." But Skeat himself — rightly, I think — says, "To cry cok! cok! refers rather to the utterance of rapid cries of alarm, as fowls cry when scared." Douglas and Ruddiman, in the passages quoted to support the other view, are merely misinterpreting this passage from Chaucer.

4468-71. This passage calls to mind Charles Lamb's theory of natural antipathies.

4484. How well Boethius could sing was perhaps known only to the Fox, but he wrote a treatise on music that was used as a textbook in the Middle Ages and is still valued for the information it gives about ancient music.

4490. An elaborate assurance that he is speaking the truth; for similar expressions Skeat refers to Havelok and Hinckley to Gamelyn.

4502. Daun Burnel the Asse: In the closing years of the twelfth century, Nigel Wireker, the precentor of Canterbury, satirized the discontent and worldly ambitions of the regular clergy in a long Latin poem, entitled Speculum Stultorum. The hero is an ass named Burnellus — after the fashion of the beast epic — who is dissatisfied with the length of his tail. To procure a longer one he visits famous schools of his day, the medical school of Salerno and the University of Paris. His adventures and experiences are shaped with a view to the satire.

The tale of the Cock's revenge referred to by Chaucicleer in ll. 4503-06 of our poem is told to illustrate the danger of offending even the humble. The story is briefly this: The son of a priest one day struck one of his father's little chickens with a stick and broke its leg. The leg healed, but the chicken nourished its sense of injury and meditated revenge. Five years later when he had grown to be a fine cock and had taken his place as head of the henyard, his chance came. The young priest had, after much difficulty, obtained the promise of succession to his father's benefice and was to be consecrated on a certain day. To celebrate the occasion a great feast was held on the night before the important day, and Gundulf, the young priest, went to bed late and somewhat the worse for the celebration, relying upon the crowing of the cock at dawn to wake him in time to start for the place of consecration. But the cock remembered his ancient injury and despite the remonstrances of his wife — another Pertelote — refused to crow. Gundulf overslept, and lost his benefice. The poem was published by Thomas Wright in Anglo-Latin Satirical Poets and Epigrammatists of the Twelfth Century, I, 3-145.

4519. The reference is, as Skeat says, not to Ecclesiastes, but to the apocryphal book Ecclesiasticus, xii, 10, 11, 16.

4524. daun Russell: in the beast epic of Reynard the Fox, the beasts have characterizing names. Rosseel is the name of the youngest son of the old fox in the Dutch Reinaert.

4531ff. The reasons why Chaucicleer's misfortune occurred on Friday are manifold. In the first place, Friday is the day of Venus, and Chaucicleer is Venus' servant. Then, too, in popular superstition, Friday is in general a day of ill luck; the great misfortunes of the world occurred on Friday: Adam was driven out of Paradise late Friday afternoon, the Deluge began on Friday night, Judas betrayed Jesus Friday morning, and Friday was the day of the Crucifixion. Chaucer plays on this superstition and in ll. 4537-44 includes in his satire a hit at the stylistic absurdities of Gaufred de Vinsauf, the author of a much admired treatise on the art of poetry. Gaufred not only told how to write poetry but had the temerity to try to illustrate his principles of composition. The passage ridiculed is a turgid, high-sounding lamentation for the death of Richard I—who was wounded on a Friday—addressed to Neustria (the whole Western World). A few lines will show the bombast and the play on words:

Mors non fuit eius,
Sed tua; non una sed publica mortis origo.
O Veneris lacrimosa dies! O sydus amarum!
Illa dies tua nox fuit, at Venus illa venenum.

(The death was not his, but thine; not single, but a public source of death. O lamentable day of Venus! O bitter star! That day was thy night, and that Venus thy venom.)

Chaucer's knowledge of Gaufred, Nigel Wireker, and other writers of the twelfth century is of interest in connection with the question of his reflections on the art of writing and his remarkable development as an artist. On this see Manly, Rbet. Gaufred's Nova Poetria is now accessible in E. Faral's Les Arts Poétiques du XII^e et du XIII^e Siècle.

4545ff. The allusions to the fall of Troy, the capture of Carthage, and the burning of Rome are in the usual mock-heroic style popular in all ages. The story of the wife of Hasdrubal, King of Carthage was known to Chaucer from several sources: Valerius Maximus, Dicta et Facta (iii, 2), St. Jerome, Adv. Jovinianum (i, 43) and Boccaccio, De Casibus Virorum et Foeminarum Illustrium (bk. v). Boccaccio's account is the most elaborate of these. For the use of the genitive as a book title (Eneydos, 4549), see II, 93.

4568f. Note the confusion of constructions.

4571. Ha, ha: This was the regular way of representing a shout to frighten a fox or a wolf; cf. Tatlock, MLN, XXIX, 143.

4572f. man: cf. 4077, 4102, 4110, 4124, etc. For Talbot as the name of a dog see OED or Cent Dict., s.v. Whether Talbot and Gerland are dogs, like Colle, or human beings, like Malkin, makes little difference; in the world of folk tale beasts and men are on an equality. Malkin is the conventional name in song and story for a country maid.

4578. 'They ran so, it seemed to them their heart would break'; breke, subjunctive.

4580. men: indefinite, 'somebody.'

4584. he Jakke Straw: in ME he, him are often used like demonstratives, meaning 'that famous, or notorious' so-and-so. The construction is not to be taken as apposition. Like some of his contemporaries (Knighton, II, 138), Chaucer seems to have thought that Jack Straw was a name assumed by Wat Tyler, the leader of the rebels in the insurrection at London in 1381. All contemporary accounts tell of the terror inspired by the insurgents; and we learn from Walsingham's Historia Anglicana (I, 462) and from Riley's Memorials of London (p. 450) that they slew many Flemings. It is curious that Chaucer nowhere else definitely mentions this notable event; but perhaps he missed its historic significance, and thought no more of it than some of us do of a great strike accompanied by rioting.

4620. wynke: in early English, wynke regularly means 'to shut the eye(s),' not 'to shut and open the eye.'

4632. Romans, xv, 4.

4633. Proverbial: Skeat quotes the Testament of Jean de Meun, one of the authors of RR.

4635. A note in several MSS explains that this refers to the Archbishop of Canterbury. But if the Prioress, the Nun, and the Priest came from Stratford-le-Bow, the ecclesiastical lord of the Priest was the Bishop of London; for the will of Elizabeth of Hainault, sister of Queen Philippa, who died a nun at Stratford in 1375, was probated in the court of the Bishop of London; see the will in Bentley, Excerpta Historica, pp. 23-25.

[THE NUNS' PRIEST'S END-LINK (4637-52)]

In ten of the manuscripts the Nuns' Priest's Tale is followed by a passage of sixteen lines intended to connect it with some tale which was to follow. These lines, as given by MS Dd 4, 24, are:

Sire Nonnes Preest oure hoost seide a noon
 I-blissed be thy breche and euery ston
 This was a murie tale of Chauntecleer
 But by my trouthe if thou were seculer 4640
 Thow woldest ben a tredfoul a-right
 ffor if thou haue corage as thou hast myght
 The were nede of hennes as I wene
 Ya moo than seuene tymes seuentene
 Se which braunes hath this gentil Preest
 So gret a nekke and swich a large breest
 he loketh as a Sperhauke with hise eyen him nedeth nat his colour for to dyghen with brasile ne with greyn of Portyngale
 Now sire faire falle yow for youre tale 4650
 And after that he with ful merie chere
 Seide vn to a nother as ye shuln heere

The ten manuscripts containing these lines are Dd, Ds, En¹, Ad¹, En², Ma¹, Cn, Cx², Ch, and Ry¹. Four of the ten manuscripts (Ad¹, En², Ma¹ and Ca) read the Nunne instead of a nother in l. 4652 and have six additional lines:

Madame and I durst I wolde you pray
 To telle a tale in fortheryng of our way
 Than might ye do vnto vs gret eese
 Gladly sire quod she so that I myht please
 You and this worthi company
 And began hir tale riht thus fulle sobirly.

The six additional lines are surely spurious. Formerly I held that the first sixteen were patched together from the Host's words to the Monk (VII, 3114-52) early in the fifteenth century by some one who had caught the trick of Chaucer's verse. At present I am in doubt. It seems possible, if not probable, that Chaucer first wrote this passage for the Nuns' Priest and later decided to use the ideas for the Host's remarks to the Monk. Naturally, he then cancelled this passage; and so it does not appear in any of the MSS representing the latest status of CT. But as it had already got into circulation, some MSS have it.

FRAGMENT VIII (FURNIVALL'S GROUP G)

THE SECONDE NONNES TALE (1-553)

The tale of the Nun who accompanied the Prioress as her chaplain (I, 163-64) is recognized by all Chaucer scholars as being an earlier composition which Chaucer utilized with very little change for CT. The prologue with which it is provided does not serve to connect it in any way with the Canterbury journey, but only as an introduction to the tale itself. The clearest indication of the lack of revision is afforded by ll. 61-62:

And though that I unworthy sone of Eve
Be synful, yet accepte my bileve.

These lines are clearly inappropriate in the mouth of a woman.

It should be added that the text does not indicate who was the teller of the tale. The only evidence that Chaucer assigned it to the Nun is that of the headings of prologue and tale and the colophon in the MSS, but practically all of them agree in the assignment to the "Seconde Nonne." Brusendorff (p. 131) questions whether the assignment to her is due to Chaucer. Whatever one may think of this, it is probable that Chaucer had not formed any clear conception of the Second Nun or of the part to be played by her on the pilgrimage. Not only is the description of her lacking in the Prologue, but she is at no time represented as speaking or as being spoken to; cf. note on I, 163f.

The most interesting part of the Prologue consists of the three stanzas (ll. 36-56) translated from Dante's Paradiso, xxxiii, 1-18, with additions from some Latin hymn or prayer; cf. Lowes, MPb, XV, 193-202. The tone of both Prologue and Tale is one of deep religious feeling, and affords little support to those who believe Chaucer to have been seriously affected with tendencies resembling modern agnosticism; cf. Tupper, MLN, XXX, 9-11, and Carleton Brown, ibid., 231f.

The Tale itself is a paraphrase, varying considerably in closeness, of the life of St. Cecilia as given in the Legenda Aurea of Jacobus de Voragine.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE CHANONS YEMANNES TALE (554-719)

Those who assume, as editors commonly do, that all the extant tales belong to the journey from London to Canterbury, infer from ll. 555-56 and 588-89 that the pilgrims had spent the night at Ospringe, about forty-five miles from London; and that after they left their inn in the morning they were seen by the Canon and his Yeoman, who, recognizing the character of the party, were anxious to join it (cf. ll. 588-92). That the Canon also had an eye to the possibility of establishing profitable connections with some of the pilgrims may be inferred from the promptness with which the Yeoman begins to advertise his master's accomplishments (ll. 599-614). That Chaucer had from the beginning planned this incident cannot be proved, but is extremely probable. There is no evidence of its being an afterthought. To have given any intimation in the "Prologue" that such an addition to the party was to occur would have been very bad art; cf. Kittredge, "The Canon's Yeoman's Prologue and Tale," Trans. Roy. Soc. of Lit., XXX, 87ff. Some of those who have discussed Kittredge's view seem not to distinguish clearly between an afterthought and an incident planned from the first by the author but introduced as a surprise.

The general management of the episode is so skilful dramatically that there is little room for doubt that it belongs to the period of Chaucer's maturest art, yet there is one feature which seems to demand explanation. The Yeoman relates freely and in detail the story of his master's unsuccessful attempts to turn the baser metals into gold, and then volunteers to tell a story of similar experiences by another canon which differs very little in its essential outlines from that which he has just told about his master. In both tales the alchemist is described as a canon, and although ll. 839-40 indicate that men of the church were especially prone to the study and practice of alchemy, it would seem probable that Chaucer had some special motive for making his alchemist a canon in both instances. This motive is perhaps disclosed by an article by H. G. Richardson ("Year Books and Plea Rolls," Trans. Roy. Hist. Soc., 1922, 4 Ser., V, 28-70). He produces from the Plea Rolls information about an alchemist who was a canon of Windsor, with whom Chaucer, as a member of the royal household and a frequent visitor to Windsor, was almost certainly acquainted. "William de Brumley, chaplain, later dwelling with the prior of Harmandsworth, was arrested by order of the King's Council with four counterfeit pieces of gold upon him. He expressly acknowledged that he had by the art of alchemy made these pieces from gold and silver and other medicines, to wit sal armoniak, vitriol, and golermonik [whatever that may be] . . . He said that he made the metal according to the teaching (per doctrinam) of William Shuchirch, Canon of the King's Chapel at Windsor." Richardson inquires whether William Shuchirch may not have been the canon whom Chaucer had in mind when he wrote "The Canon's Yeoman's Tale." Certainly Chaucer's intimate knowledge of the theories and processes of alchemy as displayed in the Prologue and Tale indicate either close association with some alchemist or an independent study of the subject, for which the motive can hardly have been the mere desire to obtain materials for a story. Loyalty to Chaucer as a man of good sense and judgment disinclines one to believe that he had himself been a devotee and a victim, but many men of equal eminence have yielded to the mysterious fascination of alchemy, and Chaucer's profound knowledge of both alchemy and astrology suggests that his temperament at least felt the attractions of pursuits beyond the border-line of conventional science.

It must be borne in mind that Chaucer lived at a time when the interest in alchemy was especially prevalent among scientific men and rulers. There is an incredible report that Raimon Lull visited England and made gold for Edward III, and an unconfirmed legend that Henry IV was a patron of alchemists. Charles VI of France is said to have attempted to use the services of Nicholas Flamel, one of the most famous alchemists of all time (cf. Schmieder, Geschichte der Alchimie, p. 196). The legend of Flamel is extremely picturesque.

In January, 1357, it is said, he bought for two crowns a MS written on bark. Not understanding the strange characters, he could make no use of it until 1378, when he visited Spain and found in Santiago a Christian Jew who could read them. He was now able to study the book, and on January 17, 1382, he for the first time turned quicksilver into silver and three months later twice turned the same metal into gold. His wealth rose to one and a half million livres. Having no children, he and his wife Peronelle devoted their wealth to charity. They endowed fourteen hospitals, built three chapels, and rebuilt seven churches (cf. Lenglet du Fresnoy, Hist. de la Phil. Hermetique, I, 206-17). His will was dated 1402, and he died in 1413, but there is a legend that he and his wife left Paris and lived in India until 1700.

555f. The village of Boughton is in the Blean Forest, about five miles from Ospringe.

573. Chaucer recognizes the principal one of the newcomers as a canon by his dress. The fact that his cloak was sewed to his hood apparently settled the problem of his order. There were several orders of canons. Some of them lived in separate establishments, much like those of the monks but observing a less strict code of rules; others belonged to the secular clergy and were attached to cathedrals and other large churches. Chaucer's Canon seems to have belonged to the latter class.

645. In the margin of El is written: "Omne quod est nimium &c." Here "&c" probably stands for 'vertitur in vitium.' Few doctrines of antiquity appealed more strongly to men of the Middle Ages than that which emphasizes moderation and the danger of "too much."

665. Peter; cf. note on III, 446.

669. multiplie, the technical term for transmuting baser metals into gold. In all these processes a small quantity of gold seems to have been necessary to start with; cf. 674ff.

688. Caton, the popular collection of proverbial wisdom known as Dionysii Catonis Disticha de Moribus. Chaucer here quotes from lib. i, dist. 17:

Ne cures si quis tacito sermone loquatur;
Consciis ipse sibi de se putat omnia dici.

The English version in the Vernon MS (Minor Poems of the Vernon Manuscript, EETS, p. 567) is as follows:

Yif thou seo men speke stille,
A-meoved beo thou nougt:
The wikked mon weneth that alle men
Have him in heore thouht.

THE CHANONS YEMANNES TALE

724. The El picture so represents him. The poverty implied by this head-dress is indicated in the proverb, "A man's a man though he have but a hose on his head."

745. El has in the margin "solacium miseriorum &c." In Marlowe's Dr. Faustus, II, i, 42, the proverb is quoted in the form: "Solamen miseris socios habuisse doloris." This is the source of our "Misery loves company."

770ff. Sublimation, amalgamation, calcination are processes regularly met with in all the accounts of transmutation. Sublimation is vaporization by means of heat; amalgamation is mixing of metals to form a compound, especially of quicksilver, with other metals; calcination is the reduction of a metal to an oxide by the application of a slow heat in the presence of air. The processes of sublimation, descension, distillation (per alembicum, per descensorium, et per filtrum), calcination, solution, coagulation, fixation, and ceration are minutely described by Geber, whom Arnaldus de Villanova calls "magister magistrorum," in his Summa Perfectionis Magisterii, lib. 2 (ap. Manget, Bib. Chem., vol. I).

774. sublymed mercurie, here apparently 'crude mercury which has been purified by sublimation.' But most alchemists warn their readers that none of the names of substances used in alchemy are to be taken in their ordinary meaning; the mercury, sulphur, arsenic, sal armoniak, etc., meant when these terms are used being not the ordinary substances but others known only to the initiated. This idea appears in almost all alchemical writings. In a Latin letter purporting to be addressed by Roger Bacon to a certain William of Paris, the recipient is expressly told that wise men in all ages have found it necessary to hide the great truths of science and philosophy from the world and to express them in such terms as can be understood only by those worthy to understand them. Among the various modes of concealment there enumerated the principal ones are: figurative language, the designation of substances by other names than their right ones, and the use of various forms of cipher or cryptography. This letter is printed at the end of Bacon's Opera Minora (ed. Brewer), and is an excellent example of the methods of concealment specified. Some scholars — wrongly, I think — regard it as written for the purpose of explaining in figurative language the method of making gunpowder; see the article on gunpowder in the Encycl. Brit.

775. The order of words is peculiar. We should say: Our litarge (protoxide of lead) ground in porphyry (i.e. a porphyry mortar).

778f. For the four spirits see ll. 822-24; the matters that remain fixed are apparently the seven bodies enumerated in ll. 825-29.

788ff. The Yeoman gives a long and disorderly list of substances, instruments, and processes; as if he had merely heard them talked about, but did not himself understand them. All of them were in common use in alchemy, but a full explanation of them would require a treatise. bolle armonyak is doubtless the substance called golermonik in the quotation given above from Richardson. Its real name was bole Armeniac, a kind of colored clay, supposed to come from Armenia, used in alchemy and in medicine. verdegrees is 'verdigris'; the name originally meant 'green of Greece.' It is the bibasic acetate of copper and is commonly produced where copper or brass is exposed to the action of air and water. For the sondry vessels see their names in the glossary.

797. The rubifying or rubification (reddening) of water and the albification (l. 805) were stages in preliminary processes, as also were the "incorporation of matters" (l. 815), the "citrination of silver" (l. 816) and the "cementing and fermentation" (l. 817).

813. alum glas: not 'alum and glass,' but 'rock alum.' A paragraph of Geber's Liber Investigationis is entitled "De Aluminis Glacialis vel Rochae praeparatione"; and his Summa Perfectionis speaks of aluminibus vitris (i, cap xi); see also Glossary.

825ff. One of the seven principal metals was ascribed to each of the seven planets, and the names of the planets are often used instead of the names of the metals. This is particularly true of sol (gold) and luna (silver).

838. ascaunce, 'as if'; an idiomatic expression, here equivalent to 'Perhaps you think.'

842. elvysshe; here and in l. 751 the word implies something uncanny, perhaps because of the traditional association of elves with the making of swords of supernatural qualities, an idea which goes back to ancient Germanic myth and legend.

853. watres corosif, 'acids.'

862f. The object of search of the alchemists was variously called, "the philosopher's stone," "the elixir," "the philosopher's egg," etc. Its properties were to heal diseases, to prolong life, and to change baser metals into silver and gold. It is not to be supposed that it necessarily had the form either of a stone or of an egg. When brandy was first produced by distillation it was thought by some that the elixir had been discovered, and it was accordingly called "aqua vitae"—see the Book of Quinte Essence (EETS)—and was regarded as the fifth essence, superior to the four elements of which all things were supposed to be made. Sometimes the elixir was in the form of a powder, a small portion of which would turn an enormous quantity of lead into gold. Many alchemists are reported to have made, or obtained, such a powder.

922ff. The Yeoman seems to pass from a generalized statement to a report of a particular incident, as is indicated by the tense of the verbs. Long on, 'due to,' 'because of,' is used frequently in Shakespeare in the same sense. Cf. MND, III, ii, 339.

962. In the margin of El is written, "Non teneas aurum &c." This is the beginning of one of the distichs of Alain de l'Isle, a twelfth-century writer whose De Planctu Naturae furnished some suggestions for Chaucer's PF. The distich referred to in the present passage is the first distich of the third chapter of the Doctrinale Minus, alias Liber Parabolarum (Alani de Insulis Doctoris Universalis Opera Omnia, ed. Migne, coll. 585-86):

*Non teneas aurum totum quod splendet ut aurum,
Nec pulchrum pomum quodlibet esse bonum.*

972-1481. The Yeoman's tale does not really begin until l. 972. Lines 720-971 were a sort of preamble, partly relating his experiences with his master the Canon, but mainly composed of exposition and comment on alchemy. Chaucer's emphasis on the practice of alchemy by canons, and the care with which in ll. 992-1011 he attempts to free canons in general from blame in the matter, renders support to the view that he had in mind some particular experiences with a particular canon. Were it not for these facts, one would explain the choice of a canon as alchemist in the tale proper as due to the fact that the tale was really about the Yeoman's Canon but that the Yeoman did not wish to represent his master as so great a rascal. In the Preamble he had represented him rather as the dupe of his own pretences. The Yeoman does not tell us where the Canon lives. Line 1381 suggests that he did not live in London, which leaves all who have been favorably impressed by Mr. Richardson's suggestion that he was a canon of Windsor free to adopt that attractive suggestion.

1005. by yow, 'concerning you.'

1012. preest annueleer, a priest employed solely in singing annuals or anniversary masses for the dead. It is this practice against which Chaucer, Wyclif, the authors of PP, and other satirists protested so strongly, as depriving the parishes of the priests necessary for their care. Cf. note on I, 507ff.

1126. mortifye, 'kill'; the quick (or living) silver was supposed to be killed and made into ordinary silver. Mortify and mortification are common technical terms in alchemy applied to various changes of form.

1238-39. Several MSS have here two additional lines so Chaucerian in manner that they are usually admitted into the text:

'What, devel of helle, sholde it elles be?
Shavyng of silver silver is, parde!'

1244. alle halwes, gen. pl.

1313. Cf. I, 706, VII, 1630. Skeat says that to make a man one's ape is to lead him about at will, as street performers lead apes about. But the expression seems rather to mean 'make a fool of a man.'

1342. "As glad as a fowl of a fair day," Hazlitt, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 188.

1413. Bayard, 'a bay horse'; cf. note on III, 1563; made famous as the name of the bright bay horse given by Charlemagne to Renaud, one of the four sons of Aymond. In many proverbial sayings, the origin of which was forgotten, Bayard is the type of ignorant and reckless boldness; cf. PP (B), iv, 53, 124, vi, 196; TC, i, 218; etc.

1428ff. Arnold of the Newe Toun (Arnaldus de Villanova), a French scholar of the thirteenth century, was one of the most important figures in the history of medicine in the Middle Ages. Nine alchemical treatises ascribed to him are printed by Manget, Bibl. Chemica, I, 662-707. A full account of him is given in Hist. littér. de la France, XXVIII, 26-126. See also Lounsbury, II, 393. The proper title of Arnold's Rosarie is Rosarium Philosophorum. Lowes (MLN, XXVIII, 229) quotes a passage, of which ll. 1428-40 are a close translation. It comes, however, not from Arnold's Rosarium, but from his De Lapide Philosophorum. The Hermes mentioned in l. 1434 is Hermes Trismegistus (thrice greatest) . . . This name was originally an honorific designation of the Egyptian god of wisdom, Thoth; but from the third century of our era it has been used for the supposititious writer of various mystical and alchemical writings. The expressions used in ll. 1431f. and 1435ff. are characteristic bits of alchemical jargon, and can all be paralleled in the treatise mentioned above. It will be remembered that both mystics and alchemists have expressed themselves purposely in figurative and often unintelligible terms in order that their wisdom might be concealed from the unworthy and understood only by the initiated; cf. note on l. 774.

1440. The alchemists called gold "sol" and silver "luna," and spoke of them as the father and mother of the elixir or philosopher's stone.

1447. There is a treatise entitled Secreta Secretorum, ascribed in the Middle Ages to Aristotle and supposed to contain a summary of human wisdom which he presented to Alexander the Great. English versions of it were published by the Early English Text Society (Extra Series, Numbers lxvi, lxxiv; a third volume is announced as in press). I do not think, however, that this passage refers to that book. It merely means that this is a secret par excellence.

1448-71. The anecdote here told of Plato and his disciple is related, with some variations, of Solomon in the alchemical treatise entitled Senoris Zadiib fl. Hamuelis Tabula Chemica (Theatrum Chemicum, ed. 1613, V, 219, ed. 1650, p. 224). Tyrwhitt quotes the following passages: "Dixit Salomon rex, Recipe lapidem qui dicitur Thitaros (sic) . . . Dixit sapiens, Assigna mihi illum . . . Dixit, Est corpus magnesiae nobile . . . Dixit, Quid est magnesiae? Respondit, Magnesiae est aqua composita," &c. The treatise is full of phrases and ideas that appear in CYT. Plato's Timaeus is constantly named and cited as an authority by the alchemists; and there is a treatise entitled Platonis Quattorum cum commento Hebubabes Hamed: explicatus ab Hestole (Theat. Chem. vol. V).

1457. ignotum per ignotius, 'an unknown thing by something more unknown.'

1460. All things were, according to ancient science, composed of the four elements — earth, air, fire, and water — but these terms were not used in their ordinary senses. It is easy to see how this theory that all things were composed of a few simple elements lent support to the idea that one substance could be transformed into another, and it is interesting to note that the modern theory that the so-called chemical elements are merely different arrangements of a single primal substance has revived interest in the transmutation of one substance into another.

1461. rote, the radix or root of a substance is its essential constituent.

1472-81. In PMLA, XXXIX, 782-88, S. F. Damon argues that Chaucer was not a victim of alchemy and a disbeliever in it, but an adept, who expressed his knowledge and belief in such terms as to reveal himself to his brother adepts. I can only say that his argument seems to me unconvincing.

FRAGMENT IX (FURNIVALL'S 'GROUP H')

THE PROLOGUE OF THE MAUNCIPLES TALE (1-104)

1-104. This highly dramatic episode is in Chaucer's best realistic manner. Some scholars have been puzzled by the terms in which the Host calls on the Cook for a tale, as they seem to imply that he has not already told one. But if it was originally planned that each pilgrim was to tell a tale each day of a two-day journey, there is no difficulty — the Host would be calling for the tale of the second day.

2. Bobbe up and down. This curious name is supposed to be a jocular designation of the village of Harbledown, which is situated beside the Blean Forest between Boughton and Canterbury. J. M. Cowper, however, in a letter to The Athenaeum (see Temporary Preface, Chaucer Soc., p. 32) notes the existence of a place called Up-and-down Field, and believes it to be the place meant. If so, the old road must have differed from the present one; and this may have been the case.

5. dun is in the myre; a proverbial expression meaning that things are at a standstill and need help. A game called by this name, a sort of tug of war, was played with a heavy log of wood which represented "dun in the mire." For a full explanation see Gifford, Works of Ben Jonson, VII, 238, and cf. Romeo and Juliet, I, iv, 41. But I do not believe that the game is alluded to here.

9. for cokkes bones; a mild oath in which cokkes is used to avoid saying Goddess, as gosh is substituted for God.

14. botel hey, 'a small bundle of hay.' For the construction cf. § 112.

24. Chepe, 'Cheapside,' long famous for its taverns.

42. The Cook was apparently reeling in his saddle and was in poor condition to joust at the fan, or 'quintain.' This was a popular sport in which a crossbar turning on a pivot was placed at the top of a post. At one end of the crossbar was the fan, a board sometimes painted like a shield, and at the other a club or bag of sand. The jousting had to strike the shield and get out of the way of the stroke from the other end of the bar; cf. As You Like It, ii, 263, and Strutt, Sports and Pastimes of the English People, bk. III, ch. 1.

44. wyn ape, 'ape's wine.' According to Talmudic tradition, when Noah planted the grape, Satan secretly poured about the roots the blood of a sheep, a lion, an ape, and a hog, with the result that men who drink too much of the juice of the grape come to resemble these animals in turn. The tale was widely known and much used in the Middle Ages.

51. The idea that a man should stick to his own job is proverbial.

72. A figure taken from the sport of hawking. A hawk that will not return to his master is reclaimed (brought back) by exhibiting a lure — a tempting bit of food, or an artificial bird. Lines 76ff. show that the Manciple had been "grafting" on the purchases made for his masters of the Temple, and that the Cook could easily get even with him by revealing his practices.

82. The picture of the Manciple in El shows him with the gourd in his hand.

THE MAUNCIPLES TALE (105-362)

The Manciple tells a story of a crow that revealed to his master the unfaithfulness of his wife, and by a trick was punished for so doing. The story belongs to the type exploited by Rudyard Kipling in his series of Just So Stories, as it explains why the crow, which was originally snow-white, has become black. Chaucer seems to have got the story from Ovid, Met. ii, 531-550, but it exists in many versions and is ultimately of Oriental origin.

FRAGMENT X (FURNIVALL'S GROUP I)

THE PROLOGUE OF THE PERSONS TALE (1-74)

This prologue seems to connect McT with PT; cf. l. 1. But the McT, which is a brief one, seems to have been told early in the morning, whereas the time indicated by the position of the sun (ll. 2-4), is four o'clock in the afternoon. By a singular error the best MSS — all the printed ones — have ten instead of four in l. 5. This is clearly an error, and was probably committed in order to harmonize the time of this tale with that of the Manciple when the Manciple's name was introduced into l. 1. The scribes, of course, did not understand that l. 2 clearly indicates some hour in the afternoon, when the sun has passed the meridian ("south lyne"), and that l. 4 fixes this hour as four o'clock. The errors can hardly have originated with Chaucer.

10f. A very puzzling passage. The exaltation of the Moon is in the third degree of the sign Taurus; the sign Libra is given by all authorities as the exaltation of Saturn; cf. James Wilson, A Complete Dictionary of Astrology, pp. 94-6; so also in Libellus Ysagogicus Abdilazi. (Erhardus Ratdolt, Venice, 1485) sig. aa 4. As the sign Libra was actually ascending at four P.M., Skeat suggested that Mones is an error for Saturnes. He further suggested that Chaucer's memory may have confused the terms "exaltation" and "face," as the first ten degrees of Libra were called "the moon's face."

On the expression I mene Libra, cf. "The signe I mene callid the lioun," English Title to the Crown of France (Wright, Political Poems, II, 139).

12. at a thropes ende. What village could this have been? The pilgrims had passed Boughton (VIII, 556) and Harbledown (IX, 2); and there was no village between the latter and Canterbury. Is it possible that Fragment X was intended to close up the journey back to Southwark? Despite l. 1, it does not join well with Fragment IX; and ll. 47 and 63 rather imply the end of the tale-telling. But there are difficulties.

22f. vicary. A vicar was, as the term implies, a substitute employed at a smaller salary to perform the services of a parish church in place of the parson, or rector.

25. This line might imply that each pilgrim was expected to tell only one tale, but the Host may have in mind only the tale of the last day of the outward journey.

42ff. The alliterative verse revived in the fourteenth century in such poems as PP, Gawayne and the Grene Knyght, etc. was especially characteristic of the North. Some writers have supposed Chaucer to be here poking fun at this form of verse, but the Parson is speaking in harmony with his character, and thinks quite as meanly of rhyme as he does of alliteration. He is motivating the telling of a prose tale.

57. sentence, 'meaning,' 'general idea.'

69-74. Obviously these lines are not in the proper order; ll. 69-70 should come last. As no extant MS has the proper arrangement, the error must have occurred in the copy from which all are derived. Lines 71-74 are probably an afterthought intended by Chaucer for insertion between l. 68 and l. 69. If they were written at the bottom of the page, with a reference mark to indicate where they belonged — a common practice with omissions and insertions — it is easy to understand how they were inserted at the wrong place by Chaucer's copyist.

The reader's interpretation of the insertion will depend upon whether he accepts the following treatise as the prose tale Chaucer intended to put in the mouth of the Parson.

THE PERSOONS TALE (75-1080)

PT is not really a tale at all, and the characterization of it as myrie (l. 46), is comical. It is really a treatise on the seven deadly sins, and is little more than a paraphrase of a manual of confession.

I do not believe that one can refuse to admit the authenticity of this treatise and the accompanying retractions; but this by no means commits one to the conclusion that Chaucer intended them as parts of the CT. They may have been found in Chaucer's chest after his death, and, on the inadequate ground that they were in prose, have been falsely supposed to have been intended for use as the PT. In like manner we account for the presence of Gamelyn as the CkT in many MSS.

CHAUCER'S RETRACTIONS (1081-1092)

Many lovers of Chaucer have felt inclined to question his authorship of this passage in which he expresses his repentance for the composition of so many of his works. A principal reason for this feeling is the unwillingness to believe that even the tenderest conscience could have felt that there was anything wrong in several of the poems expressly mentioned as requiring forgiveness — The House of Fame, The Legend of Good Women, The Book of the Duchess, The Parlement of Foules, or even the Troilus and Creseyde. Another reason is perhaps the inaccuracy of the references to The Legend of Good Women as "the Book of the xxv Ladies," and to the "Book of the Leoun" (see notes on ll. 1086, 1087). The reference to "many another book if they were in my remembrance" is also suspicious. But the evidence of the MSS is altogether in favor of the authenticity of the passage, and Tatlock (PMLA, XXVIII, 521-29.) has shown that Chaucer had distinguished precedents for his retractions in St. Augustine, the Venerable Bede, Giraldus Cambrensis, Jean de Meun, Boccaccio, and others, and distinguished followers in Edmund Spenser, Robert Herrick, John Dryden, and others. Tatlock also refers in passing to the declaration made by Dr. Thomas Gascoigne (1403-1458) in his theological dictionary that Chaucer before his death bitterly repented of his writings: "Thus Chaucer before his death frequently cried out 'Woe to me, woe to me, because I can neither recall nor destroy those things which I sinfully wrote concerning the base and sinful love of men for women, and which now will be continually circulated among men'" (cf. Hales, Folia Litteraria, pp. 110ff). He might further have recalled the fact that Chaucer's friend Sir Lewis Clifford in his will (Nicolas, The Scrope and Grosvenor Controversy, II, 430f.) expressed the most abject remorse and repentance for a sin which seems to have consisted only in adherence to the doctrines of John Wyclif. The will of Clifford is so picturesque and his attitude so pertinent to the question of Chaucer's repentance that it seems worth while to quote the greater part of the preamble:

In nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti, Amen. The sevententhe day of September, the yere of our Lord Jesu Christ a thousand foure hundred and foure, I Lowys Clyfforth, fals and traytor to my Lord God, and to all the blessed company of Hevene, and unworthi to be clepyd a Cristen man, make and ordeyne my Testament and my last Will in this manere. At the begynning, I, most unworthi and Goddis traytor, recommaunde my wrechid and synfule soule hooly to the grace and to the grete mercy of the blessed Trynytie; and my wrechid careyne to be beryed in the ferthest corner of the chircheyrd in which pariche my wrechid soule departeth fro my body, and I prey and charge my survivors and myne executors, as they wollen answeere tofore God, and as all myne hoolle trust in this matere is in hem, that on my stinking careyne be neyther leyed clothe of gold, ne of silke, but a black clothe, and a taper at myne hed, and another at my fete, ne stone, ne other thinge whereby any man may witt where my stinkyng careyne liggeth.

It is to be borne in mind also that there is much evidence in his writings that Chaucer's emotions were always deeply affected by certain expressions of religion, and that the end of TC consists essentially of a "retraction" of that poem, written in a style which is unmistakably the poet's own. Whether his choice of a house in the precincts of Westminster Abbey in which to spend his last years was due to a desire to be more closely associated with men of religion may be left to the judgment of the reader. The Harvard portrait of Chaucer seems to show a man, not aged, but broken in health. Continued physical weakness and suffering might well have produced a state of mind which would account for the retractions, and possibly for the assignment to the Parson of what is in no sense a tale, but merely a penitential treatise. The inaccuracies of the retractions may conceivably be due to their not being formally dictated by Chaucer, but written by some pious friend — perhaps a monk of Westminster — upon suggestions furnished by him.

1081. litel tretys, obviously referring to PT.

1083. al that is writen (II Timothy, iii, 16).

1086. the book of the xxv ladies; most MSS have xxv, Ln has xv, Ha⁴ has 29. Edward, duke of York, in the prologue to his translation, The Master of Game (ed. Baillie-Grohman, p. 2), written between the years 1406 and 1413, in referring to LGW, says: "as Chaucer saith in his prologue of 'the 25 (Shirley MS, xv) good women,'" but he may have been influenced by the passage in the retractions.

1087. the book of the Leon. Editors in general suppose this to be a translation, now lost, of Machaut's Diu dou Leon, but it may be doubted whether the character of this work would have induced Chaucer to translate it. As Arthur Gilman (Riverside ed., I, 445, n 7) saw in the Wife of Bath's query:

Who peyntede the leoun? Tel me who (III, 692)

a reference to Chaucer's Book of the Lion, it seems barely possible that some other readers of the Wife of Bath's query may have deduced from it the conclusion that Chaucer wrote a book of this title.

1092. Qui cum patre &c. Hg gives this benediction in full: Qui cum deo patre et spiritu sancto vivis et regnas deus. Per omnia secula, Amen.

GLOSSARY

ABBREVIATIONS USED IN THE GLOSSARY. Besides the usual abbreviations for grammatical terms, the following occur: AF (Anglo-French); Du (Dutch); E (English); F (French); G (German); Gmc (Germanic); Icel (Icelandic); L (Latin); LL (Low Latin); ME (Middle English); MHG (Middle High German); NF (Norman French); Nth (Northern); OE (Old English); OF (Old French); OItal (Old Italian); OM (Old Mercian); ONF (Old Norman French); WS (West Saxon).

A

a, prep. (worn down fr. OE an, on), in abaissen, v. (AF abaissir), abash, disconcert: abayst, pp.
abegge, v., dial. form of abyen
a-blakeberied, false pp. (cf. OE blæcherie, f.), a-blackberrying. See note on VI 406
aboght, pp., aboghte, pret. of abyen.
 Cf. § 53
abregge, v. (OF abregier, abreger), abridge, shorten
abreyde, v. (OE a + bregdan, S III;
 but in Ch. also W I), move quickly, start abroche, v. (OF abrochier, abrocher), broach
abrood, adv. (OE on brād), spread out abusoun, sb. (OF abusion), witchcraft abyen, v. (OE abycgan, W I), pay for a-caterwawed, false pp. (some form of cat, perh. Du and G kater, male cat, + an onomatopoeic verb), a-caterwauling. See note on III 354 accident, sb. (OF accident), symptom, external sign, IV 607; unessential quality, VI 539 accomplice, v. (OF acomplir, ac- compliss-), accomplish, complete achaat, sb. (OF achat), buying achatour, sb. (AF achatour), buyer of provisions
acte, sb. (F acte, L actus), record,
 VII, 4326; deed, VI 574
adamaunt, sb. (OF adamaunt), adamant
Adoon, Adonis

adrad, pp., adj. (OM on-drēdan, WS on-drādan, S VII), afraid
Adriane, Ariadne
Adromacha, Andromache
affile, v. (OF afiler), smoothe affray, sb. (OF effrei), disturbance affraye, v. (AF afayer), frighten after-dinner, sb., the time after dinner,
 IV 918
after-supper, sb., the time after supper, IV 1219
agaste, v. (cf. OE gāstan, W I), take fright agayne, agayns, ayene, ayens, ayeyns, prep. (OE ongean, -gen; + -es), against, opposite, towards, facing,
 in the presence of; agayn the even-tyde, towards evening; agayn, adv.,
 in reply, VI 717
agiltē, v. (a + OE gyltan, W I), be guilty
agon, pp., adj. (OE āgān), gone, ago, past
a-grefe, agrief, adv. (a + grief), ill agryse, v. (OE āgrisan, S I), shudder, fear
aiel, sb. (OF aīel), grandfather aketon, sb. (OF auqueton), acton.
 See note on VII 2050-58
al, adj. (OM al, WS eal), all, every;
al a, an entire; alle and some, each and all; adv., altogether, entirely, very; al newe, lately; conj., 'although; al be, although [it] be alambike, sb. (OF alambic, Arabic al + Gk αμβικ), alembic alauntz, sb., pl. (OF alant), wolf hounds

- alayas, sb. pl. (ONF alay), alloys
 Alcione, Alcyone. See note on II 47-76 alder, adj. See aller
 Aldrian, Aldiran, name of a star.
 See p. 135
 alenge, adj. (OE ælenge), wearisome, tedious ale-stake, sb. (OE ealu, alu, n., generally indec. in sg. + staca, m.).
 See note on I 666ff.
 algate, algates, adv. (ME alle + gate, every way), at any rate, at all events, however that may be, entirely
 Algezir, Algeciras, near Gibraltar, in the kingdom of Granada
 Alisaundre, Alexandria, in Egypt
 Alkaron, the Koran
 allege, v. (AF alegier, allegier), allege, affirm aller, alder, alther, adj., gen. pl. (OE ealra, fr. eall), of all; hir aller, of them all; oure aller, of us all; alderbest, best of all; alderfirst, first of all; aldernext, next allowe, v. (OF alouer), allow, commend, V 676 Almageste, sb. (OF Almageste), the name of a book by the famous astronomer Ptolemy. See note on I 3208 almesse, sb. (OE almysse, f.), charity almost, adv. (OE æl-māst), almost Alnath, name of a star. See V 1281
 Alocen, Alhazen, an eleventh century Arabian astronomer and writer on optics als, also, as, adv., conj. (OM all swā, WS eall swā), so; al-so moote I thee, so may I thrive; al-so God my soule save, so may God save my soul; alswa (Nth) alther, adj. See aller alum glas (L alūmen + E glass), crystallized alum ambes as, sb. (OF ambes as), double aces. See note on II 124f.
 amblere, sb. (OF ambleüre), pacer ameve, v. (OF amover), move, be moved, show emotion; noght ameved, showed no emotion, IV 498
 a-morwe, adv. (OE on + morgen, m.), in the morning Amphioun, Amphion, king of Thebes and, conj. (OE and), and, if angle, sb. (F angle), angle; for astrological use see p. 142 anlaas, sb. (etym. obscure), dagger.
 See note on I 357
 annueleer, sb. (cf. L annus), priest employed in singing anniversary masses anoyen, v. (OF anoier), injure antiphoner, sb. (OF antiphonier), anthem book a-nyghtes, adv. (coalesc. of OE on niht, f. and nihtes, adverbial gen.), at night apalled, appalled, pp., adj. (cf. OF apalir), pallid apayed, pp., adj. (OF apayer), pleased apert, adv. (OF apert), openly apese, v. (OF apeser), settle apeyren, v. (OF ampeirer, empeirer, with prefix reduced to a-), make worse, injure, damage apiked, pp., adj. (cf. OE pician, W II), ornamented appalled, see apalled apparence, sb. (OF aparence), illusion approwours, sb. pl. (cf. OF prou, profit), agents, men who looked after his profit arace, v. (AF aracer), tear away araye, v. (AF arayer), array; arrange, VII 4227, V 910 archiwyfe, sb. (archi- + wife, fr. OE wif, n.), big, strong women areste, v. (OF arester), stop; do arresten, cause to be stopped, VII 4210 aretten, v. (OF areter), ascribe arewe, adv. (OE on + OE ræw f.) in a row, one after another argument, sb. (F argument), in astronomy the angle, arc, or other quantity upon which a calculation is based Aries, a zodiacal sign. See p. 135 arist, contracted 3 sg. pres. fr. ariseth ark, sb. (OF arc), astronomical term armee, sb. (F armee, cogn. w. Sp. armada), armed expedition by sea or land Armorik, Armorica, Brittany

- armypotente, adj. (L armipotentem, arma + potens), powerful in arms
- arn, are
- array, sb. (AF arai), dress
- arrest, sb. (OF arest), confinement, I 1310; maad areest, seized, VII 4090; in arrest, couched. See note on I 2602
- arrerage, sb. (F arrerage), arrears
- ars metrik, sb. (L ars metrica, a misunderstanding of arismetica), arithmetic
- art, sb. (L ars), art: of love, I 476; arts course in the University, I 3191; training, I 4056
- artificial, adj. (F artificial), astronomical term. See note on II 11f.
- artow, art thou
- Artoys, Artois, a district in north-eastern France
- arwe, sb. (OE arwe, f.), arrow
- as, adv., conj. (OM all swā, WS eall swā), as, so, as if; used as introductory particle with subj., as mote I drynke, so may I drink; as helpe me the grete God, so may the great God help me; with imp., as beth, pray be; as preith hire, do pray her; as now, at present; as for, for; as of, as for; as by, according to
- assaunces, conj. adv. (etym. obscure; cf. ODu quansruys, quansis), as if
- ascendent, sb. (OF ascendant), astronomical term. See p. 139
- aslake, v. (OE āslacian, W II), assuage
- aspect, sb. (L aspectus), astrological term. See p. 140
- assay, sb. (OF assai), test; in greet assay, to a severe test, IV 1138
- assaye, v. (OF assaier), test
- assege, v. (OF asegier), besiege
- assoillyng, sb. (cf. OF assoilier), absolution
- asterte, v. (a- + sierie), escape
- astonie, v. (OF estoner), astound; astonyed, pret.; astoned, astonied, pp.
- astored, pp., adj. (OF estorer), supplied
- astrelabie, sb. (OF astrilabe, star taking), astrolabe. See note on I 3209
- astrologien, sb. (OF astrologien), astrologer
- aswowne, adv. (cf. OE pp. geswogen), in a swoon
- at, prep. (OE æt), at, in, by, for, to, of: hunte at, hunt, VII 1926; at me, of me, IV 653; at me, with regard to me, VII 1975
- atake, v. (OE a- + take), overtake
- atanes, adv., dial. for at ones
- atazir, sb. (Arabic al + tasir, influence) astrological term. See note on II 305
- aton, adv. (OE æt + ān), at one
- atones, adv. (OE æt + ānes), at once
- at-rede, v. (OE æt + rēdan, W I), surpass in counsel
- at-renne, v. (OE æt + ON renna), outrun
- attame, v. (OF atamer), enter upon
- atte (OE æt pām), at the
- attempre, adj. (OF atempre), temperate, moderate
- Atthalaunte, Atalanta
- atthamaunt, sb., bad spelling of adamaunt
- Attheon, Actaeon
- atwo, adv. (OE on + twā), in two
- auctor, sb. (L auctor), author
- auctoritee, sb. (F auctorite), authority
- audience, sb. (F audience), hearing; audience, IV 790
- augrym-stones, sb. pl. (OF augorime + OE stān, m.), counters. See note on I 3210
- Augustyn, St. Augustine
- auntrous, adj. (OF aventuros), adventurous
- Austyn, St. Augustine
- auter, sb. (OF auter), altar
- avalen, v. (OF avaler; fr. a val, L, ad vallem), take off
- avance, v. (OF avancer), benefit
- avaunt, sb., v. (cf. OF v. avanier), boast
- avauntour, sb. (OF avanicour), boaster
- aventaille, sb. (AF aventail), aventail. See note on IV 1204
- aventure, sb. (OF aventure), chance
- avision, sb. (OF avision), dream
- avow, sb. (cf. OF v. avouer), vow
- avowtrie, sb. (OF avouterie), adultery
- avoy, interj. (OF avoy), exclamation of surprise or remonstrance

avys, sb. (OF avis), deliberation, opinion avysen, v. (OF aviser), consider (usually reflex.); avysed, pp., adj., careful, VI 690 await, sb. (OF await), watch; in await, in ambush, VII 4415 axe, v. (OE āscian, āxian, W II), ask ayene, ayens, ayeysn, prep. See agayne

B

ba, v. (prob. nursery word imitating a baby's kiss; but cf. OF baer, to open the mouth), kiss baar, pret. of beren. See § 64
Babilan, adj., Babylonian bachelor, sb. (OF bachelier), candidate for knighthood; bachelor of lawe, one who has taken the first degree in law bachelrye, sb. (OF bachelerie), young men, candidates for knighthood Bacus, Bacchus
baite, v. (cf. ON beitra, OE bētan, F beter), feed balance, sb. (F balance, L bilanx, two-scaled), balance; leye in balance, wager, VIII 611 balke, sb. (OE balca, m.), beam of wood balled, pp., adj. (etym. uncertain), bald ban, sb. (OE bān, n.), bone (Nth) bane, sb. (OE bana, m.), cause of death bareyne, adj. (OF baraigne, f.), barren bargayne, sb. (OF bargaine), financial deal barge, sb. (OF barge), a sailing vessel (in size between the carrack or great ship and the ballinger or sloop)
barm, sb. (OE bearm, m.), bosom, lap barmcloth, sb. (OE bearm, m. + clāþ, m.), apron barres, sb. pl. (OF barre), bars, i.e. ornamental transverse bands on a girdle batailled, adj. (OF bataillié), battlemented bathe, adj. pl. (apparently ON báðir), both (Nth)

baude, sb. (etym. uncertain), bawd bauderie, sb. (OF bauderie), mirth, jollity, I 1926 baudy, adj. (of unknown origin), dirty bawderye, sb. (bawd + -ry; not fr. F bauderie, mirth), pandering, D 1303 bawdryk, sb. (cf. OF baudrei, MHG balderich, perh. fr. L balteus), baldrick Bayard, a common name for a horse; originally, a bay horse beaute, sb. (OF beauté), beauty bede, v. (OE bēodan, S II), offer bede, pret. pl. and pp. of bidde. See § 67 bedes, sb. pl. (OE bedu, n., pl., prayers), beads. See note on I 159 bedrede, adj. (OE bedreda, fr. bed, n. + rida, m., rider), bed-ridden beel amy (F bel ami), good friend. See note on VI 318 been, sb. pl. (OE bēo, f., pl., bēon) bees beer, pret. of beren. See § 64
beere, sb. (WS bær, OM bær, f.), bier beest, best, sb. (OF beste), animal beete, v. (OE bētan, W I), mend beggestere, sb. (beg, of obscure etym., + -stere), female beggar behette, pret. of behote; promised Belmarye, Benamarin, a Moorish kingdom in North Africa beme, sb. (OM bēmi, WS bīeme, bīme, f.), trumpet benedicite, interj. (L imper. pl. of benedicere). See note on II 1170-83
Beneit, Benedict
bent, sb. (OE beonet-), slope, hillside berd, sb. (OE beard, m.), beard; berd make, deceive. See note on I 4096 bere, sb. (OE bera, m.), bear beren, v. (OE beran, S IV), bear, carry, conduct one's self (reflex.); beren . . . on honde, accuse, III 226 bersten, bresten, v. (OE berstan, Gmc. brestan, S III), burst best. See beest bet, adj., adv. comp. (OE bet), better; the bet, the better; go bet, go at once beten, v. (OE bēatan, S VII), beat

- beye, v. (dial. form of bye), buy VI 845
- bibledded, pp. (be- + OE blēdan, W I), covered with blood
- bicched, pp., adj. (etym. unknown), cursed; bicched bones two, cursed dice
- bidaffed, pp. (etym. uncertain), befooled
- bifalle, v. (OE befeallan, S VII), befall, happen
- bifore, biforne, adv., prep. (OE bi-foran), before, in front of, in the front, first, formerly
- bigon, pp., adj. (OE be + gān, cf. § 92), beset; wo bigon, utterly distressed; wel bigon, happy
- biheete, 1 sg. pres. of bihote. See § 77
- biheste, sb. (OE behās, f.), promise
- bihighte, pret. of bihote. See § 77
- bihote, v. (OE behātan, S VII), promise; biheete, pres., VIII 707; behette, bihighte, pret.
- bijape, v. (cf. sb., jape), trick
- biknowe, v. (OE bicnāwan, S VII), confess
- birafte, pret. of bireve
- bireve, v. (OE birāfian, W II), rob
- biseke, v. (OE bi- + sēcan, W I), beseech
- bisette, v. (OE bisettan, W I), employ
- biseye, pp. (OE bisēon, S V), attired; yvel biseye, ill attired; richely biseye, richly attired
- bismare, sb. (OE bismer, -or, n.), scorn
- bismotered, pp., adj. (etym. uncertain; cf. smoterlich and mod. smut), soiled
- bastad, pp., adj. (bi- + stead, OE, stēde, m.), endangered
- bisynesse, sb. (OE bisigu, adj.), business, care, diligence, occupation; doon hire bisynesse, take pains, exert herself
- bit, 3 sg. pres. of bidde. See § 80
- bitake, v. (bi- + late OE tacan, S VI; cf. Icel taka), commit to
- biteche, v. (OE bitācean, W I), give over to
- bitore, sb. (OF butor), bittern
- bitrayse, v. (bi- + traiss- lengthened stem of F trahir), betray
- biwreye, biwrye, v. (bi- + wreien, OE, wreigan, W I), reveal, betray
- blankmanger, sb. (OF blanc manger, white food), chicken stewed with milk, eggs, rice, almonds, and sugar
- Blee, Blean Forest
- blenche, v. (OE blencan, W I), start back; bleynte, pret.
- blende, v. (OE blēndan, W I), blind
- blere, v. (OE blerian, W II), to throw dust in the eyes of; blerynge, sb., hoodwinking
- bleynte, v. pret. of blenche
- blondren, v. (cf. ON blunda, daze), flounder
- blyve, adv. (ME bilife), quickly
- bobance, sb. (OF bobance), boast
- Bobbe-up-and-down, Harbledown, near Canterbury
- bode, sb. (OE bod, n., chiefly Nth, for gebod), omen
- bode, v. (OE bodian, W II), forebode
- boden, pp. of bede. See § 57
- Boece, Boethius
- boes, v. 3 sg. pres. impers., Nth contr. fr. beboves (OE bi-, bebofian), it behooves
- Boesse, Boethius
- boghte, pret. of bye. See § 53
- Boghton under Blee, Boughton-under-Blean
- boidekyn, sb. (etym. unknown), dagger
- boistously, adv. (etym. uncertain), rudely, roughly
- bokeler, sb. (OF bocler), buckler
- bole, sb. (cf. ON bole, bolli), bull
- Boloigne, Boulogne in France, A 465; Bologna, in Italy, E 589
- bomble, v. (echoic; cf. boom, bum), boom
- bon, sb. (OE bān, n.), bone; by corpus bones. See note on VI 314
- bond, pret. of binden. See § 61
- bontee, sb. (OF bontet), excellence, virtue, munificence
- boole armonyak. See note on VIII 788ff.
- boone, sb. (ON bōn), prayer, request
- boos, sb. (OF boce), boss of shield
- boote, sb. (OE bōt, f.), remedy, help
- bord, sb. (OE bord, n.), table bore, pp. of beren. See § 64 borel, burel, adj., sb. (OE burel, fr. bure, coarse), lay, VII 3145; unlearned, V 716; sb., coarse woollen clothes, III 356

 borwe, sb. (OE borh, m.), surety; saint John to borwe, Saint John as my surety botel, sb. (OF botel), bundle bouk, sb. (OE būc, m.), belly bour, sb. (OE būr, n.), chamber, inner room bourde, sb. (OF bourde), jest bourde, v. (OF bourder), jest bown, adj. (ON buinn, early Nth bun), ready box, sb. (OE box, m? n?, L, buxus), box tree, A 2922; boxwood, VII 4588 boyste, sb. (OF boiste), box, casket bracer, sb. (OF brasseüre, infl. by brassard), wrist guard in archery Bradwardyn, Bishop Thomas Bradwardine. See note on VII 4424-40 bragot, sb. (Welsh bragawd), bragget, a drink made of honey and ale fermented together brast, pret. of bersten. See § 60 brawn, brawn, sb. (OF braoun), brawn, muscle, flesh brede, sb. (OE brædu, f. indecl.), breadth breem, sb. (OF bresme), bream, a fresh water fish brembul, sb. (OE brembel, bræmbel, m.), bramble, dog rose breme, adv. (cf. OE brēme), fiercely, furiously (app. Nth in this sense) bren, sb. (OF bren), bran brennen, v. (ON brenna), burn bresten. See bersten bretful, adj. (cf. Scand bræddful), brimful bretherhede, sb. (OE brēðer, pl. of broðer, m. + -hæd*, condition, state), brotherhood, fraternity breyde, v. (OE bregdan, S III), start, draw (in Chaucer W I) Brixseyde, Briseis
 Brok, Brock, a horse's name brooch, sb. (F broche), brooch, ornament broste, pret. pl. of bresten. See § 60 brouke, v. (OE brūcan, S II), keep browdyng, sb. (cf. F v. brouder), embroidery broyden, pp., adj. (OE bregdan, S III), twist; doublet of browden the normal development of brogden), embroidered brybe, v. (origin doubtful), rob, steal brynges, 3 sg. pres. for bringeth (Nth) bugle-horn, sb. (OF bugle + OE horn, m.), horn of a wild ox. See note on V 1253 bukke, sb. (OE bucca, m.), buck bulle, sb. (L bullā), the papal bull, the leaden seal attached or the edict itself bulte, v. (OF bulter), sift bulte, pret. of bulden (OE byldan*), built Burdeuxward, the direction of Bordeaux burdown, sb. (OF bourdon), bass accompaniment burel. See borel burgeys, sb. (OF burgeis), citizen burne, v. (OF burnir), burnish busk, sb. (ON būska), bush (Nth) but, adv., conj. (OE butan), but, but if, only, unless but-if, conj. (but + if), unless buxomly, adv. (cf. OE v. būgan, S II), obediently buxumnesse, sb., obedience by, prep. (OE bi, be), by, at, with respect to; by the morwe, in the morning bye, v. (OE bycgan, W I), buy, pay for; boghte agayn, redeemed cake, sb. (ON kaka), round, flattened loaf of bread Calistopee, Callisto. See note on I 2056 calle, sb. (F cale), netted head-dress camaille, sb. (ONF cameil, L camelus), camel Cambyuskan, Gengis Khan. See note on V 12

C

 camuse, kamuse, adj. (F camus, -use), pug

Canacee, Canace. See note on II 77-89

canon, sb. (L canon). See note on VI 887ff.

Cantebregge, Cantebrigge, Cambridge

cantel, sb. (ONF cantel), portion cappe, sb. (OE cæppe, f., L cappa), cap; sette hir aller cappe, made dupes of them all

Capricorn, a zodiacal sign. See p. 135

capul, sb. (cf. Icel kapall, Ir capall, capull, prob. fr. L caballus), cart horse; pl., caples cardynacle, sb. (OF cardiaque), pain at the heart. See note on VI 313 careful, adj. (OE carful, fr. caru, f. + -ful), sorrowful

careyne, sb. (ONF caronie, caroine), dead body carf, pret. of kerve. See § 60

carl, sb. (ON karl; OE cognate ceorl, m.), fellow carole, sb. (OF carole), carol, a dance accompanied by singing

carpe, v. (Icel karpa), talk

Cartage, Carthage; Cartagena, in Spain, I 404

cas, sb. (OF cas), case, chance, occasion, circumstance, condition; caas, par cas, by chance cast, sb. (cf. casten, v.), cast, artifice, fortune; castes, pl., strokes of ill fortune casten, v. (ON kasta), cast, throw, conjecture, consider, plan; casten hem, pret. pl., planned casuelly, adv. (F casuel + -ly), accidentally catel, sb. (OF catel), personal property

Caton, Cato

caytyf, adj. (ONF caitif, captive), wretched, miserable; also sb., wretch

ceint, sb. (OF ceint), girdle celerer, sb. (OF celerier), cellarer, officer of a monastery who had charge of provisions celle, sb. (OF celle), subordinate monastery. See note on I 172

centaure, sb. (LL centaurea), centaury, a medicinal plant centre, sb. (F centre), astronomical term. See p. 136 cereal, adj. (OItal cereale, fr. cerro), of evergreen oak ceriously, adv. (LL seriose, used as adv. fr. series), in detail

certes, adv. (OF certes), certainly, assuredly certeyn, adj. (F certain), certain, sure; in good certayn, in good certainty; a certeyn yeres, a certain number of years; a certeyn of, some certres, error for sterres. See note on I 2037

ceruce, sb. (F ceruse), carbonate of lead

cetewale, sb. (OF citoual), zedoary, a plant of the ginger family

Ceys, Ceyx. See note on II 47-76

chaar, sb. (F char), chariot chaffare, sb. (OE cēap, m. + faru, f.), business, trade; also v.

chalange, v. (OF chalangier), claim chalons, sb. pl. (app. fr. Chalons, the place of manufacture), blankets chamberere, sb. (OF chamberier, f. chambriere), chambermaid champartie, sb. (cf. OF champart), partnership chanon, sb. (F chanoine), canon, a member of a religious order less strict than the monastic. See note on VII 573 chaped, pp. (cf. L capa), mounted chapeleyne, sb. (OF chapelain, m.), chaplain. See note on I 164f.

chapitre, sb. (L capitulum), chapter, the assembly of diocesan officials chapman, sb. (OE cēapmonn, m.), merchant. See note on I 397

chapmanhode, sb. (cf. chapman), trade

charbocle, sb. (OF charbucle, -boucle), carbuncle charge, sb. (F charge), care; if it be in his charge, if he be responsible, I 733; no charge, no matter

chartre, sb. (OF chartre, L cartula, small paper), legal document, deed chasten, v. (OF chastier), discipline

chasteyn, sb. (OF chastaine), chestnut tree

- chaunce, sb. (OF cheance), chance, luck: a technical term in the game of hazard, II 125, VI 653; per-chaunce, I 475; par chaunce, VI 606, by chance
- chauntries, sb. (OF chanterie), chantry, a chapel or altar endowed to maintain one or more priests to sing daily mass for the souls of the founders or others
- chayer, sb. (OF chaière), professor's chair, III 1518
- cheere, chiere, sb. (OF chere, chiere, L cara), countenance, look, appearance, mirth, show, sign
- Chepe, Cheapside, one of the principal streets in old London
- chepe, sb. (OE cēap, m.), market, bargain; to great cheep, too good a bargain, III 523
- chepe, v. (OE cēapian, W II), bargain, come to terms with
- cherl, sb. (OE ceorl, m.), churl, fellow. Cf. carl
- chese, v. (OE cōosan, S II), choose; chese he, pres. subj., let him choose
- chesynge, sb. (OE cōosung, f.), choosing
- chevyssaunce, sb. (OF chevisaunce), borrowing, lending, dealing for profit
- chichivache (perversion of NF chichefache). See note on IV 1188
- chiere. See cheere
- chierte, sb. (OF chierie), love, affection
- child, sb. (OE cild, n.), child; sir (see note on VII 2000)
- chirche-reve, sb. (OE circe, f. + rēaf, n.) church robbery
- chirken, v. (onomatopoeitic; cf. chirk, chirp, chirr), chirp
- chirkyng, sb. (v. var. of chark, OE cearcian, W II), chirping; creak, I 2004
- chivalrie, sb. (F chevalerie), chivalry, knighthood; chivalric ideals, I 45; a body of knights, II 235
- chymbe, sb. (cf. Du Kim, MhG Kimme), projecting rim at the ends of a cask
- chymbe, v. (origin obscure), chime
- chyvachee, chyvachie, sb. (OF chevauchie), raid by body of knights and their retainers
- Cipion, Scipio
- cipre, sb. (OF cipre), cypress
- cipress, sb. (OF cipres), cypress
- Citheron, Cithæron; cf. note on I 1936
- citole, sb. (OF ciiole), citole, a stringed instrument, somewhat like a zither
- citryn, adj. (F citrin), greenish-yellow
- clamb, pret. of clymben. See § 62
- clappe, sb. (cf. MDu clap(p)), noisy talk
- clappe, v. (OE clappian*, W II), chatter
- clappyng, sb. (cf. sb. clappe), chatter
- claree, sb. (OF clare), drink of wine, honey, and spices
- clarion, sb. (OF clairon), a small high-pitched trumpet
- clāuse, sb. (OF clause), sentence; in a clause, briefly
- cleere, adj. (OF cler), bright, beautiful, noble; also adv.
- clene, adj. (OE clāne), clean, pure; adv., thoroughly, completely
- clennesse, sb. (OE clānnes, f.), cleanliness, purity
- clepen, v. (OE cleopian, W II), call, name
- clergeon, sb. (OF clerjon, dim. of clerc), see note on VII 1685
- clerk, sb. (L clericus, OE and OF clerc), one admitted to any of the eight religious orders, scholar, ecclesiastic
- clobbed, adj. (cf. ON klubba), club-shaped
- clomben, pp. of clymben. See § 62
- clos, sb. (F clos, L clausum), yard
- clote-leaf, sb. (OE clāte, f. + lēaf, m.), burdock leaf
- clout, sb. (OE clūt, m.), rag
- clowe-gylofre, sb. (F clou de gilofre), spice clove
- cloysterer, sb. (OF cloistrier), dweller in a cloister. See note on I 259
- clymben, v. (OE climban, S III), climb
- cod, sb. (OE codd, m.), bag, stomach
- cofre, sb. (OF cofre), chest

- cokewold, sb. (OF cucuault, earlier cucuald*), cuckold
- cokkes bones, God's bones. See note on IX 9
- cold, adj. (OM cald, WS ceald), cold, fatal, disastrous
- colde, v. (cf. adj. cold), grow cold
- colera, colere, sb. (LL colera), bile. See note on I 333
- colerik, adj. (F cholérique, L cholericus), bilious, hot-tempered. See colera
- colfox, sb. (OE col + fox, m.; cf. G kohlfuchs), a species of fox described in VII 4092-94
- collacion, sb. (OF collation), conference
- Colle, nickname for Nicolas
- collect, pp., adj. (cf. OF collector), astronomical term. See p. 136
- colour, sb. (OF colour), color; excuse, III 399; colours, pl., fine phrases, IV 16, V 39, 511, 723, 726
- colpon, sb. (OF colpon), strip, bundle
- coltes tooth (OE colt, m. + tōð, m.), 'colt's tooth, i.e. youthful passions
- commune, sb. (OF commune, LL communa), common people; adj. common, general
- compas, sb. (F compas), circle; trine compas, VIII 45, the threefold world, earth, sea, and land
- compassing, sb. (cf. F compasser, measure), artifice
- compeer, compier, sb. (OF comper), comrade
- compleccion, complexion, sb. (F complexion), temperament. See note on I 333
- compleyne, v. (F complaigndre, complaign-), lament
- compleynte, sb. (F complainte), lament. See note on V 948
- composicion, sb. (F composition), agreement; composicions, combinations. See note on V 229
- comyn, sb. (OF comin, OE cymen, m., n.), cumin, an eastern plant formerly cultivated for its spicy seeds
- conclusion, sb. (F conclusion), purpose; conclusions, exercises, I 3193
- condescende, v. (F condescendre), come to
- condicion, sb. (OF condicion), nature; character, II 271; rank, II 312; all the condicion, all the characteristics, I 38
- condicioneel, adj. (OF condicional), conditioned
- confiture, sb. (F confiture), mixture of drugs
- confus, pp., adj. (OF confus), confused, perplexed
- conjure, v. (OF conjurer), entreat
- conseil, sb. (OF conseil), counsel, advice, secret, opinion; confidant, I 1147
- constable, sb. (OF constable), governor
- constellacion, sb. (OF constellation), astronomical term. See note on V 129ff.
- contek, sb. (AF contek), strife
- contenance, sb. (OF contenance), countenance, appearance, demeanor, behavior, show
- convenient, adj. (cf. L convenientem), suitable, commensurate; convenientz, pl.
- convoyen, v. (OF convoier), convey
- cope, sb. (OE cop, m.), top
- cope, sb. (LL capa), cope, a long mantle worn by priests
- coppe, sb. (OE cuppe, f.), cup; turne coppes. See note on I 3928
- corage, sb. (OF corage), courage, heart, spirit, nature, desire, inclination
- cordewane, sb. (OF cordewan, fr. Cordova), cordwain, Spanish leather, used for fine shoes
- corn, sb. (OE corn, n.), grain; cornes, crops of grain
- corny, adj. (corn, n. + -y), tasting strongly of corn or malt
- corone, coroune, corowne, sb. (AF coroune), crown
- coroune. See corone
- corouned, adj. (OF coroné, coruné), consummate, V 526
- corpus, cors, sb. (L corpus), body;

- corpus dominus (for corpus domini), body of the Lord; corpus Madrian, body of [St.] Madrian; corpus bones, a confused oath (cf. note on II 1189)
- corruptable, adj. (OF corrumpable), corruptible
- cors. See corpus
- corven, pp. of kerve. See § 60
- cost, sb. (OF coste), coast, VII 1626, V 995
- costage, sb. (AF costage), cost, expense
- cote, sb. (OE cot, n. cote, wk. f.), cottage, shed; cell, I 2457
- cote, sb. (OF cote), coat, gown
- cote-armure, sb. (OF cote armure), coat-armor. See note on I 1016
- couche, v. (OF coucher), lay, set, crouch; couched, pp., I 3211
- coude, pret. of konne. See § 91
- countour, sb. (AF contour), legal representative, or perhaps accountant. See note on I 359
- countrefete, v. (F contrefaire), imitate. See note on I 139
- countretaille, sb. (OF countretaille), counter tally; at the countretaille, in reply. See note on IV 1190
- cours, sb. (OF cours), course; the practice of coursing or pursuing game with hounds; orbit, course of a planet. See p. 134
- courser, sb. (OF corsier), a war horse lighter and swifter than a dextrer, q. v.
- courtepy, sb. (MDu korte pie), short coat of coarse material
- covent, sb. (L coventus), convent
- coverchief, sb. (OF cuvrechef, couvrechief), kerchief, head covering
- covyne, sb. (OF covine), collusion, trickery
- coy, adj. (F coi), quiet, modest
- crabbed, adj. (fr. OE crabba), crabbed, perverse
- cracchyng, sb. (etym. obscure; cf. MDu and MLG kratsen), scratching
- craft, sb. (OE cræft, m.), craft, skill, trade, occupation, skilful contrivance
- crafty, adj. (OE cræftig), skilful
- crake, v. (OE cracian, W II), speak sharply; craketh boost, boasts noisily, I 4001
- crased, pp. (cf. Sw krasa), cracked
- creance, sb. (OF creance), faith; object of belief, II 340
- creat, pp., adj. (L creatus), created
- crekes, sb. pl. (etym. obscure), tricks
- crepen, v. (OE crēopan, S II), creep
- cridestow, cried'st thou
- crips, crispe, adj. (OE crisp, cyrps, fr. L crispus), curly
- Crisippus, Chrysippus. See note on III 669ff.
- crispe. See crips
- cristal, adj. (OF cristal), crystal; cristal stones, boxes of crystal or glass
- Cristophere, image of St. Christopher. See note on I 115
- croce, sb. (OF croce), staff
- croked, adj. (cf. ON krōkr), crooked
- crop, sb. (OE crop, m.), top; croppes, pl., young shoots
- cropen, pp. of crepe. See § 57
- croset, sb. (origin obscure), crucible
- croude, v. (OE crūdan), push
- croys, sb. (OF crois), cross
- crul, adj. (cf. MDu crul, and other Gmc dialects), curled
- cryke, sb. (F crique), small inlet or bay
- cucurbite, sb. (L cucurbita), a gourd-shaped vessel of glass
- cure, sb. (OF cure), care, attention, endeavor, charge; didn . . . cure, were busy, I 1007; cures, pl., duties, IV 82
- curious, adj. (OF curius), skilful, I 577; elaborate, I 196; occult, V 1120
- cursednesse, sb. (OE pp. cursed + -ness), bad temper
- cursen, v. (OE currian, W II), curse, excommunicate
- curtesye, sb. (OF curtesie), courtesy
- Cutberd, St. Cuthbert, the chief local saint of Northumberland
- cynk, num. (F cing), five; cynk and treye, five and three. See note on VI 653 dragon, sb. (etym. obscure), scrap dalliance, sb. (cf. OF v. dalier), chat, gossip, I 211; pleasant talk, III 1406; dooth he daliaunce, chats or talks, VII 1894 dame, sb. (OF dame), dame, mother; ma dame, madam dampne, v. (OF dampner, L damnare, dampnare), condemn Dant, Dante

D

darreyne, v. (OF derainier), win dart, sb. (OF dart), prize. See note on III 75 daswen, v. (cf. OF v. daser), grow dim (of the eyes) daun, sb. (OF dan, L dominus), master (only as title of respect) Daun Burnel the asse, Master Brunellus, the ass. See note on VII 4502 daunce, sb. (OF dance), dance, method, way daunger, sb. (OF dangier), power, control daungerous, adj. (AF dangerous), hard to please, VII 2129; haughty, I 517 daunte, v. (OF danter, L domitare, freq. of domare, tame), subdue, conquer dawe, sb. (OE dæg, m.), day dawe, v. (OE dagian, W II), dawn dawenyng, sb. (not recorded in OE; cf. Sw and Da dagning), dawn dayerye, sb. (cf. sb. deye), dairy, milch cows on a farm debaat, sb. (OF debat), quarrel debate, v. (OF debatre), fight, contend debonaire, adj. (OF debonaire), gracious, gentle, courteous deceivable, adj. (OF decevable, fr. stem of decevoir), deceptive, deceitful declinacion, sb. (OF declination), astronomical term. See notes on V 1033 and 1246 dedly, adj. (OE dǣdlic), mortal, death-like, likely to die deduyt, sb. (OF deduit), pleasure deel, sb. (OE dæl, m.), deal, part; a ful greet deel, to a great extent;

every deel, every whit; never a deel, not at all deelen, v. (OE dǣlan, W I), deal deerne, adj. (OE derne), secret dees, sb., pl. (OF de, pl. des), dice deeth, sb. (OE dǣð, m.), death; the pestilence, I 605 (cf. "Black Death") defaute, sb. (OF defaute), fault, defect defend, deffenden, v. (OF defendre), defend, forbid; speak against, VI 590; deffended, pp., forbidden, VI 510 degree, sb. (OF degre), degree, rank, position, condition, step or seat deitee, sb. (F deite), rule delice, sb. (OF delice), pleasures deliciously, adv. (cf. OF adj. delicious), delightfully delitable, adj. (OF delitable), delightful delyvere, adj. (OF delivre), agile; delyverly, adv., quickly demen, v. (OE dēman, W I), deem, judge, suppose, condemn depardieux (cf. OF de par Dieu), by God departen, v. (OF departir), depart, part, divide, sever; departyng, sb.
Depeford, Deptford
depeynted, pp. (F depeindre), painted dere, v. (OE derian, W I), injure derre, adv., comp. (OE comp. dierra), more dearly Dertemouthe, Dartmouth
desolaat, adj. (L desolatus), lacking in, II 131; lost to shame, VI 598 despit, sb. (OF despit), malice, insult; in youre despit, in scorn of you despitous, adj. (OF despitous), scornful; despitously, adv., cruelly desport, sb. (OF desport), mirth, pleasure determinat, pp. (L determinatus), definite dettour, sb. (OF dettour, L debitorem), debtor devel, sb. (OE dǣfol, m.), devil; a (twenty) devele wey, an expression of annoyance devoir, sb. (OF devoir), duty devys, sb. (OF devis), decision; at

- point devys, exact in every respect, to perfection
- devysen, divyse, v. (OF deviser), devise, contrive, tell, discuss, describe, imagine, conceive
- dextrer, sb. (F destrier, LL dextrarius), powerful war horse
- deye, sb. (cf. ON deigja), woman farm servant. See note on VII 4036
- deye, v. (ON deyja), die
- deynous, adj. (app. aphetic fr., OF desdeignous), disdainful
- deyntee, sb. (OF deintiē), dainty, pleasure; adj., excellent, fine, pleasant, delightful
- deyntevous, adj. (prob. deyntive + -ous), delicious
- deys, sb. (OF deis), dais
- Dianire, Deianira
- dichen, dyken, v. (OE dician, W II), dig, dig a ditch; diched, pp., surrounded by a ditch, I 1888
- diffame, sb. (OF diffame), evil name, dishonor
- diffinicioun, sb. (OF diffinicion), restriction
- dighte, v. (OE dibtan, W I), prepare; me dighte, go
- digne, adj. (F digne, L dignus), honorable, worthy, noble, proud, haughty, scornful
- diligence, sb. (F diligence), diligence; officiousness, IV 1185; do my diligence, exert myself, do my utmost
- dirryve, v. (F deriver), derive, spring
- dischevelee, adj. (OF dischevele), dishevelled
- disconforten, v. (OF desconforter), discomfort, discourage, distress
- dise, sb. (OF desaise), discomfort, trouble, inconvenience, distress, grief
- dishoneste, adj. (OF dishoneste), shameful
- disparage, sb. (OF desparage), disparagement (from an unequal marriage)
- dispenche, sb. (cf. OF despendre), expenditure
- dispende, v. (OF despendre), spend, waste
- displeasance, sb. (OF desplaisance), offence
- dispoillen, v. (OF despoillier, -oiller), undress
- disporte, v. (OF desporter), amuse
- disposicion, sb. (OF disposicion), disposition, disposal; in astrology, aspect; see p. 40
- disputison, sb. (AF desputeison), disputation, dispute
- dissimulour, sb. (cf. OF v. dissimuler), dissembler
- disteyne, v. (OF desteindre), bedim
- distreynne, v. (OF destreindre), trouble, constrain
- divinistre, sb. (stem of F deviner + -istre), prophet
- division, sb. (OF division), difference, I 1780
- divisyng, sb. (cf. OF deviser), workmanship
- divynyng, sb. (cf. F deviner, L divinare), conjecturing
- divyse. See devysen
- doghty, adj. (OE dyhtig, later dobtig), valiant
- doked, pp., adj. (etym. obscure; cf. Icel dockr, short, stumpy tail), cut short
- dominacion, sb. (F domination), control, VI 560; was in his domynacioun, had control, V 352
- donge, v. (OE dyngan, W I), manure
- doom, sb. (OE dōm, m.), judgment; doomes, pl., legal decisions, I 323; as to my doom, in my opinion
- doon, v. (OE dōn, § 92), do, make, cause; do come, imp., make come; do no fors, imp., take no stock; as dooth, pray do, V 458; do my diligence, make an effort; dide, 3 sg. pret., put on, VII 2047
- dormant, adj. (OF dormant), fixed; table dormant, table with fixed legs (not a trestle table)
- dostow, dost thou
- doted, pp., adj. (cf. MDu v. doten), silly
- doute, sb. (OF dute), doubt, fear; out of doute, without doubt
- doutelees, adv. (OF dute + OE lās), doubtless down, sb. (Celt dūn), hill drad, pp. of drede dradde, pret. of drede draf, sb. (OE drāf*; cf. Du draf, Icel drof, Sw drof, Dan drav), draff, refuse of malt after brewing drasty, adj. (cf. OE dærstan, derstan, pl., dregs), vile, worthless drawen, v. (OE dragan, S VI), draw, drag, bring, attract; drawen hem apart, reflex. depart; dide hem drawe, caused them to be drawn,

 VII 1823
 dreche, v. (OE dreccan, dreccean, W I), torment
 drēde, sb. (cf. v.), dread, doubt; it is no drede, there is no doubt, without doubt; out of drede, without doubt drēde, v. (OE ondrādan, originally S VII; later, W I), fear
 drēdeful, adj. (cf. sb. drede), fearful, timid dredles, adj. (cf. sb. drede), doubtless drenchen, v. (OE drencan, W I), drown
 dresse, v. (OF dresser), dress, address, prepare, set in order, arrange, direct
 dreynt, pp. of drenchen.
 dronkelewe, adj. (ME dronken +
-lewe), drunken, addicted to drink droppyn, p. adj. (OE v. dropian, droppian, W II), leaky, III 278 drough, drowe, pret. of drawen. See § 73
 drugge, v. (perh. dial. var. of drag, OE dragan, ON draga), drag, pull drury, sb. (OF druerie), love-making;
 love-drury, love token or gift drye, v. (OE drēogan, S II), suffer duetee, sb. (AF duete), duty, respect
 Dun, a name for a brown horse Dunmowe, a town in Essex. See note on III 218
 dure, v. (F durer), last dyapred, pp., adj. (cf. F diaprer), diapered, having its surface ornamented with a small, uniform pattern, especially diamond-shaped dyken. See dichen

E

Ebrayk, Hebrew
 eche, v. (OE ēcan, WS īccan, W I), increase eek, eke, conj., adv. (OE ēac), also, moreover, likewise
 eet, pret. of eten. See § 66 effect, sb. (OF effect, L effectus), effect, reality, consequence, significance; in effect, in fact, in reality
 eft, adv. (OE eft), again eggement, sb. (v. egg [ON v. eggja]
 + F -ment), instigation egre, adj. (OF aigre), savage eighe. See eye eighteteethe, (OE eabtātēoða), eight-tenth eke. See eek
 elde, sb. (OE eldo, f.), old age eleccion, sb. (OF election), choice;
 for astrological use, see p. 142
 Eleyne, Helen of Troy ellebor, sb. (F ellebore, L elleborus), hellebore
 elvyssh, adj. (OE ælf, m. + -ish), like an otherworld creature embrouded, embrouded, pp., adj. (OF embroder), embroidered
 Emel, Aemilia, a district in Northern Italy emforth, prep. (OE em, even, + -forth), according to, in proportion to emprise, sb. (OF emprise), undertaking encheson, sb. (OF encheson), cause, motive ende, sb. (OE ende, m.), end, conclusion, agreement endelong, prep. (pop. etym. ende + long, for andlong; cf. ON ende-langr), along endite, v. (OF enditer), compose Enee, Aeneas
 Eneydos, Aeneid
 enforce, v. (OF enforcier, -cir), strengthen; enforce the, reinforce thyself, III 340
 engyne, v. (OF enginier, engyner), torture

enhortē, v. (OF enhorter), exhort enlutyng, sb. (cf. L lutum), sealing with clay
 enoynt, pp., adj. (OF pp. enoint), anointed
 ensample, sb. (OF essample), example entende, v. (F entendre), attend, direct the mind to entente, sb. (OF 'entente), intent, purpose, attention, design ententyf, adj. (OF ententif), attentive entremete, v. (OF entremettre), take part, meddle entune, v. (OF entoner), intone, chant envoluped, pp., adj. (cf. OF envoluper), enveloped
 envyned, pp., adj. (cf. F envine), stored with wine
 Episteles, Ovid's Heroides
 equacion, sb. (L equationem), astronomical term: allowance for minor motions
 equynoxial, sb. (F equinoxial), astronomical term: the celestial equator er, conj. (OE ær), before; erst er, first, before ercedekene, sb. (OE ercediacon, L archidiaconus), archdeacon, an ec-clesiastic next in rank to a bishop, with power to hold court and to judge ecclesiastical cases ere, sb. (OE ēare, n.), ear; eeris, eres, erys, pl.
 ere, v. (OE erian, W I), plough erme, v. (OE yrman, ierman, W I), grieve
 erst, adv. (OE ærest), first, at first, before; erst than, before; at erst,
 at first eryd, pp. of ere.
 eschaunge, sb. (OF eschange, AF eschaunge), exchange, the trade of money changing
 ese, sb. (OF aise), ease, comfort, pleasure; doon you ese, give you pleasure
 ese, v. (OF aisier), entertain, set at ease espaille, sb. (OF espaille), spies, espionage system

espye, sb. (OF espie), spy estat, sb. (OF estat), estate, state, rank, condition
 Estoryal Myroure, Speculum Historiale
 (Mirror of History), by Vincent of Beauvais (13th century)
 estres, sb. pl. (OF estres), interior eten, v. (OE etan, S V), eat evangile, sb. (L euangelium), gospel even, sb. (OE æfen, n.) evening evene, adj. (OE efen), moderate, serene; evene, adv., exactly everich, adj., pro. (OE æfer ælc), each, every, everyone; everich a,
 each; everich on, pro., everyone exaltacion, sb. (F exaltation), astrological term. See p. 139 exaltat, pp., astrological term. See
 p. 139
 expans, adj. (L expansus), astronomical term. See p. 136 eye, eighe, ye, sb. (OM ēge, WS zage, n.), eye; eyen, eyn, pl.; at eye, at sight
 eyle, v. (OE eglian, W II), ail, trouble

F

face, sb. (F face), face; for astrological use, see p. 139
 facound, adj. (F facond, adj., faconde, sb.), eloquent; facounde, sb., eloquence
 facultee, sb. (OF faculte), official position and function
 fadm, sb. (OE fæðm, m.), fathom faire, adj., sb. (OE fæger), beautiful; a fair, a good person, I 165; the fair, the beauty, V 518; faire, adv., well
 fairye, sb. (OF faerie), fairyland;
 piece of magic, V 201
 faldyng, sb. (etym. obscure), coarse serge fallen, v. (OE feallan, S VII), fall, happen, be fitting falow, adj. (OE falū, pl. fealwe), yellow, sallow; falwe rede, yellowish red; falwes, sb. pl., fallow ground, III 656
 falsen, v. (OF falsen), misrepresent, betray famulier, adj. (OF famulier), familiar, intimate fantasie, sb. (OF fantasie), whim, pleasure fantome, sb. (OF fantosme), delusion fare, sb. (OE fær, n. faru, f.), action, proceeding, "doings"; made fare, made a fuss faren, v. (OE faran, S VI), fare, go, act, succeed, conduct one's self; wel-farynge, pres. p. as adj., well behaved fares, 3 sg. pres. for fareth (Nth) faste, adv. (OE faste), fast, close, near, hard, eagerly faucone, sb. (OF faucon), falcon fawe, adj. (OE fægen, fægn), glad fay, feith, fey, sb. (OF fei, OE feid, feit), faith, loyalty; par ma fay, by my faith fecchen, v. (OE feccan, W I), fetch, bring fee, sb. (AF fee; cf. OE fēob, n.), fee, reward, payment; fee simple, see note on I 318 feere, sb. (OE gefēr, n.), company feestlych, adj. (feste + -lych), festive feet, sb. (OF faii), art feith. See fay faithfully, adv. (cf. OE feid, feit), faithfully, certainly, assuredly fel, adj. (OE fel), cruel, fierce, terrible felawe, sb. (OE feolaga, m., fr. ON felagi), fellow, companion, comrade, partner; good felawe, rascal felaweshipe, sb. (felawe + -shipe), fellowship, company, partnership feldefare, sb. (OE feldefare*, miswritten, feldeware, occurs once), fieldfare fele, adj. (OM feolo, WS feola, fela), much, many felle, v. (OE fellan, W I), fell, cut down; feld, pp.

Femenye, sb. (L femina), kingdom of the Amazons fen, sb. (L fen, Arab fann), section of Avicenna's Canon. See note on VI 887ff.
fer, adj., adv. (OE feorr), far, distant; ferre, ferrer, ferther, comp.; ferreste, sup.

ferde, pret. of faren. See § 69 fere, sb. (ONth fāra, aphetic fr. OE gefēra, m.), companion, mate fere, v. (cf. OE sb. fār), fear, frighten ferforth, ferforthly, adv. (OE feorr + ford), far fermacie, sb. (OF farmacie), medicine fern-asshen, sb. pl. (OE fearn, n. + OE, asce, f.), fern ashes ferne, adj. (OE fyrn), distant, ancient; so fern, so long ago ferrer. See fer ferreste. See fer ferthe, num. adj. (OE fēorða), fourth ferther. See fer ferthyng, sb. (OE feordung, f.), bit fesaunt, sb. (AF fesaunt), pheasant fest, sb. (OE fȳst, K fest), fist feste, sb. (OF feste), feast, festival, merrymaking; feeste maketh, shows honour to, IV 1109 festne, v. (OE fæstnian, W II), fasten fet, pp. of fecche
fette, pret. of fecche
fetys, adj. (OF fetis, faitis), neat, well-formed, graceful, handsome; fetisly, adv.
fevere, sb. (OE sefor), fever; fevere terciane, intermittent fever
fey. See fay feynte, v. (OF feintir), enfeeble feyntyng, sb. (cf. OF feintir), failing figure, sb. (F figure), figure; figures, figures of rhetoric, IV 16; for astrological use, see note on I 2045
filet, sb. (F filet, dim. of L filum, thread), headband fillen, pret. of fallen. See § 76 fit, sb. (OE fit, fitt, f.), canto fithle, sb. (OE fīdele, f.), fiddle flatour, sb. (OF flateur), flatterer flaugh, pret. of fleeen. See § 58
Flaundryssh, Flemish fleen, sb. wk. pl. (OE flēab, flēa, m.), fleas fleen, v. (OE flēogan, S II), flee, fly fleigh, pret. of fleeen. See § 58 flemere, sb. (cf. OE v. flēman, W I, ON flāma), one who puts to flight flete, v. (OE flēotan, S II), float, drift flokmeele, adv. (OE flocmālum), in crowds

- flotery*, adj. (cf. OE v. flotorian, W II, freq. of flēotan, S II), waving flowen, pret. pl. and pp. of fleen. See § 58 floytynge, pres. p. (OF fleüter), whistling. See note on I 91 flygh, pret. of fleen. See § 58 fnese, v. (OE fnesan; cf. Icel fnæsa), snort fnorten, v. (cf. OE fnora), snore foled, pp., adj. (cf. OE sb. fola, m.), foaled, born foly, adv. (cf. OF sb. folie), foolishly fond, pret. sg. of tynden. See § 62 fonde, v. (OE fandian, W II), try fonge, v. (OE fon, S VI; cf. late Icel fanga), receive fonne, sb. (cf. Sw fåne), fool foore (OE fōr, f.), trail, steps foot-hoot, adv. (foot [OE fōt, m.] + hot), in hot haste foot-mantel, sb. (OE fōt, m. + OF mantel), foot-cloth. See note on I 472 for-, intens. pref. (OE for-), with verb has variety of meanings. Cf. compounds listed below for, conj. (OE for), for, because, so that, in order that; for that, in order that, IV 372 for, prep. (OE for), for, at, because of, against, despite, notwithstanding; for Percyng of his herte, to prevent piercing his heart; for treason, to ward off treason; for to be deed, to avoid death, IV 364; for noon engyn, by means of no device, V 184; for me, by me, V 357; for which, wherefore forbode, sb. (OE forboð, n.), prohibition for by, adv. (for + by), by, past, near by fordo, v. (OE fordōn, see § 92), destroy, ruin; pp., I 1560, V 1562
foreward, forward, sb. (OE fōreweard, fōrewards, f.), agreement, promise for-fered, pp. (for + pp. fered), greatly frightened forgeten, v. (OE forgietan, S V), forget forlete, v. (OE forlētan, S VII), give up forneys, sb. (OF forneis), furnace forpyned, pp. (OE for + pinian, W II), tormented fors, sb. (F force), consequence, importance; ne do no fors, pay no heed; no fors, no matter forslewthen, v. (OE forslāwian, W II), waste by sloth further over, adv. (forth + over), moreover, furthermore forthy, adv. (OE for ðȳ), therefore, for that reason fortunen, v. (OF fortuner), interpret favorably, I 417; grant fortune to, I 2377 for-waked, pp. (OE for + wacian, W II), worn out with watching forward. See foreward for-why, conj. (OE for + hwȳ), wherefore, because forwityng, sb. (cf. OE v. forwitan, see § 91), foreknowledge forwoot, v. (pret. of OE forwitan, see § 91) foreknew for-wrapped, pp. (for + pp. of ME v. wrappen, etym. obscure), closely wrapped foryelde, v. (OE forgieldan, S III), repay, requite fostren, v. (cf. OE sb. fōstor, food, n.), bring up, care for fother, sb. (OE fōðer, n.), cartload foul, sb. (OE fugol, m.), bird foundren, v. (OF fondrer), stumble foyne, v. (OF foine), thrust foyson, sb. (OF foyson), plenty fra, prep. for fro (Nth) frakenes, sb. pl. (cf. ON freknur, pl.), freckles franchise, sb. (OF franchise), nobility of mind frankeleyn, sb. (LL franchilanus), franklin. See note on I 331 frayne, v. (OE fregnan, frignan, S III), ask fre, adj. (OE frēo), free, bounteous, noble, generous fredom, sb. (OE frēdōm, m.), liberality freently, adv. (OE frēondlic), in a friendly way

freletee, sb. (OF frailete), frailty fremde, adj. (OE fremde), foreign frenge, sb. (OF frenge), fringe frere, sb. (OF frere, L fratrem), friar fressh, adj. (OE fersc), fresh freten, v. (OE fretan, S V), eat, devour fro, prep. (ON frā), from frosch. See fressh fructuous, adj. (OF fructuous), fruitful frutestere, sb. (fruit [OF fruit] + -ster), woman fruit vender fulsomnesse, sb. (full + som + -nesse), excess fume, sb. (OF fume), vapor. See note on VII 4114
 fumetere, sb. (OF fumeterre), fumitory, a plant of the genus Fumaria fumiygacion, sb. (L fumigationem), fume of incantation fumositee, sb. (F fumosite), vaporous humor. See note on VII 4114
 fundament, sb. (L fundamentum), foundation furial, adj. (OF furial), furious furie, sb. (F furie), infernal spirit furlong, sb. (OE furlang, n. fr. furb [furrow] + lang), furlong; a furlong wey, a short time (the time it would take to go a furlong), IV 516; furlong, pl., V 1172 fustian, sb. (OF fustaine), fustian, a coarse cloth made of cotton or flax fyn, sb. (OF fin), end fynch, sb., a bird; for slang use, see note on I 650ff.
 fynden, v. (OE findan, S III), find, discover, provide for; fyndes, 3 sg. pres. (Nth); fyndyng, sb., support; fynt, 3 sg. pres., see § 80
 Fyssh (OE fisc, m.). See p. 135

G

ga, pres. imp. fr. gon (Nth) gabbe, v. (OF gaber; cf. Icel gabba), boast, jest gaillard, gaylard, sb. (OF gaillard), full of high spirits gaitrys, sb. (OE gāte trȝow, n. modified by OE brīs, bush), goat tree; gaitrys berys, goat tree berries

Galathee, Galatea. See note on V 1110 gale, v. (OE galan, S VI), cry out, exclaim Galgopheye, Gargaphia, where Actaeon was killed by his hounds; cf. I 2626
 Galice, Galicia, in northern Spain, where there is the famous shrine of St. James at Santiago de Compostela Galiones, sb. pl. (med.L galienus); an improvised word; see note on VI 305-07 galoche, sb. (F galoche), shoe galpyng, p. adj. (cf. OS v. galpōn, boast; MDu and MG galpen, bark; cognate with yelp), gaping galwes, sb. pl. (OE galga, m.), gal-lows galyngale, sb. (OF galingal), galingale, a spice made from the root of sweet cyperus game, sb. (OE gamen, n.), amusement, delight, jest game, v. (OE gamenian, W II), please (used impersonally) gan, pret. of ginne. See § 62 gane, v. (OE gānian, W II), yawn gargat, sb. (OF gargate), throat gas, 3 sg. pres. of gon (Nth) gat-tothed, adj. (OE gæt, f. pl., gatu + OE iðð, m.), with teeth far apart. See note on I 468
 gaude, sb. (L gaudium, pl. gaudia), trickery gaude, adj. (OF gaude, weld), yellow;
 gaude green, yellowish green, I 2079
 gauded, adj. (perh. fr. L gaudia), furnished with large beads, called gauds; see note on I 159
 Gaufred, Geoffrey de Vinsauf. See note on VII 4537
 Gaunt, Ghent
 gauren, v. (cf. ON v. gā, heed), stare gayne, v. (ON gegna), avail, serve, help (not the modern word gain) geen, pp. fr. gon (Nth) geere, sb. (etym. obscure), turn, change; geres, pl., I 1531 geery, adj. (geere + -y), changeable geeste, sb. (OF geste), tale in verse

- geeste, v. (cf. OF geste, L gesta), tell a tale
- gent, adj. (OF gent), noble, graceful, refined
- gentil, adj. (OF gentil), noble, gentle; gentils, sb. pl., gentlefolk
- gentillesse, sb. (F gentillesse), nobility, courtesy
- Genylon, Ganelon, the traitor in the Chanson de Roland
- gerdon, sb. (OF guerdon), recompense
- gere, sb. (cf. ON gervi, görv; OE f. pl. gearwe), equipment, apparel, utensils, I 352; geeris, pl., appliances, V 1276
- gereful, adj. (gere + -ful), changeful, fitful
- Gernade, the kingdom of Granada
- gerner, sb. (OF gerner), granary
- Geronde, the river Gironde, near Bordeaux
- gest, sb. (OE gæst, giest, m.), guest
- gestour, sb. (cf. OF geste), storyteller. See note on VII 2035f.
- geten, v. (OM getan, ON geta, S V), get, obtain, beget
- giggynge, pres. p. (cf. OF guige, sb.), fitting the guige or arm strap to a shield
- ginne, v. (OE onginnan, S III), begin, attempt; gan, pret. sg., gonnen, pret. pl. (used as auxiliaries), did
- gipser, sb. (OF gibessiere), game bag, purse, pouch
- girden, v. (etym. obscure; perh. from same source as girden, gird), strike, pierce; girt, pp.
- girl, sb. (etym. obscure), young person of either sex; girles, pl. See note on I 664
- girt, pp. of girden. See § 51
- gise, sb. (OF guise), guise, way, manner, custom, style
- giterne, sb. (OF guiterne), cithern, an instrument similar to a guitar
- gladere, sb. (cf. OE adj. glæd + -er), one who cheers
- gladly (cf. OE glæd), usually, generally, VII 4414; V 224, 376
- glee, sb. (OE glēo, m.), music
- gleede, sb. (OE glēd, f.), live coal
- glood, pret. of glide (OE glidan, S I), glided
- glose, sb. (OF glose, LL glosa), comment
- glosen, v. (OF gloser), explain
- gnof, sb. (cf. EFris knufe, lump), churl, boor, lout
- gobet, sb. (OF gobet), piece, fragment
- golet, sb. (OF goulet), gullet
- goliardeys, sb. (OF goliardois), jester
- gon, v. (OE gān, § 92), go, walk; go or ryde; pres. pl. walk or ride
- gonnen, pret. pl. of ginne. See § 61
- good, sb. (OE gōd, n.), property
- gooldes, sb. (OE golde, f., perh. long o in OE), marigolds
- goore, sb. (OE gāra, m.), gore or section of garment; applied also to the whole
- Gootland, Gottland, an island in the Baltic Sea
- goshauke, sb. (OE gōs-hafoc, m.; cf. ON gāshaukr), goshawk. See note on VII 1928
- gossib, sb. (OE godribb, m. fr. god + sibb), intimate friend
- gost, sb. (OE gāst, m.), ghost; spirit, II 404
- governaille, sb. (OF governail), mastery
- governaunce, sb. (OF governaunce), government, management, direction, manner of control, self-control
- governour, sb. (OF gouverneur), ruler, master, umpire
- grant mercy, graunt mercy (OF grant merci), gramercy, many thanks
- grave, v. (OE grafan, S VI), dig, engrave, bury
- gree, sb. (OF gre, L gratum), good will; in gree, with good will
- gree, sb. (OF gre, L gradum), degree, rank, supremacy
- grenehede, sb. (OE grēne + hēafod, n.), greenness
- greses, sb. pl. (OE græs, n.), grasses
- grete, adj. (OE grēat), great, large, full; Grete See, Mediterranean Sea
- grette, pret. of greten (OE grētan, W I), greeted
- greve, sb. (OE græfa, m.), brushwood; pl., thicket, I 1641
- greyn, sb. (OF graine), red dye made from cochineal; in greyn, dyed a fast color

grifphon, sb. (OF grifoun, gripon), griffin

grope, v. (OE grāpian, W II), test.

See note on I 644

grote, sb. (MDu groot), groat, fourpence ground, sb. (OE grund, m.), texture groynynge, sb. (cf. v. groin fr. OF grogneur), murmuring grucche, v. (OF groucher), grumble, complain, murmur at gruf, adv. (ON grufa), face downward

grynt, 3 sg. pres. of grynden (OE grindan, S III), grinds

grys, sb. (OF gris), gray, a costly gray fur gyden, v. (F guider), guide, direct gye, v. (OF guier), guide, direct, govern

Gyle, Giles

gyn, sb. (aphetic form of OF engin), mechanical contrivance, machinery

gynglen, v. (imitative), jingle

gypon, sb. (OF gipon), doublet.

See note on I 75

gyte, sb. (app. OF guite, acc. to Godefroy, veil), kind of dress or gown haberdasshere, sb. (cf. AF bapertas), haberdasher, a seller of hats, stationery, notions and so on habergeon, sb. (OF hauberjon), habergeon, coat of mail. See note on VII 2050-58

H

haf, pret. of heve. See § 66

hakeney, sb. (OF baquenee), riding horse halde, v. (Nth). See holden half, sb. (OE healf, f.), side; sake, III 50

halke, sb. (OE healoc, m., n.?), nook hals, sb. (OE hals, m.), neck

halsen, v. (OE balsian, bealsian, W II), implore halt, 3 sg. pres. of holden. See § 80

halwe, sb. (OE halga, m.; cf. adj. halig), saint; applied in plural to shrines or relics of saints

haly day, sb. (OE hālig + dæg, m.), religious feast day

ham, sb. (OE hām, m.), home (Nth) han, 3 pl. pres., contr. fr. have (Nth); also infin.

hange, honge, v. (OE hangian, W II; but also bōn, S VII), hang happe, sb. (ON bapp), chance hardily, adv. (OE heardlice), certainly, assuredly hardyng, sb. (cf. OE v. beardian, W II), hardening harlot, sb. (OF harlot), rascal harlotrye, sb. (cf. OF harlot), ribaldry, villainy harneised, pp. (OF harneschier), mounted harneys, sb. (OF harneis), armour (of man or horse); harneys, pl., I 1630, 1634

harre, sb. (OE heorre, f.), hinge harrow, interj. (OF baro, barow).

See note on VII 4235

harye, v. (prob. confusion of, OF barier and OE berian, W I), drag hasard, sb. (OF basard), hazard, a game played with dice; gambling

hasardour, sb. (AF basardour), gambler hasardrye, sb. (cf. hasard), gambling

hastif, adj. (OF bastif), hasty; in hastif wyse, quickly hastiffiche, adv. (OF bastif + OE -liche), hastily hastily, adv. (cf. bastif), hastily, quickly; promptly, III 1726

hastou, hastow, hast thou

hauberk, sb. (OF hauberc), hauberk, armor for the breast and back.

See note on VII 2050-58

haunt, sb. (cf. F v. banter), abode, skill, practice haunten, v. (F banter), haunt, practice habitually; hauntededen, pret. pl.

hauteyn, adj. (OF hautain), arrogant hawe, sb. (OE haga, m., hedge), yard, VI 855; fruit of the wild rose, III 659;

with hawe-bake, baked haws

Hayles, Hailes Abbey. See note on VI 652

haysogge, sb. (OE begeſugge, f.), hedge sparrow

- hayt, hey, interj., (Nth, cf. G bott), "get up!" a cry to urge on a horse heed, sb. (OE hēafod, n.), head, source; maugree youre heed, in spite of all you can do heelp, pret. of helpen. See § 60 heep, sb. (OE hēap, m.), crowd, great number, large quantity heer, sb. (OM bēr, WS bār, n.), hair; heeres, heeris, heris, herys, pl.
 heet, pret. of hote. See § 77 heete, by-form of hote. See § 77 heeth, sb. (OE hæð, f.), heath, heather hegge, sb. (OE hegg, f.), hedge heigh, adj. (OE hēah), high helde, v. (FWS healdan, S VII), hold. See holden hele, sb. (OE hēlu, f. indecl.), health, well-being, prosperity Helowys, Heloise
 helpen, v. (OE helpan, S III), help, aid; as wisly helpe me the grete God, so may the great God help me hem, pro. pl. dat. and acc. (OE dat. him, heom), them, themselves hende, adj. (cf. OE gebende, at hand), pleasant, gentle, courteous heng, pret. of hange. See § 76 henne, adv. (OE heonan), hence hente, v. (OE hentan, W I), seize, catch, obtain, get hepe, sb. (OE hēope, f.), hip of the dog rose heraud, sb. (OF heraut), herald; heraudes, pl.
 herbergage, sb. (ONF herbergage), dwelling place; streit of herbergage, limited as to lodging places herbergeour, sb. (OF herbergere, herbergeour), host herberwe, sb. (OE herebeorg; cf. ON herbergi), lodging, dwelling herberwyng, sb. (cf. herberwe), lodging herbe-yve, sb. (L herba + uncertain), coronopus. See note on VII 4156 herd, adj., haired. See heer, sb.
 here, pro. f. (OE hiere, bire, byre, dat.), her. This form is used only in rhyme. See hire herestow, hear'st thou herie, v. (OE herian, W I), praise heris. See heer heriyng, sb. (OE herung, f.), praise herkennen, v. (OE hercnian, heorcnian, W II), listen Hermyon, Hermione
 herne, sb. (OE hyrne, f.), corner
 heronsew, sb. (OF heronceau), young heron Herro, Hero, the sweetheart of Leander hertely, hertly, adj. (cf. OE heorte, f.), hearty, sincere; hertely, adv.
 herte-spoon, sb. (OE heorte, f. + spōn, m.), the depression at the end of the breast bone hertly. See hertely heste, sb. (OE hās, f.); command, promise; heestes, pl.
 Hester, Esther heterly, adv. (cf. MLG better, and OE sb. bete, m.), violently hethyng, sb. (OE hæðing, f.), scoffing mockery, contempt hette, pret. of heten (OE hætan, W I), heated heve, v. (OE hebban, hæbban, S VI), heave, lift heved, sb. (OE hēafod, n.), head hevynesse, sb. (OE hefignes, f.), sorrow, grief heyne, sb. (origin obscure), a rascal or wretch heyre-clowt, sb. (OE bār, n. + clūt, m.), haircloth heyte. See hayt heythen, adv. (ON heþan), hence hierde, sb. (OE birde, bierde, m.), herd, shepherd highte, sb. (OE bieħpo, f. indecl.), height; on highte, on high, loudly highte, pret. of hote. See § 77 hire, pro. f. sg. (OE hiere, byre, etc.), her; gen. pl. (OE hiera, bira), their, of them; hir aller, of them all his, pro. m. and n. (OE gen. m. and n. his), his, its; hise, pl.
 hit, 3 sg. pres. of hyde. See § 80
 Hogge, Hodge, a nickname for Roger hoker, sb. (OE hōcor, m.?), disdain holden, v. (OM haldan, WS healdan, S VII), hold, keep, consider Holderness, Holderness, the south-eastern part of Yorkshire holour, sb. (OF holier, holer, buler, later boulleur), debauché, ribald holsen, pp. of helpen (OE helpan, S III), helped holt, sb. (OE holt, m. and n.), wood honeste, adj. (OF honeste), honorable, becoming, fitting; honestly, adv.

honestee, sb. (OF honeste), virtue, VII 3157 honestetee, sb. (OF honestetee), virtue honge. See hange hool, adj. (OE hāl), whole, perfect, well; hoolle, hoolly, adv.; al hool, adv., entirely hoold, sb. (OE heald, bald, n.), castle, possession hoomly, adv. (OE hām, m. + -lice), simply hoomlynes, sb. (not recorded in OE; but cf. OE hām, m.), domesticity hote, pp. of hote. See § 77 noote, adv. (OE hāte), hotly, fervently hope, v. (OE hopian, W II), hope, expect (with or without desire), think hoppesteres, sb. pl. (OE hoppystre, f., fr. hoppian), dancers. See note on I 2017 hord, sb. (OE hord, n., m.), treasure hore, adj. (OE hār), hoary hostiler, sb. (OF hostel + -er), inn-keeper hote, v. (OE bātan, S VII), command, promise, call, be called houre, sb. (AF houre), hour; for astrological use, see p. 143 hous, sb. (OE hūs, n.), house, household housbondrie, sb. (OE būsbonða, m. + -ry), economical management; household articles, III 288 howpe, v. (OF houper, imitative; cf. OE, hwōpan, threaten, S VII), whoop howve, sb. (OE hwēfe, f.), cap
Hull, an important seaport on the east coast of England humour, sb. (AF humour), humor. See note on I 333 hunte, sb. (OE buntia, m.), hunter hust, pp., adj. (app. fr. interj., bust), hushed hye, sb. (cf. verb), haste; in hye, in haste, quickly hye, v. (OE bigian, W II), hasten; bring quickly, V 291

I

i-ben, pp. of be.
ik, pro. (OE ic), I (Nth)
i-knowe, v. (OE gecnāwan, S VII), understand ilhayl (ON illr., bad + ON beill, health), bad luck (Nth) ilke, pro., adj. (OE ilca), same, very same i-loryn, pp. of lese. See § 57
Ilyon, Ilium, the citadel of Troy in, sb. (OE inn, n.), house inequal, adj. (L in + æqualis), unequal; for astrological use, see p. 143 infect, adj. (L infectus), invalidated infortune, sb. (F infortune), bad fortune ingot, sb. (origin obscure), mould inne, adv. (OE inne), in, within inned, pp. (cf. OE sb. inn, n.), lodged innocent, adj., sb. (F innocent), unsuspecting; sb., young child free from sin, VII 1728, 1825; innocentz, pl.
inportable, adj. (F importable), unbearable interesse, sb. (AF interesse, L interesse, be between), interest in-with, prep. (OE wið-innan), within Isiphilee, Hypsipyle itauht, pp. (tācan, W I), taught iwroken, pp. of wreke. See § 66

J

jade, sb. (etym. obscure), jade, hack
Jakke-of-Dovere. See note on I 4346f.
Jakke Straw, Jack Straw. See note on VII 4584 jambeux, sb. pl. (AF jambeau), leg armor Jame, James
jane, sb. (OF janne), small Genoese coin Janekyn, Jenkin (diminutive of John) jangle, v. (OF jangler), chatter jangler, sb. (cf. v. jangle), jester, chatterer; jangleresse, f.

 jangles, sb. pl. (cf. v. jangle), jabber jape, sb. (cf. OF gaber, F japper), jest, trick, foolish tale japen, v. (cf. OF gaber, F japper), jest, beguile, befool jeet, sb. (OF jaiet), jet Jerome against Jovynyan. See note on III 669ff.
 jet, sb. (OF get, giet), fashion; trick
 Jewerye, Juerie, sb. (AF juerie), ghetto, Jewus' quarter. See note on VII 1679
 Joce, Jodocus. See note on III 484 jogelour, sb. (OF joglere, L joculator), jester jolitee, sb. (OF jolite), jollity, sport, amusement, pleasure jossa, a call used in rounding up horses; meaning and etymology obscure Joves, Jupiter (gen. used as nom.)
 Jubaltar, Gibraltar
 jueles, sb. pl. (AF juel), jewels
 Juerie. See Jewerye
 Juliane, Julian, the patron saint of hospitality jupartie, sb. (OF giu parti), jeopardy, danger jurdon, sb. (etym. obscure; cf. LL jurdanus), glass vessel used in chemical and medical tests. See note on VI 305f.
 juste, sb. (OF juste), encounter on horseback; usually justes, tournament justen (OF juster), joust, engage in a tournament; justen atte fan, see note on VI 42
 juwise, sb. (OF juise), judgment, penalty

K

kaityf, sb. (AF caitif), wretch kalkule, v. (F calculer), calculate kamuse, adj. (OF camus), pug kan, pres. sg. of konne. See § 91 kanstow, canst thou katapuce, sb. (F catapuce), caperspurg

Kaukasous, Caucasus
 kaynard, sb. (F cagnard), sluggard kechyl, sb. (OE cīcil, cācil, prob. related to cake), little cake keen, sb. pl. (OE cū, f.; pl. cȳ, Sth pl. cȳn, K ceen), cows keep, sb. (cf. OE cēpan, v.), heed, care keepe, v. (late OE cēpan), take care of, preserve kembe, v. (OE cemban, W I), comb.; kembd, pp.; kembde, pret., smoothed (fig.), V 560 kempe, sb. (cf. ON kampr, beard whisker), coarse, bristling (of hair) kepe, sb. See keep kepen, v. (late OE cēpan, W I), keep, hold, watch, take care of kerve, v. (OE ceorfan, S III), carve, cut keste, pret. of casten.
 kirtel, sb. (OE cyrīel, m.), tunic kithe, v. (OE cȳðan, W I), show kitte, v. (not recorded in OE or any WG dialect; perh. from cutian*, cyttan*, anal. to OE scyttan), cut knakke, sb. (etym. obscure), trick, artifice knarre, sb. (LG knarren, Du knar, knot or knob), thickset fellow knarry, adj. (cf. Du knar), gnarled, knotty knave, sb. (OE cnafa, m.), boy, servant
 knede, v. (OE cnedan, S V), knead knee, sb. (OE cnēo, cnōow, n.), knowes, knees knette. See knytte knotte, sb. (OE cnotta, m.), main point of a story knowes. See knee
 knowestow, knowest thou knyght, sb. (OE cnīht, m.), knight; knyght of the shire, member of Parliament for a county knytte, v. (OE cnyttan, W I), knit, join, agree, bind; knette, Kentish; for astrological use, see note on II 295-319
 konne, v. (OE cunnan, § 91), can, know, know how, learn, have experience of, understand konnyng, sb. (cf. OE oncunnung, f.), ability, skill; konnyngly, adv., skilfully korven, pp. of kerve. See § 60 koude, kouthē, pret. of konne. See § 91 kynd, sb. (OE cynd, n.), kind, nature, inclination, the natural world; of kynde, by nature; of propre kynde, according to one's disposition kyndely, adj., adv. (OE gecyndelic), natural, naturally Kynges Note, the name of a song (unknown), I 3217 kynn, sb. (OE cynn, n.), kind; alles kynnes, gen., of every kind kynrede, sb. (OE cynræden, cynræd, n.), kindred kyte, sb. (OE cȳta, m.), kite, a bird of the falcon family

L

laas, sb. (OF las), lace, cord, snare labbyng, p. adj. (onomatopoetic form), blabbing Lacedomye, Lacédæmon, Sparta lacerte, sb. (OF lacerte), muscle lad, pp. ladde, pret. of lede.
Ladomya, Laodamia
laft, lafte, pp. and pret. of leve lake, sb. (prob. fr. Du laken), fine white linen lampe, sb. (OF lame, L lamina), a thin plate of metal Lancelot de Lake, title of one of the Arthurian romances Laodomya, Laodamia
lappe, sb. (OE lappa, lappa, m.), fold or edge of garment; lap, I 686; cloth, IV 585 large, adj. (OF large), large, great, generous, free; at thy large, at thy will; at his large, at liberty; also adv., broadly, I 734 largely, adv. (see large), largely, fully lasse, adj. comp. (OE lāssa), less last, sb. (OE hlæst, n.), load. See note on VII 1628 lat, imper., laten, pret. pl. of lete. See § 74

lathe, sb. (ON blapa), barn laton, sb. (OF laton), latten, a compound metal resembling brass laude, sb. (OF laude), praise laughe, v. (OE bliebban, Ang blæbban, S VI), laugh launcegay, sb. (OF lancegaye), a kind of lance. See note on VII 1942 launde, sb. (OF launde), an open space in woods laurere, sb. (F laurier), laurel lauriat, adj. (L laureatus), crowned with laurel laus, adj. (cf. ON lauss), loose (Nth) lavour, sb. (OF laveoir, lavor, L lavatorium), wash basin or water jug lawe, sb. (OE lagu, f.), creed, II 221; law, II 223 lawriol, sb. (F laureole), spurge-laurel lay¹, sb. (OF lei), law, creed, faith lay², sb. (OF lai), lay, a short poem intended to be sung layneres, sb. pl. (F laniere), straps lazar, sb. LL lazarus, leper leche, sb. (OE lāce, m.), doctor lechecraft, sb. (OE lāce-craeft, m.), medical skill, medicine, remedy lechour, sb. (OF lecheor), lecher lede, v. (OE lædan, W I), lead, carry bring; leden forth, continue leden, sb. (OE læden, n.), language leed, sb. (OE lēad, n.), large kettle or cauldron leef, lief, adj., sb. (OE lēof), dear; eager, VI 760; leeve, voc. sg., VI 731, V 1607; pl., V 341; lief ne levere, as dear or dearer, V 572
leefful, adj. See leveful leek, sb. (OE lēac, n.), leek leere, sb. (OE lira, m., prob. infl. by blēor), flesh leere, v. (OE lēran, W I), learn, teach leet, pret. of lete. See § 74 lefsel, sb. (perhaps OE leaf, n. + sele, m., hall), bower of leaves legende, sb. (F legende, LL legenda, what is to be read), story of a saint's life legge, v. (OE leccan, W I), lay lemaille, sb. (OF limaille), metal filings

- leme, sb. (OE lōma, m.), flame lemes, sb. pl. (OE līm, n.), limbs lemman, sb. m. or f. (OE lēof + monn), lover, sweetheart, mistress lene, v. (OE lānan, W I), lend lenger, adj., adv., comp. (OE lengra), longer Leon (L leo), a zodiacal sign. See p. 135
 Lepe, a town in Spain
 lepyng, pres. p. (OE hlēāpan, W VII), running, rushing lere, v. (OE lēran, W I), learn; lered, pp., learned lese, v. (OE lēosan, S II), lose lest, sb. See lust lest, v. See list
 lesyng, sb. (OE lēasung, f.), lying, deceit; lesynges, pl., lies lesyng, sb. (cf. v. lese), loss, losing lete, v. (OE lātan, S VII), let, leave, abandon, cause; leet doon cryen, caused to be proclaimed lette, sb. (cf. v. letten), delay, IV 300 letten, v. (OE lettan, W I), hinder, prevent, impede, delay, desist, cease, refrain from Lettow, Lithuania
 letuarie, sb. (OF letuaire), medicinal conserve leve, sb. (OE lēaf, f.), leave, permission leve, adj. (OE lēof), dear leve¹, v. (OE lēfan, W I), grant, permit; VII 1873
 leve², v. (OE lēfan, W I), leave, leave off, cease leve³, v. (OM lēfan, WS lēfan, W I), believe leveful, adj. (leve + -ful), permissible levne, sb. (etym. obscure; cf. OE lig, m.), lightning levere, adj., comp. (OE comp. lēofra), dearer, rather; with impers. v. and dat., I 293; VI 615; with have and subj. nom., VII 3083, 4310; V 683, 692, 1360; had hire levere, she had rather, IV 444 lewed, adj. (OE læwed), ignorant wicked, base; lewedly, adv.; kan but lewedly, does not know much lewednesse, sb. (cf. OE læwed, adj.), foolishness leye, v. (OE lecgan, W I), lay, VIII 596; wager, I 4009; leyed, pret.
 leyser, sb. (OF leisir), leisure, opportunity leysinges, sb. pl. See lesyng libel, sb. (OF libel, m.), written statement of complaint Libra (L libra), a zodiacal sign. See p. 135 licenciati, sb. (LL licentiatu), licentiate, licensed to receive confessions and to grant absolutions licour, v. (OF licour), moisture, juice lief. See leef
 lifly, lyvely, adv. (OE līf, n. + -ly), realistically, I 2087
 lige, adj. (OF lige), loyal; lige man, vassal; lige lord, liege lord; liges, sb. pl., vassals ligen, v. (OE licgan, S V), lie lighte¹, v. (cf. alyghte), alight, dismount lighte², v. (OE līhtan, W I), make glad, feel glad lighten³, v. (OE līhtan, W I), light, shine, illumine; lighte, pret. sg. VII 1661 lightnen, v. (cf. lighten), enlighten, illumine ligne, sb. (OF ligne; cf. OE līne, f.), line, lineal descent liken, v. (OE līcian, W II), like, please; liketh, impers. pres.; us liketh yow, we are pleased with you likerous, adj. (AF likerous*), wanton; coquettish, I 3244; eager, V 1119 liklihed, sb. (OE gelīclic + -hād), likelihood lisse, sb. (OE liss, f.), relief, alleviation lissen, v. (OE lissian, W II), relieve list, v. impers. (OE līstan, Kentish lestian, W I), pleases (with dat.); also lest lite, adj., adv. (OE lȳt), little, small; a lite, also sb.
 lith, sb. (OE lið, m., n.), limb lixt, liest. See note on III 1618 lodemenage, sb. (AF lodmanage; cf. OE, lādmann), pilorage loft, sb. (cf. Dan loft), loft; on lofte, aloft, on high; kepte . . . on lofte, supported logge, sb. (OF loge), shed logge, v. (OF logier), lodge, entertain;

 loggyng, sb., quarters
 loken, pp. (OE lūcan, S II), enclosed lollere, sb. (var. of Lollard, MDu lollaerd), Lollard. See note on II 1170-83 lond, sb. (OE land, lond, n.), land, plain, country; upon lond, in the country longes, sb. pl. (OE lungen, f.), lungs loode sterre, sb. (OE lād, f. + stearra, m.), lodestar, the guiding star loos, sb. (OF los, loos), honor, fame Looth, Lot
 looth, adj. (OE lād), loath, hateful, unpleasant; lothest, most unwilling lordynges, sb. pl. (OE blāford, m. + -ing), sirs lorel, sb. (cf. OE loren, pp. of lese), rogue lorn, pp. of lese. See § 57 losien, v. (OE losian, W II), lose lough, adj. (ON lāgr), low lough, pret. of laughe. See § 73 louryng, p. adj. (lour, perh. OE lūrian* + -ing), frowning loute, v. (OE lūtan, S II, later wk.), bow, bow down lowke, sb. (etym. obscure), confederate, "fence"
 Loy, Eligius. See note on I 119-162
 luce, sb. (OF lus, luce), luce, pike Lucresse, Lucretia
 lust, sb. (OE lyst, f.), pleasure, delight, desire lust, v. impers. (OE lystan, W I pleases, 3 sg. pres., IV 322, V 147) lustiheed, sb. (cf. OE lyst, f.), enjoyment, pleasure lustynesse, sb. (cf. OE lyst, f.), pleasure, gaiety luxurie, sb. (OF luxurie), lust lyard, sb. (OF liart), grey, applied especially to horses lych-wake, sb. (OE lic, n. + waacu, f.), wake, watch kept at night over a dead body
 Lyde, Lydia, in Asia Minor

lye, v. (OE ligian), blaze (III 1142)
 lyes, sb. pl. (F lie), dregs, sediment Lyeys, Ayas, in Armenia; surrendered in 1361 to Pierre de Lusignan, who also drove the Saracens out of it in 1367
 lyf, sb. (OE lif, n.), life; lyve, dat.; on lyve, alive; lyves, gen. used as adj., living, alive, IV 903
 Lygurge, Lycurgus
 lyme, v. (cf. OE sb. lim, m.; perh. fr. v. limian*), cover with bird lime lymtacioun, sb. (cf. F limitation, L limitationem), district allotted to a friar lymytour, sb. (cf. F limite), limiter, a friar licensed to beg within certain limits lynde, sb. (OE lind, str. f., linde, wk. f.), linden tree Lynyan, Giovanni di Lignano, a famous Italian jurist and writer on philosophy lyst, sb. (OE hlyst, m.), ear lystes, sb. pl. (OE list, m.), lists lytarge, sb. (OF litarge), litharge, lead protoxide ointment lyvely. See lifty
 lyveree, sb. (OF livree), livery, dress, distinctive of all the members of a household or gild

M

maade, pret. of maken
 Macrobeus, Macrobye, Macrobius. See note on VII 4313ff.
 madde, v. (cf. OE mædd, pp. of mædan), be angry magyk, sb. (OF magique). See note on I 414ff.
 Mahoun, Mohammed
 maister, adj. (OF maistre), chief, main; maister strete, principal thoroughfare, I 2902 maistow, mayst thou maistrie, sb. (OF maistrie), authority, control, skill make, sb. (OE maca, m.), mate, opponent maken, v. (OE macian, W II), make

- cause, compose (poetry); doon make, cause to be made; lat maken, caused to be made; pret. makede
 and made making, sb. (OE macung, f. fr. macian, W II), composition
Makomete. Mohammed
male, sb. (OF male), bag, wallet malencolie, sb. (OF melancolie), black bile, one of the four humours malencolik, adj. (cf. F melanco- lique). See note on I 333 mandementz, sb. pl. (OF mandement), commandments
maner, sb. (AF manere), kind (of).
 See § 113
mansion, sb. (OF mansion), house;
 for astrological uses, see pp. 140-42 and note on V 113off.
mantel, sb. (OF mantel), mantle;
 foot-mantel, I 472, riding skirt manye, sb. (manie), mania mappemounde, sb. (F mappemonde, fr. L mappa mundi), map of the world
Marcien, adj. (L Martius), Martian, having the temperament due to the influence of the planet Mars mareys, sb. (OF mareis), marsh mark, sb. (OE mearc, n.), race, III 696 market-betere, sb. (late OE market + beater), loafer at markets
Marrok, Morocco
mary, sb. (OE mearg, mearb, n., m.), marrow
marybones, sb. pl. (OE mearb, n., m.
 + bān, n.), marrow bones masse-penny, sb. (OE mæsse, f. + pening, m.), offering. See note on
 III 1749
mat, adj. (OF mat, mated at chess), exhausted, overcome mathinketh, v. 3 sg. imp. (me + OE of + þyncan, seem, W I), it repents me, i.e., I am sorry maugree, mawgree, prep. (OF maugre), in spite of, notwithstanding;
maugree youre heed, in spite of all you can do, VII 4602 Maumetrye, sb. (maumet [OF ma- bumet, idol] + -ry), idolatry maunciple, sb. (OF manciple), pro- vision buyer in a college or inn of court
mawe, sb. (OE maga, m.), maw, stomach
mawgree. See maugree mayde, sb. (shortened fr. mayden, OE mæġden, n.), virgin; used of a man, III 79
maydenhede, sb. (OE mæġden + hæd*), virginity maystow, maistow, 2 sg. pres. of mowen. See § 91
mazelyn, sb. (OF maselin), bowl of maple wood me, men, indef. pro. (reduced from OE man), one, somebody mede¹, sb. (OE mēd, f.), reward mede², meeth, sb. (OE meoðu, m., n.), mead, a drink made of fermented honey
medle, v. (OF medler), mix medlee, sb. (OF medlee), cloth of mixed weave. See note on I 328 meenes, sb. pl. (cf. OF adj. men), means meest, adj., adv. (OE māst), most meeth. See mede² Meleagree, Meleager melle, sb. (OE mylen; cf. Sw mölla, Dan melle), a mill men. See me
Mercenrike, Mercia
meridional, adj. (F meridional); for astrological use, see note on V 263 merk, sb. (OE mearc, Ang merc, f. and n.), image, V 880
meschance, sb. (OF mesch[e]ance), misfortune; with meschance, curses on her, II 896; with curses, I 4412 meschief, sb. (OF meschief), misfortune, distress message, sb. (F message), message, messenger; pl., IV 738
messedays, days when the mass is sung mester, myster, mystiers, sb. (OF mester, mestier), trade, occupation, kind, sort mesuage, sb. (AF mesuage, prob.
 graphic corruption of obs. F mesnage), site for a dwelling

- mesurable, adj. (F mesurable), temperate
- mete, sb. (OE mete, m.), meat, food; dinner, I 348
- mete, adj. (OE gemæte), suitable
- mete, v. (OE mætan, W I), dream; me mette, pret. sg. impers., I dreamt; hym mette, pret. sg. impers., he dreamt
- Methamorphosios, Ovid's Metamorphoses
- mewe, muwe, sb. (OF muē), cage for hawks; coop for fattening fowls, I 349
- mexcuse, me excuse
- meynee, sb. (OF meyne), household, servants, company
- ministre, sb. (OF ministre), magistrate
- mirre, sb. (OF mirre), myrrh
- mis, adj. (partly prefix mis-, partly reduced fr. amiss, a- + miss, OE missan), wrong, bad
- miteyn, sb. (F mitaine), mitten
- mo, adj., comp. (OE mā), more, besides, others; tymes mo, other times; another, IV 1039; also adv., more
- moevere, sb. (cf. OF v. moevent), mover, cause
- mooving, firste, the primum mobile
- montance, sb. (OF montance), amount, value
- moote, v. (OE mōtan, pp.), must, shall, ought; so moot I theen, so may I thrive; as moote I..., pres. subj., so may I
- mormal, sb. (OF mortmal), inflamed sore
- mortal, adj. (OF mortal), mortal, deadly, relentless
- mortreux, sb. pl. (OF mortreux), stews. See note on I 384
- morwe, sb. (OE morgen, m.), morrow, morning; by the morwe, in the early morning; in the morwe tyde, early in the morning; morwe song, morning song
- morwenynge, sb. (morwen fr. OE morgen, m. + -ing), morning
- mostou, must thou
- motyf, sb. (F motif), idea
- mountenaunce, sb. See montance
- moustre, sb. (OF moustre), pattern, example
- mowen, v. (OE magan, pp.), may, be able
- mowlen, v. (perh. after F v. mouler), mould
- moyste, moysty, adj. (OF moiste), moist; soft, I 457; new, VII 1954, VI 315
- much, adj., sb. (shortened fr. muchel), much; much and lite, high and low, I 494
- muchel, adj. (OE mycel, micel), much, great; also adv.
- multiplie, v. (OF multiplier, L multiplicare), increase the amount of precious metal by transmutation of a baser metal
- murie, myrie, adj. (OE myrige), merry, pleasant, sweet; murier, comp. adv., VII 4460
- murierly, adv. comp. (cf. OE mirige), more merrily
- muwe. See mewe
- Myda, Midas
- myne, v. (ON minna), remember
- myrie. See murie
- mysavyse, v. refl. (mis- + F aviser), be ill advised
- mysboden, pp. (OE misbēodan, S II), injured, ill treated
- myscarie, v. (OF meskarier), come to harm, go astray
- mysdeme, v. (cf. ON misdæma), misjudge
- mysdeparten, v. (mis- + depart), distribute wrongly
- myster, mystiers. See mester
- myte¹, sb. (OE mīte, f.), mite, any minute insect
- myte², sb. (MDu mijte), thing of small value, small coin

N

- na, adv. (OE nā), no (Nth)
- nadstow, ne hadst thou, hadst thou not
- nakerer, sb. (cf. OF nakaire), performer on the kettledrum
- nameliche, namely, adv. (OE nama,

- m. + -lice), namely, especially, particularly
- namo, namoore, pro. adj., adv. (OE nā, mā), no more
- narette (ne + arette), v. See aretten
- narwe, adj. (OE nearu), narrow, small
- nas, contraction of ne was
- nat, contraction of ne at, II 290
- nat, contraction of ne wot, knows
- not
- nat, adv. (OE nāwibt, nāht, n.), not, by no means, not at all
- nathelees, adv. (OE nā þȝ lās), nevertheless
- nay, adv. (Icel nei), nay, no; it is no nay, there is no denying
- ne, adv., conj. (OE ne), not
- nece, sb. (F nece), kinswoman, niece or cousin
- neddre, sb. (OE nædre, f.), serpent
- nede, nedes, adv. (OM nēdes, WS nīdes, gen.), necessarily; nedescost (ON kostr), nedely, necessarily
- neer, adv. comp. (OE comp. nēar), nearer; ner and ner, nearer and nearer
- neet, sb. (OE nēat, n.), cattle
- nempnen, v. (OE nemnan, W I), name, mention
- nere, contraction of ne were, were not
- newefangel, adj. (ME newe + fangel; OE stem fang- fr. v. fōn), fond of novelty
- next, adj. (OE nēabst, nīehst), nearest, II 807, 1814
- niffles, sb. pl. (etym. obscure; cf. LL nicbil, perh. infl. by trifle), silly stories
- niste, contraction of ne wiste, pret. of witen. See § 91
- noble, sb. (F noble), noble, an English coin first minted by Edward III, value 6s. 8d.
- noblesse, sb. (OF noblesse), nobleness, magnificence, honor
- nobleye, sb. (F nobleye), nobility
- noël, nowel, sb. (OF noel, L natalem), birthday (shouted or sung at Christmas to commemorate the birth of Christ)
- nof, contraction of ne of
- noht, sb. (OE nāwibt, n.), not a whit, nothing
- nolde, contraction of ne wolde, would not
- nones, adj., sb. (OE for þām ānes), expressly, for the purpose (often only a metrical tag for the rhyme)
- noon, pro. adj. (OE nān), no, no one, none
- norice, sb. (OF norice), nurse
- norissed, pp., adj. (OF stem noriss-, the strengthened form of norir), brought up
- norissyng, sb. (cf. norissed), bringing up
- nortelrie, sb. (irreg.; cf. OF nourture), education
- nosethirl, sb. (OE nos, f. + þyrl, n.), nostril
- nostow, contraction of ne wostow, dost thou not know
- not, contraction of ne wot, pret. of witen
- notabilitee, sb. (OF notabilite), notable
- note, sb. (OF note, L nota), note, tune, song; cf. Kynges Note
- note, sb. (OE notu, f.), business, I 4068
- note muge, sb. (OE bnutu, f. + OF mugue; prob. adapted fr. OF nois mugue*), nutmeg
- not-heed, sb. (OE adj. bnot + bēafod, n.), crop-head, head with closely cropped hair
- nothyng, sb. (OE naðing), nothing; used as adv., in no respect, not at all
- novys, sb. (OF novisse, novice), novice, a candidate for admission into a religious order
- nouche, sb. (OF nouche), jewelled ornament
- nowel. See noël
- nowthe, adv. (OE nūðā), now; as nowthe, just now
- nyce, adj. (OF nice), scrupulous, foolish
- nycetee, sb. (OF nicete), folly, stupidity
- nyghtertale, sb. (cf. ON nāttartale and nāttarþel; form and meaning confused in Eng. word), night-time; by nyghtertale, in the night-time nyl, contraction of ne wil, will not nyn, contraction of ne in nys, contraction of ne is

O

o, adj. (OE ān), a, one, a single obeisant, adj. (F obeissant), obedient obeissance, sb. (OF obeissance), obedience, submission, obedient or courteous act occupien, v. (OF occuper), seize upon octogamye, sb. (on the analogy of bigamy), marrying eight times Octovyan, Octavius Caesar of, prep. (OE of), of, for, by, at, about, in, in respect to, from, off, with, out of offertorie, sb. (L offertorium), offertory, an antiphon sung while the faithful are making their offerings for the support of the church office, sb. (AF and OF office), office, duty, employment; property, III 1144; houses of office, store-rooms, IV 264 of-showve, v. (OE scūfan, S II), push away violently offer, adv. comp. (OE comp. ofior), oftener of-thowed, pp., adj. (OE pāwian, W II), melted away oght, indef. pro. (OE āwibt, ābt), anything; adv., at all, VII 1792 oghte, pret. of owen. See § 91 omelie, sb. (F omelie, L homilia), homily on, prep. (OE on), on, in, at ones, adv. (OE ānes), once; al ones, of one mind; atanes (Nth), atones, at one time onethe, adv. See unnethes
oon, num. (OE ān), one, the same; after oon, the same, equally good; evere in oon, ever the same; oon and oon, one by one; at on, together; in oon, the same open-heveded, adj. (OE open + hēafod, n.), bareheaded operation, sb. (OF operation), experiment, calculation

opposen, v. (F opposer), lay to the charge of opposicion, sb. (F opposition), opposition; for astrological use, see p. 140 oratorie, sb. (L oratorium, OF oratoire), chapel or small room set apart for private devotions ordinance, sb. (OF ordenance), order, arrangement Orewelle, the Orwell, a river in Suffolk original, sb. (F original), origin, source orison, sb. (OF orison), prayer orloge, orloge, sb. (OF orloge), clock orpiment, sb. (L orpimentum), orpiment, trisulphide of arsenic ouche. See nouche
oule, sb. (OE ūle, f.), owl ounce, sb. (F once), ounce, small bunch oundye, adj. (F onde), wavy oure, sb. (OF ure, ore, L bora), hour outen, v. (OE ūtian, W II), utter; show, III 521 out-hees, sb. (early ME ūthēs [OE, uthās*]), outcry, clamour outher, conj. (OE āghwæðer, āwðer, āðer), either; outher . . . or, either . . . or outrely, adv. (conformed to ME out, outer, rather than OE ūtterra), utterly, absolutely outreye, v. (OF outreier), fall into a passion outridere, sb. (out + ridere), outrider. See note on I 166 out-twyne, v. (cf. OE sb. twin, n., and cognate Gmc forms), spin out out-yede, v. pret. (OE ūtēode), went out over, adj. (OE ofer), upper; overeste, sup., outer, I 290 over-al, adv. (OE ofer + al), everywhere; over-al ther, wherever overeste. See over overlad, pp. (OE ofer + lādan, W I), browbeaten overmacche, v. (over + match [cf. OE sb. gemacca, m.]), be more than a match for, IV 1220 overslope, sb. (OE oferslop, n. fr.

over + slop, n., smock), cassock, gown overthwart, adv. (ME over + þwert, fr. ON, þvert), across Ovydes Art, Ovid's Ars Amatoria
owen, v. (OE āgan, § 91), owe, own, ought, be necessary; us oghte, hire oghte, impers.
owher, owghwhere, adv. (OE āhwār), anywhere Oxenford, Oxford
oynement, sb. (OF oignement), ointment pace, v. (cf. OF sb. pas, L passum), proceed, surpass Padowe, Padua

P

page, sb. (OF page), boy attendant, or in training for knighthood; also male servant of low rank; a propre page, a fine boy, I 3972 Palatye, Balat, in Asia Minor. According to Livon, King of Armenia, who visited England in 1385, the lord of Palatye was a Christian, doing homage to Amurath the Turk (Froissart, ed. Buchon, bk. III, chap. xxv; Johnes' transl. III, 23) palfrey, (OF palefrei), well-trained riding horse palled, pp., adj. (app. aphetic fr. appal; but cf. cognate v. pale fr. adj. pale), pale palmer, sb. (OF palmier), palmer. See note on I 13 Pamphilus, Pamphilus. See note on V 1110 pan, sb. (OE panne), skull panade, sb. (cf. OF pann-, pan-, penard), cutlass panter, sb. (OF panter), fowling net pape, sb. (OE pāpa, m. fr. L papa), pope papejay, sb. (OF papegai), a parrot or a woodpecker parage, sb. (F parage), lineage paramentz, parementz, sb. (OF parament), rich hangings paramour, sb. (F par amour), love, lover, mistress; for paramour, for love, VII 2033; paramour, paramours, adv., passionately parcel, sb. (F parcelle), part pardee (OF par de), verily, certainly (a common asseveration) pardoner, pardoneer, sb. (AF pardoner), pardoner. See note on I 543 parementz, sb. See paramentz

parfay, interj. (AF par fay), by my faith parfit, adj. (OF parfait, parfit), perfect; parfitly, adv.
parfourne, v. (OF parfournir), perform, execute parisshen, sb. (OF paroissien), parishioner paritorie, sb. (AF paritarie), pellitory of the wall (medicinal herb) parten, v. (perh. sb. part, L partem, + -en), share with Parthes, Parthians party, adj. (F parti), mingled, I 1053 parvys, sb. (F parvis, or LL parvisiae). For meaning, see note on I 310 pas, sb. (OF pas), pace, step, gait; a paas, apace; a litel moore than paas, a little faster than a walk passant, adj. (cf. F passant, pres. p. of passer), surpassing, excelling passyng, adv. (pass + -ing), very, exceedingly patente, sb. (OF patente), letter patent, I 315; papal license, VI 337 patrone, sb. (F patron), pattern pay, sb. (OF paie), content, pleasure paye, v. (OF paier), please payen, adj., sb. (OF paien, L paganus), pagan payndemayn, sb. (OF pain demeine, LL panis dominicus), the finest white bread. See note on VII 1914-25
pecunyal, adj. (L pecunialis), pecuniary Pedmark, Penmark, a district in Brittany peert, adj. (cf. OF apert, L apertus), saucy Pegasee, Pegasus peire, sb. (F paire), set (not limited to two peler, sb. (OF piler), pillar

- Pemond, Piedmont, a district in northern Italy
- penant, sb. (OF penant), penitent
- Penmark. See Pedmark
- Penneus, Peneus
- penoun, sb. (OF penon), pennon, ensign of the knight-bachelor or knight who had not reached the dignity of the banneret
- penyble, adj. (F penible, fr. peine), painstaking
- percelly, sb. (OF peresil, persil), parsley
- percen, v. (OF percer), pierce, stab
- peregryn, adj. (L peregrinus), pilgrim: faucon peregryn, peregrine falcon
- perejonette, adj. (OE pere, peru, f. + F Jeannet; cf. F poire de la Saint Jean), early pear
- perled, pp., adj. (cf. F perle), studded as with pearls
- permutacioun, sb. (OF permutacion), alteration
- perrye, sb. (OF pierrie, pierie, fr. pierre, stone), precious stones
- pers, sb. (OF pers), cloth of a blue-gray color
- persone, sb. (OF persone), parson, parish priest; person, I 521, IV 73
- pesen, sb. pl. (OE pise, f., pl. pisan), peas
- pestilence, sb. (OF pestilence), plague, curse, mischief, harm (in a general sense); time of plague, I 442, VI 679
- Peter, a common oath
- Petrak, Petrarch
- peyne, pyne, sb. (OF peine), pain, punishment, suffering; dide his payne, did his utmost, V 730
- peyne, v. (OF pener, F peiner), take pains, endeavor (reflex.)
- peytrel, sb. (AF peitrel, L pectorale, breastplate), collar for horse (originally a breastplate)
- Phisiologus, Physiologus (title of a book about animals by Theobaldus)
- phislyas, sb., corruption of filaz, filace. See note on II 1189
- phitonissa, sb. (LL phitonissa), pytho-ness, prophetess; Phitonissa, the witch of Endor, III 1510
- pichen, v. (etym. obscure; cf. OE piccean*), pitch; pighte, pret.
- Pictagoras, Pythagoras
- pie, sb. (F, pie), magpie
- piggesnye, sb. (ME pigges + neyge = OE cyge, n.), darling. See note on I 3268
- pighte*, pret. of pichen.
- piled, pp., adj. (cf. OE pilian, W II, prob. fr. L, pilare), bald, scanty
- pilour, sb. (OF pilour), pillager
- pilwe beer, sb. (OE pyle, pilu, m.? + ME bere, etym. obscure), pillow-case
- pipen, v. (OE pipian, W II), pipe, whistle
- Pisces (L pisces), a zodiacal sign. See p. 135
- pistel, sb. (OE pistol, m., aphetic fr. epistol, L epistola), letter, message
- pitaunce, sb. (OF pitance), allowance of food, gift
- pitous, adj. (OF pitous), pious, pitiful
- plage, sb. (OE plage), region
- plane, v. (F planer), smoothe (the wax of a tablet after writing with a style)
- plantayne, sb. (OF plantain), plantain
- plat, adj. (OF plat), flat, plain; with the plat, with the flat side of the sword; adv., plainly
- plates, sb. pl. (OF plate), metal plates to strengthen chain mail
- plesance, sb. (OF plaisance), pleasure, joy, amusement, pleasing manner
- pleyen, v. (OE plegian, W II), play, jest, make sport, amuse one's self
- pleyn¹, adj. (OF plein, L, plenus), full, perfect, complete; also adv.
- pleyn², adj. (OF plain, L planus), plain, open, clear
- Pleyn-damour, name of a romance hero, meaning "full of love"
- pleyne, v. (OF plaindre), complain, lament
- pleynly, adv. (cf. *adj. pleyn*²), plainly, clearly, openly
- Pleynt of Kynde, Planctus Naturae (Complaint of Nature), the title of a work by Alanus de Insulis
- plight, pp., plighte, pret. (OE pluccian, W II), pulled.

- plighte, v. (OE plibian, W I), pledge plite, sb. (OE plibt, m., plibte, f.), unhappy state
 plye, v. (OF plier), mold, bend
 Poilleys courser, Apulian courser.
 Apulia, in Italy, was noted for fine horses point, sb. (F point), point, part, object, state, condition; in good poynt, in fine condition; at point devys, to perfection; poyntes, pl., tags, I 3322
 pokkes, sb. pl. (OE poc, m.), pocks polax, sb. (perh. poll + ax), battle ax polyve, sb. (OF polie + -ive), pulley pomel, sb. (OF pomel), top pomely, adj. (OE pomelē), dappled popelote, sb. (perh. OF poupelet petit poupon), doll, pet popet, sb. (F poupette, dim.), puppet, dainty little person (used ironically),
 VII 1891
 poppere, sb. (cf. v. pop), small dagger poraille, sb. (OF pouraille), poor people port, sb. (F port), behavior, bearing portreitour, sb. (prob. AF por-* traitour), portrayer pose, sb. (OE ge-pos, n.), cold in the head pose, v. (F poser), assume for the sake of argument possessorner, sb. (cf. OF possessiun), member of an endowed religious order; (i.e., not a friar) potage, sb. (F potage), soup potente, sb. (cf. F potence), crutchlike staff poudre marchant, sb. (OF poudre marchant), sour flavoring powder poure, adj. (OF povre), poor; pov-ereste, poorest, sup.; povrelliche, adv.
 pouren, v. (etym. obscure; perh. OE purian*), pore; peep, III 1738 poupe, powpe, v. (of echoic origin; cf.
 Gmc dialects), blow poverté, sb. (cf. two OF forms: poverté and poverté), poverty poynaunt, adj. (OF poignant), hot with spices poyntel, sb. (OF pointel, L puncti- lium, dot), stylus, stiletto praktike, sb. (OF practike), practice praktisour, sb. (prob. fr. AF prac-* isour), practitioner prechestow, prechest thou predicacion, sb. (OF predicaciun), sermon, exhortation
 preef, preeve, sb. (OF prueve, proeve, preve, proeuve), proof, test; with yvel preef, confound you! III 247 preesse, v. (OF presser), press, throng preeve. See preef preferre, v. (L præferre), precede, surpass prenostik, adj. (LL prænosticus), prognostic prentys, sb. (aphetic fr. apprentice, OF aprentis), apprentice pres, sb. (F presse), crowd presse, sb. (F presse), press, a machine for pressing or curling,
 I 81; large cupboard with shelves,
 I 263, 3212
 prove, v. (OF prover; 3 sg. pres., prueve), prove, show, test, try prighte, pret. of priken.
 prikasour, sb. (cf. v. priken), hard rider priken, v. (OE prician, W II), prick, goad, spur, ride hard, ride prikke, sb. (OE prica, pricca, m.; pricu, f.), point
 prikyng, sb. (cf. OE priccian, priccan), spurring, hard riding, VII 1965, 1969; tracking a hare by its footprints, I 191, see note there prime, sb. (OE prim, L prima, OF prime), prime (the first period of the day, between 6 a.m. and 9 a.m.)
 primerole, sb. (OF primerole), primrose (used figuratively) principles, sb. pl. (F principe), innate disposition
 pris, sb. (OF pris), price, prize, esteem, excellence, renown, value
 privee, adj. (OF privé), secret, confidential; privee, prively, adv.
 privetee, sb. (OF privetē), privacy
 proces, sb. (F proces), process, process of time, course of narrative, story
 procuratour, sb. (OF procuratour), attorney. See note on III 1596 progression, sb. (F progression), progression, process; progressions, processes of production, I 3013

prohemye, sb. (OF proème), preface prolle, v. (origin unknown), search for pronoun, v. (OF pronuncier), announce proporcionales, sb. pl. (F proportionel), proportional parts propre, adj. (cf. F propre, L proprius), proper, own, particular, handsome, fine looking, excellent; propely, adv., literally propretee, sb. (cf. OF propriete), property, peculiarity prospective, sb. (F prospectif) the prospective glass with which distant or future events were supposed to be seen provost, sb. (OF and AF provost), chief magistrate prow, sb. (OF pru, prou), benefit
Pruce, Pruyse, Prussia; adj., Prussian Ptholomee, Ptolemy. See note on III 180-82 pulle, v. (OE pullian, W II), pull, pluck; a pulled hen, pp., adj., a plucked hen purchace, v. (OF purchacier) procure, obtain; purchas, sb. (OF pourchar); purchasour, sb. (OF purchasour); purchasyng, sb. See note on I 256 pure, adj., adv. (OF pure, f.), absolute, perfect, utterly, entirely; also purely, adv.
pure, v. (OF purier), cleanse; pured, pp., adj., refined, V 1560 pursevant, sb. (OF pursivant), pursuivant purtreye, v. (OF portraire), draw purveiaunce, sb. (OF porveance), providence, provision, III 570 purveye, v. (AF purveier), provide, prepare pynchen, v. (OF pincer, ONF pinchier*), find fault with; pynched, pp., folded, I 151 pyne, sb. (OE pin*, L pæna), pain, torture pyne, v. (OE pinian, W II), pain, torture

Q

quad, adj. (MDu quad, kwaad), evil, bad qualm, sb. (OE cwealm, m., n.), pestilence queern, sb. (OE cweorn, f.), hand-mill quelle, v. (OE cwellan, W I), kill quenche, v. (OE cwencan, W I), quench, destroy, become quenched, die out; queynte, pret.; queynt, pp.
quene, sb. (OE cwæn, f.), queen queynt, pp. of quenche.
queynte, adj. (OF cointe), curious, strange, ingeniously made quite, v. (OF quite), repay, requite, release, acquit (one's self); hast thee wel yquit, hast done thy part, V 673; quite youre hire, repay you, III 1008 quilty, adv. (OF quite + -ly), freely, entirely at liberty quod, v. pret. (OE cwæðan, S V), quoth, said quook, pret. of quake (OE cwacian, W II). See § 69 quyk, adj. (OE cwicu, cwic), alive, lively quyken, v. (OE cwician, W II), kindle quynible, sb. (irreg. fr. L quinque, five, by analogy to tribble, treble), falserto quyrboilly, (F cuir bouilli), boiled leather

R

raa, sb. (cf. ON ra, Dan raa), roe (Nth) rad, pp. of reden
radde, pret. of reden
rafte, pret. of reve rage, sb. (OF rage), rage; passion of grief, VII 4556, V 836 rage, v. (OF ragier), frolic, or perhaps, become violent ragerye, sb. (OF ragerie), fun rake-stele, sb. (OE raca, m., racu, f. + OE stela, m.), rake-handle Ram, a zodiacal sign. See p. 135 rape, sb. (cf. ON v. brapa), haste rathe, adv. (OE bræðe), quickly

- raughte, pret. of reche. See § 153 ravisshe, v. (F raviss-, lengthened stem fr. ravir), be carried away with joy; ravysedest doun, drew down, VII 1659 ravyne, sb. (F ravine), prey
 Razis, Rhazes, an Arab physician, c. 850-932 real, adj. (OF real), regal rebekke, sb. (etym. obscure), crone. See note on III 1573 recche¹, v. (OE reccan, W I), interpret recche², rekke, v. (OE rēccan, W I), reck, care; hym roghte, pret. sg. impers., it made no difference to him, IV 685 recchelees, adj. (OE rēccelēas), vagabond. See note on I 177ff.
 receyve, v. (F recevoir; 3 sg. pres. receive), receive; for astrological use, II 307, see p. 140
 reche, v. (OE rācan, W I), reach; raughte, pret.
 rechelesnesse, sb. (OE reccelēas, rēccelēas + -nes), heedlessness reclayme, v. (OF reclaimet), call back as a hawk to the lure reconforte, v. (OF reconforter), encourage recorde, v. (OF recorder), record, bear witness, remind recours, sb. (F recours), return reddour, sb. (ONF reddur), sway, power reden, v. (OM rēdan, WS rādan, W I), read, advise; reed, imp., VII 4320 redoutynge, sb. (F redouter), respect, reverence reed, sb. (OM rēd, WS rād, m.), advice, counsel, help reed, imp. of reden. See § 84 reft, pp. of reve.
 refut, sb. (OF refuite), refuge regarde, sb. (F regard), look; at regarde of, in comparison with regne, sb. (OF regne), kingdom rehencen, v. (OF rehercer), repeat rekke, v. See *recche*² religioun, sb. (AF religiun, F religion), religion; monastic life, VII 3134, 3144
 relyke, sb. (F relique), relic reme, sb. (OF reame), realm remewe, v. (OF remuer), remove ren, sb. (cf. v. renne, and Du ren, ON renna), run renably, adv. (OF renable + -ly), fluently reneyen, v. (OF reneier, LL renegare), renounce renge, sb. (OF renge), rank renne, v. (ON renna), run, go rennere, sb. (cf. v. renne), runner renomee, sb. (OF renomée), renown rente, sb. (OF rente), regular income rentynge, sb. (fr. rent, var. of rend [OE rendan, W I] + -ing), tearing repaire, repeire, v. (OF repairer), return repleccion, sb. (OF repletion), repletion, overeating replicacion, sb. (OF replication), answer reportour, sb. (OF reporteur), umpire, I 814 repplicacion, sb. (OF repplication), reply, retort; withouten repplicacion, without protest reprevue, sb. (OF reprueve), disgrace reprevable, adj. (cf. F reprouvable), reprehensible repreve, v. (OF reprover; 3 sg. pres. repreuve), reproach rescus, sb. (cf. OF rescou-, stem of rescours), rescue, aid rese, v. (OE brisian, W II), shake, tremble reson, sb. (OF raison), reason, right; resons, pl., opinions, I 274 resoune, v. (OF resoner), resound rest, sb. (aphetic form of arest, OF aresté), rest rethor, sb. (L rhetor, LL reithor), rhetorician reuthe, sb. (OE brēowð), pity reve, sb. (OE getēfa, m.), reeve. See note on I 587 reve, v. (OE rēafian, W II), take from, bereave reverye (OF reverie, rejoicing), delight rewe, sb. (OE rāw, f.), row, order; a-rewe, in succession; by rewe, one after another

rewel-boon, sb. (AF roal + bone), ivory reye, sb. (OE ryge, m.), rye reyse, v. (ON reisa), go on a military expedition ribaude, sb. (OF ribaudie), ribaldry ribibe, sb. (OF rubebe, rebebe), fiddle, an abusive term for an old woman. See note on III 1377 ribible, rubible, sb. (OF, rubebe; ending perh. infl. by musical terms tribe, etc.), rebeck, an early type of fiddle riden, v. (OE řidan, S I), ride; out ride, go on a military expedition. VII 1940 ridyng, sb. (v. ride), procession right, sb. (OE riht, n.), justice, I 3089 rist, v. 3 sg. pres. for riseth rit, 3 sg. pres. of riden. See § 80 river, sb. (F riviere), river; ryver, hawking ground by a river, V 1196; for river, VII 1927 (see note there) roche, sb. (OF roche), rock rode, sb. (OE rudu, f.), complexion rof, pret. of rive (ON řifa), tore roghte, *pret. of recche*². See § 53
Romayn gestes, stories of Rome ronne, pret. and pp. of renne. See § 63
Ronyan, Ronydn. See note on VI 310 roode-beem, sb. (OE rōd, f., + beām, m.), cross roote, sb. (ON rōt), root, radix; in astrology, the figure of the heavens at the moment of a person's birth rote¹, sb. (OF rote), rote, a mediaeval stringed instrument, played with a bow or with the fingers rote², sb. (etym. obscure); by rote, by heart rotie, v. (OE rotian, W II), cause rot rouke, v. (cf. Norw dial. ruka, crouch), crouch, cower roule, v. (OF rouler), LL rotulare, fr. rotula, dim. of rota, wheel), gad about Rouncivale, Hospital of Our Lady of Roncevaux in London rouncy, sb. (OF roncin), carthorse rounde, adv. (OF rund, ronđ), roundly, freely, fully roundel, sb. (OF rondel), rondeau, a poem involving repetition according to a fixed pattern route, sb. (OF route), company, troop route, v. (OF router), assemble routhe. See reuthe rove, sb. (OE hrōf, m.), roof rowm, adj. (OE rūm), spacious rowne, v. (OE rūnian, W II), whisper rowtynge, sb. (cf. ON v. rauta), roaring rubible. See ribible rubriche, sb. (F rubrique or L rubrica), rubric, directions or instructions (originally written in red) Ruce, Russia

ruddok, sb. (OE rudduc, m.), robin
Rufus, a Greek physician of the first century, author of De Melancholia rumbul, sb. (onomatopoeitic; cf. v. romblen, rumblen), disturbance rum ram ruf, meaningless syllables all beginning with "r," to illustrate alliteration rymeye, v. (AF rimeier), rhyme rys, sb. (OE hris), twig, small branch ryve, v. (ON řifa), pierce

S

sad, adj. (OE sād), trustworthy, steadfast, sober sadly, adv. (OE sād + -ly), heavily saffron, v. (OF saffraner), give color to sal, shall (Nth)
Saluces, Saluzzo, a district in Italy, south of Turin salue, v. (OF saluer), salute, greet; saleweth, 3 sg. pres.; salewed, pp.
salwe, sb. (OE sealh, m.), willow sangwyn, adj. (OF sanguin), sanguine, ruddy; sb., clot' of a blood-red color sapience, sb. (OF sapience), wisdom sarge, sb. (OF sarge), serge Sarray, Sarai, the capital city of the Tartars of the Ponent. See note on V 9
Satalye, Adalia, a city in Asiatic Turkey, conquered by Pierre de Lusignan in 1361
Saturn, the god and the planet

- sauf, adj. (F sauf), safe; saufly, adv.
saugh, pret. of se. See § 66
sautrie, sb. (OF psalterie), psaltery, a mediaeval stringed instrument, played like the harp savacioun, sb. (OF sauvacion), salvation save¹, sb. (OF saue, L salvia), sage save², sb. (OE sealf, f.), salve savour, sb. (OF savour), taste,
 pleasure
savour, v. (OF savourer), have a mind to sawcefleem, adj. (OF sausagefleme), pimpled — one of the effects of a leprous condition
sawe, sb. (OE sagu, f. indecl.), saying,
 III 660; speech, VIII 691 say, pret. of se. See § 66 sayn, pp. of se. See § 66 scaled, adj. (scall + -ed; cf. ON skalle), scabby
Scariot, Judas Iscariot
scarlet, sb. (aphetic fr. OF escarlate), name of a cloth, originally of different colors
scarsly, adv. (cf. OF escars), economically scathe, sb. (OM scapa, WS sceapa, m.), pity, harm, injury science, sb. (F science), knowledge, particular branch of learning sclaundre, sb. (OF esclandre, -aundre), ill repute, disgrace
sclendre, adj. (OF esclendre), slender, meager, poor
scoleye, v. (OF escoler, AF escoleier*), attend school, study
Scot, a common name for a horse scrippe, sb. (ON skreppa), wallet, bag for alms
scripture, sb. (L scriptura), scripture, writing
scribeyn, sb. (OF escrivain, -ein), scrivener, a professional copyist se, seen, sene, v. (OE sēon, S V), see seche, v. (OE sēcan, W I), seek, search see, sb. (OF see, siē), seat, throne see, sb. (OE sē, f., m.), sea; the Grete See, the Mediterranean Sea seekke, adj. See sik seen, v. See se seeth, pret. of sethe. See § 57 seigh, pret. of se. See § 66
seintuarie, sb. (OF saintuaire, -arie), portable shrine for sacred relics seistow, sayest thou selde, adv. (OE seldan, -on, -un), seldom; adj., few; seelde tyme, few times selven, adj. (OE seolf, self), self, same, very sely, adj. (OM sēlig, WS sālig), good,
 VII 1702, IV 948; poor, VII 4565,
 IV 2423; innocent, VI 292; foolish,
 I 4090
semblant, sb. (OF semblant), semblance, appearance semblen, v. (OF sembler), assemble semely, adj. (Icel sāmīligr), comely, handsome; semeely, semely, semy-
ly, adv.
semycope, sb. (L semi + LL capa), short outer cape or cloak Semyrame, Semiramis sendal, sb. (OF sendal), sendel, a kind of thin silk
sene, v. See se
sene, ysene, adj. (OE gesēne, gesyne), visible, evident, manifest
Senec, Senek, Seneca, a Roman philosopher in great repute for his ethical writings
senge, v. (OE sengan, W I), singe sentence, sb. (OF sentence), sentence, sentiment, meaning, content,
 matter, judgment, opinion
Septe, Ceuta, a city in Morocco
Serapion, an Arabian physician of the 11th century, who wrote on medicine and medicinal herbs
sergeant, sb. (OF sergeant), sergeant (a household officer); sergeant of the lawe, sergeant-at-law. See note on I 309ff.
servage, sb. (OF servage), service,
 servitude, bondage
serye, sb. (cf. F serie, L series), series, discussion
seten, pret. of sitten. See § 67
sethe, v. (OE sēðan, S II), boil;
seeth, pret. sg., IV 227
sette, v. (OE settan, W I), set, place;
yset a-werke, deceived, I 4337

- seuretee, sb. (OF seurte), surety, security
- sewe, sb. (OE sēaw; cf. OF sew), soup
- sewe, v. (OF sewir), pursue, follow
- sexteyn, sb. (AF secrestein, OF sacristain), sacristan
- seyde, pret. of seye.
- seyn, pp. of se. See § 66
- seynd, pp. of senge; seynd bacon, broiled bacon
- shaft, sb. (OE sceaft, m.), shaft, the stock of an arrow or a spear; also applied to the entire weapon
- shal, v. (OE sculan, See § 91), shall, must, ought
- shaltow, shalt thou
- shamefast, adj. (OE sceamfast), modest
- shamefastnesse, sb. (OE sceamfast + -nesse), modesty, shyness
- shapen, v. (ME v. prob. fr. sb. shape; cf. OE scieppan, S VI), shape, plan, purpose, arrange, create, determine
- shawe, sb. (OE sceaga, m., corresp. to NFr. skage, farthest edge of cultivated land), thicket, copse
- sheeld, sb. (OM sceld, WS scield, m.), French crown, worth 3s. 4d.
- sheene, adj. (OM scēne, WS sciene), bright, beautiful, fair
- sheete, v. (OE scēotan, S II), shoot
- shende, v. (OE scendan, W I), injure, destroy, disgrace, reprove
- shepne, shipne, sb. (OE scypen, f.), shed, stable
- shette, v. (OE scyttan, W I), shut
- shilde, v. (OE scyldan, scildan, W I), forbid
- shill, adj. (OE scyl), shrill
- shipne. See shepne
- shirreve, sb. (OE scīr, f. + gerēfa, m.), sheriff
- shode, sb. (OE scāde, f.?), the parting of the hair
- sholdestou, shouldst thou
- shonde, sb. (OE scond, f.), shame, dishonor
- shoope, shooopen, pret. of shapen. See § 69
- short-sholdred (OE sc[e]ort + OE sculdor, m.), with short upper arms
- shot, sb. (OE gesceot, n.), arrow, dart, any missile
- shrewe, sb. (OE scrēawa, m.), ill-tempered or evil person, man or woman; rogue
- shrewe, v. (cf. OE sb. scrēawa, m.), curse
- shrift, sb. (OE scrift, m.), confession
- shrifte-fadres, sb. pl. (shrift + fader, m.), confessors
- shrighte, pret. of shriken.
- shriken, v. (cf. Icel. skrikja), shriek
- shryve, v. (OE scrifan, S I), shrive, administer confession; y-shryven, pp.
- shul, pl. pres. of shal. See § 91
- shyvere, sb. (cf. MHG schivere, splinter), morsel
- sigh, pret. of se. See § 66
- significavit, the Latin word beginning the writ authorizing the arrest of an excommunicated person
- sik, adj. (OE sīoc, sīoc), sick, ill; seeke, pl.
- siker, adj. (OE sicor, L securus), sure, certain; sikerer, comp.; sikerly, adv.
- sikernesne, sb. (cf. OE sicor), security, safety, confidence
- sikly, adv. (OE sik + -ly), ill, badly; sikly berth, endureth ill
- Simplicius Gallus, erroneously for C. Sulpitius Gallus, in a story taken from Valerius Maximus, Dicta et Facta, vi, 3
- sisoures, sb. pl. (OF cisoures), scissors
- sit, 3 sg. pres. of sitte, I 1800, II 970
- sith, sb. (OE sīð, m.), time; sithe, sithes, pl.
- sith, sithen, syn. adv., conj., prep. (OE sīð, sīððan), afterwards, since, then; syn. syn that, conj.; syn. prep.; goon sithen, long since, V 536
- sitten, v. (OE sittan, S V), sit, suit, be fitting; yvele it sit, it is unfitting
- skile, sb. (ON skil), reason, argument
- skilful, adj. (ON skil + -ful), reasonable, II 1038
- skrike, v. (cf. Icel. skrikja), shriek
- slake, v. (OE slacian, W II), slake, slacken, cease, cause to cease
- slawen, pp. of sleen. See § 73

- sleen, v. (OE slēan, S VI), kill sleere, sb. (cf. OE v. slēan), slayer sleigh, sly, adj. (cf. Icel slægr), sly, crafty, skilful, skilfully produced sleighte, sb. (ON slægð), cunning, trickery, skill, trick; with greet sleighte, with great dexterity slider, adj. (OE slider), slippery slit, 3 sg. pres. of slyde. See § 80 slo, sb. (OE slā, f.), sloe, the fruit of the blackthorn slogardrie, sb. (cf. Da v. slug), laziness slow, sb. (OE slōh, m., n.), slough slowe, pret. of sleen. See § 73 sly, adj. See sleigh slyly, adv. (cf. Icel slægr), slyly, sagaciously, skilfully slyde, v. (OE slīdan, S I), slip slyk, adj. (OE slicē*; cf. v. slician), sleek slyk, adj. (ON slīkr, for earlier swalīkr*, so-like), such (Nth) smal, adj. (OE small), small, slender smerte, adj. (OE smeorte*), smart, keen, painful; also adv.
smerte, v. (OE smeortan, S III), smart, give pain to, feel pain or grief; impers., I 230, V 564
smok, sb. (OE smoc, m.), chemise smokeles, adj. (smok [OE smoc, m.] + -les), smockless smoterlich, adj. (cf. bismotered, smut, and in Gmc dialects schmotz, schmutz, dirt), slatternly smyt, 3 sg. pres. of smyte. See § 80 smyte, v. (OE smitan, S I), smite, strike smoot, pret. of smyte. See § 56 snewe, v. (OE snīwan, W I), snow snynben, v. (cf. Dan snibbe), snub, reprove so, adv. (OE swā), so, thus; used to introduce a wish with verb in subj. mood: so God yow blesse, VII 3978; so moot I thee, VII 4166; so moote I brouke, VII 4490
so, conj. (OE swā) so; so as, just as sokene, sb. (OE sōcn, f., Goth sōkns, search, enquiry), right to grind corn for the people of a certain neighborhood solas, sb. (OF solas), solace, comfort, pleasure, diversion, rest solempne, adj. (OF solempne), solemn, splendid, grand, festive, important; solempnely, adv., impressively solempnytee, sb. (OF solempnité), solemnity, splendor, pomp Soler Halle, King's Hostel (now incorporated in Trinity College, Cambridge) soleyne, adj. (app. fr. *AF solein), solitary som, pro. indef. (OE sum), some, one; somme, pl.; som . . . som, one . . . another; alle and some, one and all, IV 941; al and som, the sum of the matter, V 1606 somdel, adv. (OE sum dæl), somewhat somnour, somonour, sb. (OF se-moneor), summoner. See note on I 543 somonce, sb. (AF and OF semonce), summons somonour. See somnour sompne, v. (AF and OF semon, semun, pres. stem of semondre), summon sond, sb. (OE sand, m.), sand sonde, sb. (OE sand, f. cf. v., sendan), message, messenger, thing sent, dispensation, providence sonne, sb. (OE sunne, f.), sun soon, sb. See soun
soote, sweete, swete, swoote, adj., adv. (OE swēte), sweet; swoote, adv., VI 543 sooth, adj. (cf. OE sb. sōþ, n.), true; soothly, adv.
soothfastnesse, sb. (OE sōþfastness, f.), truth, sincerity sophyme, sb. (OF sophisme), sophism, subtlety, subtle argument, deceitful device sore, v. (F essorer), soar sort, sb. (F sort), chance sorwe, sb. (OE sorb, sorg, f.), sorrow, compassion, grief sothe, sb. (OE sōð, n.), truth; for sothe, in truth, truly soun, soon, sb. (AF soun), sound souple, adj. (F souple), supple, pliant

- sours, sb. (OF sourse), source, swoop
- soutere, sb. (OE sūtere, m., L sutor fr. v. suere, sew), shoemaker, cobbler
- Southwerk, Southwark, the suburb of London at the south end of London Bridge
- soutil, adj. (OF soutil, L subtilem, finely woven), ingenious, skilful, subtle
- sovereyn, adj. (OF soverain), high, chief
- sowdan, sb. (OF soudan), sultan
- sowded, pp., adj. (cf. OF souder), confirmed in
- sowke, v. (OE sūcan, S II), suck; extract money
- sowne, v. (OF soner, suner), sound, talk about, imitate, tend; sowneth unto, pres., accords with, VII 3157; V 517; sownynge, pres. p., relating to, I 275; sownynge in, inclining to, I 307
- sowre, adv. (OE adj. sūr), bitterly
- space, sb. (OF espace), space, space of time, time, opportunity; tyme and space, time and opportunity, I 35; space of audience, short time for audience, IV 103; cf. space and audience, X 64; the space, meanwhile, I 176
- sparhawk, sperhauke, sb. (OE spear-bafoc, m.), sparrow hawk
- sparre, sb. (not recorded in OE), rafter
- sparth, sb. (etym. obscure; cf. ON sparþa), battle axe
- speces, sb. (cf. OF espece), kind
- spede, v. (OE spēdan, W I), speed, hasten, prosper
- spedful, adj. (OE spēd, f. + -ful), profitable
- spekestow, speakest thou
- spell, sb. (OE spell, n.), tale, story
- sphere, sb. (OF espere), sphere; for astronomical use, see p. 133
- sperhauke. See sparhawk
- spiced, pp., adj. (OF espicer) sophisticated
- spicerie, sb. (OF espicerie), oriental goods. See note on VII 2043
- spille, v. (OE spillan, W I), destroy, kill; intr., perish
- spitously, adv. (aphetic fr. AF despitous), contemptuously
- sporne, v. (OE spurnan, S III), stumble
- spousaille, sb. (OF espousailles), wedding
- sprede, v. (OE sprādan, W I), spread, extend
- spreynd, pp. of springen
- springen, v. (OE sprengan, W I), sow, II 1183; spreynd, pp., sprinkled, II 422, 1830
- squames, sb. (L squama), scales of rust
- squier, sb. (OF esquier), esquire, young aspirant to knighthood who attended upon a knight or in a noble or royal household
- staf-slynge, sb. (OE staf, m. + slynge), a sling attached to a stick
- stal, pret. of stelen (OE stelan, S IV), stole
- stalke, sb. (cf. OE stela, NFr stelk), stalk, piece of straw
- stant, 3 sg. pres. of stonde. See § 80
- stape, pp., adj. (OE stæppan, steppan, S VI), advanced
- starf, pret. sg. of sterve. See § 60
- stark, adj. (OE stearc), strong
- startlynge, pres. p. (cf. ON sterta), skittish
- Stace, Statius, Latin poet, author of the Thebais
- stare, sb. (OE stær, m.), starling
- steere, sb. (OE stere), rudder
- steerelees, adj. (OE stēoralēas), without a steersman
- stelen, v. (OE stelan, S IV), steal
- steme, v. (OE stēman, W I), glow
- stenten, v. See stynten
- stepe, adj. (OE stēap), prominent
- stere, sb. (OE stēora, m.), pilot
- sterlynges, sb. pl. (early ME sterling; perh. steorling*), silver pennies
- stert, sb. (cf. v. stūrte), bound
- sterre, v. See stūrte
- sterve, v. (OE steorfan, S III), die
- stevene, sb. (OE stefn, f.), voice, language, appointed time, appointment
- stibourn, adj. (etym. obscure), stubborn
- stiken, v. (OE stician, W II), stab

- stile, sb. (OE stigel, f.), stile, steps for getting over a fence or wall stillatorie, sb. (LL stillatorium), still stirte, sterite, v. (OE styrīan, W I), start, leap, go quickly, rush; sterite, Kentish or Nth stok, sb. (OE stoc, m.), stock stoke, v. (perh. OF estoquier), stab, thrust stomak, sb. (OF estomac), stomach; feeling, III 1441 stonde, v. (OE stondan, S VI; cf. § 70), stand; pret., stod; pp., stonden
stoon, sb. (OE stān, m.), stone, rock, precious stone, gem; cristal stones, receptacle made of crystal, VI 347
stoor, sb. (OF estor), store, stock of a farm, value storial, adj. (aphetic form of historial), historical storie, sb. (AF estorie, L historia), saint's legend storven, pret. pl. of sterve. See § 60 stot, sb. (cf. Icel stútr), horse, stallion; old woman (slang), III 1630 stounde, sb. (OE stund, f.), time strangle (OF estrangler), choke, kill in any manner Stratford atte Bowe, Stratford-at-Bow, a few miles east of the Tower of London straunge, adj. (OF estrange), strange, foreign, difficult; made it straunge, made it seem a difficult matter, V 1223 stree, sb. (OE strēaw, n.), straw streen, sb. (OE strēon, n.), strain, stock streight, pret. of strecche. See § 53 streit, adj. (OF estreit, L strictus), strict, narrow, limited; streyte, drawn, VII 4547; streite, adv., tightly, I 457 strem, sb. (OE strēam, m.), stream, river, current, beam, ray of light; stremes, pl.
strepe, v. (OE strȳpan, W I), strip, rob streyne, v. (cf. OF streindre), strain, constrain, force strike, sb. (cf. LG strike, strecke), bunch, hank; a strike of flex, a hank of flax, I 676 strond, sb. (OE strond, n.), strand, shore; strondes, pl.
Strother, a place in Northumberland. See note on I 4014 stroute, v. (OE strūtian, W II), spread out stubbel-goos, sb. (OF stuble + OE gōs, f.), Michaelmas goose. See note on I 4351 sturdinesse, sb. (cf. adj. sturdy), cruelty sturdy, adj. (OF estourdi), cruel stuwe, sb. (MLG stouwe, stow), fish-pond styken, v. (OE stician, W II), stick, stab stynten (OE styntan, W I), cease, stop styth, sb. (ON stęþi), anvil styves, sb. pl. (cf. OF en estui, in a tub), tanks for keeping fish alive until they were cooked styward, sb. (OE stīweard, m.), steward, chief agent of a manorial lord stywe, sb. (OF estuwe, heated room), brothel subget, sb. (OF subget), subject sublimatory, sb. (LL sublimatorium), still for distillation substaunce, sb. (OF substancē), goods, wealth, essential part, essence subtiltee, sb. (F subtilité), subtlety, skill, cunning, trick suffisance, sb. (OF soufisance, F suffisance), sufficiency, competency, satisfaction, content; hertes suffisaunce, heart's content suffisant, adj. (OF soufisant), sufficient, capable, competent suffrable, adj. (OF suffrable), patient suffraunt, pres. p., adj. (cf. AF v. suffrir), patient surcote, sb. (OF surcote), surcoat, outer coat surplys, sb. (AF surplix), loose robe Surrye, Syria
sursanure, sb. (OF sursaneüre), wound healed, or healing, outwardly only suspect, sb. (OF suspect), suspicion, IV 905

suster, sb. (OE sweoster, swuster, f.; cf. OFris suster), sister; sustres, sustren, pl.

suyte, sb. (OF suite), suit, kind swa, adv. (OE swā), so (Nth)

swal, pret. of swelle. See § 59

swappe, v. (etym. obscure; cf. sb., swappe), strike, dash, fall with force; swapte, pret.

swatte, pret. of swete, q.v.

sweigh, sb. (ON sveigr, Norw sveig), motion, impulsion, sway swelle, v. (OE swellan, S III), swell

swelte, v. (OE sweltan, S III), die, faint swelwe, v. (OE swelgan, S III), swallow swere, v. (OE swerian, S VI; cf. § 71), swear, forswear

swete, adj. See soote

swete, v. (OE swētan, W I) sweat; swatte, pret.

sweven, sb. (OE swefen, n.), sleep, dream; swevenes, swevenys, pl.

swich, adj. (OE swiċc, swyċc), such; swich oon, such a one swithe, adv. (OE swiðe), quickly; as swithe, very quickly swogh, swough, sb. (cf. OE v. swōgan, S VII), swoon swoot, sb. (OE swāt, n.), sweat

swote, adj. See soote

swynk, sb. (OE geswinc, n.), labor, toil

swynken, v. (OE swincan, S III), labor, toil swynkere, sb. (cf. v. swynken), laborer syen, pret. pl. of se. See § 66

sygamour, sb. (OF sic[h]amor), sycamore syklatoun, sb. (OF siglaton), costly mediaeval cloth of uncertain material

symphonie, sb. (OF symphonie), sort of drum

syn, prep., conj. See sith

synge, v. (OE singan, S III), sing

Synon, Sinon, the traitor in the Iliad and the Aeneid sys synk, sb. (OF sis + OF cing), six five, one of the best throws in hazard syttynge, adj. (sit + -ing; after OF [bien] seant), suitable

T

taas, sb. (OF tas), heap, pile

tabard, sb. (OF tabart), tabard, a loose upper garment; Tabard, the name and sign of an inn, I 20

table, sb. (OF table), table; the table of the commandments, VI 639; tables, pl., the game of backgammon, V 900; tablets, III 1741

tacord, to accord

taffraye, to affray

taille, sb. (OF taille, cut, division), tally, score; by taille, by tally, on credit

takel, sb. (cf. MLG takel), equipment taken, v. (ON taka), take, seize, deliver, obtain, receive, derive, understand; I me take, I betake myself, VII 1985; take keepe, 3 sg. pres. subj., take notice; al be it take, 3 sg. pres. subj.; taak, imp.; as taak, imp., pray take; took, gave, IX 91

talen, v. (OE talian, W I), tell tales talent, sb. (OF talent), appetite, desire, inclination talighte, to alight

tāmeden, to amend tanoyen (to + anoyen). See anoyen tape, sb. (cf. OE tāppe, f.), tape, string tappe, sb. (OE tāppa, m.), tap, faucet tappestere, sb. (OE tāppestre, f. of tāppere), barmaid tapyser, sb. (OF tapicier), tapestry weaver

tare, sb. (etym. obscure), tare, bit, jot, thing of no value tareste (to + areste). See areste, v.

targe, sb. (OE targe, f., OF targe), light shield tarie, v. (etym. obscure), prolong, delay

tarraye, to array

Tars, Tarsus, a city in Asia Minor tartre, oil of, cream of tartar

tassaille, to assail

tassaye (to + assaye). See assaye, v.
tassoile, to assoil

Taur, a zodiacal sign. See p. 135

tellen v. (OE tellan, W I), tell, say, recount; telle . . . tale, give account, I 330; ne telle no stoor, set no store by, make no account of, VII 4344; telle forth, inf., go on telling, continue, VI 660; forth to tellen, to continue, IV 39; litel tale hath toold, little account hath taken, VII 4308

tembrace, tenbrace, to embrace tempest, v. (OF tempester), agitate, disturb

Temple, sb. (OE templ, tempel, n., fr. L, templum), the Temple. See note on I 567 temporal, adj. (L temporalis), worldly tempre, adj., aphetic for attempree, q.v.

tempte, v. (OF tempter), try, test

tendure, to endure

tendyte, to endite

tene, sb. (OE tōna, m.), vexation, trouble, grief

tentify, adv. (OF tentif + -ly), attentively, carefully tercelet, sb. (OF tercel, dim. tercelet), male falcon or hawk; tercelettes, pl.

terciane, adj. (OF tertian), intermittent, occurring every third day

Termagaunt, the name of a deity supposed to be worshipped by Mohammedans terme, sb. (OF terme), term, period, appointed time; termes, pl., fixed phrases, I 639; technical terms, I 323, IV 16, V 1266; in term, with formal accuracy, VI 311

terve, v. (etym. obscure), strip, flay Tesbe, Thisbe, the sweetheart of Pyramus tescape, to escape

tespye, to espy testament, sb. (L testamentum), will testere, sb. (OF testiere), helmet

testif, adj. (AF testif), headstrong textueel, adj. (app. AF textuel*, fr. L textualis, fr. textus), well-read teyne (cf. ON teinn, twig, rod), a slender rod of metal thalighte, the (i.e. thee) + alighte

thank, sb. (OE þanc, m.), thanks, gratitude; his, hir thankes, willingly thanke, thonken, v. (OE þancian, þoncian, W II), thank thapocalips, the Apocalypse tharray (the + array). See array, sb.

that, pro. def. (OE þæt), that, the; that oon, the one; that oother, the other

thavys (the + avys), the opinion

theech (thee, v. + ich, pro.), may I thrive

theek (thee, v. + ik, pro.), may I thrive

theen, v. (OE þēon, S I), thrive

theeffect, the effect

Thelophus, Telephus, King of Mysia, wounded by the spear of Achilles and healed by the rust from it

thencens, the incense

thenche, thenke, v. (OE þencan, W I), think, imagine thencrees, the increase thende, the end

thengyne, the engine, i.e., war machine

thenke. See thenche

Theofraste, Theophrastus, a Greek philosopher, an extract from whose Golden Book on Marriage is quoted by St. Jerome ther, conj., adv. (OE þær), there where, where, whereas; ther-as, where, whereas therto, adv. (OE þærtō), also, moreover, besides thewes, sb. pl. (OE þēaw, m.), habits, virtues

thexcuse, thee excuse, III 1611

thexecucioun, the execution thilke, pro. adj. (OE þylc), such, that, the same, that very thirle, v. (OE þirlan, W II), pierce

tho, adv. (OE þā), then, at that time tho, pro., adj., pl. (OE þā, pl.), those, them

tholde, the old

thole, v. (OE þolian, W II), suffer

thonken. See thanke

- thorizonte, the horizon
 thrawe, draw threshfold, sb. (OE þerscald, þersc-wold, þerscald, m.), threshold threste, v. (ON þrýsta), thrust, push thretyng, sb. (cf. OE v. þrēðian, W II), threatening thries, adv. (thrie, fr. OE þrīwa, + -s), thrice thrifty, adj. (cf. ON þrifi), profitable, B 46, 1165; decent, III 238 thriftily, adv. (cf. ON þrifi), carefully, I 105; politely I 3131, V 1174 throp, sb. (OE þorp, m.), village; thropes, gen. sg.
 throwe, sb. (OE þræg, f.), time, short time thrustelcok, sb. (OE þrostel, f. + coc, m.), throstlecock thurgh-girt, pp., adj. (cf. v. girden), pierced through, I 1010 thwitel, sb. (cf. ME v. thwite), knife thymage, the image
 Thymothee, Timothy, disciple of St. Paul thyng, sb. (OE þing, n.), thing, matter, affair, composition (as poem, song, or story; thynges, pl.; alle thyng, everything, V 608 thyne, v. (OE þyncan, W I), think, seem, appear; methynketh, impers. pres., it seems to me; hym wolde thyne, it would seem to him, IV, 908 tidif, sb. (etym. unknown), tidy, a small bird; tidyves, pl. See note on V 650 tikennesse, sb. (cf. OE tinclian, W II, tickle, etym. obscure), instability til, prep. (cf. Icel tí), to (Nth) tiptoon, sb., tiptoes. See too tobeye, to obey to-breste, v. (OE tō-berstan, S III), crush; tobrosten, pp., I 2757 to-broken, pp. (OE tō + OE breccan, S IV), broken, destroyed to-brosten, pp. of to-breste. See § 60 tofor, prep. (OE tōforan), before to-hewen, v. (OE tō-hēawan, S VII), hew to pieces tollen, v. (cf. ON tolla), take toll or pay Tolletanes, adj. (L Toletanus, Toletum); tables tolletanes, astronomical tables. See note on V 1273 tombestere, sb. (OE tumbestre, f.), female tumbler or dancing girl tonne, sb. (OE tunne, f.), tun, cask; tonne greet, as large as a cask, A 1994 too, sb. (OE tā, f., pl. tǣn), toe; tone, toon, toos, pl.
 to-race, v. (prob. for to-arace; cf. arace), tear into pieces to-rende, v. (OE tōrendan, W I), tear into pieces tormentrie, sb. (OF tourmenterie), pain tortuous, adj. (AF tortuous), astronomical term. The tortuous signs of the Zodiac are the six nearest the point of the vernal equinox; so called because they ascend more obliquely than the other six to-shrede, v. (OE to-scrēadian, W II), cut into shreds to-tere, v. (OE tō-teran, S IV), tear in pieces; to-tore, pp.
 toun, town, sb. (OE tūn, m.), town, farmyard, neighborhood; in town, dat., in the neighborhood, VII 1983; to town, dat., home, VII 2028 tour, sb. (F tour), tower; the Tower of London, I 3256 (see note) tourette, sb. (OF torete, tourete), ring (perhaps eyelet-like), I 2152
 toverbyde, to overbide, survive to-yere, adv. (to + yeere [OE gēar, n.]), this year Trace, Thrace
 traitorie, sb. (cf. OF traitor), treachery Tramysene, Tlemçen, a Moorish kingdom in Morocco translaten, v. (OF translater), transfer trapped, pp., adj. (OE træppan*, in betræppan, W I), housed, harnessed trappures, sb. pl. (OF trapeüre*), trappings of horses trays, sb. pl. (OF trais, pl. of trait), traces tree, sb., adj. (OF trēo, trēow, n.), tree, wood tregetour, sb. (OF tresgeteor), magician, juggler trench, sb. (OF trenche), trench, alley cut through shrubbery trenchant, adj. (OF trenchant, pp. of trenchier, trancher), sharp trentals, sb. pl. (Church L trentale), set of thirty requiem masses tresse, sb. (F tresse), tress, braid tretable, adj. (F traitable), affable trete, v. (OF traitier), treat of, discourse upon, discuss tretee, sb. (OF traitié, F traité), treaty, agreement, bargaining, discussion tretys, sb. (AF tretiz; cf. OF v. traitier), treatise, VII 2147, 2153; treaty, VII 233; contract, IV 331 tretys, adj. (OF traitis, tretis), well formed treve, num. (OF trei, treis), three triacle, sb. (OF triacle), medicine trille, v. (cf. Swed trilla, Dan trille), turn, twirl trippe, sb. (OE trip*), a small piece triste, v. (var. of ME trust, fr. ON treysta), trust trompe, sb. (OF trompe), trumpet tronchon, sb. (OF tronchon), truncheon of a spear trone, sb. (OF trone), throne Trotula. See note on III 669ff. trouble, adj. (OF trouble), troubled, anxious trouthe, sb. (OE trōwð, f.), truth troth, promise

trowe, v. (OE trōwian, W II), think, believe trye, adj. (F trie), excellent, choice trype, sb. (OF tripe, trippe), tripe tulle, v. (OE tyllan*, tollian*, tullian*), allure (a term in falconry) turne, v. (OE turnian), shape in a lathe;
turne coppes, cf. note on I 3928 tweye, num. adj. (OE twēgen), two tweyfold, adj. (Nth and Midl. fr. OE twēgen + feald, twofold) twight, pret. and pp. (prob. OE twican*, related to twiccian), pulled twiste, sb. (OE twist), twig, branch twiste, v. (cf. twine, fr. stem twi-), twist, wring, torture twynne, v. (cf. OE twin), part, separate, depart tyd, sb. (OE tīd, f.), tide, time, hour;

tydes, pl.
tyden, v. (OE tīdan, W I), happen, betide tydynges, sb. pl. (late OE tīdung, f.), news tyne, sb. (F tine), brewing vat typet, sb. (etym. obscure, n.), tippet
Tysbe, Thisbe, the sweetheart of Pyramus tytheres, sb. pl. (cf. OE tēogopa, teopa), those who pay tithes unbokele, v. (cf. F boucler, L buccula), unbuckle; unbokeled, pp., adj.

U

undermele, sb. (OE undern, m. + -māl, n., m.?), morning-time, III 875
undern, undren, sb. (OE undern, m.), mid-morning underpighte, pret. of underpicchen (etym. obscure; OE picc[e]lan*, W I?), propped up, stuffed out undertake, v. (ME under + take), undertake, engage in an enterprise, affirm, warrant undigne, adj. (un + digne, OF digne), unworthy un-do, v. (OE undōn, see § 92), open, explain undren. See undern unethe, unnethes, adv. (OE unēaðe), scarcely, with difficulty unhappe, sb. (un + ON happ), mischance unkouth, adj. (OE uncūð), strange, curious unkynde, adj. (OE uncynde), unnatural; unkyndely, adv.
unnethes. See unethe
unsad, adj. (OE unsad), unstable, unsettled unset, pp., adj. (cf., OE settan, W I), unset, unappointed unthank, sb. (cf. OE þanc, m.), curse untressed, adj. (cf. F sb. tresse and v. tresser), unbraided, loose unwar, adj. (cf. OE wær), unexpected unweelde, adj. (cf. OE sb. geweald), unwieldy unwemmed, pp., adj. (cf. OE wemman, W I), unspotted unwist, adj. (cf. OE witan; see § 91), unknown unwityng, adv. (OE adj. unwitende), without one's knowledge; unwityngly, adv.

unyolden, pp., adj. (cf. OE gieldan, S III), not having surrendered up, prep., adv. (OE up), upon, on;
up peyne, upon penalty, I 2543 upright, adv. (OE upriht), flat on the back, with upturned face; straight, I 3264 up-so-down, adv. (OE up swā dūne), upside down urinal, sb. (L urinale), pear-shaped glass vessel used in diagnoses usage, sb. (OF usage), usage, use, habit, practice; hadde in usage, was accustomed, VII 1696 usance, sb. (F usance), custom usaunt, adj. (cf. F v. user), accustomed usure, sb. (OF usure), usury, interest

V

Valerie¹, Valerius, supposed author of "Epistola Valerii ad Rufinum de non ducenda uxore." See note on III 671

Valerius, Valerius Maximus, a Latin author of the first century, whose Dicta et Facta (or Dictorum Factorumque Memorabilium Libri IX) was a favorite source of anecdotal history

vasselage, sb. (OF vassal[age]), prowess vavasour, sb. (OF vavassor), vavasour.

 See note on I 360

venerie, sb. (OF venerie), hunting

Venerien, adj. (L venerius, fr. Venus), influenced by Venus ventusyng, sb. (OF ventouser), cupping

venym, sb. (OF venim), poison

verdegris, sb. (OF verdegris), cf. note on VIII, 788ff.

verdit, sb. (OF verdit), decision

vermyne, sb. (F vermine), noxious animal vernycle, sb. (fr. Veronica), vernicle.

 See note on I 685

verray, adj. (OF verrai, veraï), true, excessive; verray force, main force, VII 3237 verrayment, adv. (cf. OF verrai, veraï), verily, truly vertu, sb. (OF vertu), virtue, power, magic influence

Vesulus, Monte Viso, in Italy

veyne blood, sb. (F veine + OE blōd, n.), vein bleeding veze, sb. (cf. OE fesian, W II), rush, blast

viage, sb. (OF viage), voyage, journey, expedition

vice, sb. (OF vice), error, defect vigillies, sb. pl. (OF vigile), vigil, a religious service on the eve of a festival vileyns, adj. (F vilain, L villanus, fr. villa), evil, wicked, rude vielynne, sb. (OF vileinie, vilanie), unbecoming conduct or language, discourtesy, injury, disgrace

viole, sb. (OF viole, LL vidula), a mediaeval violin virelay, sb. (OF virelai), virelay, a short poem arranged in successions of two sets of rimes

virytrate, sb. (etym. obscure), woman

vitaille, sb. (OF vitaille), victuals

vitailier, sb. (OF vitailleur, vitailier), victualler

Vitulon, Vitello or Vitellio, a Polish mathematician of the thirteenth century

voirdit (OF verdit), decision

vois, sb. (AF voiz, OF voiz, vois), voice, rumor, report

voluper, sb. (AF volupier, OF voluper), kerchief, headdress vouche sauf, v. (OF vochier, + sauf), vouchsafe, grant; as voucheth sauf, imp. pl., pray grant voyden, v. (OF voider), void, vacate, expel, send away, dismiss vyker, sb. (L vicarius), vicar

W

- waat, pres. sg. of witen, Nth. See § 91
waget, sb. (OF wachet), light blue cloth waiten, v. (OF waitier, var. of guaitier), watch, wait, look for wake, sb. (OE wacu, f.), wake or watch; wake-plays, funeral games, I 2960 walwe, v. (OE walwian, W II), roll wan, pret. of wynnēn. See § 62 wan, adj. (OE wan), dark wang, sb. (OE wang, m., cheek, jaw), molar tooth wang-tooth, sb. (OE wangtōþ, m.), molar tooth wanhope, sb. (OE wan- + hopa, m.), despair wantowne, adj. (OE wan- + towen, fr. togen, pp. of tēon, S II), wild, wanton wantownesse, sb. (OE wan- + towen, fr. togen, pp. of tēon, S II + -nes), wantonness; affectation, I 264 war, adj. (OE wer), aware, careful, cautious; canny, I 309 warde-cors, sb. (OF wardecors), body-guard wardeyn, sb. (OF wardein), warden war derere (AF ware derere*), look out behind ware, v. (OE warian, W II), beware, be on one's guard, take care; war him, pres. subj. refl., let him beware, I 662; ware you, imp., "look out," make way warente, v. (OF warantir, var. of garantir), protect warice, warisshe, v. (OF warir), cure warne, werne, v. (OE wearnian, warnian, W II) warn, caution, give notice, apprise waryangle, sb. (?OE weargincel), butcher bird, shrike waye, v. (OE wergian, W II), curse wast, adj. (OF wast), waste, desolate wastel breed (OF wastel + OE brēad, n.), bread made of fine flour. See note on I 147 Watte, Wat, nickname for Walter wawe, sb. (apparently cognate w. OE wāg, m.), wave waxen, v. (OE weaxan, S VII), grow, increase wayk, adj. (Icel veikr), weak waymentynge, sb. (OF waimenter), lamentation, bewailing webbe, sb. (OE webba, m., webbe, f.), a weaver wedd, sb. (OE wedd, n.), pledge, surety; to wedde, dat., in pledge, I 1218 wede, sb. (OE wād, f.), clothing, dress, armor; under wede, under (his) dress, under (his) armor weex, 3 sg. pret. of waxen. See § 74 weilaway, interj. (OE wā lā wā, later wei la wei), an exclamation of grief welde, v. (OE wealdan, S VII), control wele, sb. (OE wela, m.), weal, joy, prosperity, good fortune weleful, adj. (OE wela, m. + -ful), prosperous, happy welked, pp. of welken
welken, sb. (OE wolcen, n.), sky; welkne, dat., IV 1124 welken, v. (Dan and other Gmc dial. welken), wither wem, sb. (OE wam, influenced by v. wemman), hurt, harm wende¹, pret. of wene
wenden², pret. of wenden
wenden, v. (OE wendan, W I), wend, go, pass wene, v. (OE wēnan, W I), think, imagine, fancy; as men wende, pret., subj. sg., as one might think, IV 440; who wende, pret., subj., who would have thought, VI 782
wenestow, weenest thou, thinkest thou were, v. (OE werian, W I), wear, defend; werestow, 2 sg. pres., wearest thou werk, sb. (OE weorc, wercc, n.), work, deed, trouble, "to do"; yset a werk, I 4337, fooled werken, wirche, v. (OE wyrcan, W I), work, do, make, contrive, cause; wirche (Sth) werkyng, wirkyng, sb. (OE wyrcung

- f.), working, conduct, actions, calculation werne. See warne
werre, sb. (OE guerre, werre), war, strife werreyen, v. (F werreier), make war against werreyour, sb. (cf. F v. werreier), warrior werte, sb. (OE wearte, f.), wart wesshe, v., pret. (OE wascan, S VII), washed wex, pret. of waxen. See § 74 weyve, v. (AF weyver; cf. Icel veifa), turn aside wezele, sb. (OE wesle, f.), weasel what, pro., interj. (OE hwæt, neut. pro.; also interj.), what, whatever, why; what for . . . and, both for . . . and wheither, pro., adj. (OE hwæðer), which of the two, whichever whelk, sb. (OE hwylca, m.), pimple; whelkes, pl.
whelp, sb. (OE hwelp, m.), puppy, cub; whelpes, pl., dogs
wher, whether which, rel. pro. (OE hwilc), which, who, what; which that, the one who, who, which; the which that, whom, IV 520; which a, what a; for which, wherefore whilk, rel. pro. (OE hwilc), which (Nth) whippel-tree, sb. (etym. obscure), cornel tree wight, sb. (OE wiht, f.), creature, person wighte, sb. (OE wiht, f.?), weight wikke, wikked, adj. (cf. OE v. wican, S I), wicked, evil wilfully, adv. (OE wilfullice), voluntarily, of free will, purposely Wilkyn, dim. of Will wilnen, v. (OE wilnian, W II), desire, wish wiltow, wilt thou wirche. See werken
wirkyng. See werkyng wise, sb. (OE wise, f.), manner, way, custom wisly, adv. (OE gewislice), certainly, surely; so wisly, verily, V 1475 wisse, v. (OE wissian, W II), show, guide wiste, pret. of witen. See § 91 wit, sb. (OE witt), mind, understanding, judgment, opinion, wisdom, knowledge; wittes, pl.
witen, v. (OE witan, see § 91), know; wostow, 2 sg. pres., knowest thou witen, v. (OE witan, W I), blame with, prep. (OE wið), with, by witholde, v. (cf. OE healdan, S VII), keep, maintain; withholden, pp.
withseye, v. (OE wip-seccan, W I), contradict wityng, sb. (OE witung), knowledge wlatsom, adj. (OE sb. wlæta, wlætta), loathsome, detestable wo, sb. (OE wā), woe, sorrow, wailing; adj., sad; wo was his cook, it was sad for his cook, I 351; wo were us, it would be sad for us, IV 139; me was wo, I was sad, V 579; wo was Aurelie, V 1007
woldestow, wouldst thou wole, v. (OE wille, see § 92), will, wish; noide, ne wolde, would not; wole, will go, V 617; wolde, would go, V 496; wolde, would have it, demanded, V 577, 591 wolle, sb. (OE wull, f.), wool woltow, woltow, wilt thou wombe, sb. (OE wamb, f.), womb, stomach wonderly, adv. (OE wundōrlīce), wondrously, wonderfully wone, sb. (OE gewuna, m.), wont, custom, habit wone, v. (OE wunian, W II), live, dwell, be accustomed, be wont; woned, wonned, wont, pp.
wonger, sb. (OE wangere, m., fr. wang, m. cheek), pillow wonyng, sb. (OE wunung, f.), house, dwelling wood, adj. (OE wōd), insane, angry woodly, adv. (OE wōdlice), madly, fiercely woodnesse, sb. (OE wōdnes, wōdnis, f.), madness woon, sb. (Icel vān), retreat, place of shelter, VII 1991 woost, pret. of witen. See § 91

woot, pres. of witen. See § 91 wopen, pp. of wepe. See § 74 worldly, adj. (OE sb. worold, f. + -ly), secular, II 1026 worm, sb. (OE wyrm, m.), worm, snake worshiþe, sb. (OE weorðscipe, m.), worship, praise, honor wort, sb. (OE wyrt, f.), herb, especially, a pot herb worthen, v. (OE weorþan, S III), be, become; he worth upon his steede, mounts worthy, adj. (OE weorþig), dignified, of good social position wostou, wostow, wost thou, pres. of witen. See § 91 wowke. See wyke woxen, pp. of waxen. See § 74 wratthen, v. (cf. OE wrāþian, W II), become angry wraw, adj. (OE wrāþ), angry, peevish wrecche, sb. (OE wræc, n.), vengeance wrecche, adj. (cf. OE wrecca, m. exile), unfortunate wretchednesse, sb. (cf. adj. wrecche), wretchedness, wickedness, a mean deed wreke, v. (OE wreccan, S V), wreak, avenge, take vengeance; wreker, sb., avenger wreye, v. (OE wrēgan, W I), betray, reveal wrighte, sb. (OE wyrhta, m.), mechanic writhyng, sb. (cf. OE wriþan, S I), turning wroong, v., pret. of wringen (OE wringan, S III), wrung wrooth, adj. (OE wrāþ), wroth, angry, at enmity wrye, v. (OE wrēon, S I), cover, hide wyde-where, adv. (wide + hwær), far and wide wyke, sb. (OE weocu, wiocu, f.), week wyle, sb. (late OE wīl, etym. obscure; perh. *OF wile, var. of guile), trick wympul, sb. (cf. MDu wimpel), wimple, a linen head covering wyn-ape, sb. (OE win, n. + apa, m.); dronken han wyn-ape, have reached the silly stage of drunkenness. See note on H 44 wyndas, sb. (Icel vindas), windlass wynke, v. (OE wincian, W II), shut the eyes. See note on VII 4620 wynsyng, p., adj. (perh. *OF wencir, var. of guencir, guenchir), restive wys, adj. (OE wis), wise, prudent; to make it wys, to treat as requiring serious deliberation, I 785; been gladly wyse, like to seem wise, V 376 wys, wysse, adv. (OE zewis), certainly, truly; often used as intensive particle with subj. of wish; as wys God helpe me, so indeed may God help me, VII 4598; God helpe me so as wys, may God so help me indeed, V 1470. See so and ywis wytest, 2 sg. pres. of witen. See § 91

Y

y, pers. pro. (OE ic), I y-, a prefix, frequently indicating the pp.
 yaf, pret. of yeven. See § 66
 yate, sb. (OM gat, WS geat, n.), gate
 y-brouded, pp., adj. See embrouded y-cleped, (pp. of clepen), entitled. See § 51 ydel, adj. (OE idel), idle, vain; 'in ydel, in vain; ydelly, adv.
 y-doo, pp. of do. See § 92
 ðe. See eye
 yeddynges, sb. pl. (OE gidding, giedding, f.), songs yelde, sb. (OE gild, gyld, n.), gild yeldehalle, sb. (OE gild, n. + heall, f.), gild hall yelden, v. (OM geldan, WS geldan, S III), yield, submit; reward, III 1772 yelpe, v. (OE gielpān, gylpān, S III), boast yeman, sb. (etym. obscure), yeoman, servant
 yerd, sb. (OE geard, m.), yard, garden yerde, sb. (OE geard, f.), stick, rod yerne, adj. (OE georne), gay, cheery; adv., cheerily, quickly yeven, yive, v. (OM gefan, WS giefan, S V), give yfayth, in faith. See fay y-fere, adv. See in-fere

 y-fet, pp. of fecchen y-fynde, v. (OE ge-findan, S III), find y-glewed, pp. of glawe (F gluer), glued,
 V 182
 y-glosed, pp. of glosen
 y-go, pp. of gan. See § 92
 y-grounded, pp., adj. (cf. OE, sb.
grund, m.), grounded
 y-here, v. (OE gehieran, W I), hear yive. See yeven
 y-kempd, pp. of kembe. See § 51
 y-lad, pp. of lede
 y-laft, pp. of leve yliche, adv. See ylik, adj.
 ylik, adj. (OE gelic), alike, like;
 yliche, ylike, adv.
 Ylion, Ilium, the citadel of Troy. See note on II 289
 y-lorn, pp. of lese. See § 57 ymage, sb. (F image), image; for astrological use, see note on I 418 ymaginatif, adj. (OF imaginatif), suspicious, V 1094
 ymaginyng, sb. (cf. F v. imaginer), meditating, devising, scheming
 y-meynd, pp. (OE mengan, W I), mixed, mingled ympne, sb. (OF ymne; cf. LL ympnus), song of praise
 Ynde, India
 ynogh, ynowe, ynowh, adj. (OE genōh, genōg), enough; ynowe, pl.
 V 470; ynogh, ynough, ynow, adv.
 yolle, v. (OE giellan, gillan, gyllan, S III; later W), shout yomanrye, sb. (cf. yeman), yeomanry yore, adv. (OM gāra, WS gāra), yore, formerly, of old, for a long time;
 yore agon, long ago; of tyme yoore,
 of olden time, of yore; olde tymes yoore youlyng, sb. (cf. Icel goula), loud wailing

Ypermystra, Ypermystre, Hyperm-nestra
 Ypocras, Hippocrates, a Greek physician, 460-377 B.C.
 ypocras, sb. (OF ypocras), hippocras,
 wine flavored with spices
 y-preved, pp., adj. (OF pruve, 3 sg.
pres., fr. prover), proved
 y-purfiled, pp., adj. (OF porfiler), bordered, trimmed; cf. profile
 y-reke, pp., adj. (cf. OE sb. racu, racu, rake, also MDu reken), raked together
 y-ronne, pp. of renne. See § 63
 yse, sb. (OE is, n.), ice y-sene, pp. of se, perhaps influenced by OE gesyne (adj.), manifest, evident
 y-shent, pp. of shende
 y-shrive, pp. of shryve. See § 56
 y-shryven, pp. of shryve. See § 56 y-slawe, pp. of sleen. See § 73
 y-sprad, pp., adj. (OE sprādan, W I), spread
 y-spreynd, pp. of springen
 y-stalled, pp., adj. (OF estaller), enthroned
 y-swonke, pp. of swynken. See § 62
 y-tukked, pp. (OE tūcian or tucian, W II), girded up
 yvele, adv. (OE yfele, adv.), ill, badly;
 yvele it sit, it is unbecoming, IV
 460; yvel biseye, ill attired, IV 965; yvele preeveth, does not bear the test
 y-voyded, pp. of voyden ywis, adv. (OE gewis), certainly, truly. See wys
 y-wrye, pp. of wrye. See § 56
 y-wympled, pp., adj. (cf. wympul, sb.), wearing a wimple

Z

Zephirus, the west wind

INDEX

- a, omitted after swich, 113
 abbreviations in the Notes, key to, 493-4 a-begged; a-blakeberyed, 611, 615f.
 absolute constructions, 108f.; ablative, 109; infinitive, 108f.
 adjectives, 94f.; for adverbs, 112f.; possessive, 110 adverbial phrases, intensive, 113 adverbs, 95, 113-16; for adjectives, 113; intensive, 113; relative, 114 after (for), 120; oon, 521, 549; the year, 598
 alauntz, 555
 al be (clauses), 120
 Albricus Philosophus, 552, 554 alchemical processes and substances, 650f., 651, 652, 653 (3) alchemists, the object of their search, 651 alchemy, Chaucer's attitude towards, 653; in the 14th century, 648f.
 Alcochoden, 143
 Aldgate, Chaucer's house at, 19, 20, 22, 43
 Aldrian, 135, 601
 Alexandria, 499f.
 Algarsif, 604f.
 Algezir, 499
 Alkaron, 568
 alliteration, Parson's attitude towards, 656
 Almagest, 133, 559
 Alma Redemptoris Mater, 626
 Alnath, 610
 Alocen, 600
 Alphonsine Tables, 133
 although we hadde it sworn, 543 ambes as, 566
 amor vincit omnia, 507
 Amphiorax, 583
 anacoluthon, 107f.
 Angelus ad virginem, 559
 angle meridional, 601
 Angle, Sir Guichard d', 16f., 42
 anlaas, 521
 Anne, Queen, 40, 42
 anthephen, 627
 antiphoner, 626
 apes, made . . . his, 537, 652
 Apocrypha, 569, 570, 581, 583; quoted, 562, 566, 636
 Apollonius of Tyre, 565 apparence, 611
 apposition, 109f.
 approwours, 587
 April 18, reasons for, 563
 Aprile (pronunc.), 495
 archdeacon (erchdekene), 534, 586
 Arcita (the name), 543
 Arderne, John, quoted, 526 (3) argument, mediaeval types of, 575
 Aristotle, study of, 516
 arme, 501
 armes, 542f.
 Arnold of the Newe Toun, 652f.
 artificial day, 563
 as, uses of, 115f.
 ascendant, 139f.; lord of the, 140
 Ascham, Roger, quoted, 503 aspects, 140, 543
 assayed, 594
 assise, 518
 astrelabie, 559
 Astrolabe, treatise on the, 36 astrology, 137-44; Chaucer's opinion of, 137; genethliacal and horary, 142f.; in Franklin's Tale, 609, 610 (2); in Knight's Tale, 543; in Man of Law's Tale, 203, 295-315, 566, 567f.; in Squire's Tale, 601 (2), 605; in Wife of Bath's Prologue, 581, 582 astronomical calculations, 136f.
 astronomy and astrology, 132-44
 astronomy, medical, 525
 Asye, 625
 Atazir, 567
 atte beste, 498; nale, 587
 Auglus, 23, 25

- augrim stones, 559
 Augustine, St., 510
 Aulus Gellius, 25
 aurum potabile, 527
 aventaille, 596
 Avicenna, 623
 avision, 602
 avyse, 593

 bailiff, 533
 Bailly, Harry, 73, 538, 562
 bake mete . . . Of fissh and flessch, 521
 Baldeswelle, 532, 533
 Ballard, Gregory, 33
 bargaynes, 515
 Barnabo de Visconti, duke of Milan, 17 barres, 519
 Bath, 527
 Bayard, 652
 Beauchamp, Sir William, 21 (2), 40,
 41, 532
 Beaufort, Henry, 36
 Becket, Thomas à, 496
 beelamy, 613
 beest roial, 601
 begin the bord, 501 bell, 509, 621
 Bell Inn, 538
 Belmarye, 499
 benedicite, 549, 572
 Benedict, St., 509
 berd, forked, 513; make his, 579
 Berkeley, Sir Edward de, 17
 Bernardus Sylvester, 566 berth hire on hond, 569
 Berwyk into Ware, 537
 Beryn, Tale of, 44, 67
 beste farynge, 607
 bestiaries, 643
 Bevis of Hampton, Sir, 632
 Bible, referred to or quoted, 512, 537,
 561, 566, 568, 572, 575, 576 (2),
 577 (7), 579, 583 (3), 588 (2), 615,
 618 (3), 619 (2), 620 (4), 622, 625,
 627 (2), 641, 642 (2), 645, 657
 bicched bones, 621
 Blanche of Lancaster, 9, 14, 39
 blankmanger, 523
 Bobbe up and doun, 654
 Boccaccio, Giovanni, 43f., 539-41, 543, 546, 547 (2), 548 (3), 549, 552 (4), 553, 555 (4), 556, 557 (2), 558 (2), 563, 583, 590f., 595, 605, 607f., 645; quoted, 520, 540, 548, 553 (2), 554, 555
 Boethius, 26, 495, 542, 544 (3), 545 (2), 553, 558, 569, 585, 604, 636, 643; quoted, 538, 544, 636
Bonum de Apibus, by Thomas of Cantimpré, 616f.
 book of the ladies, 657; of the Leon, 657f.
 books, cost of, 516; owned by Chaucer, 11
 botel hey, 654
 bothe, 113
 Boughton, 649
 bows, Turkish, 558
 Brembre, Sir Nicholas, 17, 21, 42, 55f.
 bretherhed, 529
 briberyes, 587
 Britons, 605
 Brittle, Richard, 31, n.1
 brotherhood by oath, 543f.
 brutes, blessedness of, 545
 Buckley, Master, 12
 Bukholt, Isabella, 33; Walter, 33f.
 Bukton, John, 40; Sir Peter, 40; Sir Robert, 40
 burel man, 606
 Burley, Sir John de, 16, 42; Sir Simon, 26, 42
 Bussy, Sir John, 519 butlerage, connection of Chaucers with, 4 by and by, 542

 caesural pause, 129
 Calais, Chaucer at, 11
 Calistopee, 554
 Cambalus, 604f.
 Cambyuskan, 598
 Canace, pronunc. of, 565
 Canon's Yeoman-Doctor links, 86
 Canon's Yeoman's Prologue, 647-49; Tale, 68
 Canterbury journey, date of, 495; duration of, 68f.; reality of, 497
 Canterbury Pilgrims, number of, 69f.; types or individuals, 70-4
 Canterbury, shrine of St. Thomas at, 496

- Canterbury Tales, date of, 28; discrepancies in, 544, 596, 624, 647; general plan of, 67-9; manuscripts, key to, 86-8; order of, 77-86; original order of, 81f.; the nine groups of, 79; types of arrangement, 79-81
 cardynacle, 613
 cariage, 588
 cartage, 524 carving, 503
 catel, 637
 caterwawed, 579
 Cato's Distichs, 559f., 606, 639, 649 celestial equator, 134; poles, 134 celle, 509
 chambre of parementz, 601 champion, 512
 chantries, 529
 characterization, Chaucer's methods of, 71-4
 Chastoiement des Dames, Le, 504
 Chaucer, Agnes, 5, 7, 36
 Chaucer, Alice, 37
 Chaucer, Geoffrey, appearance of, 37-9; at Calais, 11; at Greenwich, 26, 33; birthplace, 6f.; borrowing money, 32; clerk of the King's works, 29f.; commissioner of walls, ditches, sewers, and bridges, 30; controller of the customs, 17-19; country gentleman, 26; date of birth, 6f. 10 n. 1; death of, 35; deputy forester 31f., 33; descendants of, 36f.; early poems alluded to, 564; esquire, 11, 13, 19; financial position of, 26, 30f., 32-4; first trip abroad, 15 n. 1; foreign missions of, 14-17; friends and associates of, 39-44; his deputy in the customs, 18; home surroundings of, 59-62; income of, 26; J.P. and M.P., 19, 26, 27; knowledge of medicine and surgery, 557; law student, 11, 12f.; learning of, 11f.; literary disciples of, 44; mainpernor for Sir William de Beauchamp, 21; military service of, 9-11, 14; page, 8f.; payments to, 17f., 19f., 32-5; pitcher of wine, 19f.; portraits of, 37-9; prisoner of war, 10; ransom of, 10; references to himself, 498; relations with the court, 19f.; robberies of, 30; schooling of, 7f.; seal of, 36; translator, 23-6; wardships of, 20f.; at Westminster, 34f.; yeoman, 11, 13
 Chaucer, John, 5, 7; seal of, 61
 Chaucer, Mary le, 4
 Chaucer, Philippa, 14, 19, 28, 40
 Chaucer, Richard, 4f.
 Chaucer, Robert le, 4
 Chaucer, Thomas, 35, 36f., 520
 Chaucer family, property of, 7; status of, 3-7
 Chaucer, the name, 3
 Chaumpaigne, Cecilia, 21, 41
 chausses, 3
 Chepe, 562f., 619, 654
 chevysaunces, 515
 cheyne of love, 558
 chichivache, 596
 Christopher, St., 503f.
 church door marriages, 527
 Churchman, John, 28
 chyvachie, 502
 circumlocution, 608
 Clanvowe, Sir John, 21, 41 (2); Sir Thomas, 44 classical names distorted, 582f.
 clergeon, 625
 Clerk-Franklin link, 84f.
 Clerk of Oxford, 515-17
 Clerk's Envoy, 595; Prologue, 590f.; Tale, 16
 Clifford, Sir Lewis, 22, 36, 40, 41; his will, 657 cloysterer, 513, 635
 cok, cok, 643
 cokkes bones, 654
 colerik, 598f.
 collect yeeres, 136
 colours, 606
 coltes tooth, 560
 Com hider, love, to me, 536 commission, pleyn, 518
 com of, 589
 comparisons, 115 complexion, 520, 606
 compleynt, 610
 conclusion, 609f.; conclusions, a certeyn of, 559 conditions, mood in, 119 conflation, 108
 conseil, 544, 545
 Constance of Castile, 19, 22

- constellation, 599 convent, 627
 cook, 522
 Cook-Gamelyn links, 82
 Cook's Prologue, 562; Tale, 562
 coppe, withouten, 607
 coppes, turne, 561
 Copton, Hamo de, 5, with n. 2
 coral, 551f.
 Cornwall (Cornwaile), John, 7f. corps (pronunc.), 603
 Corpus Christi College portrait of Chaucer, 39
 cors, thy gentil, 612
 cosmic plan, mediaeval, 133-36 cottage, description of a, 637 countour, 521
 countrevaille, 596
 covyne, 533
 cow, for chough, 578 coy, 504
 crafts, specialization of, 60f.
 craftsmen, the five, 530
 Cristes curs, 587
 croce, 580
 croppes, 495
 crystal stones, 615
 Custom house, connection of Chaucer with, 3f.
 cut, 539
 Cytherea, 552

 daliance, 628
 Dan, see 546
 Dane, 554
 Dante, 547, 549, 563, 585, 588, 625,
 636, 642, 647; quoted, 549 dative, ethical, 110; of advantage and disadvantage, 110; petrified, 551
 Daun (Dan), 546
 Daun Burnel the asse, 643f.
 daun Russell, 644
 daunce, the olde, 528
 daunger, 535; with, 580
 Darius, tomb of, 580
 Dartmouth, 523
 debates, 611
 debility (of a planet), 139 dedications of Chaucer's poems, 40 deaf, pronunc. of, 582
 Delphos, 608
 Dennington, 3

 depardieux, 564
 Deschamps, Eustace, 22-5, 43, 555, 565, 574, 578, 609
 destroyed, 623
 Deus hic, 590
 develes temple, 617
 devils, 588 (2)
 deye, 638; (pronunc.), 569
 Diana, names of, 554
 dies mali (Aegyptiaci), 550f.
 dignity (of a planet), 139, 140 direct movement (of planet), 34
 disese, 603
 Doctor, 524-27; attitude toward religion, 526; diet and dress of, 526; fees, 526
 dogge for the bowe, 587 dogs and other pets, not to be kept by nuns, 506
 doon, 552, 592
 Dorigene, 607
 dorste han swore, 593
 doubtful and spurious lines, 512, 557,
 558, 576, 612 (2), 632 (2), 646 (2), 652 Dragon's Head, 137; Tail, 137 dreams, 602, 639
 dremed (impersonal), 631 drink and the gift of tongues, 534 dubitatio, 569 duc, 541
 dun is in the myre, 654
 Dunmow fitch, 578
 Dyneton (Dynyngton) Hugh de, 3, 498

e (final), basic, 124f.; inflectional, 125
e, en, es (final), 123-25
 eggement (pronunc.), 569
 Eglamour, Sir, 547, 632
 elision, 125-27, 129
 Elizabeth, Countess of Ulster and Duchess of Clarence, 8, 9, 13, 31, 32, 39 Elizabeth of Hainaut, 9, 504f., 646 ellipsis, 105-7 elves and fairies, 632
 elvysshe, 651
 Emetrius, 555
 endite, 502f.
 England, 14th century, appearance of,
 45f.; size of, 44-6; teaching in, 7f.
 equinoctial points, 134

- errors used for characterization, 573
 Esculapius, 526
 espaille, 587
 estres, 552
 evene lengthe, 502
 exaltation (of a planet), 139 examples, 610f.
 excommunication, writ of, 534f.
 "expanse yeeres," 136
 ey, egg, 637

 face (astrol.), 139 fairs, mediaeval, 50f.
 fall (of a planet), 139 fan, jousting at the, 654 fares, 561
 faucon peregryn, 602f.
 feeldes, 542
 feeste of his nativitye, 598
 felawe, his, 589
 Femenye, regne of, 541
 ferde, 603
 ferme, 512
 fern, 601
 fern asshen, 601
 fifty wykes, 549
 figure, by, 553
 firste moevyng, 567
 Flamel, Nicholas, 648f.
 Flanders, scene of Pardoner's Tale, 616f.
 Flaundryssh beaver hats, 514
 Flemings, satire on, 629f., 630
 Flemish proverb, 562
 fleshly, 627
 floytynge, 502 foot hoot, 568 forage, 631
 for drye, 602; for olde, for blak, 555
 foreheads, high, 506
 Forester, Richard, 19
 forme and reverence, 517
 forn-cast, by heigh ymaginacion, 642
 Fortune's wheel, 542 frame stories, mediaeval, 74-7
 Franchise, Lay de, 22
 frankeleyns, 511
 Franklin, 519-22
 Franklin's Prologue, 605f.; Tale, 606-11; (Tale) names in, 607 (2); (Tale) scene of, 607; (Tale) source of, 605 fraternitee, 522
 free, 639
 French, of Stratford-at-Bow, 504f.
 Friar, 511-13
 Friar's Prologue, 586; Tale, 586 friars, 584 (2), 587; absolution, by, 512; orders of, 511; songs against the, 512
 Friday, 547; misfortunes on, 644
 Froissart, Jean, 14, 16, 43, 504, 548f., 629; quoted, 637 fruyt of all his rente, 587 fume, 639
 furie, 557
 furlong wey, 569
 fynde, 619
 Fyssh, 601

 gaines, funeral, 558
 gaitrys beryes, 640
 Galgopheye, 556
 galiones, 612f.
 Gamelyn, Tale of, 81f., 530, 563; the name, 563 gardens in 14th century London, 62
 Garter, Order of the, 8, 9, 19f., 29
 Gascoigne, Dr. Thomas, 36 gat-tothed, 528
 Gawayn, 599
 geeste, 634
 gentilesse, 583f., 585 (2)
 geomancy, 553f.
 gerund, 118
 giggynge, 556
 gilds, 52-4
 girles, 535
 glose, 590
 Gloucester, Duke of, 27f., 40, 42
 gloves, white, 557
 Goddes kechyl, 590
 go bet, 612; go ne ride, 542; go walked, 590
 goliardeys, 530f.
 Goodchild, Richard, 21
 Goodelief, 635
 good felawe, 523, 534
 goore, 632
 goshawk, 631
 Gower, John, 42, 57, 68, 76f., 89, 544, 554 (2), 565 (2), 566, 570 (2), 577, 578, 585, 604, 612, 615; quoted, 506, 529, 530, 534

grammere, Kan but smal, 626f.
 graunt mercy, 590
 Greenwich, 26, 33
 Grekes hors Synon, 600
 grene, 547
 greves, 547
 greye as glas, 506
 greyn, in, 603
 grifphon, 555
 Griselda, Tale of, 26
 Griselda story, source of, 590f.
 Griseldis, the name, 592
 grope, 534, 590
 Grove, John, 21 guess, 502
 gynghen, 509

 haberdashers, 522
 haberdasher's shop, inventory of, 60 habit and disposition, 546 ha, ha, 645
 Hales, abbey of, 620f.
 half-way prime, 560
 harrow, 612, 640
 Hatfield, Chaucer at, 8
 hawe, I sette noght an, 582
 Hawkwood, Sir John, 17, 43
 Hawley (Hauley), John, 523 hazard, 621; game of, 566
 he, a demonstrative, 110, 601, 645 headdress of Wife of Bath, 527 heed, upon his, 545
 heigh style, 591
 hell, pictures of, 589
 Henry, Earl of Derby, 22, 33, 40 (3)
 Henryson, Robert, 638f.
 herbe yve, 640
 herbs as remedies, 639f.
 Herbury, Henry, 21
 Hermes, 653
 hereos, maladye of, 545f.
 heroes, age of Chaucer's, 555
 heyre clowt, 622
 Heyroun, John, 4, 32
 Hoccleve portrait of Chaucer, 39
 Hoccleve, Thomas, 39, 44, 507;
 quoted, 502, 606
 Hogge, 562
 Holderness, 586 holy Jew, 615
 homward, 114 honest cure, 619

honestee, 586
 honestly and slyly, 546 hors, 501 hospitality, mediaeval, 520 hostes man, 590
 house, 14th century, 59-62 houses (astrological), 140f.; mundane, 140-42; planetary, 140f.
 Hous of Fame, quoted, 600, 656
 Huberd, 513
 Hugh of Lincoln, 627f.
 humors, the four, 520, 601f.
 hundred mark, 615
 hunte, 548
 hunting monks, 509f.
 hye on horse, 514
 hylech, 143

 Idus, the last, 598
 ignotum per ignotius, 653
 Ilion, 567 imagery, concrete and abstract, 553 in, 624
 incubus, 584
 indulgences, 535f.
 infinitive, 117f.; clauses, 109
 inflections, 93-105; adjectives, 94f.;
 adverbs, 95; nouns, 93f.; pronouns,
 95-7; (pronouns) demonstrative,
 96; (pronouns) indefinite, 97;
 (pronouns) interrogative, 97; (pronouns) personal, 95f.; (pronouns) relative, 96f.; verbs, 97-105; (verbs) anomalous, 104f.; (verbs) imperative, 103; (verbs) infinitive, 103; (verbs) participle, 103; (verbs)
 present, 102f.; (verbs) preterit,
 103f.; (verbs) preterit present, 104;
 (verbs) strong, 98-104; (verbs)
 tenses, 98-102; (verbs) weak, 97f. innocent, 627
 Innocent III, Pope, 565, 568, 569,
 570 (2), 619; quoted, 579, 618,
 619
 Ipswich, Chaucer's associations with,
 3; trade of, 3
 Isabel, Queen, 33, 40 (2)
 it (introductory or impersonal), 106
 Italian, Chaucer's knowledge of, 16; supposed mistranslations of, 542
 Italy, Chaucer in, 15f., 17

- Jakke of Dovere, 562
 Jakke Straw, 645
 jane, 594
 Jerome, St., 574f., 576 (4), 577 (2), 578, 579, 582, 583 (2), 610, 618, 619, 645; quoted, 509, 558, 575, 576 (2), 579 (2), 580, 604, 618
 Jerusalem (pronunc.), 528 jet, the newe, 537
 je vous dy, 590
 Jewerye, 625
 Joan, Princess of Wales, 22, 39, 40
 Joce, St., 580
 Jocelyn of Brakelond, 505, 508
 jogelours, 600
 John of Gaunt, 8f., 9, 11, 14, 19, 22, 36, 39, 40
 John of Salisbury, 620 (2)
 John, St., patron of lovers, 604
 Judas Iscariot, 642
 jueles, 601
 Julian, St., 520
 jurdones, 612
 Juvenal, 585
 kan but smal grammere, 626f.
 kan on governance, 606
 Kayrrud, 607
 keen, 637
 Kenelem, St., 640f.
 Kent, Chaucer in, 19, 26, 28
 kinges noote, 559
 knight, 498-501
 Knight of La Tour Landry, 506, 547
 Knight's Tale, 539-41; date of, 540; dates and times in the setting of, 547, 549-51, 555 (2), 556f.
 knotte, 602
 korven out, 557
 kynges brother sonne, 558
 kynrede, 547
 kyte, 604
 lady grace, 502
 Lancaster, Duchess of, see Swynford, Katherine Lancelot, 642
 Lanfranc, 533, 534, 557
 language of Chaucer, 88-93
 last Ytaille, 593
 launcegay, 631
 law, Chaucer's knowledge of, 12f.
 lay, 598
 leden, 603
 leet he slyde, 592
 Legend of Cupid's Saints, 564
 Legend of Good Women, 11, 22, 28, 40, 76, 547 (3), 549 (2), 553, 558, 564f., 567, 604, 618, 656, 657; quoted, 503, 539, 553, 564
 Lepe, 619
 lesson, 537
 let, with infinitive, 118
 Lettowe, 500
 letuarie, 613; pl., 526
 lever, constructions with, 108
 Libra, 655
 libraries, mediaeval, 516
 Lichfield MS, Man of Law's End-link in, 571
 Lincoln Cathedral, fraternity of, 22 links, spurious, 82-6
 Lionel, earl of Ulster, 8, 11, 39
 L'Isle, Alain, de, 651
 lixt (pronunc.), 589
 lodemanage, 524
 lollere, 572
 London, 14th century, 45, 57-9 looke whan (what, who), 112, 585, 605; cf. wayte what, 580 lookyng, 556
 lordynges, 564 love dayes, 513
 loveris maladye, 545f.
 lovyete, 502
 Loy, St., 505, 588
 lure, 654f.
 Lydgate, John, 44, 596; quoted, 503, 520
 Lyeyes, 500
 Lyma, 583
 Lynyan (Lignano, Giovanni di), 43, 592
 lyves creature, 594
 Lyvia, 583
 Mabely, 589
 Machaut, Guillaume de, 43, 74, 499, 611; quoted, 510
 Madrian, St., 635
 Magdeleine, the, of Dartmouth, 523, 524
 Maghfild (Maufeld), 32, 514, 515 magic gifts, 599; weapons, 599; images, 525

- Mahieu, see Matheolus Mahoun, 567
 maistresse, 602 (2)
 maistrie, for the, 509
 male, 537
 Malkin, 645
 Malyn, family name of Chaucers, 3f.
 Manciple, 12, 531f.
 Manciple's Prologue, 654; Tale, 655 maner, 109
 manere, 626
 manie, 545f.
 Man of Law, 517-19; original tale of, 564
 Man of Law's End-link, 82f., 570-72;
 Prologue, 565; Tale, 565-70
 manorial system, 48-50
 mansions, lunar, 609; of the planets, 139. See also Houses
 Map (Mapes), Walter, 574, 582, 583, 642; quoted, 545
 Mari, Giovanni de, 15
 mark of Adam, 582
 marriage, satires on, 580; Wife of Bath's views on, 575f., 576 marriages, early, 593f.
 marshal, 538
 Matheolus (Mahieu), 527, 528, 574, 576, 578, 579 (3), 580, 581 (2); quoted, 780
 mathynketh, 558
 Matthieu de Vendôme, 548, 566
 Maufeld (Maghfeld), Gilbert, 32, 514, 515
 maugree hir heed, 584
 May, observance of, 542
 meals, monastic, 511
 medicine, authorities on, 525f.; medical, 524f.
 medlee cote, 519
 Melibeus, 634
 men, 506
 Ménagier de Paris, 595
 Merchant, 513-15
 Merchant princes of London, 55-7
 Merchant's End-Link, 597; Prologue, 596; Tale, 596
 Merchant-Wife Link, 84 mercy heete, 556
 merk, thyn owene, 607 meschance, with, 570 message, 594
 Metamorphosios, 565
 mette, 581
 Midas, 584
 Middelburg, 514f. mile way, 593
 Miller, 530, 532
 Miller's Tale, 558f.
 monastic regulations, 510, 511
 Monday, hours of, 555, 556
 Mones exaltacion, 655 money, 14th century, 63-5
 Monk, 508-11
 Monk's Tale, 636
 Morel, Richard, 21
 mormal, 523
 Mortimer, Roger, earl of March, 31
 motlee, 513f.
 moyste, 613
 multiplye, 649
 murie (sp. and pronunc.), 546
 My lief is faren in lond, 638 my lord, 646
 mystiers, 548
 nailynge the speres, 556 nam but deed, 543
 nayles yelewe, 555
 nedes cost, 547
 negation, 114f.
 ner and ner, 626
 Neville, Sir William, 21, 40, 41 (2)
 Nicholas, St., 626
 nine-syllable lines, 129-31
 nones, for the, 522, 541
 noon hyer was he, 602
 north contree, 588
 North Petherton, 31f., 36
 northern lyght, 552
 Northwell, Agnes de, 5; William de, 5f.
 nouns, 93f., 110
 nowel, 609
 Nuns' Priest's End-Link, 646; spurious additions to, 646 Nuns' Priest's Tale, 637-46; anthropomorphism in, 638f.; mock-heroic style of, 645; times in, 642 oaths, 617
 object, 116; and preposition, 116f.; superfluous, 107; two objects, 116 of, 110

- offertorie, 537
 oght, 113f.
 oon the faireste, 592, 606
 opyë of Thebes, 547
 Orewelle, 514f.
 orgon, 638
 Origen, 26
 Orleans, University of, 608f.
 orlogues, 638
 Osewold, 560
 oure aller, 539
 outriders, 509
 Ovid, 528, 546, 548, 554 (2), 556, 564,
 565, 581, 582, 584, 601, 607, 608,
 655; quoted, 548

 Palamon (the name), 534
 Palatye, 500
 papir soght, 563
 paramour, 544; pl., 555
 parataxis, 107f.
 Pardoner, 535-37; his bulls, seals, etc., 614f.; status of, 577, 616
 Pardoner-Shipman links, 85f.
 Pardoner's Prologue, 613f.; Tale, 617-23
 parish, size of, 529; sources of income
 in, 529
 parlement, 545
 Parson, 528-30
 Parson's Prologue, 655; Tale, 656 participle, past, and infinitive, 118 partitive sense, 110
 parts of speech, 110-21
 parvys, at the, 518
 patente, 518
 Pathmos, 627
 pecok arrows, 503
 pedlars, 51
 Pedmark, 606f.
 peire of bedes, 506f.
 Pembroke, earls of, 41, 532
 Pencriche, Richard, 8
 Percy, Sir Thomas, 16
 Pertelote, 638
 Peter, 587, 649
 Peter Comestor, 568, 601, 618
 Petrarch (Petrac), Francesco, 43f., 591 (3), 592; quoted, 592-96
 peyne, the, 544; of deeth, 604
 philosophere, 516f.
 Philostrate, 546

 Philpot, Sir John, 17, 21, 42, 55f.
 phislyas, 573f.
 Phitonissa, 588
 Physician's Tale, 611f.
 Physiologus, 643
 Piers Plowman, 513, 535, 555, 561,
 563, 568, 578, 585, 616, 618, 623,
 652; quoted, 535, 568, 587, 614f., 616 pigesnye, 560
 Pilates yoys, 559
 piled, 534, 561
 pilgrimages, 496; places of, 528 pilgrims, dress of, 501; number of, 498 pilwebeer, 537
 pistil, 585
 pitaunce, 512
 pity renneþ sone, 549
 place, in the, 556
 plagues, 621
 planetary days and hours, 143f.
 planets, 133f., 137f.
 Plato, 538, 653
 pleonasm, 107
 pleynly, 544
 Pliny, 495
 Plowman, 530
 plurals, French, 607, 612; uninflected, 624
 Pole, De la, family, 54f.
 Poperinghe, 630
 poppere, joly, 561
 poraille, 587
 positif law, 544
 possessioners, 589
 pothecarie, 622
 Powles window, 560
 poynt, in good, 510
 predestination, 642f.
 predicate, omission of, 106
 preest annueleer, 652
 Preestes, thre, 507f.
 preferre, 577
 prepositions, 120f.; and object, 116f.
 prices, 14th century, 66f.
 prikyng, 510
 primer, 625f.
 primerole, 560
 Primum mobile, 133, 134, 567
 principio, in, 512f., 641f.
 Prioress, 504-08

- Prioress's Prologue, 624f.; Tale, 625-28 pronouns, 110-12; indefinite, 112; interrogative, 112; personal, 110f.; personal as demonstrative, 110; (personal) genitive of, 110; relative, 111f.; (relative) omission of, 638 pronunciation of Chaucer, 90-3 prospectives, 586
 Protholomee, 578
 Provano, Jacopo de, 15, 16, 592 proverbs, 531, 534, 544, 547 (3), 556, 562, 566, 579, 580, 581 (3), 583 (3), 585, 588, 599, 603 (3), 604, 626, 642, 643, 645, 650, 652, 654 (2)
 Pruce, 500
 pryme large, 602
 Ptolemaic System, 133
 Ptolemy, 577f.
 Publilius Syrus, 549
 Puella and Rubeus, 553f. pull a finch, 534
 purchas, 513
 purchasour, 519
 Pynchbek, Thomas, 517f., 519

 questio quid juris, 534
 Qui cum patre, etc., 589, 658 quod she, 625

 rake-stele, 584
 ram, prize for wrestling, 530, 631 ransom, 534; sums paid for, 10 rather, 620
 realism in Chaucer, 73f.
 rebekke, 588
 recchelees, 510
 Reeve, 532f.
 Reeve's Prologue, 560; Tale, 561
 reference list, 144-47
 religion, religious, 635 religious, whether to support themselves, 616 religious orders, 509
 reliques, 537
 rent, 513; rente, 637
 reportour, 539
 resons ful solempnely, 514
 Retractions, 656f.
 retrograde movement (of planets), 134
 reysed, 501 rhyme, "identical" = "rhyme riche," 497 rhymes, feminine, 123

 ribibe, 588
 riding, 562; by women, 528 right, by, 589 rings, 556 river, 630f.; ryver, 584, 609
 Robert of Gloucester, 502 robes, 518
 Roet, Katherine de, see Swynford, Katherine; Sir Paon (Paonnet) de, 14, 548f.
 Roman de la Rose, 23, 24, 25, 542, 544, 549, 552, 564, 574f., 577, 580, 581 (2), 606, 611f., 616, 636, 645; quoted, 538, 558, 566, 575
 Romain Gestes, 570, 581
 Rome, court of, 536
 Ronyan, St., 613
 rood beem, 580
 root, 136
 Rouncival, 536
 rouncy, 523
 roundness of the earth, 609
 Ruce, 500
 run-on lines, 131f.

 sadly in arrest, 536
 saffron, 615
 Saluzzo, 16, 592
 Sarray, 597
 Satalye, 500, 556 (2)
 Saturn, 543
 saugh I, 552
 Scalby, John, 28
 schools of London, 7f.
 Scogan, Henry, 40, 41, 44
 scole, 506; scole matere, 586
 Scot, 533
 Scotch imitators of Chaucer, 44
 Scrope family and the Knight, 500
 Scrope-Grosvenor Roll, 6, 10 with n.1, 27 sea, keeping of the, 514 seats in churches, 615
 Second Nun's Tale, 647
 Secreta Secretorum, 653
 Secundus, 586
 Seddon portrait of Chaucer, 38
 seet, 554
 seint (pronunciation), 506

- Seintes Legende of Cupide, 76
 Sainte Venus seel, 581 self, 111
 semyng, to my, 627
 Seneca, 564, 585, 618, 620; quoted, 585 sentence, 539, 656; structure, 105-10
 Sercambi, Giovanni, Novelle, 75f.
 sergeant of the law, 517-19 sermon, mediaeval, parts of a, 614 serpent woman, 568
 servant, 549
 sette hir aller cappe, 532; sette his howve, 561 sexteyn, 635
 seyn biforn, 548
 sheeldes, 515
 Shipman, 523f.; dishonesty of, 523
 Shipman's Tale, 624
 shippes hoppesteres, 553 shortly, 498
 shot, 556
 Shuchurch, Canon William, 648
 Sidingborne, 583
 signes, 623
 sikly berth, 593
 similitude, his, 603
 sire and dame, 582
 Sir John, 572f., 636
 Sir Thopas, stanza forms in, 132
 Sirus, Publilius, 549
 slepy yerde, 546
 sleeves long and wyde, 502
 slurring, 127-29
 smale fowles, 495
 Solys, John de, 20
 Somnium Scipionis, 641
 songes make, 502
 sonne upriste, 543
 sonnyng, 514, 517
 sops in wine, 520
 sorwe, with, 643
 sory care, 631; grace, with, 622
 sowneth into honestee, 635 space, the, 509
 spectacles, 586
 Speculum Stultorum, 643f.
 Speght, Thomas, 12
 Sphaera Mundi, by John Holywood (Johannes de Sacro Bosco), 133 spheres, the nine, 133 spiced conscience, 530
 spicerie, 632
 spring, mediaeval attitude toward, 495
 Squire, 501-03
 Squire-Franklin Link, 605
 Squire-Merchant Link, 83
 squires, duties of, 13
 Squire's Head-Link, 597; Tale, 597; Tale, names in, 598
 Squire-Wife Link, 83
 Stace, Geoffrey, 4 (2); family, 4f.
 "Stag of an Hert," 83
 Stanshawe's, Court, 38
 stanza forms, 131f.
 Staplegate, Edmund de, 20f.
 stars, events written, 566; fixed, 134, 135f.
 statue, 542
 stemed, 510f.
 -ster, 618
 sterlynges, 623
 sterres, 553
 steward, duties of, 531f., 533
 stewes, 521
 storie, 537; pl., 618
 stot, 589
 Stratford-at-Bow, convent of, 504f., 508, 646 stress, 122-25
 Strode, Ralph, 42f.
 Strother, 561
 stubble goos, 562
 Stury, Sir Richard de, 10, 16, 30, 41
 styves, 587
 subject, agreement of, 116; omission of, 106; repetition of, 107 subjunctive, 118f.
 Summoner, 533-35
 Summoner's Prologue, 589
 sursanure, 608
 Susanne, 569
 swich . . . which, 113
 sworn brotherhood, 621
 Swynford, Katherine (née Roet), duchess of Lancaster, 14, 22, 33, 36, 37, 40
 swynke, 618 syntax, 105-21; adjectives, 112; adverbs, 112-16; confused, 602; nouns, 110; parts of speech, 110-21; prepositions, 120f.; pronouns, 110-12; sentences, 105-10; verbs, 116-20
 sys cynk, 566

- tabard (coat), 497f., 530; Tabard Inn, 73, 497f., 538 tables, 589, 607, 620; Alphonsine, 133; kinds of, 521; Toletans (Toletanes), 133, 136, 610 taille, by, 531
 Talbot, 645
 tapicers, 522
 Tars, clooth of, 555
 Tartar background of Squire's Tale, 598 tempest at hir hoom comynge, 541
 Temple, a, or the, 531; The Inner, 12 tercel, tercelet, 603 term (astrol.), 139
 termes, in, 519
 Thames Street, Chaucer's house in, 21, 61
 thanks, hir, 548 that, logical inaccuracy, 564
 theech, 623
 theek, 560
 Thelopus, 601
 theme, 614
 ther, 107, 114; ther-as, 114
 thewes, 593
 Thomas of Cantimpré, 616f.
 Thopas, 628-30; armor in, 633
 Thorpe, William, 538f.
 thrifty tale, 572
 thrustelcok . . . her, 631
 Thymage, 626 tides in Franklin's Tale, 608
 tidyves, 604
 to Caunterbury warde, 539
 Toletanes, 133, 136, 610
 tombesteres, 617f.
 to-nyght, 551, 621
 topaz, symbolism of, 630
 toun, another, 577
 tournaments, 551; scaffolds for, 29f.
 towne, in, 632
 Towneley Plays, 513; quoted, 572, 621 towns, 14th century, 52-4 tragedie, 636
 Tramissene, 499
 travel in the 14th century, 47 trays, 555
 trench, 602
 trentals, 589
 Trevisa, John, 7f.
 trial by combat, 569
 Trivet, Nicholas, 565-70
 Troilus and Criseyde, 547, 556, 642, 652, 656; quoted, 550
 Troy Book, 568
 Troy story in the Middle Ages, 600, 641
 Trumpington, 561
 tyde, 568
 under the sonne he looketh, 548 university, curriculum, mediaeval, 516; expenses at, 517 unset stevene, at, 547 up peyne, 548
 upright, 621
 up-so-doun, 546
 urynals and jurdones, 612
 Usk, Thomas, 44
 us lyketh yow, 592
 usury, 625
 Vache, Sir Philip la, 40
 Valerius Maximus, 580, 581, 640, 645
 vavasour, 521f.
 Venus children, 601
 Venus, temple of, 552
 verbs, 97-105, 116-20; anomalous, 104f.; impersonal, 117; intransitive, 117; preterit present, 104; strong and weak, 97f.; shift of tenses, 117; see also inflections Vergil, 552, 588, 590, 600, 603 vernycle, 537
 verray, 501, 640
 versification, 122-32
 very, 113
 viage, 538, 539
 vicary, 655
 victualing trades, 56f., 70f.
 vigils, 522
 vileynye, 501 villages, 14th century, 48-50
 Vinsauf, Gaufréd de, 644f.
 Virgin, mediaeval cult of the, 625 (2) virtues or forces of the body, 557 virytrate, 589
 Vitulon, 600
 "Vows of the Heron," 633
 wafereres, 618
 wages, 14th century, 65f.

- Walworth, Sir William, 17, 21, 42, 55, 56
 wastel breed, 506
 Watering, St. Thomas of, 539 wayte what, 580; cf. looke who, etc.
 weapon, penalty for drawing, 563 weaving, west-country, 527
 wehee, 561
 werreyed Russye, 597
 Westhale, Agnes de, 5
 Westminster, Chaucer's house at, 34f.
 wey of kinde, as by, 627
 what-why, 510
 wher, 543
 Wife of Bath, 527f.
 Wife of Bath's Prologue, 574-83;
 Tale, 583-86
 wilde fyr, 580
 wilful poverté, 585
 Wilkyn, 580
 withholde, 529f.
 wlatosome (pronunc.), 640
 women, satires on, 522, 574f., 581, 582, 594 wool staple, 515
 word accent, 92f.
 Worthe, Walter (Bukholt), 33f.
 Wyclif, and Chaucer's friends, 656f.
 Wyclif, John, 41, 511, 528, 572, 573,
 — 585, 619, 620 (2); quoted, 506, 512,
 585, 590
 Wyclifite, the Parson of, 572 wyde, 498
 wyn ape, 654
 wynke, 645
 wyte, 558
 ybete, 542
 Yeoman, 503f.
 Yevele, Henry, 29, 66
 ypocras and galiones, 612f.
 ypotys, 634
 Zodiac, 134f.; signs of, 135, 138f.